TO

MY FRIEND

HENRY LORD FARNHAM, K.P.,

A WORTHY DESCENDANT OF THE OLD HISTORIC FAMILY OF MAXWELL,

THIS WORK

IS GRATEFULLY AND AFFECTIONATELY INSCRIBED.

J. BERNARD BURKE, ULSTER.

Record Office, Dublin Tower.

P R E F A C E.

THE noble families, of which this volume is the record—families the most illustrious in the whole range of European Genealogy—are so associated with our national annals, have at all times exercised so powerful an influence on the political events of their country, that their history must of necessity abound in interest. Fortunately the Nobility of the British Empire still endures in all its original grandeur, and includes on its roll the names of Howard, Talbot, Bruce, Stanley, Fitz-Gerald, O'Brien, Courtenay, Nugent, Hastings, Bertie, Russell, Seymour, Clifford, Hamilton, Graham, Butler, Brabazon, Dillon, Barnewall, Murray, Gordon, Lindsay, Forbes, Montgomerie, and others of equal fame; but it must be confessed that many of the most distinguished Houses have passed away and now form part of the Dormant and Extinct Peerage.

It is a fact no less strange than remarkable that the more conspicuous a man is for his great mental powers, the more rarely does he leave a representative to perpetuate his name. Neither Shakespeare, nor Milton, nor Marlborough, nor Napoleon, nor Nelson, nor Walter Scott, nor Chatham, nor Edmund Burke, nor William Pitt, nor Fox, nor Canning, nor Macaulay, and, I may now add, nor Palmerston, has a descendant, in the male line, now living. May not the same observation be applied with equal truth to those families which stand out the most prominent in the pages of history? May not the splendour of race like the splendour of mind have too much brilliancy to last? Beauchamp, De Vere, De Lacy, Mowbray, Dunbar, Bohun, Fitz-Alan, Sydney, Holland, Tudor, Percy, Plantagenet, and Mortimer are "entombed in the urns and sepulchres of mortality." This ever-recurring extinction of English titles of honour formed the subject of a chapter in my recent work on "The Vicissitudes of Families," and I venture to reproduce here the following passages which bear so strikingly on the Dormant and Extinct Peerage:—

"After William of Normandy had won at Hastings the broad lands of England, he partitioned them among the chief commanders of his army, and conferred about twenty Earldoms: not one of these now exists, nor one of the honours conferred by William Rufus, Henry I., Stephen, Henry II., Richard I., or John.

"All the English Dukedoms, created from the institution of the Order down to the commencement of the reign of Charles II., are gone, except only Norfolk and Somerset, and Cornwall, enjoyed by the Prince of Wales. At one time, in the reign of Elizabeth, Norfolk and Somerset having been attainted, the whole order of Dukes became extinct, and remained so for about fifty years, until James I. created George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham.

“ Winchester and Worcester (the latter now merged in the Dukedom of Beaufort) are the only existing English Marquessates* older than the reign of George III. !

“ The Earl’s coronet was very frequently bestowed under the Henrys and the Edwards : it was the favourite distinction, besides being the oldest ; and yet, of all the English Earldoms created by the Normans, the Plantagenets, and the Tudors, eleven only remain ; and of these six are merged in higher honours, the only ones giving independent designation being Shrewsbury, Derby, Huntingdon, Pembroke, and Devon.

“ The present House of Lords cannot claim amongst its members a single male descendant of any one of the Barons who were chosen to enforce Magna Charta, or of any one of the Peers who are known to have fought at Agincourt ; and the noble house of Wrotesley is the solitary existing family, among the Lords, which can boast of a male descent from a Founder of the Order of the Garter. Sir William Dugdale’s “ History of the Baronage of England,” published in 1675, contains all the English Peerages created up to that time. The index of these titles occupies fourteen closely printed columns, a single one of which would easily include the names of all the dignities that remain now out of the whole category.”

There are, at present, eight English counties which are unrepresented, if I may so express myself, among the existing nobility ; but which formerly gave titles of great historic fame now to be found in the Dormant and Extinct Peerage only, viz.,

1. DORSET, made so memorable by the Beauforts, Greys, and Sackvilles ; 2. KENT, which designated a brilliant Coronet, worn by the Plantagenets, Hollands, and Greys, and a Royal Dukedom, peculiarly interesting to this generation ; 3. YORK, always, and 4. GLOUCESTER, frequently, a Royal appanage ; 5. OXFORD, for twenty Earls, the inheritance of DE VERE ; 6. MONMOUTH, principally remembered in connection with the ill-fated son of Charles II. ; 7. MIDDLESEX, the title of a series of four Earls of the family of Cranfield, before it became the second dignity of the Sackvilles ; and 8. SUSSEX, which invested, in succession, with a well-sounding Saxon appellation, the De Albinis, de Warrens, Ratcliffes, Saviles, Lennards, and Yelvertons, and gave title to a popular Royal Dukedom.

WALES has only two counties unappropriated, MERIONETH and FLINT.

IN IRELAND two provinces, ULSTER and CONNAUGHT, and seven counties, KILKENNY, MONAGHAN, FERMANAGH, KING’S COUNTY, QUEEN’S COUNTY, CLARE, and ROSCOMMON ; and in SCOTLAND, ten, viz., BANFF, FORFAR, CLACKMANNAN, STIRLING, DUMBARTON, EDINBURGH, LINLITHGOW, KIRKCUDBRIGHT, WIGTON, and KINROSS, have no Peers now existing, with titles derived from them.

Several of the most ancient and historic of our Peerage dignities are under attainder : otherwise the Earl of Stamford would be Marquess of Dorset ; the Duke of Buccleuch, Duke of Monmouth ; the Earl of Abergavenny, Earl of Westmoreland ; Captain Charles Stannard Eustace, Viscount Baltinglass ; and Mr. Marmion Ferrers, of Baddesley Clinton, might prove his right to be Earl of Derby by a creation older than that of the Stanleys.

In course of time, it may be fairly anticipated that these Attainders will be reversed ; and that other extinct or dormant titles may be restored to the extant Peerage. The Earldom of Wiltes has a collateral heir male in Mr. Scrope of Danby, the male representative of the house of Scrope, and the Barony of Scrope of Bolton appears to belong to Henry James Jones, Esq., heir-general of the same illustrious race; Mr. Lowndes, of Chesham, and Mr. Selby Lowndes, of Whaddon, are co-heirs to the Baronies of Montacute and Monthermer; Sir Brooke W. Bridges, Bart., is, in all probability, entitled to the Barony of Fitz-Walter; Lord Dufferin is undoubtedly the senior heir of the Earls of Clanbrassill; Colonel Kemeys-Tynte has established his co-heirship to the Barony of Wharton; Mr. Anstruther-Thomson, of Charleton, co. Fife, is heir-general of the St. Clairs, Earls of Orkney, and Lords Sinclair; a Dillon is, unquestionably, in existence, the rightful Earl of Roscommon; and a Fitz-Patrick, who ought to be Lord Upper Ossory; Mr. O'Neill, of Shanes Castle, is the heir-general of the Lords O'Neill, as well as the possessor of their widespread estate; and many other heirs and representatives of dormant honours will be found named in the following pages.

* I do not, of course, include Marquessates—the second titles of Dukedoms—titles which neither have nor ever can have separate existence.

It is also possible that heirs to some of our old titles might be discovered in foreign countries: most certainly there are, in Spain, France, Italy, and Germany, descendants of several of those noble families which preferred exile to disloyalty; and very probably there are in America other scions of our British nobility besides the Fairfaxes, the Aylmers, and the Livingstones. It is only within these last few days that I have ascertained that the Baronetcy of Boreel, which has heretofore been always considered an extinct dignity, still exists in the person of His Excellency WILLIAM BOREEL de Hogelanden, Minister of State in Holland.

To the perfecting of this book I have devoted the most laborious revision—the most anxious and unremitting attention. Public Documents and Records, Heralds' Visitations, Post Mortem Inquisitions, Patent Rolls, Lords' Entries, and Funeral Certificates have been referred to; printed authorities, especially Dugdale's "Baronage," Wood's edition of Sir Robert Douglas's "Peerage of Scotland," Archdale's "Lodge," Sir Harris Nicolas's "Synopsis" (so ably and learnedly edited, under the title of "The Historic Peerage," by Mr. Courthope, Somerset Herald), Milles, Brooke, Collins, Jacob, Banks, and Heylin have been consulted and largely drawn on, as well as many privately printed family memoirs. In fact, no available source of information has been neglected which I thought would improve my work, and no trouble or research has been spared.

In this, as in my other literary productions, I have received most valuable aid from many friends and correspondents—a co-operation demanding my most grateful acknowledgments. Thousands and thousands of communications have been made to me in furtherance of my "History of the Landed Gentry," and my "Extant Peerage and Baronetage," as well as of this, my present work, and an amount of knowledge has been thus acquired which could not otherwise be obtained. The gentlemen of England did for "The History of the Landed Gentry" in the 19th century what their ancestors did for the Heralds' Visitations of the 16th and 17th: they submitted freely and courteously their pedigrees and family documents, thus enabling me to produce a work which has, for a long series of years, been most favourably received.

In my "Landed Gentry," as in the Heralds' Visitations, and indeed in every similar undertaking, errors must creep in. In some few, very few instances, has false information been imposed on me; even when it has, the recurrence of editions enables me to detect and erase incorrect statements.

For myself, this much I will add, that I have endeavoured, during the whole of my arduous genealogical labours, the chief occupation of my past life, to perform my task conscientiously, and that it is a source of infinite gratification to me now to remember that my works have met the approval and encouragement of many of the most distinguished genealogists of my time; of such men as Nicolas and Ormerod, John Riddell and Alexander Sinclair, Lords Farnham, Lindsay, Kildare, and Gort, the Comte de Montalembert, D. O'Callaghan Fisher, and the Rev. John Hamilton Gray, Sir Harris Nicolas, whose genealogical ability, accuracy, and erudition have never been surpassed, took, for years before his early and lamented death, a lively interest in my works, and rendered me the most valuable assistance: and very recently, Montalembert, the enlightened spirit and faithful echo of both the bygone and the happily still existing chivalry of France, referred kindly to my books, and more especially to "the Dormant and Extinct Peerage," which he considered the most valuable, in this that it illustrates and brings back to light the great personages and great families who have figured in every age of English history.

With these few remarks, and with the consciousness that, amid many difficulties, I have sought the truth alone, and have done "all in honour," I submit my "History of the Dormant and Extinct Peerage" to the favourable judgment of the public, with some confidence and much hope. My readers, I am convinced, will take into account the toilsome nature of my undertaking, the countless dates, and names, and facts, that the following pages comprise, and will make allowance for mistakes and errors which may, despite of the most sedulous care and minute revision, have been overlooked. Their indulgence thus accorded to me, I feel safe as to the general correctness of the whole.

PEERAGES:

EXTINCT, DORMANT, AND IN ABEYANCE.

ABERCROMBY—LORD GLASFORD.

By Letters Patent, dated 5 July, 1685.

Lineage.

ALEXANDER ABERCROMBY, of Fetterneir, younger brother of JAMES ABERCROMBY, of Birkenbog, in Banffshire (ancestor of the ABERCROMBYS, Baronets of Birkenbog), m. Jean, dau. of John Seton, of Newark, and had three sons, FRANCIS, John, and Patrick a physician, author of the "Martial Achievements of the Scottish Nation," as well as of "Memoirs of the Family of Abercromby." The eldest son and heir,

FRANCIS ABERCROMBY, of Fetterneir, having married Anne, Baroness Sempill in her own right, was created a peer of Scotland, for life only, 5 July, 1685, as LORD GLASFORD. He had several children (of whom FRANCIS, 9th Lord Sempill, was the eldest, and Hugh, 11th Lord Sempill (great grandfather of the present BARONESS SEMPILL), the 4th son), but the dignity of Glasford became, of course, EXTINCT at Lord Glasford's decease. (See SEMPILL, BURN'S Extant Peerage.)

Arms—Arg., a chev., gu., between three boars' heads, erased, az., langued of the second.

ABRINCIS—EARLS OF CHESTER.

Created by WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, anno 1070.

Lineage.

Upon the detention, a prisoner in Flanders, of GHERSON, a Fleming who first held the Earldom of Chester, that dignity was conferred, A.D. 1070, by the CONQUEROR, upon (his half-sister's son)

HUGH DE ABRINCIS,* surnamed LUFUS, and called by the Welch, Fras, or "the Fat." "Which Hugh," says Dugdale, "being a person of great note at that time amongst the Norman nobility, and an expert soldier, was, for that respect, chiefly placed so near those unconquered Britains, the better to restrain their bold incursions: for it was, 'consilio prudentium,' by the advice of his council, that King WILLIAM thus advanced him to that government; his power being, also, not ordinary; having royal jurisdiction within the precincts of his earldom—which honor he received to hold as freely by the sword as the King himself held England by the crown. But, though the time of his advancement was not till the year 1070, certain it is, that he came into England with the CONQUEROR, and thereupon had a grant of Whitby, in Yorkshire, which lordship he soon afterwards disposed of to William de Percy, his associate in that famous expedition." In the contest between WILLIAM RUFUS, and his brother ROBERT CURTHOSE, this powerful nobleman sided with the former, and remained faithful to him during the whole of his reign. He was subsequently in the confidence of HENRY I., and one of that monarch's chief councillors. "In his youth and flourishing age," continueth the author above quoted, "he was a great lover of worldly pleasures and secular pomp; profuse in giving, and much delighted with interludes, jesters, horses, dogs, and other like vanities; having a large attendance of such persons, of all sorts, as were disposed to those sports: but he had also in his family both clerks and soldiers, who were men of great honor, the venerable Anselme (abbot of Bec, and afterwards archbishop of Canterbury) being his confessor; nay, so devout he grew before his death, that sickness hanging long upon him, he caused himself to be shorn a monk in the abbey of St. Werburge, where, within three days after, he died, 27 July, 1101." His lordship m. Ermentrude, dau. of Hugh de Claremont, Earl of Bevois, in France, by whom he had an only son,

Of his illegitimate issue were Ottiwell, tutor to those children of King HENRY I. who perished at sea; Robert, originally a monk in the abbey of St. Ebrulf, in Normandy, and afterwards abbot of St. Edmundsbury, in Suffolk; and Geva,* the wife of Geoffrey Riddell, to whom the earl gave Drayton Bassett, in Staffordshire.

That this powerful nobleman enjoyed immense wealth in England is evident, from the many lordships he held at the general survey; for, besides the whole of Cheshire, excepting the small part which at that time belonged to the bishop, he had nine lordships in Berkshire, two in Devonshire, seven in Yorkshire, six in Wiltshire, ten in Dorsetshire, four in Somersetshire, thirty-two in Suffolk, twelve in Norfolk, one in Hampshire, five in Oxfordshire, three in Buckinghamshire, four in Gloucestershire, two in Huntingdonshire, four in Nottinghamshire, one in Warwickshire, and twenty-two in Leicestershire. It appears too, by the charter of foundation to the abbey of St. Werburge, at Chester, that several eminent persons held the rank of baron under him. The charter runs thus:—"Hæc sunt itaque dona data Abbatie S. Werburge, quæ omnia ego Comes Hugo et RICHARDUS filius meus et Ermentrudis Comitissa, et mei Barones, et mei homines dedimus, &c.," which Barones et Homines mentioned therein, were the following:—

- 1 William Malbanc; 2 Robert, son of Hugo; 3 Hugo, son of Norman; 4 Richard de Vernun; 5 Richard de Bullos; 6 Ranulph Venator; 7 Hugo de Mara; 8 Ranulph, son of Ermiwin; 9 Robert de Fremouz; 10 Walkelinus, nephew of Walter de Vernon; 11 Seward; 12 Gislebert de Venables; 13 Gaufridus de Sartes; 14 Richard de Mesnilwarin; 15 Walter de Vernun.

The charter concludes—"Et ut hæc omnia essent rata et stabilia in perpetuum, ego Comes Hugo et mei Barones confirmavimus (&c.), ita quod singuli nostrum propria manu, in testimonium posteris signum in modum Crucis facerunt:"—and is signed by the earl himself,

Richard, his son; Hervey, bishop of Bangor; Ranulph de Meschines, his nephew, who eventually inherited the earldom; Roger Bigod; Alan de Perci; William Constabular; Ranulph Dapifer; William Malbanc; Robert FitzHugh; Hugh FitzNorman; Hamo de Masci; and Bigod de Loges.

* The legitimacy of this lady is maintained from the circumstance of her father having bestowed upon her the manor of Drayton, in free marriage, which the lawyers say could not be granted to a bastard; but had she been legitimate, she would surely have succeeded to the earldom before her aunt.

* Or Avranches, in Normandy.

Those barons, be it remembered, were each and all of them men of great individual power, and large territorial possessions. Hugh Lupus, Earl of Chester, was s. by his only son (then but seven years of age),

RICHARD DE ABRINCIA, 2nd earl. This nobleman, after he had attained maturity, attached himself faithfully to King HENRY I., and never subsequently swerved in his allegiance. He m. Maud, dau. of Stephen, Earl of Blois, by Adela, dau. of WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, but had no issue—himself and his countess being soon afterwards amongst the victims of the memorable shipwreck (Dec., 1119), wherein the king's two sons, WILLIAM and RICHARD, with their tutor Ottiwel, the earl's bastard brother, Geoffrey Riddell, his sister Geva's husband, and many others of the nobility perished. Upon the demise thus of Richard de Abrincia, 2nd Earl of Chester, the male line of the family becoming EXTINCT, the earldom passed to the deceased nobleman's 1st cousin, RANULPH DE MESCHINES, son of Ralph de Meschines, by Maud de Abrincia, sister of Earl Hugh Lupus—(see Meschines, Earls of Chester).

AGAR—BARON CALLAN.

By Letters Patent, dated 4 June, 1790.

Lineage.

JAMES AGAR, Esq., of Gowran Castle, co. Kilkenny, M.P., son and heir of Charles Agar, Esq., of York, left by Mary, his 2nd wife (who d. 1771, aged 106), eldest dau. of Sir Henry Wemyss, Knt., of Danesfort, two sons and two daus., viz.,

- I. HENRY, of Gowran Castle, M.P., father of JAMES, 1st Viscount CLIFDEN, and of CHARLES, 1st EARL OF NORMANTON. (See BURKE'S Peerage and Baronetage.)
- II. JAMES, of whom presently.
- I. ELLIS, m. 1st March, 1726, Theobald, 7th Viscount Mayo; and 2ndly, 7 August, 1745, Francis, Lord Athenry. Her ladyship was created Countess of BRANDON, 1 August, 1758, but d. s. p. in 1789, when the peerage became EXTINCT.
- II. Mary, m. to James Smyth, Esq., of Tinny Park, co. Wicklow.

He d. 30 November, 1733; his 2nd son,

JAMES AGAR, Esq., of Ringwood, co. Kilkenny, M.P. for Gowran, b. 7 September, 1713, m. 6 July 1740, Rebecca, only dau. of William, Lord Castle Durrow, and by her (who d. 3 March, 1789,) had issue, GEORGE, his heir.

Charles, b. 18 April, 1754, archdeacon of Emly, d. s. p. 5 May, 1789.

John, deceased.

ALAN, FERGAUNT, EARL OF RICHMOND.

(See DE DREUX, Earls of Richmond.)

ALBINI—EARLS OF ARUNDEL.

By feudal tenure of ARUNDEL CASTLE, A.D. 1139.

Lineage.

WILLIAM DE ALBINI, surnamed Pincerna, son of Roger de Albin, and elder brother of Nigel de Albin, whose posterity assumed, and attained such eminence under the name of MOWBRAY, accompanied the CONQUEROR into England, and acquired extensive territorial possessions by royal grants in Norfolk and other counties. Of these grants was the lordship of Bokenham, to be holden by the service of being BUTLER to the Kings of England on the day of their coronation, and in consequence we find this William styled in divers charters, "Pincerna Henrici Regis Anglorum." William de Albin founded the abbey of Wymondham in Norfolk, and gave to the monks of Rochester the tithes of his manor of Elham; as also one carucate of land in Achestede, with a wood called Acholte. He likewise bestowed upon the abbey of St. Etienne at Caen, in Normandy, all his lands lying in Stavell, which grant he made in the presence of King HENRY and his barons. He m. Maud, dau. of Roger Bigot, with whom he obtained ten knights' fees in Norfolk, and had issue,

WILLIAM.

Nigel.

Oliver.

Oliva, m. to Raphe de Haya, a feudal baron of great power.

At the obsequies of Maud, William de Albin gave to the monks of Wymondham, the manor of Hapesburg, in pure alma, and made livery thereof to the said monks by a cross of silver, in which (says Dugdale) was placed certain venerable reliques, viz., "part of the wood of the cross whereon our Lord was crucified; part of the manger wherein he was laid at his birth; and part of the sepulchre of the blessed Virgin; as also a gold ring, and a silver chalice, for retaining the holy eucharist, admirably wrought in form of a sphere; unto which pious donation his three sons were witnesses, with several other persons." The exact time of the decease of this great feudal baron is not ascertained, but it is known that he was buried before the high altar in the abbey of Wymondham, and that the monks were in the constant habit of praying for his soul, by the name of "William de Albin, the king's butler." He was s. by his eldest son,

"It happened that the Queen of France, being then a widow, and a very beautiful woman, became much in love with a knight of that country, who was a comely person, and in the flower of his youth: and because she thought that no man excelled him in valour, she caused a tournament to be proclaimed throughout her dominions, promising to reward those who should exercise themselves therein, according to their respective demerits; and concluding that if the person whom she so well affected should act his part better than others in those military exercises, she might marry him without any dishonour to herself. Hereupon divers gallant men, from forrain parts hasting to Paris, amongst others came this our William de Albin, bravely accoutred, and in the tournament excelled all others, overcoming many, and wounding one mortally with his lance, which being observed by the queen, she became exceedingly enamoured of him, and forthwith invited him to a costly banquet, and afterwards bestowing certain jewels upon him, offered him marriage; but, having plighted his troth to the Queen of England, then a widow, he refused her, whereat she grew so much discontented that she consulted with her maids how she might take away his life; and in pursuance of that designe, inticed him into a garden, where there was a secret cave, and in it a fierce lion, unto which she descended by divers steps, under colour of shewing him the beast; and when she told him of its fierceness, he answered, that it was a womanish and not a manly quality to be afraid thereof. But having him there, by the advantage of a folding door, thrust him in to the lion; being therefore in this danger, he rolled his mantle about his arm, and putting his hand into the mouth of the beast, pulled out his tongue by the root; which done, he followed the queen to her palace, and gave it to one of her maids to present her. Returning thereupon to England, with the fame of this glorious exploit, he was forthwith advanced to the EARLDOM OF ARUNDEL, and for his arms the LION given him."

He subsequently obtained the hand of the Queen ADELIZA, relict of King HENRY I., and daughter of Godfrey, Duke of Lorraine, which Adeliza had the castle of Arundel in dowry from the deceased monarch, and thus her new lord became its feudal earl. The earl was one of those who solicited the Empress Maud to come to England, and received her and her brother Robert, Earl of Gloucester, at the port of Arundel, in August 1139, and in three years afterwards (1142), in the report made of King STEPHEN's taking William de Mandevill at St. Albans, it is stated—"that before he could be laid hold on, he underwent a sharp skirmish with the king's party, wherein the Earl of Arundell, though a stout and expert souldier, was unhorsed in the midst of the water by Walkeline de Oxcal, and almost drowned." In 1150, his lordship wrote himself Earl of Chichester, but we find him styled again Earl of Arundel, upon a very memorable occasion—namely, the reconciliation of Henry Duke of Normandy (afterwards HENRY II.) and King

~~Stephen~~ at the siege of Wallingford Castle in 1152. "It was scarce possible," says Rapin, "for the armies to part without fighting. Accordingly the two leaders were preparing for battle with equal ardour, when, by the prudent advice of the Earl of Arundel, who was on the king's side, they were prevented from coming to blows." A truce and peace followed this interference of the earl's, which led to the subsequent accession of HENRY after STEPHEN's decease, in whose favour the earl stood so high that he not only obtained for himself and his heirs the castle and honour of Arundel, but a confirmation of the Earldom of Sussex, of which county he was really earl, by a grant of the Tertium Denarium of the pleas of that shire. In 1164, we find the Earl of Arundel deputed with Gilbert Foliot, bishop of London, to remonstrate with LEWIS, King of France, upon affording an asylum to Thomas à Becket within his dominions, and on the failure of that mission, despatched with the archbishop of York, the bishops of Winchester, London, Chichester, and Exeter,—Wido Rufus, Richard de Invecestre, John de Oxford (priests)—Hugh de Gundevile, Bernard de St. Valery, and Henry Fitzgerald, to lay the whole affair of Becket at the foot of the pontifical throne. Upon levying the aid for the marriage of the king's daughter, 12th of HENRY II., the knights' fees of the honour of Arundel were certified to be ninety-seven, and those in Norfolk belonging to the earl, forty-two. In 1173, we find the Earl of Arundel commanding, in conjunction with William Earl of Mandeville, the king's army in Normandy, and compelling the French monarch to abandon Verneuil after a long siege, and in the next year, with Richard de Lucy, justice of England, defeating Robert Earl of Leicester, then in rebellion at St. Edmundsbury. This potent nobleman, after founding and endowing several religious houses, departed this life at Waverley, in Surrey, on the 3 October, 1176, and was buried in the abbey of Wymondham. His lordship left by Adeliza, his wife, widow of King HENRY I., four sons and three daughters, the eldest of whom, Alice, m. John, Earl of Ewe. The eldest son,

WILLIAM DE ALBINI, 2nd earl, had a grant from the crown, 23rd HENRY II., of the Earldom of Sussex, and in the 1st of RICHARD I., had a confirmation from that prince, of the castle and honour of Arundel, as also of the Tertium Denarium of the county of Sussex. He d. 1196, and was s. by his son,

WILLIAM DE ALBINI, 3rd earl, who, in 1218, embarked in the Crusade, and was at the celebrated siege of Damietta, but died in returning, anno 1221. He m. Maud, dau. and heiress of James de St. Hillary, and widow of Roger de Clare, Earl of Clare, by whom he left issue,

- I. WILLIAM, } successors to the earldom.
- II. HUGH, }
- I. ISABEL, m. to JOHN FITZALAN, Baron of Clun and Oswestry, ancestor, by her, of the FITZALANS, EARLS OF ARUNDEL (which see).
- II. MABEL, m. to Sir Robert de Tateshall, and was mother of ROBERT DE TATESHALL, b. in 1223; a participator in the wars of HENRY III., and subsequently in those of EDWARD I.; summoned to parliament as BARON TATESHALL from 24 June, 1296, to 26 August, 1296. He m. Joan, 2nd dau. and co-heir of Ralph FitzRanulph, Lord of Middleham, co. York, with whom he acquired a considerable accession of property. His lordship d. in 1272, leaving a son and successor, ROBERT DE TATESHALL, 2nd baron, and it is supposed, on strong presumptive evidence, a younger son, JOHN DE TATESHALL, living 21st EDWARD I., ancestor of the TATESHALLS, of Wanstede and Little Waltham, co. Essex, of Hilden, co. Kent, of Finchampstead, co. Berks, and of Gatton, co. Surrey.
- III. NICOLA, m. to Roger de Somerle, Lord of Dudley, and had four daus., her co-heirs, viz.,
 - 1 Joan, m. to John Le Strange.
 - 2 Mabel, m. to Walter de Sulcy.
 - 3 Maud, m. to Henry de Erdington, and left a son, Henry, Lord Erdington, ancestor of the ERDINGTONS, of Erdington, co. Warwick, long since extinct.
 - 4 Margery, m. 1st, to Ralph Cromwell, of Tateshall (see CROMWELL, BARONS); and 2ndly, to William de Bifield.
- IV. CECILIA, m. to Roger de Montalt, a great feudal baron, and had two sons, John and Robert (whose issue became extinct), and one dau., Leucha, m. to Philip de Orreby the younger.

The earl was s. by his elder son,

WILLIAM DE ALBINI, 4th earl, who m. Mabel, second of the four sisters and co-heiresses of Ranulph, Earl of Chester, with whom he obtained great landed property. As he, however, died issueless in 1224, or, by some statements, in 1233, his honours devolved upon his only brother (then in minority),

HUGH DE ALBINI, 5th earl, who gave 2,500 marks fine to the king for the possession of all the lands and castles which descended to him from his brother, and those which he inherited from his uncle Ranulph, EARL OF CHESTER. At the nuptials of King HENRY III. we find the Earl of Warren serving the king with the royal cup in the place of this earl, by reason he was then but a youth, and not knighted. He m. Isabel, dau. of William, Earl of Warren and Surrey, but d. s. p., in 1243, when this branch of the great house of Albini expired, while its large possessions devolved upon the earl's sisters as co-heiresses—thus,

Mabell Tateshall, had the castle and manor of Buckenham.

Isabel Fitzalan, had the castle and manor of Arundel, &c., which conveyed the earldom to her husband.

Nichola de Somery, had the manor of Barwe, co. Leicester.

Cecilie de Montalt, had the castle of Rising, co. Norfolk.

The earl had another sister, Colet, to whom her uncle, Ranulph, Earl of Chester, gave £30 towards her marriage portion, which gift was confirmed by King HENRY III.

ALEXANDER—VISCOUNT AND EARL OF STIRLING.

Viscounty, by Letters Patent, dated 4 September, 1630.

Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 14 June, 1633.

Lineage.

This family is esteemed a branch of the Macdonalds, Lords of the Isles, one of whom,

ALEXANDER MACDONALD, obtained the lands of Menstrie, in the county of Clackmannan, in sc., from the family of Argyll, where he fixed his residence, and his posterity assumed the surname of ALEXANDER, from his Christian name.

THOMAS ALEXANDER, of Menstrie, was one of the arbiters betwixt the abbot of Cambuskenneth and Sir David Bruce, of Clackmannan, in a dispute concerning the marches of their lands, which was settled 6 March, 1505. His descendant (probably his grandson),

ALEXANDER ALEXANDER, of Menstrie, living 1529, m. Elizabeth Douglas, of Lochleven, and d. 1545. He was great-grandfather of

SIR WILLIAM ALEXANDER, of Menstrie (son of Alexander Alexander, of Menstrie, and grandson of Andrew Alexander, also of Menstrie), was a celebrated poet. He accompanied the Earl of Argyll upon his travels, was knighted by King JAMES VI., and made master of requests. Henry, Prince of Wales honoured Sir William with particular notice, and brought him to court. He had a grant of the territory of Nova Scotia by charter, dated 10 September, 1621, and the king gave him permission to divide that territory into one hundred parcels, and to dispose of these tracts, with the title of BARONET, for the purpose of improving the colony. Sir William obtained about £200 from each purchaser; and he likewise had the privilege of coining a sort of base copper money, denominated "Turners," by which he acquired much wealth. He had charters of the lordship of Canada, in America, 2 February, 1628; and of the barony of Menstrie, 30 July following; of the barony of Largie, 11 April, 1629; and of the barony of Tullibody, 30 July, in the same year. He was sworn of the privy council, and appointed secretary of state in 1626; keeper of the signet in 1627; a commissioner of the exchequer in 1628; and one of the extraordinary lords of Session in 1631. He was created Lord Alexander, of Tullibody, and Viscount Stirling, by patent, dated 4 September, 1630, to himself and his heirs male bearing the name and arms of ALEXANDER; and was raised to the dignity of Earl of Stirling, Viscount Canada, and Lord Alexander, of Tullibody, by patent, dated 14 June, 1633, with the same remaindership. His lordship m. Janet, dau. and co-heiress of Sir William

Erskine, Knt., parson, of Campsie, commendator of the bishopric of Glasgow, and had issue,

I. WILLIAM, Viscount Canada, who m. Lady Margaret Douglas, eldest dau. of William, 1st Marquess of Douglas; and dying in the lifetime of his father, in March, 1638, left issue,
1 WILLIAM, successor to the honours.

2 CATHERINE, m. Walter, Lord Torphichen, and left two daus.,

Anne, m. Robert Menzies, Esq., and had a dau., Katherine, m. to John Menzies, M.D., of Culterallers, and a son, Sir Robert Menzies, Bart., of Menzies, who m. Christian, dau. of Lord Neil Campbell, and had a son, Sir Robert, who d. s. p., and a dau., Christian, who also d. s. p., wife of Mackintosh, of Mackintosh.

Catherine, m. to David Drummond, of Culmalindie, s. p.
3 MARGARET, m. to Sir Robert Sinclair, Bart., of Longformacus.

4 LUCY, m. to Edward Harrington, Esq., page of honour to the Prince of Orange in 1630.

II. Anthony (Sir), d. s. p. 1637.

III. HENRY, who s. as 3rd earl.

IV. JOHN. It was from this John that ALEXANDER HUMPHREYS pretended that he was maternally descended; his claim to the title of Earl of Stirling has long been disproved and set at rest.

V. Charles, left a son, Charles, who d. s. p.

VI. Ludovic, d. s. p.

VII. James, left a dau., Margaret.

I. Jean, m. to Hugh, Viscount Montgomery, of Great Ardes, co. Down, and had a son, Hugh, created EARL OF MOUNT ALEXANDER.

II. Mary, m. 3 August, 1620, to Sir William Murray, Bart., of Clermont.

The earl d. in 1640, and was s. by his grandson,

WILLIAM, 2nd earl; who d. in three months after, and was s. by his uncle,

HENRY, 3rd earl. This nobleman m. a dau. of Sir Peter Vanlore, an alderman of London; and dying in 1660, was s. by his son,

HENRY, 4th earl; who m. Judith, dau. of Robert Lee, Esq., of Binfield, Berks, and had four sons, who all d. s. p., and two daus., viz.,

Mary, m. to — Phillips, Esq., and had a son,

William Phillips-Lee, of Binfield and York.

Judith, m. to Sir William Trumbull, of East Hampstead Park, Berks, and had a son,

WILLIAM TRUMBULL, who m. Mary, dau. of Montagu, Lord Blundell, and left an only dau.,

MARY, m. to the Hon. Martyn Sandys, and left an only dau. and heiress,

MARY, who m. 1786, to Arthur, 2nd Marquess of Downshire, and was created BARONESS SANDYS in 1802, Her ladyship d. 1 August, 1836, leaving several children, of whom the eldest, Arthur-Blundell-Sandys-Trumbull, 3rd MARQUESS OF DOWNSHIRE, K.P., was father of the present MARQUESS OF DOWNSHIRE, K.P.

His lordship d. in 1690, and was s. by his eldest son,

HENRY, 5th earl. This nobleman m. Elizabeth, widow of John Hobey, Esq.; but d. s. p. in 1739, since which time the Earldom of Stirling has remained unacknowledged, although it was claimed and borne by WILLIAM ALEXANDER, commander-in-chief of the American forces, who d. 1795.

There are several families of Alexander settled in Ireland who claim descent from the noble house of Stirling; among these are the ALEXANDERS, of Foyle Park, co. Derry, of Ahilly, co. Donegal, of Milford, co. Carlow, of London, of Portglenone, co. Antrim, of Forkhill, co. Armagh, and of Somershill, co. Kent; the ALEXANDERS, Earls of Caledon, the ALEXANDERS, Baronets, and the ALEXANDERS, of Maryville, co. Galway. Of this last-named family, the first ancestor in Ireland, JAMES ALEXANDER, is stated to have been cousin-german of the 1st Earl of Stirling, and only son of James Alexander, of Lancarse, 3rd son of Andrew Alexander, of Menstrie, co. Clackmannan, the grandfather of the 1st earl. The present representative of the Alexanders, of Maryville, is ARTHUR ALEXANDER, of Maryville, only surviving son of the late John Alexander, Esq., of Maryville; his heir presumptive is his cousin, the Rev. JOHN ALEXANDER, D.D., of Carne, co. Wexford.

ALINGTON—BARONS ALINGTON, OF WYMONDLEY.

By Letters Patent, dated 5 December, 1682.

Lineage.

SIR HILDEBRAND DE ALINGTON, Under Marshal to WILLIAM THE NORMAN at the battle of Hastings, had Alington Castle, by gift of the CONQUEROR.

An old pedigree of the Alingtons, now in the possession of

Mr. Alington, of Swinhope, narrates that after the Norman Conquest "The Kentish men, not well suffering the loss of their liberties, and the late loss of their Prince, conferred with Stigurd, archbishop of Canterbury, and others, to entrap the King, which they did at Swannecote, beside North Fleet, in Kent, and there took hostages of the King for the due performance of their liberties. After which Stigurd was sent into Normandy, and there pined in prison, and the lands of the others were confiscated; whereupon Medwaycester, one of the forfeited castles, was given to Sir Hildebrand Alington, Knt. The former proprietor, Sir John, had, however, a fair daughter named Emlyn, who as she sued earnestly for the life of her father, even so, Sir Hildebrand was as earnest a suitor to her for marriage, which taking effect, the inheritance was conferred again to the right heir."

SIR ALAN DE ALINGTON, "who," to quote the same old pedigree, "was in great favour with WILLIAM RUFUS, and a great devisor of building, and was thought to be the chief doer for the building of Westminster Hall, which then was Palatium Regium, and by KING HENRY I. converted to the use it now is and much beautified by EDWARD III." His son,

SIR SOLOMON DE ALINGTON, Knt., "was in great authority in the reign of HENRY I., and builded the Castell of Alington, where he erected one notable tower after his own name, called the 'Solomon's Tower.'" His descendant,

SIR WILLIAM ALINGTON, Knt., privy councillor to King HENRY VI., treasurer of Normandy in the time of HENRYS V. and VI., and also of Ireland, m. Joane, dau. and heir of Sir Wm. Burgh, lord chief justice of the Court of King's Bench, (2 RICHARD II.), and had a son,

WILLIAM ALINGTON, of Horseheath, in Cambridgeshire, sheriff of Cambridge and Huntingdon (16 HENRY VI.), who had issue,

I. WILLIAM, of whom presently.

II. John, m. Mary, dau. and co-heir of John Anstys, and d. s. p.

III. Robert, of Bottlesham, m. 1st, Mary, dau. of Sir Robert Bruose, of Norfolk; and 2ndly, Joan, sister and heir of John Argentine.

The eldest son,

WILLIAM ALINGTON, Esq., high sheriff of the counties of Cambridge and Huntingdon, in the reign of EDWARD IV., m. Elizabeth, only dau. and heiress of John de Argentine, and acquired by her the manor of Wymondeley, in the co. of Hertford, held in grand serjeanty, by service of presenting the first cup at the coronation of the kings of England; which service was claimed and allowed at the coronation of King JAMES II., and has ever since been performed by the lords of that manor. From this William Alington and Elizabeth, his wife, derived

SIR GILES ALINGTON, who m. Mary, only dau. and heiress of Sir Richard Gardiner, Knt., and had several children, of whom three of the younger sons, George, John, and Richard, were the founders of families; GEORGE ALINGTON, the 2nd son, being the direct ancestor of the ALINGTONS, of Swinhope, co. Lincoln, whose present representative, GEORGE MARMADUKE ALINGTON, Esq., of Swinhope, is also male representative of the family of the LORDS ALINGTON (see BURKE'S Landed Gentry). Sir Giles was s. by his eldest son,

GILES ALINGTON, Esq., of Horseheath, co. Cambridge; high sheriff of that shire in the 22nd of HENRY VIII., and of Huntingdon in the 37th of the same monarch. Mr. Alington appears to have attended King HENRY VIII. as master of the ordnance at the siege of Boulogne, by the inscription of a clock which he brought from that siege, and affixed over the offices at Horseheath Hall, in which was the alarm bell of the garrison of Boulogne. He d. in 1586, and from him lineally descended

WILLIAM ALINGTON, Esq., of Horseheath Hall, co. Cambridge, who was elevated to the peerage of Ireland, as BARON ALINGTON, of Kiltard, on 28 July, 1642. His lordship m. Elizabeth, dau. of Sir Lionel Tollemache, Bart., of Helmingham, by whom he had, with five sons, three daus.; viz.,

Elizabeth, m. to Charles, Lord Seymour, of Troubridge.

Catherine, m. to Sir John Jacob, Bart., of Gamlinghay, co. Cambridge.

Diana, d. uam.

Lord Alington was s. by his 2nd, but eldest surviving son,

WILLIAM ALINGTON, 2nd baron, who was created a peer of England on 5 December, 1682, by the title of BARON ALINGTON, of Wymondley, in the co. of Herts. His lordship m. 1st, Catherine, 2nd dau. of Henry Lord Stanhope, son of Philip, 2nd earl of Chesterfield, by whom he had no issue. He m., 2ndly, Joanna, dau. of Baptist, Lord Campden, and had a dau., JULIANA, who m. Scroope, Lord Howe, and was grandmother of the famous RICHARD EARL HOWE, the great admiral, whose co-representatives are Earl Howe and the Marquess of Sligo.

Lord Alington m. Brilly, Diana, dau. of William Russell, 1st Duke of Bedford, by whom he had one surviving son, GILES, and two daus.; viz.,

Diana, m. Sir George Warburton, Bart., of Arley, co. Chester, and d. in 1705, leaving an only dau., DIANA, who m. Sir Richard Grosvenor, Bart., of Eaton, co. Chester, but had no issue. Sir Richard, who acquired a third part of the Alington estates with his wife, purchased the shares of Lady Howe and Sir Nathaniel Napier, and thus became possessed of the entire manor of Wymondley, which entitled him to present the first cup of silver at the coronations of GEORGE II. and GEORGE III.

His lordship d. in 1684, and was s. by his son,

GILES ALINGTON, 3rd baron of the Irish creation, and 2nd of the English. This nobleman dying in his tenth year, anno 1691, the English peerage EXPIRED, while that of Ireland reverted to his uncle,

The Hon. HILDEBRAND ALINGTON, son of the 1st lord, as 4th baron; but his lordship did not inherit the fortune. William, the 2nd lord, having devised his estates, the most extensive in the co. of Cambridge, to his widow during the minority of his children, with a power of granting leases to raise portions for his daus., that lady, in consequence of an error in the will, found herself possessed of the power of leasing ad infinitum, and she accordingly made a lease of the whole to Henry Bromley, Esq., afterwards Lord Montfort, for 999 years; to whom, subsequently, Hildebrand, Lord Alington, also disposed of the small interest then remaining to him in the estates. His lordship dying s. p. in 1722, the Irish barony of ALINGTON, OF KILLARD likewise became EXTINCT

III. Richard, M.P. for the co. Kildare, b. 16 July, 1696; m. Dorothy, dau. and co-heiress of Major Green, of Killaghy, co. Tipperary; and dying 14 April, 1745, left issue,

1 JOHN, } successively viscounts.

2 JOSHUA, }

3 Richard.

1 Elizabeth, m. 1767, to Captain Browne.

His lordship d. 8 November, 1726, and was s. by his eldest son, JOSHUA, 2nd viscount, b. in 1685; m. 18 October, 1704, Margaret, dau. of Samuel Du Pass, Esq., of Epsom, by whom he had,

JOHN, his heir.

ELIZABETH, m. 1750, John, 1st Lord Carysfort, and had a dau., Elizabeth, m. to Thomas-James Storer, Esq., and a son, John-Joshua, 1st Earl of Carysfort, father of Granville-Leveson, EARL OF CARYSFORT.

FRANCES, m. the Right Hon. Sir William Mayne, Bart., afterwards created Lord Newhaven, and had one child only, a son, who d. young.

His lordship d. 5 December, 1742, and was s. by his only surviving son,

JOHN, 3rd viscount. This nobleman being insulted in the public streets by some disorderly dragoons, 26 April, 1745, received a wound in the hand, which occasioned a fever, and caused his death 25 May following. As he d. unm., his sisters became his heirs, and the peerage devolved upon his first cousin (refer to children of the Hon. Richard Allen, youngest son of the 1st viscount),

JOHN, 4th viscount, at whose decease unm., 10 November, 1753, the honours passed to his next brother,

JOSHUA, 5th viscount, b. 26 April, 1729; m. in 1781, Frances, eldest dau. of Gaynor Barry, Esq., of Dormstown, co. Meath, by whom (who d. in 1833) he had a son and two daus., viz.,

I. JOSHUA-WILLIAM, last viscount.

1. Frances-Elizabeth, d. unm., 31 January, 1826.

II. LETITIA-EMILY-DOROTHEA, m. 17 May, 1806, the Hon. and Very Rev. William Herbert, LL.D., dean of Manchester, son of Henry, 1st Earl of Carnarvon, and by him (who d. 28 May, 1847), had, with other issue,

1 HENRY-WILLIAM-HERBERT, b. 7 April, 1807; d. 2 September, 1859.

AMORIE—BARONS D'AMORIE.

By Writ of Summons, dated 20 November, 1317.

Lineage.

GILBERT DE AUMARI, in the 15th HENRY II., gave fifteen marks for livery of his lands at Winford, in the co. of Somerset; after this Gilbert came another,

GILBERT D'AMORIE, who in the 22nd EDWARD I. was in the expedition made into Gascony. This Gilbert had three sons, viz.,

I. ROGER (Sir), of whom presently.

II. NICHOLAS, who, in the 6th EDWARD II., obtained a charter of free warren, in all his demesne lands within the manors of Bokenhall and Blechesdon, co. Oxford, and Thornebergh, co. Bucks. He was s. by his son,

SIR RICHARD D'AMORIE, who was summoned to parliament as a BARON from 20th EDWARD II. to 4th EDWARD III. This nobleman was in the wars of Scotland in 1320, and in three years afterwards, being at the time steward of the king's household, had command to besiege the castle of Wallingford, then in possession of the rebellious lords. His lordship d. in 1330, leaving issue,

RICHARD, 2nd baron. His lordship, who was engaged in the Flemish and French wars from 1341 to 1347, d. without issue in 1375, when this BARONY EXPIRED, but the estates devolved upon his sisters,

ELIZABETH, m. to Sir John Chandos, K.G.

ELEANOR, m. to Roger Colyng.

MARGARET, whose only child, Isabel, m. Sir John Annesley, Knt.

III. RICHARD (Sir), continued the male line after the extinction of his elder brothers, and from him sprang, it is asserted, the family of DAMER, EARLS OF DORCHESTER, now represented by Henry-John-Leuben Dawson-Damer, Earl of Portarlington.

The eldest son,

SIR ROGER D'AMORIE, was summoned to parliament as a BARON, from 20 November, 1317, to 15 May, 1321. This nobleman obtained in the 13th EDWARD II., from the crown, confirmed by the parliament then held at York, the manors of Sandall, in Yorkshire, Houghton, in Oxfordshire, and Faukeshall, in Surrey, as likewise 100 marks per annum to be paid out of the exchequer. His lordship was engaged in the wars of Scotland, and was governor at different times of Knaresborough Castle, the castle of Gloucester, and St. Briavel's Castle. He was also warden of the forest of Dene. He joined, however, in the confederacy against the Spencers, and enrolling himself under the banner of Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, marched on Burton-upon-Trent, and thence to Tutbury Castle, co. Stafford, where falling ill, he d. in 1322, and was buried in the priory at Ware, in Hertfordshire. His lordship m. Elizabeth, 3rd sister and co-heir of Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Gloucester (who had been previously twice a widow, 1st of John de Burgh, Earl of Ulster, and 2ndly, of Theobald de Verdon, she was also niece of King EDWARD I.). By this lady he had issue, two daus., his co heirs, viz.,

Elizabeth, m. to John, Lord Bardolph, by whom she had,

WILLIAM, Lord Bardolph, whose son,

THOMAS, Lord Bardolph, being attainted, the BARONIES OF BARDOLPH AND D'AMORIE fell under the attainder and EXPIRED in 1404.

Eleanor, m. to John de Raleigh, progenitor, it is said, of the celebrated Sir Walter Raleigh.

Upon the decease of Lord D'Amorie, orders were given to seize all his lands as an enemy and rebel, and to make livery of them to Elizabeth de Burgh, his widow. This lady d. in the 34th EDWARD III., leaving, Dugdale says, Elizabeth Lady Bardolph, then above thirty years of age; Nicolas calls this Elizabeth the only dau. and heir of Roger, Lord D'Amorie; as such, she of course inherited the Barony of D'Amorie, and it EXPIRED as stated above, with that of Bardolph; but Banks mentions the other dau., who if Sir Walter Raleigh sprang from her, left descendants, amongst some of whom the BARONY OF D'AMORIE may yet be in ABEYANCE.

One branch of this ancient house was long seated at Yatt, co. Gloucester; and another has migrated to America where, in the United States, the name and family of Amory are well known and esteemed.

ANGUS—EARL OF MORAY.

ANGUS, EARL OF MORAY, was killed at Strickathrow, in Forfarshire, in 1130.

ANNESLEY—EARLS OF ANGLESEY.

By Letters Patent, dated 20 April, 1661.

Lineage.

The ancient family of ANNESLEY, derived their surname from the town of Annesley, co. Nottingham, which was possessed in 1079, by

RICHARD DE ANNESLEY, from whom lineally descended

SIR JOHN ANNESLEY, Knight of Hedynton, co. Oxford, M.P. for Notts, temp. EDWARD III and RICHARD II. He m. Isabel, dau., by Sir John Ireland, and heir of Margaret, 3rd sister and co-heir of Sir John Chandos, K.G., Baron of St. Saviour le Viscount, in Normandy, whereby becoming interested in that barony, he cited Thomas de Caterton, who had been governor of the castle of St. Saviour le Viscount, into the Court of Chivalry, to appear before the Lord High Constable of England and others, at Westminster, on 7 May, 1380, to answer his delivering up to the French the said castle of St. Saviour's, a third part whereof being Sir John's property, in right of his wife. And the said Thomas, endeavouring to avoid the challenge by frivolous exceptions, John, Duke of Lancaster, 3rd son of King EDWARD III., swore, that if he did not perform what he ought to do therein, according to the law of arms, he should be drawn to the gallows as a traitor. The combat took place in the March following, in the Palace Yard of Westminster, and "Caterton," says Barnes, in his History of EDWARD III., "was a mighty man of valour, of a large stature, and far overtopped the knight, being also of great expectation in such matters. But, however, whether justice, or chance, or valour, only decided the business, the knight prevailed, and Caterton, the day after the combat (as some say) died of his wounds, though, considering the laws attending duels in such cases, I rather inclined to Fabian, who affirms he was drawn to Tyburn, and there hanged for the treason, whereof being vanquished he was proved guilty." The king taking into consideration the damage done to this Sir John Annesley, was pleased, 26 May, 1385, to grant to him, and Isabel his wife, for their lives, an annuity of £40 per annum out of the exchequer. He was s. by his son,

THOMAS ANNESLEY, of Annesley, co. Nottingham, M.P. for that shire, temp. RICHARD II., from whom descended

ROBERT ANNESLEY, of Newport-Pagnel, co. Bucks, who d. 1st Queen MARY. And we pass to his great grandson,

SIR FRANCIS ANNESLEY, Knt., of Newport-Pagnel, who was created a BARONET OF IRELAND, upon the institution of that order by King JAMES I. And filling the offices in the Irish government of vice-treasurer and secretary of state, he was elevated to the peerage of that kingdom, by letters patent, dated 8 February, 1628, as BARON MOUNT NORRIS, of Mount Norris, co. Armagh, having been created the year previously VISCOUNT VALENTIA, co. Kerry, to hold immediately after the death of Henry Power, the then Viscount Valentia, in case the said Henry died without male issue, which dignity he accordingly enjoyed upon the decease of that nobleman. In the 19th JAMES I., Sir Francis, then one of the principal secretaries of state, was in commission with the lord deputy, the lord chancellor, and the archbishop of Armagh, to enquire into the clerical affairs of Ireland. During the lieutenancy of the Earl of Strafford, his lordship was, however, committed to prison, and sentenced to lose his head, by a most extraordinary stretch of power, which proceeding afterwards constituted the 5th article of the impeachment of Lord Strafford. The charge against Lord Mountnorris, upon which he was tried and condemned by a council of war, was thus set forth by the Lord Deputy himself:—"That within three or four days, or thereabouts, after the end of the parliament, it being mentioned at the Lord Chancellor's table, that after we, the Lord Deputy, had dissolved the parliament, being sitting down in the presence-chamber, one of our servants in moving a stool, happened to hurt our foot, then indisposed through an accession of gout; that one then present at the Lord Chancellor's table, said to the Lord Mountnorris, being there likewise, that it was Annesley, his lordship's kinsman, and one of our, the Lord Deputy and general's gentlemen ushers, had done it: whereupon the Lord Mountnorris then publicly, and in a scornful, contemptuous manner, answered, 'Perhaps it was done in revenge of that public affront which my Lord Deputy had done him formerly; but he has a brother that would not take such a revenge.'" which public affront the lord deputy thus explains:—"That his said kinsman (being one of the horse troop commanded by us, the Lord Deputy), in the time of exercising the said troop, was out of order on horseback, to the disturbance of the rest, then in exercising; for which we, the Lord Deputy, in a mild manner, reproofing, as soon as we turned aside from him, we observed him to laugh and jeer us for our just reproof of him; which we disliking, returned to him, and laying a small cane (which we then carried) on his shoulders (yet without any blow or stroke then given him therewith), told him, that, if he did serve us so any more, we would lay him over the pate." And the Lord Deputy draws this inference thus against Lord Mountnorris:—"We conceive offence to contain an incitement to revenge in these words, 'but he has a brother that would not take such a revenge.'" which incitement might have given encouragement to that brother, being then and now in this kingdom, and lieutenant of the said Lord Mountnorris's foot company." Upon this frivolous accusation Lord Mountnorris was found guilty, and adjudged "to be imprisoned, to stand from henceforth deprived from all the places, with the entertainments due thereunto, which he holds now in the army, to be disarmed, to be banished the army, and disabled from ever bearing office therein hereafter; and, lastly, to be shot to death, or to lose his head, at the pleasure of the general. Given at his Majesty's Castle of Dublin, 12th day of December, 1635." Although the extremity of this iniquitous sentence was not put into execution, his lordship was deprived, in conformity with it, of all his offices, and confined in the castle of Dublin for nearly a year and a-half. He lived, however, to witness the disgrace and public execution of his persecutor, the Earl of Strafford. Lord Mountnorris, who became Viscount Valentia, m. 1st, Dorothy, dau. of Sir John Philips, of Picton Castle, co. Pembroke, by whom he had, with other issue,

I. ARTHUR, his successor.

II. John, of Ballysoran, co. Kildare, m. Charity, dau. of Henry Warren, Esq., of Grange Begg. co. Kildare, and had issue.

1. Anne, m. to George Cook, Esq., of Pebmarsh, co. Essex.

His lordship m. 2ndly, Jane, dau. of Sir John Stanhope, Knt., sister of Philip, Earl of Chesterfield, and widow of Sir Peter Courteen, Knt., of Aldington, co. Worcester, by whom he had surviving issue,

I. Francis, of Castle Wellan, co. Down, who m. Debora, dau. of Dr. Henry Jones, bishop of Meath, and widow of John Boudler, Esq., of Dublin, and was s. by his son,

Francis, M.P. for Downpatrick and for Westbury, m. Elizabeth, dau. of Sir John Martin, of London, by whom, with several other children, he had FRANCIS, ancestor of the ANNESLEYS, OF BLECHINGTON, co. Oxford, now VISCOUNTS VALENTIA; and WILLIAM, ancestor of the EARLS ANNESLEY.

1. Catharine, m. to Sir Randolph Beresford, Bart., of Coleraine.

The viscount d. in 1660, and was s. by his eldest son,

ARTHUR ANNESLEY, 2nd Viscount Valentia. This nobleman

was appointed in the lifetime of his father (anno 1645), first of the three commissioners then nominated by parliament to govern the kingdom of Ireland. And a little before the Restoration, in the year 1660, being president of the council, he evinced, according to Lord Clarendon, a strong disposition towards the exiled monarch, for which, and his subsequent adhesion to the restored government, he was sworn of the privy council, and created, 20 April, 1661, a peer of England, by the titles of Baron Annesley, of Newport-Pagnel, co. Bucks, and EARL OF ANGLESEY.

His lordship subsequently held the office of privy seal. He was a person of learning—a distinguished statesman, and an able political writer. The earl m. Elizabeth, one of the daus. and co-heirs of Sir James Altham, Knt., of Oxei, co. Herts, one of the barons of the exchequer, by whom he had five sons and five daus., viz.,

I. JAMES, Lord Annesley.

II. ALTHAM, who was created an Irish peer, 14 February, 1680, by the title of BARON ALTHAM, with limitation to his younger brothers. His lordship m. 1st, Alice, dau. and sole heiress of Charles Leigh, Esq., of Leighton Buzzard, co. Bedford, but had no issue. He m. 2ndly, Ursula, dau. and heir of Sir Robert Markham, Bart., and dying 1699, was s. by his only son, JAMES-GEORGE, 2nd Lord Altham, at whose decease, in infancy, the dignity reverted to his uncle, the Hon. and Very Rev.

III. RICHARD ANNESLEY, dean of Exeter, as 3rd Lord Altham, who d. in 1701, the year in which he succeeded to the peerage, and was s. by his son,

ARTHUR, 4th Lord Altham, who m. Mary, illegitimate dau. of John Sheffield, Duke of Buckingham; but dying, as supposed, issueless, 16 November, 1727, the title devolved upon his brother,

RICHARD, 5th Lord Altham, of whom hereafter as 6th EARL OF ANGLESEY.

IV. Arthur. v. Charles.

I. Dorothy, m. to Richard Power, Earl of Tyrone.

II. Elizabeth, m. to the Hon. Alexander Macdonnell, 2nd son of the Earl of Antrim.

III. Frances, m. 1st, to Francis Windham, Esq., of Felbridge; and 2ndly, to Sir John Thompson, of Haversham, Bucks, Bart., afterwards Lord Haversham.

IV. Philippa, m. 1st, to Charles, Lord Mohun; and 2ndly, to Thomas Coward, Esq., co. Somerset, serjeant-at-law.

v. Anne, m. to — Baker, Esq.

His lordship d. 6 April, 1686, and was s. by his eldest son,

JAMES ANNESLEY, 2nd Earl of Anglesey, who m. Lady Elizabeth Manners, dau. of John, Earl of Rutland, and had issue,

JAMES, Lord Annesley, } successively Earls of Anglesey.
JOHN, }
ARTHUR, }

Elizabeth, m. to Robert Gayer, Esq., of Stoke Poges, co. Bucks.

His lordship d. in 1690, and was s. by his eldest son,

JAMES ANNESLEY, 3rd Earl of Anglesey. This nobleman m. 28 October, 1699, Lady Catherine Darnley, natural dau. of King JAMES II., by Catherine, dau. of Sir Charles Sedley, Bart., by whom he had an only dau. and heiress,

Catherine, who m. William Phipps, Esq., son of Sir Constantine Phipps, Knt., lord chancellor of Ireland, and had issue, CONSTANTINE PHIPPS, created Baron Mulgrave, in the peerage of Ireland, a dignity inherited by his lordship's grandson, the present Marquess of Normanby.

His lordship d. 18 January 1701–2, and having no male issue, the honours devolved upon his brother,

JOHN ANNESLEY, 4th Earl of Anglesey, who, in the year 1710, was constituted vice-treasurer, receiver-general, and paymaster of the forces in Ireland, and sworn of the privy council. His lordship m. in 1706, Lady Henrietta Stanley, eldest dau. and co-heir of William, Earl of Derby, by whom he had an only dau., Elizabeth, who d. in infancy. The earl d. 18 September, 1710, and was s. by his only surviving brother,

ARTHUR ANNESLEY, 5th Earl of Anglesey. Upon the death of Queen ANNE, this nobleman was chosen by King GEORGE I. to be one of the lords justices, until his Majesty's arrival from Hanover; after which he was sworn of the privy council. He was afterwards joint treasurer of Ireland, and treasurer at war. His lordship was also high steward of the University of Cambridge, which seat of learning he represented in three successive parliaments while a commoner. He m. Mary, dau. of John Thompson, Lord Haversham, but dying without issue, the honours were assumed by his kinsman,

RICHARD ANNESLEY, 5th Lord Altham, as 6th Earl of Anglesey (revert to issue of Arthur, 2nd Viscount Valentia and 1st Earl of Anglesey). Soon after the assumption of the dignity by this Earl Richard, a claimant to the honours arose in Mr. James Annesley, who asserted himself to be the son of Arthur, 4th Lord Altham, by Mary, his wife, and a publication entitled "The Adventures of an Unfortunate Young Nobleman," sets forth his case in a very curious and interesting narrative. In that statement it is alleged that Mr. Annesley is the true and lawful son and heir of Arthur, Lord Altham, and that he had been kidnapped and transported by his uncle Richard, to make room for his own accession to the honours and estates of the family. Mr. Annesley did more, however, to establish his legitimacy. He commenced a suit at law for the recovery of his property from his uncle, and after a trial in the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, James Annesley against Richard, called Earl of Anglesey, commenced 11 November, 1743, and continued by adjournment daily to the 25th of the same month, he obtained a VERDICT. But he does not appear to have made any effort for the peerage, for Richard survived the issue of the suit eighteen years, and was always esteemed Earl of Anglesey. [For a full narrative of the marvellous incidents in the life of James Annesley, as well as of the Annesley litigation, refer to BURKE'S Vicissitudes of Families.]

The earl m. 15 September, 1741, Juliana, dau. of Richard Donovan, Esq., and by her (who d. 1776) had issue,

ARTHUR, heir to the Irish honours.

Richarda, m. 1761, to Robert Phaire, Esq., of Temple Shannon, co. Wexford.

Juliana, m. to Sir Frederick Flood, Bart.

His lordship d. 4 February, 1761, when the legitimacy of his son was contested by the heir-at-law, John Annesley, Esq., of Ballysax, who petitioned the Irish parliament to be admitted to the honours of the family. The matter excited great public interest, and was pending in the Irish House of Lords nearly four years, when their lordships came to a decision establishing the marriage with Miss Donovan, and confirming the rights of her son, ARTHUR, as Baron Mountnorris, Baron Altham, and Viscount Valentia, and as a Baronet of Ireland, and his lordship took his seat accordingly when he came of age, anno 1765, in the House of Lords. He then applied for his writ to the English House of Peers, as Earl of Anglesey, but there the decision as to his legitimacy and the marriage of his mother, was against him, and the writ was denied; upon the decease, therefore, of Richard, Earl of Anglesey, in 1761, the Earldom of Anglesey was deemed to have EXPIRED, and the dignity has since been conferred upon another family. Arthur, Lord Valentia, continued, however, to sit in the Irish parliament (his case being again investigated and his right confirmed), and was created, 3 December, 1793, EARL OF MOUNTNORRIS, in the peerage of Ireland. His lordship m. 1st, in 1767, Lucy, only dau. and eventual heir of George, 1st Lord Lyttleton, by whom (who d. 1783) he had

Juliana-Lucy, m. John, Lord Farnham; and d. s. p. 1833.

Hester-Annabella, m. in 1801, Major-Gen. Norman Macleod and d. 14 August, 1844, leaving, with other issue, a son and heir, Arthur-Lyttelton Macleod, Esq., who changed his name for that of his maternal ancestors, and became ARTHUR-LYTTELTON ANNESLEY, Esq., of Arley Castle, co. Stafford

The earl m. 2ndly, 20 December, 1783, Sarah, 3rd dau. of the Rt. Hon. Sir Henry Cavendish and the Baroness Waterpark, by whom (who d. 1849) he left at his decease, in 1816, Henry-Arthur, d. s. p. in 1818.

Catherine, m. Lord John Somerset, and had issue.

Frances-Caroline, m. in 1810, to Sir James-Webster Wedderburn, late of the 10th Hussars; and d. 22 January, 1837.

Juliana, m. 26 October, 1837, to Robert Bayly, Esq., of Ballyduff.

The earl d. 4 July, 1816, and was s. by his son,

GEORGE, 2nd Earl of Mountnorris, F.R.S., F.S.A., & 1769; m. 1790, Anne, 8th dau. of William, 2nd Viscount Courtenay, and by her (who d. 1835) had issue,

GEORGE-ARTHUR, Viscount Valentia, b. 20 October, 1793; m. 21 October, 1837, Frances-Cockburn, only dau. of the late Charles-James Sims, Esq.; and d. s. p. 16 March, 1841. Lady Valentia d. 27 January, 1856.

William, in holy orders, b. 19 February, 1798; d. unm. 1 November, 1830.

The earl d. 23 July, 1844, when the Earldom of Mountnorris became EXTINCT, and the VISCOUNTY OF VALENTIA passed to his kinsman, ARTHUR ANNESLEY, Esq., of Bletchington, co. Oxford. (See BURKE'S Extant Peerage.)

IV. Johanna.

Mr. Anson d. in 1720, and was s. by his elder son,

THOMAS ANSON, Esq., of Shugborough, M.P. for Lichfield, who, at his decease, s. p., bequeathed his property to his nephew, George Adams. Thomas Anson's younger brother, GEORGE ANSON, so celebrated for his voyage round the world, was soon after his return appointed rear-admiral of the Blue, and one of the lords of the admiralty. In April, 1745, he was made rear-admiral of the White, and in July, 1746, vice-admiral of the Blue. In 1747 (13 June), he was elevated to the peerage by the title of LORD ANSON, Baron of Soberton, co. Hants, and the same year appointed vice-admiral of the Red. In 1751, his lordship was constituted first lord of the admiralty; and he continued in that high office, with a very brief interval, until his death. This gallant and enterprising seaman m. Lady Elizabeth Yorke, dau. of Philip, 1st Earl of Hardwicke: but d. s. p. 6 June, 1762, when the Barony of Anson became extinct, while his fortune devolved upon his nephew, GEORGE ADAMS, Esq., who subsequently inherited the estates of his elder uncle, THOMAS, and assumed, by sign-manual, 30 April, 1773, the surname and arms of ANSON. His great-grandson is the present EARL of LICHFIELD.

AP-ADAM—BARONS DE AP-ADAM.

By Writ of Summons, dated 6 February, 1299

Lineage.

SIR JOHN AP ADAM, possessor in his own right of lands in Gorste and Beteale within Tidenham, co. Gloucester, having m. in the 19th EDWARD I., Elizabeth, dau. and heiress of John de Gurnay, Baron of Beverstone, co. Gloucester, by Oliva, his wife, dau. of Henry Lovel, Baron of Castle Cary, obtained considerable landed property in that shire by the alliance, and in five years afterwards, an accession of estates in Somersetshire, upon the decease of the lady's mother, Oliva. This John had a royal charter (in the 21st of EDWARD I.) for a weekly market and a yearly fair to be holden at Beverstone, and another charter in the 26th of the same monarch, for a weekly market and annual fair to be holden at his manor of Netherwere. In this latter year he was engaged in the Scottish wars; and again, in eight years subsequently. He was summoned to parliament from the 25th of EDWARD I. to the 2nd of EDWARD II. inclusive. His lordship d. 4 EDWARD II., leaving in minority a son and heir,

SIR THOMAS AP-ADAM, whose wardship Ralph de Monthermer obtained, in consideration of 6,000 marks. This Thomas arrived at maturity in the 18th of EDWARD II., and had livery of his lands upon doing homage. He was living in 1330, having then alienated the greater part of the estates he had inherited from the Gurnays, and sold the castle and manor of Beverstone to Thomas de Berkeley and Margaret his wife: his three sons, Robert, Hamund, and John, all appear to have d. s. p.; but his only dau.—heiress to her brothers—and wife of Thomlyn Huntley ap Philipot, left a son and heir, JOHN HUNTLEY AP THOMLYN, who succeeded to his uncle Robert ap Adam's lands in Tidenham: by Johanna, his wife, this John ap Thomlyn left dau., his co-heiresses, of whom MARGARET was wife of Edmund ap Gwylyn ap Hopkin; and MARGERY, of Thomas Parker, of Monmouth, ancestor of the Powells of Llanllowell. Badams-court, with the manor of Bettesley, and a third of the manor of Gorste, the last Gloucestershire fragment of the once great estate of the Baron ap Adam was purchased in 1580 from Dr. John Symings, an eminent London physician, by William Lewis, Esq., of St. Pierre, co. Monmouth, and after passing through the families of Williams, of Tidenham and Cosby, was sold to GEORGE ORMEROD, Esq., D.C.L., of Sedbury.

There is a family of ADAMS seated at Middleton Hall, co. Carmarthen, which has assumed the surname of ABADAM, and claims to be descended from this baronial house.

Arms—Arg., on a cross, gu., five mullets, or; in the old painted glass of Tidenham church, the mullets are "pierced of the field."

ARCHDEKNE—BARONS ARCHDEKNE.

By Writ of Summons, dated 15 May, 1321.

Lineage.

THOMAS LE ARCHDEKNE, of Shepestall, co. Cornwall, petitioned the king, in parliament (35 EDWARD I.), soliciting that an investigation might be instituted, touching the seizure of his lands for neglect of service in the wars of Scotland, whereas neither himself nor his ancestors have been bound to perform such service, and praying for the restitution of the said lands. In the 6th of EDWARD II., this Thomas Le Archdekne was governor of Tintagel Castle, in the co. of Cornwall, and, in twelve years afterwards, a commissioner, with Ralph Lord Bassett, of Drayton, and Arnold de Durefort, to receive all such persons, in the duchy of Aquitaine, into protection as should submit to the king's authority. He was summoned to parliament as BARON ARCHDEKNE, from the 15 May, 1321, to 13 September, 1324; and, dying, was s. by his son,

JOHN LE ARCHDEKNE, 2nd baron—summoned to parliament on 25 February, 16th EDWARD III. This nobleman distinguished himself in the expedition to Flanders, in the 13th of EDWARD III., and, two years afterwards, was in Scotland, in the train of William de Many. In the next year we find him serving under Oliver de Ingham in the wars of Gascony; and, in the 19th of EDWARD III., upon the great expedition then made into France, he had summons to fit himself with horse and arms, so that he might be in readiness against the Feast of St. Lawrence to attend the king upon that enterprise. Again, in the 29th of the same monarch, Lord Archdekne attended Henry Duke of Lancaster upon another expedition against France. His lordship m. Cecily, dau. and heiress of Sir Jordan FitzStephen Hacombe, of Hacombe, and was s. by his son,

WARINE LE ARCHDEKNE, 3rd baron, who m. Elizabeth, one of the sisters and co-heiresses of John Talbot, of Richard's Castle, and had issue,

I. ALIANORE (or ELIZABETH), m. to Walter de Lucie, by whom she had,

ARCHER—BARONS ARCHER, OF UM- BERSLADE, CO. WARWICK.

Created by Letters Patent, dated 14 July, 1747.

Lineage.

The Archers of Umberslade were a family of considerable distinction, long antecedent to their elevation to the peerage. One line, deriving descent from Fulbert L'Archer, the Norman, was settled, at a very remote period, at Kilkenny, in Ireland; and its descendants may still be traced in that kingdom, one being the present GRAVES-CHAMNEY ARCHER, Esq., of Mount John, co. Wicklow.

ROBERT L'ARCHER, son of Fulbert L'Archer, who came into England with the CONQUEROR, obtained considerable grants from King HENRY I., whose tutor he had been, and acquired the lands of Umberslade, co. Warwick, as a marriage portion with his wife Sebit, dau. of Henry de Villiers, sewer to William de Newburgh, Earl of Warwick, all which possessions were confirmed by HENRY II. to his son,

WILLIAM L'ARCHER, whose son,

JOHN L'ARCHER, being champion to Thomas, Earl of Warwick, obtained special charter from that nobleman, granting to himself and his heirs the privilege of hunting and hawking everywhere within the territory of Taneworth, except the park, and of exercising all other liberties belonging to the earl within Monkspath and Omberslade, paying to the said earl and his heirs twelve broad arrow heads and a couple of capons yearly, at Whitsuntide, as an acknowledgment. This John d. in the 25th HENRY III., leaving four sons and two daus. The three younger sons appear to have been churchmen. Thomas, the 2nd, was prior of St. John's of Jerusalem, in England, temp. EDWARD II. The eldest son.

JOHN ARCHER, purchased of William de Olenhale the manor of Monkspath, adjoining Omberslade. This John m. Margery, dau. of Sir William Tracey, of Todington, co. Gloucester, and was s. by his eldest son.

JOHN ARCHER, who m. Isabel, dau. of Ralph Erscote, Esq., of Erscote, co. Warwick, by whom he had two sons and two daus.; and, dying in the 22nd of EDWARD III., was s. by the elder son.

THOMAS ARCHER. This gentleman m. Margaret, dau. and co-heiress of John Malley, Esq., of Malley, co. Salop, and had issue.

THOMAS, his successor.

Gilbert, who, writing himself of Taneworth, had license from the crown, in the 16th RICHARD II., to give to the prior and convent of Kenilworth one messuage, with divers lands at Hitchenden, in the co. of Buckingham.

Joane, m. to William Shelly, Esq.

This Thomas Archer's will is dated "Thursday next after the Feast of St. Thomas the Martyr, 1372," and he was s. in that year by his elder son.

THOMAS ARCHER, one of the gallant soldiers of the martial reign of EDWARD III. In 1373 he had a command in the army of John of Gaunt, and fell into the hands of the French and Burgundians in a rencontre at Ouchy le Château, near Soissons, on 10 October in that year, being surprised when foraging with Sir Matthew Redmayn, Sir Thomas Spencer, Sir Hugh Brudenel, Sir John Bouchier, and several other knights and esquires. In the 49th of EDWARD III. we again find him in France under Thomas Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, from whom he received a pension for his services, dated at Worcester "20 Martii, 1 Rich. II.," in the 21st of which latter reign he received a special pardon dated 8 June, for all manner of transgressions, and for whatever he had acted contrary to his allegiance, &c. in behalf of Thomas, late Duke of Gloucester, Richard, late Earl of Arundel, and Thomas, Earl of Warwick; after which, in the same year, he was in commission for assessing and collecting a fifteenth and tenth, then granted to the King in parliament. This Thomas Archer m. Agnes, dau. of Sir Walter Cokesey, of Cokesey, co. Worcester, and grand-dau. of Hugh Cokesey and of Dionis his wife, one of the four sisters and co-heiresses of Edmund le Boteler, by whom he had three sons. He died, after being bedridden for three years, in the 84th year of his age, on the Feast of Pentecost, in 1425, and was s. by his 2nd but eldest surviving son.

RICHARD ARCHER, who was one of the persons of note in the county of Warwick summoned in the 7th of HENRY V. to serve the king in person for the defence of the realm, being, according to the writ, "one that did bear ancient arms from his ancestors." This gentleman m. 1st, Alice, dau. of William Hugford, Esq., of Hugford and Middleton, co. Salop, sister and heiress of William Hugford, and widow of Sir Thomas Lucy, Knt., of Charlecote, by whom he had one son.

JOHN, who m. in the 25th HENRY VI., Christian, widow of Henry Sewal, of London, and only dau. and heiress of Ralph Blacklow, of the same city, and of his wife, Joan, only dau. and heiress of Thomas Coke, alias Malling, of West Malling, Kent, by whom he had an only son, JOHN. King HENRY VI., by his letters patent, dated 12 May, in the 6th year of his reign, retained this John Archer, Esq., by his factors or attorneys, to convey in ships all manner of provisions for victualling the town and fortress of Calais. Mr. Archer fell in battle in 1463, on the side of the Earl of Warwick, against King EDWARD IV. His widow remarried, in the 3rd of EDWARD IV., Henry Beech, Esq.

Richard Archer m. 2ndly, Margaret, relict of Thomas Newport, Esq., of Ercall, in Shropshire, ancestor of the Earls of Bradford, and 3rdly, Joane, dau. and heiress of William Ley, of Stotford, co. Stafford. In the 7th of HENRY VI. Mr. Archer had summons to attend the king in France, to be present at his coronation there; Sir Ralph Bruce, Knt., Sir Edward Dodingfell, and Nicholas Burdett, with others of the county of Warwick, being also summoned. In the 19th of the same monarchy, he served the office of sheriff for the county of Salop, and the next year that of sheriff for the county of Stafford, in which shire he resided at Stotford. ARDEN—BARON ALVANLEY, OF ALVANLEY, CO. CHESTER.

By Letters Patent, dated 22 May, 1801.

Lineage.

"The elder branch of the Ardernes," says Lysons, in his Cheshire, "whose chief seat was at Aldford, where they had a castle, became extinct in the principal line by the death of Walkeline Arderne, in or about the reign of RICHARD II. The present John Arden, Esq., for so the family have of late years spelt the name, is descended from Sir John Arderne, a younger brother of Walkeline before mentioned, whose posterity settled in the parish of Stockport in the 15th century; and he is also the representative of the Barons of Montalt, and of the ancient family of the Dones, of Utlington and Flaxyards. A younger branch of the Ardernes settled at Alderley about the beginning of the reign of EDWARD III., and ended, after a few descents, in a female heir, who married into the Weever family, whose heiress married the ancestor of Sir J.-T. Stanley, Bart. The Ardernes of Leicestershire were descended from a younger son of Ralph Arderne, of Harden, in the 15th century."

SIR RALPH ARDERNE, of Harden, d. about 1420, leaving, by the dau. of Stanley of Hooton, two sons; the younger, Thomas, was the progenitor of the Ardernes of Leicestershire, and the elder,

JOHN ARDERNE, inherited Harden. From this gentleman descended through several generations,

SIR JOHN ARDERNE, Knt., whose grandson,

JOHN ARDEN, Esq., of Arden, co. Chester, m. Mary, dau. of Cuthbert Pepper, Esq., of Pepper Hall, co. York, and heiress of her brother, Preston Pepper, Esq., and had two sons, viz., John, of Arden, and

RICHARD-PEPPER ARDEN, Esq., b. in 1755, who was appointed solicitor-general in 1782, attorney-general in 1784, master of the rolls in 1788, and constituted lord chief justice of the court of Common Pleas in 1801, when he was elevated to the peerage, 22 May, 1801, in the dignity of BARON ALVANLEY, of Alvanley, co. Chester.* His lordship m. in 1784, Anne-Dorothea, eldest dau. of Richard Wilbraham Bootle, Esq., and sister of Edward, Lord Skelmersdale, by whom (who d. in 1825,) he left issue,

I. WILLIAM, his heir.

II. RICHARD-PEPPER, 3rd lord.

I. Sarah, d. young.

II. FRANCES-HENRIETTA, b. 1791; m. 21 June, 1831, Sir John Warrender, Bart., of Lochend, East Lothian; and d. 20 Feb. 1852, leaving an only child, HELEN-CATHERINE, m. 17 October, 1851, to George, Lord Binning, son and heir apparent of the present Earl of Haddington.

III. CATHERINE.

The baron d. 19 March, 1804, and was s. by his eldest son,

WILLIAM, as 2nd baron, b. 20 February, 1789, who d. unm. 16 November, 1849, when the title devolved on his brother,

RICHARD-PEPPER, as 3rd baron, b. 8 December, 1792; m. 30 April, 1831, Arabella, youngest dau. of William-Henry, 1st Duke of Cleveland, by whom (who survived him) he had no issue. His lordship, who had been a lieutenant-colonel in the army, d. 24 June, 1857, when the title became EXTINGUISHED.

Arms—Gu., three cross-crosslets, fitchée, or, on a chief, of the second, a crescent, of the first.

ARGENTINE—BARONS DE ARGENTINE.

By Writ of Summons, dated 26 January, 1297.

Lineage.

REGINALD DE ARGENTINE, left a widow, Maud, who had license to marry again in the 5th year of STEPHEN, upon giving a composition to the king for her dowry. This Reginald d. before the year 1139, and was s. by

REGINALD DE ARGENTINE, sheriff of the counties of Cambridge and Huntingdon, from the 6th to the 8th years of RICHARD I., and in the next year for the counties of Hertford and Essex, for one half of the year. He d. about the year 1223, and was s. by

RICHARD DE ARGENTINE, who being sheriff for the counties of Essex and Hertford, in the 8th of HENRY III., was constituted governor of the castle of Hertford. He was likewise sheriff of the counties of Cambridge and Huntingdon, and subsequently (11th HENRY III.) one of the stewards of the king's household. In the 14th of HENRY III., this Richard being (in the words of M. Paris), a noble knight and valiant in arms, went on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, and dying there in the year 1246, was s. by his son,

GILES DE ARGENTINE, a knight also of great valour, who, in the 16th of HENRY III., being with the king in an expedition made that year into Wales, fell into the hands of the enemy in a sharp conflict near Montgomery. In ten years afterwards he had summons with other important personages to attend the king with horse and arms into Gascony, and the next year he was appointed governor of Windsor Castle; but soon after we find him joining the rebel barons, at the battle of Lewes, and elected by them one of the nine councillors to assume the government of the kingdom. The barons being, however, defeated at the subsequent battle of Evesham, his lordship's lands and those of his son Reginald were sequestered. Giles m. Margery, dau. and heir of Sir R. de Aiguillon, and d. in the 11th of EDWARD I., seized of the manor of Great Wymondeley, co. Cambridge, holden by grand serjeanty, viz., "to serve the king upon the day of his coronation with a silver cup." His son and successor (then in minority),

* The manor of Alvanley, in the parish of Frodsham, was held under the Fitzalans, Earls of Arundel, at an early period, by Richard de Pierpont and Robert de Alvanley, who sold it to Sir Philip de Orreby, father of Philip, whose dau. and heir, Agnes, brought it and other possessions, in the reign of HENRY III., to Walkeline de Arderne, ancestor of John Arden, the present proprietor. A farm-house, called Alvanley Hall, occupies the site of an ancient mansion belonging to the Arden family, called by Webb, in 1622, "a very fine house, belonging to Henry Arderne, Esq., Lysons, Cheshire."

REGINALD DE ARGENTINE, who doing homage, had livery of all his father's lands in the counties of Cambridge, Norfolk, Suffolk, and Hertford. This nobleman was summoned to parliament in the 25th EDWARD I., 26 January, 1297. His lordship m. Lora, dau. of Robert de Vere, Earl of Oxford, and dying in 1307, was s. by his son,

JOHN DE ARGENTINE, 2nd baron, who had livery of his other lands, but was never summoned to parliament. This nobleman m. 1st, Joane, dau. and heir of Sir Roger Bryan, Knt., Lord of Throcking, Herts, and had issue, Joane, co-heir of her mother, who m. Sir John le Boteler, and was mother of Sir Edward Boteler.

Elizabeth, m. Sir William le Botiller, brother of Sir John. Dionysia, co-heir of her mother.

His lordship m. 2ndly, Agnes, dau. and heir of William Bero-ford, of Burton, co. Leicester, and dying in the 12th year of EDWARD II., was s. by his only son, then but six months old,

SIR JOHN DE ARGENTINE, 3rd baron, who was seised of the manors of Wymondeley, Herts, and Milburn, co. Cambridge; he received the honour of knighthood 4th of EDWARD III., but was never summoned to parliament. He m. Margaret, dau. and heir of Robert D'Arcy, of Stretton, and by her had issue,

Maud, m. to Sir Eudo or Ivo FitzWarren.

Joan, m. to Sir Bartholomew Naunton.

Elizabeth, m. Sir Baldwin St. George, and was mother, by him, of SIR BALDWIN ST. GEORGE, Knt., who m. 4 RICHARD II., Johanna, a dau. and co-heir of Sir John Engaine, and was ancestor of the ST. GEORGES of Hailey St. George, co. Cambridge, the ST. GEORGES of Dunmore, co. Galway, the ST. GEORGES, LORDS ST. GEORGE (whose heir-general is the DUKE OF LEINSTER), the ST. GEORGES of Tyrone, co. Galway, the ST. GEORGES, Barts., of Woodgiff, &c.

John Lord de Argentine d. 1382-3, without legitimate male issue,* when the barony fell into ABERNACE amongst his daus. and co-heirs.

Arms—Gu., three covered cups, arg.

ARMINE—BARONESS BELASYSE, OF OSGODBY.

By Letters Patent, dated 25 March, 1674.

Lineage.

SIR WILLIAM ARMINE, Bart., of Osgodby, co. Lincoln, b. 1622, m. Anne, dau. and co-heiress of Sir Robert Crane, Bart., of Chilton, co. Suffolk, and by her (who m. 2ndly John, Lord Belasyse,) left two daus, his co-heirs,

1. SUSAN, created a peeress for life.

2. ANNE, m. 1st, SIR THOMAS WODEHOUSE, Knt., by whom she had, with a dau., a son, Sir John Wodehouse, Bart., of Kimberley, grandfather of the 1st Lord Wodehouse. Her ladyship m. 2ndly, Thomas, 2nd Lord Crewe, of Stene, and by him had four daus., viz.,

1. Jemima Crewe, m. to Henry de Grey, Duke of Kent, and had issue,

ANTHONY, Earl of Harold, summoned to parliament as Baron Lucas, of Crudwell, in 1719. He m. Lady Mary Tufton, but d. s. p. in 1723. His death is mentioned as having arisen from an ear of barley which his lordship had inadvertently put into his mouth, by which he was choked.

Henry, d. unm.

* Sir William de Argentine, illegitimate son of the last Lord Argentine, was given the manor of Wymondeley. He m. 1st, Isabel, dau. of Sir Wm. Kenteston; and 2ndly, Margaret. —By the former he left an only son,

JOHN DE ARGENTINE, at whose decease the manor of Wymondeley was carried by his dau. and heiress, Elizabeth, into the family of Alington, upon her marriage with William Alington, Esq., ancestor of the Lords Alington. This manor of Wimley or Wymondeley is said to have fallen to the Argentines by marriage with the heiress of FitzTeas, who derived themselves from David D'Argenton, a Norman, who came over with WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR.

Note: "Of this family," says Dugdale, "was Reginald de Argentine, who, in 21 HENRY III., being a knight-templar, was standard bearer of the Christian army in a great battle against the Turks near Antioch, in the Holy Land, and carried it till his hands and legs being broken, he was there slain. So likewise was Sir Giles Argentine, Knt., slain in Scotland at the battle of Bannocksburne, near Strivelin, in 7th EDWARD II. It is said, that the king himself, being in that fatal battle, and seeing the danger, by the advice of this Sir Giles (who being then lately come from the wars of Henry de Luxemburgh, the Emperor, and reputed a stout warrior), fled to Dunbar; and that this Sir Giles, saying that he was not wont to fly, returned to the English host, and was slain."

Amabel, m. to John, Viscount Glenorchy, and hence descend the EARLS DE GREY AND RIFON.

Jemima, m. to John, 3rd Lord Ashburnham, and was ancestor of the present peer.

Anne, m. to Lord Charles Cavendish.

Mary, m. to Dr. Gregory, dean of Christchurch.

2. Armine Crewe, m. to Thomas Cartwright, Esq., of Aynho, ancestor of the present WILLIAM CORNWALLIS CARTWRIGHT, Esq., of Aynho.

3. Catherine Crewe, m. to Sir John Harpur, Bart., of Calke Abbey; and the great-grandson of this marriage SIR HENRY HARPUR, Bart., of Calke Abbey, assumed by Royal License, in 1808, the surname and arms of CREWE.

4. Elizabeth Crewe, m. to Charles Butler, Earl of Arran.

Anne, Lady Crewe, m. 3rdly, Arthur, Earl of Torrington.

The elder dau. and co-heiress of Sir William Armine,

SUSAN ARMINE, m. 1st, Hon. Sir Henry Belasyse, K.B., son and heir of John, Baron Belasyse, of Worlaby, and had a son,

HENRY BELASTYSE, who s. to the title of Belasyse, of Worlaby, upon the decease of his grandfather, his father, Sir Henry, dying previously (see BELASTYSE, of Worlaby).

Lady Belasyse m. 2ndly, — Portrey, Esq., of Chequers, but by him had no issue. Her ladyship was created a peeress for life, by King CHARLES II., by letters patent dated 25 March, 1674, as BARONESS BELASTYSE OF OSGODBY. She d. 6 March, 1712-13, when the dignity EXPIRED.

Arms—Erm., a saltire engr., gu., on a chief of the last a lion passant, or, armed and langued, az.

ARUNDEL—BARONS ARUNDEL, OF TRECICE.

By Letters Patent, dated 23 March, 1664.

Lineage.

RANDEL ARUNDEL, m. Elizabeth, dau. and heiress of John Steward, and left a son,

RALPH ARUNDEL, living in the 31st of EDWARD III., who m. Jane, dau. and heiress of Michael Trevice, by whom he had two sons, NICHOLAS and Thomas, and a dau. Jane, m. to Robert Trevanion. The elder son, NICHOLAS ARUNDEL, m. Elizabeth, dau. of John Pellocer, and sister and co-heiress of Martin Pellocer, and was s. by his son,

SIR JOHN ARUNDEL, of Trevice, co. Cornwall, who m. Joan, dau. and heiress of John Durant, and was s. by his eldest son, NICHOLAS ARUNDEL, who m. Jane, dau. of Edward St. John, Esq., by whom he had four sons and four daus. He was s. by his eldest son,

SIR JOHN ARUNDEL, Knt., sheriff of Cornwall in 1471. "This gentleman being forewarned," says Carew in his Survey of Cornwall, "that he should be slain on the sands, forsook his house at Elford, as too maritime, and removed to Trevice, his more inland habitation in the same county; but he did not escape his fate, for being sheriff of Cornwall in that year, and the Earl of Oxford surprising Mount Michael, for the house of Lancaster, he had the king's commands, by his office, to endeavour the reducing of it, and lost his life in a skirmish on the sands thereabouts." Sir John Arundel m. 1st, Margaret, dau. of Sir Hugh Courtenay, Knt., by whom he had two sons, who d. young; and 2ndly, Anne, dau. of Sir Walter Moyle, Knt., by whom he had also two sons, and was s. by the elder,

SIR JOHN ARUNDEL, sheriff of Cornwall, anno 1524. He m. Joan, dau. of Thomas Greenvil, Esq., and was s. by his only son,

JOHN ARUNDEL, Esq., who received the honour of knighthood at the battle of Spurs. This gallant person, who was vice-admiral to Kings HENRY VII. and VIII., acquired great renown by the defeat and capture of Duncan Campbell, the Scottish pirate, in a sea fight. Sir John Arundel m. 1st, Mary, dau. and co-heiress of John Beville, of Gwarnick, Cornwall, by whom he had a son, Roger, and three daus., viz.,

Elizabeth, m. to Robert Tredenham, Esq.

Catherine, m. to Richard Prideaux, Esq., of Thuborough.

Jane, m. to William Wall, Esq.

Sir John m. 2ndly, Julian, dau. of Jacob Erisey, Esq., by whom he had issue,

John, who became his heir.

Margaret, m. to Robert Beckett, Esq.

Jane, m. to Wm. Vyel, Esq., of Treworder.

Grace, m. to John Dinham, Esq.

Margery, m. to John Trengough.

He was s. by his only surviving son.

JOHN ARUNDEL, Esq., who m. 1st, Catherine, dau. and co-heiress of John Cosworth, Esq., and relict of Allan Hill, Esq., by whom he had four daus., viz.,

Mary, m. to Oliver Dynham, Esq.
 Dorothy, m. to Edward Cosworth, Esq.
 Julian, m. to Richard Carew, Esq., of Antony, Cornwall.
 Alice, m. to Henry Somaster, Esq., of Painsford.

Mr. Arundel m. 2ndly, Gertrude, dau. of Robert Dennis, Esq., of Holcomb, by whom he had two sons, JOHN and Thomas, and two daus., Anne, m. to William Cornfew, Esq., of Bucclesly, and Catherine, m. to John St. Aubyn, Esq. He d. in 1580, and was s. by his elder son,

JOHN ARUNDEL, Esq., of Trelice, M.P. for Cornwall, temp. Queen ELIZABETH and King JAMES I., and for Tregony in the reign of King CHARLES I. At the breaking out of the civil war, this eminent person, with his four sons, espoused the cause of royalty, and took up arms for the king. Of these sons, two, John and William, lost their lives in the service of their unfortunate master, while their gallant father hurled defiance to the rebels from the battlements of Pendennis, and maintained his position there, to the very end of those unhappy conflicts, although besieged both by sea and land, being as Lord Clarendon relates, then nearly fourscore years of age, and of one of the best estates and interests in the county of Cornwall. Whitlock states, that on the 31st of August, 1646, letters came to the parliament of the surrender of Pendennis Castle, and in it were Colonel Arundel, the governor, four knights, five colonels, and divers others of quality. That they had store of arms, but little provision. Colonel Arundel m. Mary, dau. of George Cary, Esq., of Clovelly, co. Devon, by whom he had four sons and two daus.; viz, RICHARD, John, William, Francis, Agnes, and Mary. The latter was m. 1st, to John Trevanion, Esq. (son and heir of Charles Trevanion, Esq., of Caerhayes), and 2ndly, to Sir John Arundel, of Lanherne. He was s. at his decease by his eldest son,

RICHARD ARUNDEL, Esq., member in the two last parliaments of King CHARLES I., for Lostwithiel, and in his military capacity, attached to the personal staff of that unhappy prince. This gallant officer had a command in the battle of Kineton, in the county of Warwick, where he displayed the hereditary valour of his family, and he was subsequently actively engaged during the whole of the civil wars, in which disastrous contest he was despoiled of the entire of his landed property. On the re-establishment of the monarchy, however, that was restored to him, and in consideration of the devotedness of his father, his brothers, and himself, to the royal cause, he was elevated to the peerage by letters patent, dated 23 March, 1664, as BARON ARUNDEL of TRELICE, co. Cornwall. His lordship m. Gertrude, dau. of Sir James Bagge, Knt., of Saltram, co. Devon, and widow of Sir Nicholas Slanning, Knt., of Bickley, and was s. at his decease in 1688, by his only surviving child,

JOHN ARUNDEL, 2nd baron; this nobleman m. 1st, Margaret, dau. and sole heiress of Sir John Acland, Knt., of Colomb-John, co. Devon, by whom he had issue,

JOHN, his successor.

Gertrude, m. 1st, to Sir Peter Whitcomb, of Essex; and 2ndly, to Sir Bennet Hoskins.

His lordship m. 2ndly, Barbara, dau. of Sir Henry Slingsby, of Scriven, co. York, Baronet, and relict of Sir Richard Mauleverer, of Allerton Mauleverer, in the same shire, by whom (who m. 3rdly THOMAS, EARL OF PEMBROKE), he had an only son, Richard, M.P., clerk of the pipe, m. 2 Sept. 1732, Frances, dau. of John, 2nd Duke of Rutland, and d. 1759.

Lord Arundel d. 7 September, 1697, and was s. by his elder son,

JOHN ARUNDEL, 3rd baron, who m. Elizabeth, dau. of the Right Rev. William Beaw, D.D., Lord Bishop of Landaff, and dying 24 September, 1706, was s. by his only surviving child, JOHN ARUNDEL, 4th baron, who m. in 1722, Elizabeth, dau. of Sir William Wentworth, of Ashby Puerorum, co. Lincoln, and sister of Thomas, Earl of Strafford, by whom, who d. in 1750, he had no issue. His lordship d. in 1773, when the barony EXPIRED. This nobleman, upon his marriage settled all his lands, in default of issue, on his wife's nephew, William Wentworth, Esq., of Hembury, co. Dorset, with remainder to Sir Thomas Acland, Bart., and his heirs. Mr. Wentworth, who succeeded to the estates under this settlement, levied a fine, and re-settled the manor of Trelice and the other Arundel estates on his son Frederick Thomas (afterwards Earl of Strafford), with remainder, in failure of issue, to his dau., who m. into the family of Kaye, of Woodsome, co. York, and on failure of issue from both (which was eventually the case) to SIR THOMAS ACLAND, Bart. The manor of Trelice and the other estates so limited became ultimately the property of Sir Thomas Dyke Acland, Bart., grandson of Sir Thomas, named in the settlement.

ASTLEY—BARONS ASTLEY.

By Writ of Summons, dated 23 June, 1295.

Lineage.

This noble family derived its surname from the manor of Astley (or Estley, as formerly written), in the county of Warwick, which, with other estates in that shire, belonged to the Astleys so far back as the reign of HENRY I.

PHILIP DE ESTLEY, grandson of the first possessor, was certified upon the assessment of the aid towards the marriage portion of King HENRY II.'s daughter, to hold three knight's fees of William Earl of Warwick, de veteri Feoffamento—by the service "of laying hands on the earl's stirrup when he did get upon, or alight from horseback." This feudal baron was s. by his son,

THOMAS DE ASTLEY, who holding certain lands of the Honour of Leicester, became a kind of bailiff to Simon de Montfort, Earl of Leicester, "as may be seen," says Dugdale, "by a fine of four score marks and a palfrey, to the king, in 9th John, to be discharged of the profits required of him for that earl's lands, during the time he had to do with them." In the 12th of King JOHN, this Thomas Astley paid 100 marks to the crown, to be excused going beyond the sea: Dugdale supposes in an expedition to Ireland. In the 17th of the same reign, he was committed prisoner to Bedford Castle, and had his lands seized for his participation in the rebellion of the barons; but returning to his allegiance, he was reinstated in his territorial possessions, in the 1st year of HENRY III., and in two years afterwards he was constituted a commissioner for restoring to the crown all the demesnes of which King JOHN was possessed at the beginning of his wars with the barons, &c. This feudal lord m. Maud, one of the sisters and co-heirs of Roger de Camvill, of Creeke, co. Northampton, and was s. by his son,

WALTER DE ASTLEY. This nobleman had been concerned in the rebellion of the barons against JOHN. He was s. by his son.

SIR THOMAS DE ASTLEY, Knt., who was constituted in the 26th of HENRY III., one of the king's justices for the gaol delivery at Warwick, and again in the next year, when he paid to the king 15*l.* for his relief. In the 32nd of HENRY III., this Sir Thomas de Astley was sent with several other persons of rank and power into Gascoigne: but we afterwards find him (47th HENRY III.) a leader amongst the rebellious barons, who seized upon the revenues of the crown in the counties of Warwick and Leicester; and when the king submitted to the PROVISIONS of OXFORD, the following year, he was nominated CUSTOS PACIS for Leicestershire. Sir Thomas fell, however, soon after (49th HENRY III., 1264,) with Montfort, Earl of Leicester, and other insurrectionary nobles, at the battle of Evesham, when his estates, valued at 151*l.* 16*s.* 11*d.* per annum, being confiscated, were conferred upon Warine de Bassingbourne, but the king compassionating his widow and children, reserved to them out of those estates, certain lands, valued at 34*l.* 18*s.* 1*d.* per annum, subject to one mark yearly to the said Warine and his heirs. Sir Thomas de Astley m. 1st, Joane, dau. of Ernald de Bois, a person of great power in the county of Leicester—and had issue,

ANDREW, his successor.

Isabel, m. to William de Bermingham (son and heir of Robert de Bermingham, one of the companions in arms of Strongbow, Earl of Pembroke, in his expedition into Ireland, temp. HENRY II.), and left a son, PETER DE BERMINGHAM, who was summoned to parliament, in Ireland, as BARON ATHENEY, in the reigns of JOHN and HENRY III.

Sir Thomas m. 2ndly, Editha, dau. of Peter Constable, Esq., of Melton Constable, in Norfolk, and sister of Sir Ralph Constable, Knt., by whom he had three sons and a dau., of whom

THOMAS, settled at Hill Morton, but dying s. p., his estates devolved upon his brother,

RALPH ASTLEY, from whom the extinct Barons Astley of Reading derived, and Sir John-Henry-Delaval Astley, Bart., of Hill Morton, co. Warwick, and of Melton Constable, co. Norfolk, now BARON HASTINGS, descends. (See BURKE's Peerage.)

After the decease of Sir Thomas de Astley, his eldest son,

ANDREW DE ASTLEY, by virtue of the decree called Dictum de Kinslworth, was put into possession of his father's estates—paying as a compensation to Warine de Bassingbourne, 320 marks sterling, to raise which sum he sold his manor of Little Copston to the monks of Combe. He was subsequently engaged in the Scottish wars of King EDWARD I., and participated in the victory of Falkirk. Andrew de Astley was summoned to parliament as BARON ASTLEY, from 23 June, 1295, to 3 November, 1306, and was s. at his decease by his son, NICHOLAS DE ASTLEY, 2nd Lord Astley, summoned to parliament from 4 July, 1302, to 11 July, 1309. His lordship and his brother Sir Giles de Astley attending King EDWARD II. into Scotland, were taken prisoners at Bannockburn. The period of this nobleman's decease is not ascertained, but having outlived his brother above-mentioned, and dying without issue, the title and estates devolved upon his nephew (Sir Giles de Astley's son and heir by Alice, 2nd dau. and co-heiress of Sir Thomas Wolsey, Knt.).

THOMAS DE ASTLEY, 3rd Lord Astley, summoned to parliament from 25 February, 1342, to 10 March, 1349. This nobleman founded a chantry in the parish church of Astley, in the 11th year of EDWARD III., and afterwards obtaining permission to change his chantry priests into a dean and secular canons, he erected a fair and beautiful collegiate church in the form of a cross, with a tall spire, covered with lead, and dedicated it to the assumption of the blessed Virgin. His lordship m. Elizabeth, dau. of Guy de Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, and left issue, with daus. (of whom Alice m. Sir Richard Champernourne of Modbury) three sons, viz.,

WILLIAM (Sir), his successor.

THOMAS (Sir), M.P. for the co. of Warwick, m. Elizabeth, dau. of Richard, son of Sir William Harecourt, Knt., from which union the ASTLEYS of Patshull, co. Stafford, and the ASTLEYS of Everleigh, Wilts, lineally derived. Of the Patshull family was JOHN DE ASTLEY, memorable for fighting a duel on horseback, upon the 29 August, 1438, with Peter de Masci, a Frenchman, in the street St. Antoine, at Paris, before Charles VII., King of France, where having pierced his antagonist through the head, he had the helmet, by agreement of the vanquished, to present to his lady. He subsequently fought Sir Philip Boyle, an Arragonian knight, in Smithfield, in the city of London, in the presence of King HENRY VI. and his court, which combat, we are told, was gallantly performed on foot, with battle axes, spears, swords, and daggers, and at its conclusion, that John de Astley was knighted by the king, and rewarded with a pension of one hundred marks for his life. "Yea," (says Dugdale), "so famous did Sir John de Astley grow for his valour, that he was elected a knight of the garter, and bore for his arms the coats of Astley and Harecourt, quarterly, with a label of three points ermine."

The present representative of the Astleys of Everleigh, is Sir FRANCIS DUGDALE ASTLEY, Bart.: and to the Everleigh line also belongs RICHARD GOUGH, Esq., of co. Warwick, who assumed the surname of Gough in lieu of that of Astley in 1818.

Giles, ancestor of the Astleys of Wolvey.

Thomas, 3rd Lord Astley, was s. at his decease by his eldest son,

WILLIAM DE ASTLEY, 4th Lord Astley, who does not appear to have been summoned to parliament. This nobleman was included in several commissions during the reigns of HENRY IV. and HENRY VI. His lordship m. Joan, dau. of John, Lord Willoughby de Eresby, by whom he left an only dau.,

JOANE, m. 1st, to Thomas Raleigh, Esq., of Farnborough, co. Warwick, by whom she had a son, William d. a minor, 8 HENRY V., and a dau. Joan m. 1st, to Gerard Braybroke, and 2ndly, to Edward Bromflete. The heiress of Astley m. 2ndly, to Reginald, Lord Grey de Ruthyn (being his lordship's 2nd wife), by whom she had three sons, and a dau., viz.,

EDWARD, of whom presently,

John de Grey, of Barwell, co. Leicester.

Robert de Grey, of Enville and Whittington, co. Stafford.

Eleanor, m. to William Lucy, Esq., of Charlecote, co. Warwick.

EDWARD DE GREY, the eldest son, marrying Elizabeth, only dau. and heiress of Henry son, and heir of William, Lord Ferrars, of Groby, by Isabel, 2nd dau. and co-heiress of Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk, was summoned to parliament in 1446, as LORD FERRARS, of Groby, which barony, and that of ASTLEY, descended regularly to Henry Grey, 3rd marquess of Dorset, K.G. (who was created Duke of Suffolk 10 October, 1551), and became forfeited upon the decapitation and attainder of his grace in 1554.

ASTON—BARON ASTON, OF FORFAR.

By Letters Patent, dated 28 November, 1627.

Lineage.

Fuller, speaking of the Astons, says: "A more noble family measuring on the level of flat and inadventaged antiquity, is not to be met with: they have ever borne a good respect to the church and learned men."

RANDAL, or RANDULPH DE ASTON, the first on record, who lived in the reign of EDWARD I., was father of

ROGER DE ASTON, who, in 1260, obtained from Roger de Moland, Bishop of Lichfield, the manors of Heywood and Longdon, and the keeping of the game in Caukwood, all in the co. Stafford. The 5th in descent from this Roger,

SIR ROGER DE ASTON, Knt., served the office of sheriff for Staffordshire in the reign of HENRY VI., and was one of the prime gentry returned by the commissioners for that county in 1433. Sir Roger m. Joyce, sister and co-heir of Sir Baldwin de Trevis, and with her acquired large estates in the co. of Warwick, and by her he had, with a dau., Joan, m. to Sir Roger Draycol, of Paynesley, in Staffordshire, Knt., a son and heir, ATON—BARONS DE ATON.

By Writ of Summons, dated 30 December, 1324.

Lineage.

The paternal surname of this family arose from the feudal barony of ATON, in the co. of York, of which its members were lords from the Conquest; for we find that

GILBERT, son of LAOI, assumed the surname of ATON so far back as the reign of King HENRY I. from those lands; but the importance of the family was founded by the marriage of this Gilbert de Aton's great grandson,

GILBERT DE ATON, with Margerie, dau. and heiress of WARINE DE VESCI, a younger son of William de Vesci, Lord of Alnwick, co. Northumberland, through which alliance the ATONS inherited, eventually, the extensive possessions of the great Barons de Vesci: thus

EUSTACE DE VESCI, one of the twenty-five barons appointed to enforce the observance of MAGNA CHARTA, elder brother of the above WARINE, succeeded his father; m. Margaret, dau. of WILLIAM and sister of ALEXANDER, kings of Scotland; and, dying about 1216, was s. by his son,

WILLIAM DE VESCI, to whom s. in 1253, his son,

JOHN DE VESCI, who had summons to parliament, as a baron, in 1264, but dying s. p., was s. by his brother,

WILLIAM DE VESCI, summoned to parliament in the reign of EDWARD I., and one of the competitors for the Scottish throne in the same era. He d. about the year 1297, without legitimate issue, when the BARONY EXPIRED; but the estates devolved upon his natural son,

WILLIAM DE VESCI, who was summoned to parliament in 1313; but dying in two years afterwards, s. p., that BARONY also EXPIRED, while the estates reverted to the great-grandson of the above Gilbert de Aton and Margerie de Vesci, his wife.

Gilbert de Aton d. in the 19th of HENRY III., and was s. by his son,

WILLIAM DE ATON, who was s. by his son,

SIR GILBERT DE ATON, one of the knights of the Bath, created by Prince EDWARD, in the 34th of EDWARD I. Sir Gilbert dying s. p., was s. by his brother,

WILLIAM DE ATON, who m. Isabel de Vere, and had a son and heir,

GILBERT DE ATON, inherited, in the 9th of EDWARD II., the estates of the BARONS DE VESCI, as deduced above. This Gilbert had command, the year before, to fit himself with horse and arms, and to be at NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE on the feast-day of the Blessed Virgin, to restrain the hostilities of the Scots. In the 13th of EDWARD II. he was in the expedition to Scotland; and in the 17th of the same monarch, he confirmed (in consideration of receiving 700 marks sterling) as heir of William de Vesci, to Henry Lord Percie, the castle and lands of Alnwick, which Anthony Beke, bishop of Durham and patriarch of Jerusalem, had sold to the said Henry, although but confided to the bishop by William Lord de Vesci in trust for his bastard son, the last William de Vesci. In the following year (30 December, 1324) Gilbert de Aton was summoned to parliament as a baron of the realm, and he was so summoned during the remainder of his life. His lordship d. in 1342, and was s. by his son,

WILLIAM DE ATON, 2nd BARON ATON, who was summoned to parliament on 8 January, 1371. His lordship m. in 1340 Isabel, dau. of Henry, 3rd Lord Percy, by whom (who was dead in 1368) he had an only son, William, who died vind. patris, and three daus., his co-heiresses, namely—

Anastasia, m. to Sir Edward de St. John, and left a dau. and heiress, Margaret de St. John, who m. Thomas de Brumflete, king's butler, temp. RICHARD II. (See BROMFLETE.)

Katherine, m. to Sir Ralph de Eure.

Elizabeth, m. 1st, to Sir William Playtz, and, 2ndly, to John Conyers, Esq., of Sokebourne, co. Durham, ancestor, by her, of the families of CONYERS of Sokebourne and CONYERS of Horden: the Sokebourne line ended in a dau. and heiress, Anne, wife of Francis, 11th Earl of Shrewsbury, and mother of an only dau. and heiress, Mary, m. to John Stonor, Esq., of Stonor, co. Oxford; the male line of CONYERS of Horden (raised to a baronetcy in 1628), expired with SIR THOMAS CONYERS, Bart., of Horden, who died in the deepest poverty at Chester-le-Street, 15 April, 1810. (See "BROKE'S Vicissitudes of Families.")

William, Lord Aton, was engaged in the French wars of King EDWARD III. He was sheriff of Yorkshire in the 42nd of that monarch, and governor of the castle of York, and again in the 43rd and 46th of the same reign. At his lordship's decease his estates were divided amongst his daughters, and the BARONY fell into ABYSSANCE, as it still continues. (See APPENDIX.)

AUDLEY—BARONS AUDLEY, OF HELEIGH.

By Writ of Summons, dated 8 January, 1313.

Lineage.

"That this family of Alditheley, vulgarly called Audley," says Dugdale, "came to be great and eminent, the ensuing discourse will sufficiently manifest: but that the rise thereof was no higher than King JOHN's time, and that the first who assumed this surname was a branch of that ancient and noble family of VERDON, whose chief seat was at Alton Castle, in the northern part of Staffordshire, I am very inclined to believe; partly by reason that Henry had the inheritance of Alditheley given him by Nicholas de Verdon, who d. in the 16th HENRY III., or near that time; and partly for that he bore for his arms the same ordinary as Vernon did, viz. fretlé, but distinguished with a large canton in the dexter part of the shield, and thereon a cross paté; so that probably the ancestor of this Henry first seated himself at Alditheley: for that there hath been an antient mansion there, the large moat, northwards from the parish church there (somewhat less than a furlong, and upon the chief part of a fair ascent), do sufficiently manifest."

HENRY DE ALDITHELEY, to whom Dugdale alludes above, being in great favour with Ranulph, Earl of Chester and Lincoln (the most powerful subject of England in his time), obtained from that nobleman a grant of Newhall in Cheshire, with manors in Staffordshire and other parts—and for his adhesion to King JOHN, in that monarch's struggle with the insurrectionary barons, a royal grant of the lordship of Storton, in Warwickshire, part of the possessions of Roger de Summerville. In the four first years of King HENRY III. he executed the office of sheriff for the counties of Salop and Stafford, as deputy for his patron, the great Earl Ranulph. In the 10th of HENRY III. this Henry de Alditheley was appointed governor of the castles of Carmarthen and Cardigan, and made sheriff the next year of the counties of Salop and Stafford and constable of the castles of Salop and Bridgenorth, which sheriffalty he held for five years. Upon his retirement from office, he had a confirmation of all such lands, whereof he was then possessed, as well those granted to him by Ranulph, Earl of Chester, and Nicholas de Verdon, as those in Ireland, given him by Hugh de Lacy, EARL OF ULSTER, whose constable he was in that province. He subsequently obtained divers other territorial grants from the crown, but, notwithstanding, when Richard Mareschal, EARL OF PEMBROKE, rebelled, and made an incursion into Wales, the king, HENRY III., thought it prudent to secure the persons of this Henry, and all the other barons-marchers. He was afterwards, however, constituted governor of Shrewsbury, in place of John de Lacy, Earl of Lincoln, and on the death of John, Earl of Chester, governor of the castle of Chester, and also of that of Beeston, then called the "Castle on the Rock," and soon after made governor of Newcastle-under-Lyne. This powerful feudal baron m. Bertred, dau. of Ralph de Meisnilwarin, of Cheshire, and had a son, JAMES, and a dau., Emme, who m. Griffin ap Madoc, Lord of Bromesfield, a person of great power in Wales. He d. in 1236, having founded and endowed the Abbey of Hilton, near to his castle at Heleigh, in Staffordshire, for Cistercian monks, and was s. by his son,

JAMES DE ALDITHELEY, a great favourite of Richard, Earl of Cornwall, at whose coronation as king of Almaine he assisted. This nobleman had livery of his lands in the 31st HENRY III., and was constituted in two years afterwards constable of Newcastle-under-Lyne. Being one of the lords-marchers he was actively employed for some years against the Welsh, and was appointed governor of the castles of Salop and Bridgenorth, and sheriff for the counties of Salop and Stafford. In the 47th of HENRY III. he was made justice of Ireland; and in the same year, upon the misunderstanding between the king and the barons, regarding the provisions of Oxford, being referred to the arbitration of the monarch of France, he was one of the noblemen who undertook for the king therein. The next year we find him with Roger de Mortimer and the other barons-marchers, giving battle to Llewelin, Prince of Wales, and afterwards joining the Earl of Gloucester at Evesham in rescuing the king, who had become captive to the Earl of Leicester at the battle of Lewes. In the 52nd of HENRY III. his lordship performed a pilgrimage to the shrine of St. James in Galicia, and the following year embarked in the Crusade. His death, occasioned by breaking his neck, occurred soon afterwards (1271). He had a dau., Joan, who m. John, son of Robert de Beauchamp, to whose child, prior to its birth, the said John being then deceased, his lordship was appointed guardian. He had also five sons, the youngest of whom, Hugh, is supposed to have been the Hugh Alditheley, who had summons to parliament 15 May, 1321, and whose son became Earl of Gloucester. His lordship was s. by his eldest son,

JAMES DE ALDITHELEY, who d. s. p. in 1272, and was s. by his brother,

HENRY DE ALDITHELEY, between whom and John D'Elvill, who had m. Maud, widow of his deceased brother, a covenant was made in the 3rd of EDWARD I., conveying on the part of Henry a considerable landed dowry to the said Maud. He d. without issue in 1275, and was s. by his brother,

WILLIAM DE ALDITHELEY, who, attaining majority in a year after his accession, had livery of all his lands, save a reasonable dowry to Dulcia, the widow of his deceased brother Henry. In the 10th of EDWARD I., the king, by his precept to the barons of his exchequer, acknowledging that he was indebted to James de Alditheley, father of this William, in the sum of £1,2885 s. 10/-, upon the surplussage of his account since he was justice of Ireland, commanded them to discharge the said William of £230 14s. 10/-, a debt due by James to the exchequer upon another account. In this year (1275) William de Alditheley fell in an engagement with the Welsh, wherein several other brave warriors were slain, and the king lost fourteen banners. Dying without issue, he was s. by his brother,

NICHOLAS DE ALDITHELEY, who doing homage, had livery of his lands, and then paid £10 for his relief of the tenth part of the Barony of Wiche-Malbanc. In the 22nd of EDWARD I., this feudal lord received command to attend the king at Portsmouth, upon the 1st of September, well fitted with horse and arms, and thence to accompany the monarch into Gascoigne; which service he performed. In three years afterwards, 26 January, 1297, he was summoned to parliament amongst the other barons of the realm, and was likewise in the expedition to Scotland, with the Earls of Warren and Warwick, and participated in the victory obtained at Dunbar. His lordship m. Catherine, dau. and co-heiress of John Giffard, of Brimefield, by Maud, widow of William de Longespe, and dau. of Walter de Clifford, and dying in 1299, was s. by his eldest son, then in his tenth year,

THOMAS DE ALDITHELEY, who m. Eve, dau. and heiress of John, Lord Clavering, but dying s. p. in 1307, the inheritance devolved upon his brother,

NICHOLAS DE ALDITHELEY, who was summoned to parliament from 8 January, 1313 (6th EDWARD II.), to 25 August, 1318 (12th EDWARD II.). His lordship m. Joane, widow of Henry Lacy, Earl of Lincoln, and sister and co-heiress of William Martin—Baron Martin (by writ, 23 June, 1295: which barony fell into ABEYANCE between the descendants of the said Joane and her sister, Eleanore, the other co-heiress, wife of Philip de Columbers), and was s. at his decease, in 1319, by his son,

JAMES DE AUDLEY—LORD AUDLEY—one of the most celebrated warriors of the martial reign of King EDWARD III. His lordship was but three years of age at the decease of his father, when his castle of Heleigh and divers other estates were committed to the guardianship of Ralph de Camoys, while he was himself confined in ward to Roger Mortimer, Earl of March. At the early age of twenty-three, we find him governor of Berwick-upon-Tweed, and receiving orders to attend King EDWARD III. in his expedition into France, with twenty men-at-arms and twenty archers. In the next year (17th EDWARD III.), his lordship did homage for lands inherited through his aunt Eleanore de Columbers, and then served the king with twenty men-at-arms and twenty archers, in his wars in France. In the 19th of EDWARD III., he had command to attend the monarch in person, and to serve him with all his retinue, for the defence of the realm against the French, at the king's proper cost. In two years afterwards, he was again in France, and his lordship had the honour of being one of the Original Knights of the Garter,* upon the institution of that illustrious order. From this period, Lord Audley was pre-eminently distinguished as a soldier upon the French soil, until the glorious conflict of Poitiers placed his military renown upon the highest elevation. Of his lordship's conduct in this celebrated battle, Froissard gives the following account:—

"The Lord James Audley went not from the Prince of a great season, but when he saw that they should needs fight, he aid to the prince, 'Sir, I have served always truly my lord your father, and you also, and shall do as long as I live. I say this, because I made once a vow, that the first battel that either the king your father or any of his children should be at, how that I would be one of the first setters on, or else to die in the pain; thereof I require your grace, as in reward for my service that ever I did to the king your father, or to you, that you would give me license to depart from you, and to set myself there, as I may accomplish my vow.' The prince accorded to his desire, and said, 'Sir James, God give you this day that grace to be the best knight of all other;' and so took him by the hand. Then the knight departed from the prince and went to the foremost front of all the battel, all onely accompanied with four esquires, who promised not to fail him. This Lord James was a right sage and a valiant knight; and by him was much of the host ordained and governed the day before.

"The Lord James Audley, with his four esquires, was in the front of the battel, and there did marvels in arms; and by great prowess, he came and fought with Sir Arnold Dindraher, under his own banner, and there they fought long together, and Sir Arnold was there sore handled." Froissard goes on to say, "that his lordship continuing to combat in his advanced position, he was sore hurt in the body, and in the visage; as long as his breath served him, he fought. At last at the end of the battel, his four esquires took and brought him out of the field, and laid him under a hedge to refresh him, and they unarmed him, and bound up his wounds as well as they could.

"As soon as the Earl of Warwick (continues the same authority,) and Lord Cobham were departed, the Prince demanded regarding the Lord Audley: some answered, 'He is sore hurt, and lieth in a litter here beside.'—'By my faith (said the prince,) of his hurts I am right sorry; go, and know if he may be brought hither, else I will go and see him there as he is.' Then two knights came to the Lord Audley, and said, 'Sir, the prince desireth greatly to see you.' 'Ah, Sir,' (said Lord Audley,) 'I thank the prince when he thought on so poor a knight as I am.' Then he called eight of his servants, and caused them to bear him in his litter, to the place where the prince was.

"Then the prince took him in his arms and kissed him and made him great cheer, and said, 'Sir James, I ought greatly to honor you, for by your valiance, you have this day achieved the grace and renown of us all; and ye are reputed for the most valiant of all other.' 'Ah, Sir,' (said the knight,) 'ye say as it pleaseth you; I would it were so: and if I have this day anything advanced myself, to serve you and accomplish the vow that I made, it ought not to be reputed to my own prowess.' 'Sir James, (said the prince,) I, and all ours take you in this journey for the best doer in arms; and to the intent to furnish you the better to pursue the wars, I retain you for ever to be my knight, with five hundred marks of yearly revenues, the which I shall assign you of my heritage in England.' 'Sir,' (said the knight,) 'God grant me to deserve the great goodness that he shew me.' And so he took his leave of the prince, for he was right feeble; and so his servants brought him to his lodging.

"The Lord James Audley gave to his four esquires the five hundred marks revenue that the prince had given him.

"When the prince heard of this gift made by Sir James Audley to his four esquires, he thanked him for so doing, and gave him six hundred marks per annum more."

In confirmation of Froissard, it appears by the public records that this eminent soldier had for his singular services at the battle of Poitiers, a grant from Edward the Black Prince, of an annuity of £400 during his life, and for one year after, to be received out of the coinage of the Stanneries in Cornwall, and the king's lands in that county. After this period, he continued to serve in the wars, with equal renown to himself and glory to his country. His lordship m., 1st, Joane, dau. of Roger Mortimer, Earl of March, and had issue,

NICHOLAS, his successor.

Joane, m. to Sir John Touchet, grandson of which marriage, Sir John Touchet, was summoned to parliament as Baron Audley, upon the extinction of the male line of the family. (See TOUCHET, Barons Audley.)

Margaret, m. to Sir Roger Hillary.

The baron m. 2ndly, Isabel, dau. and co-heiress of William Malbank, Baron of Wich-Malbank, by whom he had Rowland, } both of whom d. s. p.

Thomas, }

Margaret, m. to Fouke, son of Sir Fouke Fitz-Warine, Knt.

His lordship made his will in the 9th of RICHARD II., at Heleigh Castle, by which he bequeathed his body to be buried

* ORIGINAL KNIGHTS OF THE GARTER:—EDWARD III., KING OF ENGLAND, EDWARD, PRINCE OF WALES, Henry, Duke of Lancaster, Thomas, Earl of Warwick, Ralph, Earl of Stafford, William Montacute, Earl of Salisbury, Roger Mortimer, Earl of March, Captall de Buche, John Lord L'Isle, Bartholomew Burghersh, John Beauchamp, John Lord Mohun, Hugh Courtenay, Thomas Holand, John Lord Grey, Richard Fitz-Simon, Miles Stapleton, Thomas Wale, Hugh Wrotesley, Nigel Loring, John Chandos, JAMES DE AUDLEY, Otho Holland, Henry Eam, Sanchet Dabridgecourt, and Sir Walter Paveley.

AUDLEY, OR DE ALDITHELEY—BARONS AUDLEY, AND SUBSEQUENTLY EARL OF GLOUCESTER.

Barony, by Writ of Summons, dated 15 May, 1321.

Lineage.

HUGH DE ALDITHELEY OR AUDLEY, brother it is presumed of Nicholas, Lord Audley of Heleigh, was summoned to parliament as "Hugh de Audley, Senior," on 15 May, 1321, 14th EDWARD I. His lordship had been engaged during the reign of EDWARD I. in the king's service, and was called "Senior," to distinguish him from his son. Being concerned in the insurrection of Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, 15th EDWARD II., the baron was committed a close prisoner to Wallingford Castle, but making his peace with the king he obtained his release, and suffered nothing further. His lordship sat in the parliament of the 11th and 14th of EDWARD II. He m. Isolda, widow of Walter Balim, and left two sons, by the elder of whom he was succeeded.

HUGH DE AUDLEY, who had been summoned to parliament in the life-time of his father as "HUGH DE AUDLEY, JUNIOR," from 20 November, 1317, to 15 May, 1321, and after that nobleman's decease as "HUGH DE AUDLEY," from 3 December, 1326, 20th EDWARD II., to 10th EDWARD III. His lordship m. Margaret, sister and co-heiress of Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Gloucester, and widow of Piers Gavestone, by whom he left an only dau. and heiress.

Margaret, who m. Ralph, Lord Stafford, and carried the Barony of Audley into that family: it EXPIRED upon the attainder of Edward, Duke of Buckingham, with that nobleman's other honours, in 1521.

Hugh, Lord Audley, was created Earl of Gloucester, 23 April, 1337, and under that title a further account of his lordship will be found. He d. in 1347.

AUDLEY—BARON AUDLEY OF WALDEN.

By Letters Patent, dated 29 November, 1538.

Lineage.

The old genealogists were quite at a loss to ascertain anything about the family of Lord Chancellor Audley; it was reserved for the late Lord Braybrooke to discover that eminent lawyer's parentage and ancestry.

"It seems extraordinary," says his lordship, "that neither Camden, who lived so much nearer those times, nor Dugdale could with all their industry satisfy themselves as to the birth-place or extraction of Thomas Audley; for they state only in general terms that he was of a good family; but that his arms differed entirely from those of the ancient lords of the same name, to whom, in fact he was no way related. All doubt upon the subject has, however, been removed, by the discovery of the following entry, copied from the Burgesses Oath Book at Colchester:—

"A.D. 1516, Thomas Audley, Gen., natus in Colne-Comitia, in Com. Essex, Burgess."

"One of his ancestors, indeed, Ralph Audley, appears to have been seated at Earls' Colne as far back as the 28th of HENRY

VI., and in the 35th of that king, became possessed of the Hay House, an ancient mansion previously in the tenure of the prior of Colne, in the same parish, demolished a few years ago; and in which, we may presume, the chancellor was born; Geoffrey Audley, his father, subsequently made a subsequent addition to his property at Earls' Colne."

THOMAS AUDLEY, to whom these remarks refer, was an eminent lawyer in the reign of HENRY VIII., who, having attracted royal favour by his zeal in the spoliation of religious houses, as speaker of the parliament which originated that measure, attained within a short period the highest honours which royalty could bestow. In the 22nd of HENRY VIII. he was nominated attorney for the duchy of Lancaster, raised to the degree of serjeant-at-law, and appointed king's serjeant. In two years afterwards Mr. Serjeant Audley succeeded Sir Thomas More in the custody of the great seal, as lord keeper, when he received the honour of knighthood, and before the close of the year he was elevated to the dignity of lord chancellor of England. In addition to those lucrative honours, Sir Thomas had a grant of the site and precinct, with all the lands and plate thereunto belonging, of the suppressed priory of Christchurch, "near Aldgate, in the city of London," where he erected a mansion-house for his residence. In the 30th of the same reign his lordship sat as high steward upon the trial of Henry Courtenay, Marquis of Exeter, for conspiring to raise Reginald Pole (the subsequently eminent Cardinal Pole) to the throne. And in that year he obtained a grant of the great Abbey of Walden, in Essex, in compensation, as he alleged, "for having in this world sustained great damage and infamy for serving the king." Having acquired this last possession he was raised to the peerage by letters patent, dated 29 November, 1538, as BARON AUDLEY, OF WALDEN, and installed a knight of the most noble order of the Garter. His lordship m. Elizabeth, dau. of Thomas Grey, Marquess of Dorset, and had two daus., viz.

Margaret, m. 1st, to Lord Henry Dudley, son of John, Duke of Northumberland, who fell at St. Quintin in 1557, dying s.p.; and 2ndly, to Thomas Howard, Duke of Norfolk, who was beheaded 2 July, 1572: by whom, by her second husband, she had issue

THOMAS, summoned to parliament as LORD HOWARD OF WALDEN, and afterwards created EARL OF SUFFOLK, lord high treasurer, temp. JAMES I. and K.G. From this nobleman descend LORD HOWARD DE WALDEN and the EARL OF SUFFOLK AND BERKSHIRE.

Henry d. young.

William, ancestor of the Earls of Carlisle.

Elizabeth d. unm.

Margaret, m. to Robert Sackville, 2nd Earl of Dorset, ancestor of the Dukes of Dorset.

The Duchess of Norfolk inherited the entire property of her father upon the decease of her sister.

Mary, who d. unm.

Lord Audley d. 19 April, 1544, and the title became EXTINCT. According to a desire expressed in his will, he was buried in a chapel he had erected at Saffron Walden, where a splendid monument was raised to him with the following epitaph, which there is some reason to suppose that, in imitation of his immediate predecessor, he had himself composed:

"The stroke of death's inevitable dart,
Hath now (alas!) of life bereft the hart
Of Sir Thomas Audley of the Garter Knight, Late Chancellor of England, under our Prince of might,
Henry the Eighth, worthy of high renown,
And made him Lord Audley of this town."

His lordship appointed, by his last testament, that his executors should, upon the next new year's day after his decease, deliver a legacy of £100 to the king, "from whom he had received all his reputations and benefits." Of this nobleman Rapin says, "Chancellor Audley was a person of good sense. He served the reformers when he could without danger: but he was too much a courtier to insist upon what he judged reasonable, if the king was against it."

Arms—Quarterly: per pale, indented, or and az.: in the second and third quarters an eagle displayed of the first, on a bend of the second a fret between two martlets of gold.

NOTE.—In the feast of Abbey Lands, King HENRY VIII. carved unto him (Thomas Audley), the first cut (and that, I assure you, was a dainty morsel), viz., the Priory of the Trinity in Aldgate-Ward, London, dissolved 1531, which as a van courier fore-ran other abbeys by two years and foretold their dissolution. This I may call (afterwards called Duke's Place) the Covent-Garden Within London, as the greatest empty space within the walls, though since filled, not to say pestered with houses. He had afterwards a large partage in the Abbey Lands in several counties.—FULLER'S Worthies, i., 507 and 508.

AUNGIER—BARON AUNGIER, OF LONGFORD, VISCOUNT LONGFORD, AND EARL OF LONGFORD.

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 29 June, 1621.
Viscounty, by Letters Patent, dated 8 November, 1675.
Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 18 December, 1677.

Lineage.

SIR FRANCIS AUNGIER, Knt., descended from the Aungiers, of Cambridge, having adopted the legal profession, was appointed master of the rolls 5 October, 1609, and created BARON AUNGIER, of Longford, in the peerage of Ireland, 29 June, 1621. His lordship m. 1st, Douglas, youngest sister of Gerald, Earl of Kildare, and had by her, Frances.

He m. 3rdly, Margaret, dau. of Sir Thomas Cave, Knt., of Stanford, by whom (who m. 2ndly, Sir Thomas Wenman) he had no issue. His lordship d. 8 October, 1632, was buried at St. Patrick's, Dublin, 6 November following, and was s. by his eldest son, GERALD AUNGIER, 2nd baron, who m. Jane, 2nd dau. of Sir Edward Onslow, of West Clandon, in Surrey, and was s. at his decease, in 1655 (having no issue), by his nephew (refer to children of Dr. Ambrose Aungier).

FRANCIS AUNGIER, 3rd baron. This nobleman was made a captain of a troop of horse in 1660. In 1668 he obtained a patent for the incorporation of the town of Longford, and was advanced to the dignity of VISCOUNT LONGFORD, with remainder to his brothers and their male heirs, by letters patent, dated 8 November, 1675. His lordship was created EARL OF LONGFORD, with the limitation, on 18 December, 1677. In 1682 he was appointed a commissioner of the revenue, and in 1697 keeper of the great seal, at which time he was a member of the privy council, governor of Carrickfergus, and master of the ordnance. His lordship m. Lady Anne Chichester, younger dau. and co-heir of Arthur, 1st Earl of Donegal, and widow of John, Earl of Gowran; but d. s.p. 23 December, 1700, when his honours devolved, according to the patents, upon his only surviving brother,

AMBROSE AUNGIER, as 2nd Earl of Longford, a commissioner of the revenue; at whose decease, without issue, 23 January, 1704, all the honours of the family became EXTINCT, while the estates devolved upon his lordship's sister, Mrs. Ludlow, and after her decease passed to his nephews, Francis Cuff and James Macartney, Esqrs., by an equal division, and to their heirs for ever.

Francis Cuff had two sons; the elder, Francis, d. s.p. in 1717, and was s. by his only brother, Michael Cuff, whose only dau. and heiress, Elizabeth Cuff, m. Thomas Pakenham, Esq., of Pakenham Hall, and was created COUNTESS OF LONGFORD. Her ladyship was s. at her decease, in January, 1794, by her grandson, Thomas Pakenham, who had s. his father, in 1792, as Baron Longford, and was the late EARL OF LONGFORD.

BACON—BARON VERULUM, VISCOUNT ST. ALBAN'S.

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 11 July, 1618
Viscounty, by Letters Patent, dated 27 January, 1621

Lineage.

FRANCIS BACON, 2nd son of Sir Nicholas Bacon, lord keeper in the reign of ELIZABETH, by Anne, his 2nd wife, dau. of Sir Anthony Cook, of Gidea Hall, Essex, having been brought up to the bar, was appointed queen's counsel in 1558; and soon after the accession of King JAMES I., honoured with knighthood. In 1613 he was made attorney-general, and subsequently sworn of the privy council. In 1617, Sir Francis was constituted lord keeper of the great seal, and the next year he was entitled lord high chancellor of England. Within a few months afterwards he was elevated to the peerage, 11 July, 1618, in the dignity of BARON VERULAM, and created 27 January, 1621, VISCOUNT ST. ALBAN'S. His lordship was subsequently convicted of corruption in the exercise of his judicial functions, upon his own confession, and sentenced to pay a fine of £40,000, to be imprisoned during the king's pleasure, and to be ever afterwards incapacitated from holding office under the crown. Having, in pursuance of this judgment, suffered a brief incarceration, and the fine being eventually remitted, his lordship withdrew into retirement, and devoted the remainder of his life to the most splendid literary labours. He m. Alice, dau. and co-heir of Benedict Barnham, Esq., an alderman of London, but d. without issue, 9 April, 1626, when his honours became EXTINCT. The learned Bayle calls Lord St. Alban's one of the greatest geniuses of his age, Voltaire styles him the father of experimental philosophy, and Walpole terms him the prophet of arts, which Newton was sent afterwards to reveal. The latter author adds:—"It would be impertinent to the reader to enter into any account of this amazing genius or his works: both will be universally admired as long as science exists. As long as ingratitude and adulation are despicable, so long shall we lament the depravity of this great man's heart. Alas! that he, who could command immortal fame, should have stooped to the little ambition of power." Lord St. Alban's own brother, Anthony, d. unm.; his brothers (of the half-blood) were—1. SIR NICHOLAS BACON, the first baronet ever created, ancestor of the present SIR HENRY HICKMAN BACON, Bart.; 2. Sir Nathaniel Bacon, K.B., of Suffkey, Norfolk, who left daus. only; and Edward Bacon, Esq., of Shrubland Hall, co. Suffolk, ancestor of the BACONS of Shrubland, Ipswich, and Earham.

BADLESMERE—BARONS BADLESMERE.

By Writ of Summons, dated 26 October, 1300.

Lineage.

The first mention of this family occurs in the 16th year of the reign of HENRY II. (1169-70), when

BARTHOLOMEW DE BADLESMERE had a law suit with William de Cheney concerning a landed property in the county of Kent, and in the 22nd of the same king, we find this Bartholomew amerced 20 marks for trespassing in the royal forests. To Bartholomew succeeded

WILLIAM DE BADLESMERE, who, adhering to the cause of the barons, was taken prisoner with several others, in the castle of Rochester, towards the close of King JOHN's reign, and did not obtain his freedom until the 6th year of HENRY III. (1211-2). After this William, came

GILES DE BADLESMERE, who lost his life in a skirmish with the Welsh, in the 32nd year of HENRY III., and after him

GUNCELIN DE BADLESMERE, known first as a great rebel to HENRY III., for which he was excommunicated by the archbishop of Canterbury; but subsequently, returning to his allegiance, as justice of Chester, in that office he continued until the 9th of Edward I. (1290-1). In the next year he was in the expedition made into Wales, and in the 25th of the same monarch, in that into Gascony, having previously, by the writ of 26 January in that year, been summoned to the parliament at Salisbury for the following Sunday, the feast of St. Matthew, 21 September, as Gunelm de Badlesmere. He d. four years afterwards, seised of the manor of Badlesmere, which he held in capite of the crown, as of the barony of Crevequer, by the service of one knight's fee. He m. the heiress of Ralph Fitzbernard, Lord of Kingsdowne, and was s. by his son, then twenty-six years of age.

BARTHOLOMEW DE BADLESMERE, who in the life-time of his father (22nd EDWARD I.) received command to attend the king at Portsmouth, upon the 1st day of September, with horse and arms, to embark with him for Gascony, and in the year that he succeeded to his paternal property was in the wars of Scotland. He was afterwards in the retinue of Robert de Clifford in the Welsh wars, and in the 1st year of EDWARD I. was appointed governor of the castle of Bristol. In two years afterwards he was summoned to parliament as Badlesmere, and had a grant from the king, through the especial influence of Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Gloucester and Hertford, and Henry de Lacy, Earl of Lincoln, of the castle and manor of Chelham, in Kent, for his own and his wife's life, which castle had been possessed by Alexander de Balliol in right of his wife Isabel, and ought to have escheated to the crown upon the decease of the said Alexander, by reason of the felony of John de Strabolgi, Earl of Athol (Isabel's son and heir), who was hanged. In the 5th of EDWARD II., Lord Badlesmere was constituted governor of the castle of Lede, and obtained at the same time grants of divers extensive manors. In the next year but one, his lordship was deputed, with Otto de Grandison and others, ambassador to the court of Rome, and the next year, upon the death of Robert de Clifford, he obtained a grant of the custody of the castle of Skipton in Yorkshire, as of all other castles in that county and Westmorland, whereof the said Robert died possessed, to hold during the minority of Roger de Clifford, his son and heir.

His lordship was further indebted to the crown for numerous charters for fairs and marts throughout his extensive manors; and he held the high office of steward of the household for a great number of years; but notwithstanding his thus basking in the sunshine of royal favour, his allegiance was not trustworthy, for joining the banner of Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, and other discontented nobles of that period, he went into Kent without the king's permission; where, being well received, he put himself at the head of some soldiers from his castle at Lede, and thence proceeded to Canterbury, with 19 knights, having linen jackets under their surcoats, all his esquires being in plate armour, and thus repaired to the shrine of St. Thomas, to the great amazement of the good citizens. While Lord Badlesmere remained at Canterbury, John de Crumwell and his wife sought his lordship's aid, and, pledging himself to afford it, he hasted to Oxford, where the barons of his party had been then assembled. In the meantime the king being apprised of the baron's proceedings, despatched the queen to Lede, and upon admission being denied to her, the castle was regularly invested by Adomere de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, and John de Britannia, Earl of Richmond, to whom it eventually surrendered, when Lord Badlesmere's wife, young son, and daughters, all falling into the hands of the besiegers, were sent prisoners to the Tower of London. The baron and his accomplices afterwards were pursued by Edmund, Earl of Kent, and John de Warren, Earl of Surrey, and being defeated and taken prisoners at the battle of Borough-bridge, his lordship was hanged, drawn, and quartered at Canterbury, and his head set upon a pole at Burgate. At the time of the baron's execution upwards of ninety lords, knights, and others concerned in the same insurrection, suffered a similar fate in various parts of the kingdom. Margaret, his lordship's widow (one of the dau. and co-heiresses of Thomas, 3rd son of Thomas, 2nd son of Richard de Clare, Earl of Gloucester), continued prisoner in the Tower, until, through the influence of William Lord Roos, of Hamlake, and others, she obtained her freedom. Whereupon betaking herself to the nunnery of Minorca, without Aldgate, in the suburbs of London, she had 2s. a-day for her maintenance, to be paid by the sheriff of Essex; she subsequently, however, obtained a large proportion of the deceased lord's manors for her dowry. By this lady, Lord Badlesmere left issue,

1. GILES, his heir.

1. Margery, m. to William, Lord de Ros, of Hamlake, and had a son, THOMAS, LORD DE ROS, from whom descended the LORDS DE ROS, whose heir general, THOMAS MANNERS, Lord de Ros, was created EARL OF RUTLAND, 18 June, 1525. His lordship's grandson, HENRY, 2nd Earl of Rutland, and 14th Lord de Ros, m. Margaret, dau. of Ralph Nevil, Earl of Westmorland, and had issue: 1. EDWARD, who s. as 3rd Earl of Rutland, whose issue became extinct. 2. JOHN, who became 4th Earl of Rutland. His lordship m. Elizabeth, dau. of Francis Charlton, Esq., of Apley Castle, Salop, and had Roger, Francis, and Sir George, successively Earls of Rutland, and two daus., 1. LADY BRIDGET MANNERS, m. Robert Tyrwhitt, Esq., of Kettleby, Lincolnshire, and had a son and heir, WILLIAM TYRWHITT, of Kettleby, who m. Katherine, dau. of Anthony Browne, 2nd Viscount Montagu, and d. 1642, leaving ROBERT TYRWHITT, who s. his father at Kettleby, d. s. p. in 1648, and was s. by his brother, FRANCIS TYRWHITT, b. about 1623, m. Elizabeth, dau. and heir of Robert Lloyd, M.D., and d. 1673. His only child and heiress, KATHERINE TYRWHITT, m. Sir Henry Hunloke, Bart., of Wingerworth, near Chesterfield, co. Derby. 2. LADY FRANCES MANNERS, m. William, 3rd Lord Willoughby of Parham, and had, with other issue, ELIZABETH, m. to Richard Jones, Earl of Ranelagh, and had four daus., of whom LADY FRANCES JONES, m. Thomas, Earl Coningsby, and had, with other issue, LADY FRANCES CONINGSBY, who m. Sir Charles Hanbury-Williams, and had two daus. co-heirs, viz., 1. FRANCES HANBURY-WILLIAMS, m. 1754, William-Anne, Earl of Essex, and had issue, George, Earl of Essex, d. s. p. 1839, and Elizabeth, who m. John, 3rd Lord Monson, and their issue is extinct. 2. CHARLOTTE HANBURY-WILLIAMS, m. Admiral the Hon. Robert Boyle, who assumed the name of WALSINGHAM, and their dau. was CHARLOTTE, late BARONESS DE ROS, whose son, the present Lord de Ros, is one of the co-heirs of the Barons of Badlesmere.

11. Maud, m. 1st, to Robert, FitzPayn, and 2ndly, to John de Vere, Earl of Oxford. (See VERE, Earl of Oxford.) Of this 2nd dau. and co-heiress of Badlesmere, the co-heirs are, THE DUKE OF ATHOLE (descended from Katherine Neville, grand-dau. of Sir John Neville, Lord Latimer, and Dorothea Vere, his wife, sister and co-heir of John, 14th Earl of Oxford), WINCHCOMBE-HENRY-HOWARD HARTLEY, Esq., of Bucklebury, Berks; and SIR RAINALD KNIGHTLEY, Bart., of Fawley, co. Northampton (descended from Dorothy Neville, Countess of Exeter, Katherine's sister), SIR ROBERT BURDETT, Bart., JOHN, LORD ROLLO, SIR CHARLES-ROBERT TEMPEST, Bart., CHARLES STANDISH, Esq., of Standish, co. Lancaster, and JOHN WRIGHT, Esq., of Kelvedon, co. Essex (all descended from Lucy Neville, Lady Cornwallis, another of Katherine's sisters), GEORGE-WILLIAM VILLIERS and MONTAGU, EARL OF ABERCROMBIE (descended from Elizabeth Neville, Lady Danvers, the youngest of Katherine's sisters), and ADRIEN, MARQUESS DE CONNORNEILL, and SIR WILLIAM HENRY DILLON (descended from Elizabeth Vere, wife of Sir Anthony Wingfield, K.G., and sister of Dorothea, wife of John Neville, Lord Latimer).

111. Elizabeth, m. 1st to Edmund Mortimer, and 2ndly, to William Bohun, Earl of Northampton. (See BOHUN.)

1V. Margaret, m. to Sir John Tiptoft, 2nd baron of that name: (See TIPTOFT.) HENRY-JAMES JONES, Esq., Ralph-Gordon Noel, Lord Wentworth, and EMMA-PHIPPS, wife of GEORGE-POULETT SCROPE, Esq., are the co-representatives of this co-heiress.

His lordship had been summoned to parliament from 26 October, 1309, to 5 August, 1320. His unhappy fate occurred in 1322; but notwithstanding that, his son,

GILES DE BADLESMERE, 2nd baron, found such favour from the king, that he had a special precept to the keeper of the wardrobe, in the Tower, to deliver unto him all his father's harneys, as well coat-armours as others. This nobleman doing homage in the 7th of EDWARD III., although not then at majority, had livery of his lands, and the next year attended the king in an expedition into Scotland, in which service he was engaged the three ensuing years. His lordship was summoned to parliament from 22 January, 1336, to 18 August, 1337. He m. Elizabeth, dau. of William de Montacute, Earl of Salisbury; but dying without issue, in 1338, the barony of Badlesmere fell into ABEYANCE between his sisters and co-heiresses, and it so continues amongst their descendants and representatives.

BALFOUR—BARON BALFOUR, OF GLENAWLEY.

By Letters Patent, dated 8 November, 1619.

Lineage.

SIR JAMES BALFOUR, Knt., 2nd son of Sir James Balfour of Pittendreich, in Fifeshire, by Margaret his wife, only child and heir of Michael Balfour, Esq., of Burleigh, having risen high in favour with JAMES I., was created by that monarch a peer of Ireland, as LORD BALFOUR, Baron of Glenawley, co. Fermanagh, 8 November, 1619. His lordship m. three times (his last wife, by whom he had no issue, having been Anne, eldest dau. of Edward, 1st Lord Blayney): he d. in London, 18 October, 1634, and was buried at St. Anne's, Blackfriars, 24 October in that year. His lordship left issue (with a dau., Anna, m. to

* The Barony of Badlesmere was assumed, without any legal right by the deceased lord's eldest sister, Maud, Countess of Oxford, and the earl her husband, and was retained in that family until the demise of John de Vere, 14th earl, without male issue, in the reign of HENRY VIII., when it was certified, 5 April, 1526, to have fallen into ABEYANCE between that nobleman's four sisters.

Archibald Hamilton, Esq., of Ballygawley, eldest son of Malcolm, archbishop of Cashel), a son and successor,

JAMES, 2nd Lord Balfour, of Glenawley, party to a deed, 8 August, 1635, who m. Anne Warren, widow, and d. s. p. 26 February following, leaving by his will, dated the 15th of the same month, Anne, his wife, his executrix. With his lordship the title of Glenawley EXPIRED.

The will of the 1st lord, dated 16 October, 1634, was proved 5 March following. In it he mentions his relative, Sir William Balfour, Knt., of Westminster, whose dau. Susan, m. Hugh Hamilton de Deserf, and whose son was ancestor of the Balfours, now TOWNLEY-BALFOURS, of Townley Hall, co. Louth.

From the 1st lord's uncle, Michael Balfour, of Monquhany, commendator of Melrose, derive the BALFOURS of Orkney. (See BURKE's Landed Gentry.)

BALFOUR—LORD BALFOUR, OF BURLEIGH.

By Letters Patent, dated 7 August, 1606.

Lineage.

The Barony of Balfour (or Bal-or, from the water of Or running near it), in Fife, gave the name of BALFOUR to a very ancient family, who were long heritable proprietors of that place.

SIR JOHN BALFOUR, Knt., of Balgarvie, got a grant of the lands of Burleigh, which were erected into a free barony, from King JAMES II., in the 9th year of his Majesty's reign, anno 1445-6. From him lineally descended

MICHAEL BALFOUR, of Burleigh, who m. Christian, dau. of John Bethune, of Creich, and had an only child, his sole heir,

MARGARET BALFOUR, who m. Sir James Balfour,* Knt. of Pittendreich and Monquhany, in Fife; a gentleman who enacted an important part during the turbulent reigns of the unfortunate Mary and her son, JAMES VI., and was at one time president of the court of Session. He appears to have d. in 1583. By Margaret, his wife (who m. 2ndly, Sir Robert Melville), he had issue,

- i. MICHAEL, of whom presently.
- ii. James (Sir), created in 1619, by JAMES VI., Lord Balfour Baron of Glenawley, co. Fermanagh, d. 1634, and was buried at St. Anne's, Blackfriars, London, 24 October, that year.
- iii. Alexander, of Balgarvie, from whom several families of that name are descended.
- iv. Henry, general in the army of the States of Holland, served with reputation under the Prince of Orange.
- v. William, m. Hamilton, heiress of Glenawley, assumed her name, and one of their descendants was created Lord Glenawley.
- vi. David, captain in his brother, Sir Henry's, regiment, perished at sea going over to Holland.
- i. A dau. m. Sir Michael Arnot, of Arnot.
- ii. A dau. m. Sir John Henderson.
- iii. A dau. m. to Barclay, of Collairnie, all in Fife.

The eldest son,

SIR MICHAEL BALFOUR, of Burleigh, had a charter of the lands of Nethertoun of Auchinhuffla, in Banffshire, 28 October, 1577, and another of the barony of Burleigh, 29 November, 1606; in which latter year he was ambassador to the Duke of Tuscany and Lorraine, as appears from Sibbald's Fife, where it is stated that Sir Michael was honoured, by letters patent, bearing date at Roystoun, 7 August, 1606, with the title of LORD BALFOUR, of Burleigh. In Carmichael's Tracts it is mentioned that Sir Michael Balfour, Knt., of Balgarvie, is made and created "Barone Banaret and Lord of our Sovereign's parliament, to be stiled in all time coming Lord Balfour of Burle, at Whitehall, 16 July, 1607," without any mention of heirs in his patent of creation. His lordship was subsequently sworn of the privy council. This nobleman m. 1st, Margaret Adamson; and 2ndly, Margaret, dau. of Lundie, of Lundie; by the latter lady he left at his decease, 1619, a dau., his sole heiress.

MARGARET BALFOUR, who m. Robert, son of Robert Arnot, of Newton, chamberlain of Fife, which Robert assumed, on his marriage, the surname of Balfour, and enjoyed the title of Lord Balfour, of Burleigh, sitting in parliament as a baron.

* From Sir James's eldest brother, MICHAEL BALFOUR, of Monquhany, commendator of Melrose, descend the BALFOURS of Trenaby, Orkney.

At the meeting of parliament in 1640, he was chosen president thereof for the session, and continued in the office to 1641. He was one of the commissioners for the treaty of peace with England, 1640 and 1641, and was one of the privy councillors constituted "ad vitam aut culpam" by the parliament of Scotland, 13 November, 1641. His lordship was much engaged in the subsequent public transactions, and was one of the peers who opposed "the engagement" to march into England for the rescue of the king. He d. at Burleigh, 10 August, 1663, having had, by Margaret his wife (who d. at Edinburgh, in June, 1639), one son and four daus., viz.,

- i. JOHN, of whom presently.
- i. Jean, m. in 1628, David, 2nd Earl of Wemyss, d. 10 November, 1649, leaving a dau., Jean, Countess of Angus and Sutherland.
- ii. Margaret, m. to Sir James Crawford, of Kilbirnie, d. s. p.
- iii. Isabel, m. to Thomas, 1st Lord Ruthven, and had issue.
- iv. A dau., m. to her cousin Arnot, of Ferny.

The son and heir,

JOHN BALFOUR, 3rd Lord Balfour, of Burleigh; who m. in 1649, Isabel, dau. of Sir William Balfour, of Pitcullo, lieutenant of the Tower of London, and d. before 1697, having had issue,

- i. ROBERT, his heir.
- ii. JOHN, of Fernie, attainted for his participation in the rising of 1715; he d. 1725, leaving three sons, of whom the eldest, ARTHUR, an officer in the army, had the estate of Fernie restored to him by King GEORGE II. He d. 1746, leaving three sons, 1. SANDFORD, d. s. p.; 2. John, of Fernie, who became, in 1757, heir male of the Lords of Burleigh, and d. s. p. 1795; and 3. FRANCIS, of Fernie, who d. 1818, and was s. by his son, FRANCIS BALFOUR, of Fernie, who was served heir male of the body of John, Lord Balfour, in 1824; he d. 1854, and was s. by his eldest son, FRANCIS-WALTER BALFOUR, who claims, as heir male, the title of LORD BALFOUR, OF BURLEIGH.
- iii. Henry, of Dunbog, major of dragoons, father of Henry Balfour, of Dunbog.
- i. Margaret, m. to Andrew, 3rd Lord Rollo, and had issue.
- ii. Isabel, d. unm.
- iii. Emilia, m. to Sir John Malcolm, of Innertiel, and had issue.
- iv. Jean, m. 1st, to Oliphant, of Gaak, Perthshire, and 2ndly, to Sir Robert Douglas, of Kirkness.
- v. Susan, m. to Robert Douglas, of Strathendry, and had issue.
- vi. Anne, b. 11 March, 1671, m. to Captain Robert Sinclair, s. p.

The eldest son,

ROBERT BALFOUR, Lord Balfour, of Burleigh, m. Lady Margaret Melvill, only dau. of George, 1st Earl of Melvill; and dying in 1713, left issue,

- i. ROBERT, of whom presently.
- i. Margaret, d. unm. at Edinburgh, 12 March, 1769.
- ii. Mary, m. in 1714, brigadier-general Alexander Bruce, of Kennet, d. 7 November, 1758; leaving a son and heir, ROBERT BRUCE, Esq., of Kennet, grandfather of the late ROBERT BRUCE, Esq., of Kennet, co. Clackmannan, claimant of the Barony of Burleigh, as heir-general.

ROBERT BALFOUR, Master of Burleigh, in the lifetime of his father, and when very young, falling in love with a girl of inferior rank, was sent abroad to travel, in the hope of removing the attachment. Before he set out, he declared that if she married in his absence, he would put her husband to death. Notwithstanding this threat, she did marry Henry Stenhouse, a schoolmaster at Inverkeithing. Balfour, on his return, being informed of the match, proceeded directly to the school, and inflicted a mortal wound upon the unfortunate schoolmaster, in the midst of his scholars, 9 April, 1707, of which Stenhouse d. in twelve days afterwards. The Master of Balfour was tried for this foul murder in the high court of justiciary, 4 August, 1709, and sentenced, 29 November, to be beheaded, 6 January, 1710, but he escaped from prison a few days preceding by exchanging clothes with his sister. He was present at a meeting at Lochmaben, 29 May, 1714, when the Pretender's health was publicly drank at the cross; and he engaged in the rebellion the following year, for which he was ATTAINTED by act of parliament. He d. without issue in 1767.

BALIOI—BARONS BALIOI.

Lineage.

In the reign of WILLIAM RUFUS,

GUY, GUIDO, or WIDO DE BALIOI had a grant from the crown of the BARONY OF BIVELL, in Northumberland, and thus became its feudal lord. He was s. by his son (or, by some accounts, the son of BARNARD DE BALIOL).

BARNARD DE BALIOL, a military commander of reputation, who participated in the victory achieved over the Scots, in 1138, at Northallerton, known in history as the "Battle of the Standard," but was afterwards taken prisoner, at Lincoln, with King STEPHEN. Upon the incursion of the Scots, in the 20th HENRY II., Barnard de Baliol again took up arms, and joining Robert de Stuteville, proceeded to the relief of Alnwick Castle, and having surprised the besiegers, seized the king of Scots with his own hand, and sent him prisoner to the castle of Richmond. In the course of this forced march to Alnwick, when, in consequence of a dense fog, a halt was recommended, Baliol exclaimed, "Let those stay that will, I am resolved to go forward, although none follow me, rather than dishonour myself by tarrying here." This feudal chief is supposed to have been the founder of the fortress upon the banks of the Tees, called "Barnard Castle." He was a munificent benefactor to the church, having, among other grants, bestowed lands upon the abbey of St. Mary, at York, and upon the monks at Riebauld, for the health of his own soul, and that of his wife, Agnes de Finchen. He was s. by his son,

EUSTACE DE BALIOL, who gave £100 for license to marry the widow of Robert Fitzpiers. This feudal lord had issue,

1. HUGH, of whom presently.

2. Henry, m. Lora, one of the co-heiresses of Christian, wife of William de Mandeville, Earl of Essex, and heirs of Peter, lord of the barony of Valoines, and dying in the 30th of HENRY III. (1245-6), his widow, the Lady Lauretta (as termed in the record), had livery of all the lands in Essex, Hertford, and Norfolk, which he held of her inheritance. They had issue,

1. Alexander, living 56th HENRY III. (1271-2).

2. Guy Baliol.

3. Eustace, m. Hawise, dau. and heiress of Ralph de Boyville de Levington, a baron of Northumberland, and his wife, Ada, who had been the widow of William de Furnivall. In the 45th HENRY III. (1260-1), this Eustace was sheriff of Cumberland and governor of the castle of Carlisle. In nine years afterwards, assuming the cross, he attended Prince Edward to the Holy Land.

Eustace de Baliol, sen., was s. by his son,

HUGH DE BALIOL, who was certified to hold the barony of Bivell of the crown by the service of five knights' fees, and to find thirty soldiers for the guard of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, as his progenitors had done from the time of Ruric. He held likewise the lordship of Hiche, in Essex, in capite, as an augmentation of his barony, by the gift of HENRY II. From King John he obtained the lands of Richard de Unfraville, and of Robert de Meisnell, in the county of York, in consideration of his services in the baronial war. In the 18th of that monarch's reign, he was joined with Philip de Hulcotes in defence of the northern border towards Scotland; and when the King of Scots had subjugated the whole of Northumberland for Lewis of France, those generals held out stoutly all the fortresses upon the line of the Tees, particularly that of Barnard Castle, where Eustace de Vesci (who had married the Scottish monarch's sister), coming with his royal brother-in-law to the siege, was slain. Hugh de Baliol, styled by Matthew Paris, "dives et potens," was s. by his son,

JOHN DE BALIOL. This feudal lord m. Devorgilda, younger dau. and eventually sole heir, of Alan, Lord of Galloway, a great baron of Scotland, by Margaret his wife, sister of John le Scot, the last Earl of Chester, and one of the heirs of David, sometime Earl of Huntingdon, from which alliance arose the claim of the Baliols to the crown of Scotland. By this illustrious lady he acquired the Scottish barony of Galloway. In the 28th of HENRY III., when ways and means were required to discharge the debt incurred by the war in Gascony, John de Baliol was one of the committee of twelve chosen to report to parliament upon the subject; and the next year he paid £30 for thirty knights' fees, which he held towards the levy in aid, for marrying the king's dau. He was afterwards sheriff of Cumberland for six successive years, and governor of the castle of Carlisle. Subsequently he had a military summons to attend the king at Chester, to oppose the Welsh, and was sheriff of the counties of Nottingham and Derby for three years; at which time he had the honour of Perrell committed to his custody. In the baronial contest he adhered faithfully to the king, and fell into the hands of the Earl of Leicester, with his royal master, at the battle of Lewes, in 1264; but he appears to have effected his escape, and to have joined the other loyal barons in raising fresh troops for the captive monarch's redemption. This John Baliol and his wife were the founders of the college that bears the name of Baliol, at Oxford. He d. in 1296, and was s. by his son (then twenty-eight years of age),

ROBERT DE BALIOL, who m. Anne, or Agnes, dau. of William de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, but dying in 1271, without issue, was s. by his brother,

ALEXANDER DE BALIOL. The barony inherited by this feudal lord consisted of more than five-and-twenty extensive lordships. He d. s. p. 1279, leaving Eleanor de Genoure, his widow, and was s. by his brother,

JOHN DE BALIOL, who m. Isabel, dau. of John de Warren, 7th Earl of Surrey. This feudal nobleman was one of the chief competitors for the crown of Scotland in the reign of EDWARD I., and was eventually declared king, by the decision of that monarch, to whose arbitration the claimants submitted their pretensions.

To elucidate Baliol's right to the Caledonian sceptre it will be necessary to digress somewhat into the genealogy of the Scottish princes.

DAVID, King of Scotland, had an only son PRINCE HENRY, of Scotland, who d. s. p., leaving three sons, viz.,

1. MALCOLM, who ascended the throne as MALCOLM IV., and was s. by his brother.

2. WILLIAM the Lion, father of ALEXANDER II., father of

ALEXANDER III. This prince m. Margaret, dau. of HENRY III., King of England, and had three children, viz.,

Alexander, } both died in the lifetime of their father, s. p.
David, }
Margaret, m. in 1281, ERIC, KING OF NORWAY, and left an only dau.,

MARGARET, who was acknowledged QUEEN OF SCOTS, but died in her passage from Norway, and with her terminated the lines of David's two sons, Malcolm and William.

3. DAVID, Earl of Huntingdon, in England, m. Maud, dau. of Hugh, and sister and co-heiress of Ranulph, Earl of Chester, by whom he left issue at his decease in 1219,

Henry, d. s. p.

David, d. s. p.

John, surnamed Le Scot, s. to the earldom of Huntingdon, and became Earl of Chester, d. s. p.

MARGARET, m. to ALAN, Lord of Galloway, and had two daus. and co-heirs, CHRISTIAN, m. William, Earl of Albemarle, and d. s. p.; and DEVORGILLA, or DEVORGILDA, who m. JOHN DE BALIOL, and was mother of JOHN BALIOL, King of Scotland, ut supra.

Isabella, m. to Robert Bruce, and had a son, ROBERT BRUCE, the celebrated claimant for the Scottish crown.

Ada, m. Henry de Hastings, Lord Hastings, and left a son and heir, HENRY, Lord Hastings, father of JOHN, Lord Hastings, a claimant for the Scottish throne.

By this table, the claim of Baliol seems indisputable, his mother, who was then alive, having abdicated her right in his favour, but Bruce contended that he was himself one step of kindred nearer to David, Earl of Huntingdon, than Baliol, being that nobleman's grandson; and he met the question of seniority, by alleging, that he had to contest that point in reality with Baliol's mother, and that being a male, he ought to be preferred to a female, according to the law and usage of nations, of which he adduced divers precedents. EDWARD decided, however, in favour of BALIOL, and the new king swore fealty to the English monarch, on 30 November, 1292, as his superior lord. In the oath he acknowledged the sovereignty of the king of England over Scotland, in very express and submissive terms; and he caused an authentic act of allegiance to be drawn up. Baliol's installation followed, and was performed at Scone, with the usual ceremonies, all the Scottish lords swearing fealty to him, save ROBERT BRUCE, who absented himself. Thus the English FEUDAL BARONY OF BALIOL merged in the royal dignity of Scotland. JOHN BALIOL, king of Scotland, d. in 1314, and his two sons, King EDWARD BALIOL, and Henry Baliol, dying s. p., the former in 1363, the latter in 1332, the right of representation of the Kings of Scotland became vested in his, John's, sisters, of whom there were four,

Margaret, who d. s. p.

ADA, wife of William de Lindsay, of Lamberton.

CICELY, wife of John de Burgh.

MARY, wife of John Comyn, Lord of Badenoch.

The dau. and heir of ADA BALIOL and WILLIAM LINDSAY was Christian Lindsay, wife of Ingelram Sire de Coucy. Her right to represent the royal House of Scotland (which carried along with it the representation of the Anglo-Saxon kings) descended through the House of St. Pol to that of the Royal Bourbons, and is now vested in His Royal Highness Henry, Duke of Bordeaux, Count de Chambord, and failing him, it will descend to his sister's son, Robert de Bourbon, Duke of Parma.

CICELY BALIOL and JOHN DE BURGH had two daus. and co-heirs, viz.,

1. Hawys, who, by her husband, Thomas de Grealey, had a dau. Joan, wife of John, 2nd Lord de la Warre, and from her descended two brothers, viz., SIR OWEN WEST, whose only

dau. and heir, Mary, m. Sir Adrian Poynings, and was mother of two co-heiresses, Mary, m. to Sir Edward Moore, of Larden, and Ann, m. to Sir George Moore, of Loseley, and GEORGE WEST, ancestor of the WESTS, EARLS OF DE LA WARRE.

2 Dervorgilla, wife of Robert, 1st Lord Fitzwalter. From her dau., Christian, wife of John le Marechal, and her grand-dau., Hawyse, wife of Robert, 2nd Lord Morley, descended a long line of Lords Morley. William, 12th Lord Morley and Lord Monteagle, had a dau., Catherine Parker, wife of John Savage, Earl Rivers, through whose two daus. the royal blood of Baliol has descended to the families of Pitt, Lord Rivers, and Lane Fox, of Bramham, and to that of Colyear, Earl of Portmore.

MARY BALIOL m. JOHN COMYN, Lord of Badenoch, who was heir general of King DONALD BANE, being 4th in descent from Hexilda, that monarch's grand-dau. His son, John Comyn, Lord of Badenoch, had two daus. (in whose descendants are united the co-heirship of Baliol with that of Donald Bane), viz.;

1 Joan Comyn, wife of David de Strathbolgie, Earl of Athol. Her descendant, Elizabeth Percy, of Athol, the wife of Sir Thomas Burgh, was ancestress to a line of Lords Burgh and Baronets Boothby, of whom the co-heirship general vested in the Venerable Thomas Thorpe, archdeacon of Bristol.

2 Elizabeth Comyn, wife of Richard, 2nd Lord Talbot, and ancestress to a long line of Earls of Shrewsbury, whose elder branch ended in an heiress, Lady Alithea Talbot, who, in 1612, m. Thomas Howard, Earl of Arundel and Surrey. From her are descended the Dukes of Norfolk; but her two heirs general are Lords Stourton and Petre.*

BALIOL—BARONS BALIOL.

By Writ of Summons, dated 26 September, 1300.

Lineage.

SIR ALEXANDER BALIOL, of Cavers, a kinsman of JOHN DE BALIOL, King of Scotland, being in the retinue of that magnificent prelate, Anthony Beke, bishop of Durham, and Patriarch of Jerusalem, in the expedition made by King EDWARD I. into Flanders, was restored to all his lands in Scotland, in the 25th of that monarch's reign, and was summoned to parliament, as a BARON, from the 26th September, 1300, to the 3rd November, 1306. His lordship m. Isabel, dau. and heiress of Richard de Chilham, and widow of David de Strabolg, Earl of Athol, by whom he obtained, for life, the castle and manor of Chilham, in the county of Kent, and was father of

SIR ALEXANDER BALIOL, of Cavers, lord chamberlain of Scotland 1290, who suffered forfeiture. His son, or brother,

THOMAS BALIOL, having no issue, resigned Cavers to his brother-in-law, William, Earl of Douglas, in 1368. The BARONY OF BALIOL is EXTINCT.

BARD—VISCOUNT BELLAMONT.

By Letters Patent, dated 8 July, 1646.

Lineage.

HENRY BARD, younger of two sons of the Rev. George Bard, vicar of Staines, in Middlesex, by Susan his wife, dau. of John Dudley, and the lineal descendant of the family of Bard of North Kelsey, in Lincolnshire, returning from his travels in the East about the time the civil war of CHARLES's reign broke out, entered into the royal service, obtained a colonel's commission, and having subsequently gallantly distinguished himself, particularly at the battle of Cheriton Down, was created successively a BARONET of England, in 1644, and a peer of Ireland, as Baron Bard, of Dromboy, in the co. of Meath, and Viscount Bellamont, in the co. of Dublin, 8 July, 1646. His lordship m. Anne, dau. of Sir William Gardyner, Knt., of Peckham, co. Surrey, and by her (who d. in 1668) had two daus., of whom the elder, Anne, became mistress to her father's patron, Prince Rupert, and by him was mother of Dudley Bard, slain at the siege at Buda, in 1686; and Persiana, the younger, m. her cousin, Nathaniel Bard, Esq. of Caversfield.

Arms—Sa., on a chev., between ten martlets, arg., five plates.

* To the researches of my learned and esteemed friend, Alexander Sinclair, Esq., the ablest, probably, of all Scottish genealogists, I am much indebted for these details of the descendants of the royal Baliols.

BARDOLF—BARONS BARDOLF.

By Writ of Summons, dated 6 February, 1299.

Lineage.

The first of this family upon record,

WILLIAM BARDOLF, was sheriff of Norfolk and Suffolk, from the 16th to 21st of HENRY II., inclusive, and after him came his son and heir,

THOMAS BARDOLF, who, upon the scutage being levied of such barons as did not attend King HENRY II. into Ireland, in the 18th of that monarch's reign, nor contribute men or money to that service, paid £25 for the scutage of those knights' fees which formerly belonged to Ralph Hanselyn, Baron of Schelford, in the county of Nottingham, whose dau. and heiress, ROSE, he had married. This Thomas obtained from William, brother of King HENRY II., the Lordship of Bradewell, to hold to himself and his heirs, by the service of one knight's fee; three parts of which he bestowed upon his three daus., viz., —, wife of Robert de St. Remigio; —, wife of William Bacun; and —, wife of Baldwin de Thoni. Thomas Bardolf was s. by his son,

DOWN BARDOLF, who marrying Beatrix, dau. and heiress of William de Warren, acquired by her the Barony of Wirmegay, in the county of Norfolk. He d. in 1209, leaving his widow Beatrix surviving, who gave 3100 marks to the king, for livery of her father's lands, and a reasonable dowry from the lands belonging to her husband; as also that she might not be compelled to marry again, contrary to her inclination. Down Bardolf was s. by his son,

WILLIAM BARDOLF, who, in the 26th of HENRY III., attended that monarch in person in the expedition which he then made into France. In the next year, he had livery of the honour of Wirmegay, which during his minority had been in the hands of Hubert de Burgh, Earl of Kent; and he subsequently obtained royal charters for markets and free warren throughout his different lordships and manors. In the 41st of the same monarch, he attended the king in his expedition into Wales, and was soon after constituted governor of Nottingham Castle. He was at the fatal battle of Lewes, under the royal banner, in 1264, and was there taken prisoner, along with the king. He d. in the 4th of EDWARD I., anno 1275, and was s. by his son,

WILLIAM BARDOLF, who, doing homage, had livery of his lands, lying in the counties of Leicester, Lincoln, Nottingham, Norfolk, and Sussex, and soon after obtained charters for fairs and markets to be holden at his different manors. He m. Julian, dau. of Hugh de Gurnay, and dying before 1292, was s. by his son,

HUGH BARDOLF, who, in the 22nd of EDWARD I., had summons, with other eminent persons, to attend the king, to advise upon the affairs of the realm, and was subsequently summoned to parliament, as BARON BARDOLF, from the 6th of February, 1299 (27th EDWARD I.), to the 2nd of June, 1302. He m. Isabel, dau. and heiress of Robert Aguilon,* by whom he had two sons, Thomas and William. His lordship, who was employed in the French and Scottish wars of this reign, d. in 1303, and was s. by his elder son,

SIR THOMAS BARDOLF, K.B., as 2nd Baron Bardolf. This nobleman was summoned to parliament from 26 August, 1307, to 23 October, 1330 (4 Edw. I.), about the latter of which years his lordship d., and was s. by his son,

JOHN BARDOLF, 3rd Baron Bardolf de Wirmegay, as latterly styled, summoned to parliament from 22 January, 1336, to 1 June, 1363. His lordship m. Elizabeth, dau. and co-heiress of Sir Roger D'Amorie, and, as Dugdale calls her, "that great woman," his wife, Elizabeth, by whom he acquired a considerable accession of landed property. This nobleman participated in the glories of the martial reign of EDWARD III., and attained the high dignity of BANNERET. He d. in 1371, and was s. by his son,

WILLIAM BARDOLF, 4th Baron Bardolf, summoned to parliament from 20 January, 1376, to 3 September, 1385, as "William Bardolf of Wirmegay." His lordship m. Agnes, dau. of Sir Michael Poynings, Knt. He served in the French and Irish wars; latterly under John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, and dying in 1385 (8 RICHARD II.), was s. by his son,

THOMAS BARDOLF DE WORMEGAY, 5th Baron Bardolf, sum-

* In Gibson's Camden's Britannia, it is stated that Sir Robert Aguilon had a castle at the manor of Addington in Surrey, which was holden in fee, by the serjeanty, to find in the king's kitchen, on the coronation day, a person to make a dainty dish, called "Mapigernoun, or Dillegrout," and serve the same up to the king's table. This service has been regularly claimed by the lords of the said manor, and allowed at the respective coronations of the kings of England.—BANKS' Extinct Peerage.

moned to parliament from 12 September, 1390, to 25 August, 1404. This nobleman joining Henry, Earl of Northumberland, Thomas, earl marshal and Nottingham, and Richard Scroope, archbishop of York, in their rebellion, temp. HENRY IV. (for which the earl marshal and archbishop were beheaded at York), he was forced, with the Earl of Northumberland, to fly to France; but those lords returning in about three years afterwards, and again raising the standard of insurrection in Yorkshire, they were attacked by the sheriff and the power of the county at Bramham Moor, where, sustaining a total defeat, the earl fell in the field, and Lord Bardolf died soon afterwards of his wounds. His lordship had married Avicia, dau. of Ralph, Lord Cromwell, and left two daus., viz.,

Anne, m. 1st, to Sir William Clifford, Knt., and 2ndly, to Reginald Lord Cobham.

Joane, m. to Sir William Philip, K.G. (son of Sir John Philip, Knt., of Donynton, Suffolk), a valiant soldier in the French wars of King HENRY V., to which monarch he was treasurer of the household, and at his decease had the chief direction of his funeral. Sir William is said to have been raised to the peerage by letters patent, as LORD BARDOLF, in the reign of HENRY VI., but he was never summoned to parliament. By Joane Bardolf he left an only dau. and heiress, Elizabeth, who m. John, Viscount Beaumont (see that title).

Thomas, the 5th and unfortunate Lord Bardolf, dying thus, and being afterwards attainted, his BARONY and large possessions became forfeited. The estates were divided between Thomas Beaufort, Duke of Exeter, the king's brother, Sir George Dunbar, Knt., and the queen; but the latter proportion, upon the petition of Sir William Clifford and his wife, and Sir William Philip and his wife, to the king, was granted in reversion, after the queen's decease, to those representatives of the attainted nobleman. Dugdale states "that Lord Bardolf's remains were quartered, and the quarters disposed of by being set upon the gates of London, York, Lenne, and Shrewsbury, while the head was placed upon one of the gates of Lincoln; his widow obtained permission, however, in a short time, to remove and bury them."

BARNEWALL—VISCOUNT BARNEWALL, OF KINGSLAND.

By Letters Patent, dated 29 June, 1646.

Lineage.

This great Anglo-Norman family which with the FitzGeralds, Butlers, and Plunketts was one of the most powerful of the old English pale, has been settled in Ireland from the period of the conquest of that country by Strongbow, in the reign of HENRY II.

Of the three principal lines of the family of Barnewall, the BARONETS OF CRICKSTOWN are the eldest, their representative and the present chief of the family is SIR REGINALD BARNEWALL, the 8th baronet. Next in order to the house of Crickstown comes the branch of the Lords Trimleston, whose peerage, created in 1461, is still extant, and the 2nd barony on the roll of the Irish peers. The present possessor is Thomas Barnewall, 16th lord. The youngest of all the branches of this family was that of the VISCOUNTS KINGSLAND, of whom we are now about to treat.

The first of the family who came to Ireland was SIR MICHAEL DE BERNEVAL, who landed at Beervhaven, in the co. of Cork, according to tradition, previous even to the landing of Strongbow in Leinster. Sir Michael was the direct descendant of ALANUS DE BERNEVAL, the companion in arms of WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, whose name is inscribed on the roll of Battle Abbey. From this successful soldier the 12th in descent was

SIR ULPHAM DE BERNEVAL, who m. a dau. of the Lord Furnival, and by her left issue.

I. SIR CHRISTOPHER, who succeeded at Crickstown, and having m. Matilda, dau. and heiress of the last Lord of Drakestown and Drakerath, left issue two sons,

SIR NICHOLAS, who continued the elder line at Crickstown, whose descendant and representative is SIR REGINALD BARNEWALL, Bart., and

SIR ROBERT, who was created, in 1461, Baron Trimleston; his representative is Thomas Barnewall, present and 16th Lord Trimleston.

II John of Frankestown, from whom the Viscounts Kingsland derive.

Sir Ulpfram dying was succeeded at Crickstown by his eldest son, Sir Christopher, while his 2nd son, JOHN DE BERNEVAL, of Frankestown, was high sheriff of the co. Meath in 1433; he m. Genet, dau. and heiress of — Netterville, of Staffordston, and by her left issue.

SIR RICHARD BARNEWALL, of Fieldston, which estate he acquired by his marriage with Catherine, dau. and heiress of John de la Feld (or Delafeld) of Fieldston: by this lady, he left, with other issue, a son,

SIR ROGER BARNEWALL, who m. Allison dau. of Christopher, 2nd Lord Trimleston, and dying was succeeded by his son,

SIR PATRICK BARNEWALL, of Fieldston, Gracedieu, and Turvey. On 7 October, 1534, he was made serjeant-at-law, and solicitor-general, and on 1 October, 1550, Master of the Rolls. By his marriage with Anne, eldest dau. of Richard Luttrell, of Luttrellstown, he left issue (with three daus., the eldest of whom became the wife of Sir Patrick Barnewall, of Crickstown) a son and successor,

SIR CHRISTOPHER BARNEWALL, of Turvey, who was high sheriff of the co. Dublin in 1560: he m. Marian, dau. of Patrick Sherie, of Shallon, co. Meath, and sister and heiress of John Sherie. Sir Christopher built the present mansion at Turvey, and dying in 1607, left issue,

I. SIR PATRICK, his successor.

II. Lawrence, d. unm.

III. James, d. young.

IV. John, of Flemingston, whose line is EXTINCT.

I. Catherine, m. Thomas Finglas, of Westpalaton.

II. Margaret, m. Nicholas, Lord Howth

III. Genet, m. Richard Stanhurst, of Court Duff.

IV. Alison, m. Sir Edward FitzGerald, of Tecroghan.

V. Elizabeth, m. John Finglas, Esq.

VI. Anne, m. Sir John Draicot, of Mornington.

VII. Mable, m. Sir Richard Masterson, of Fernes

VIII. Ismay, m. Richard Delahyde, of Moyclare.

IX. Eleanor, m. James, 1st Earl of Roscommon.

X. Maud, m. Richard Bellinge, Esq.

XI. Mary, m. Patrick, Lord Dunsany.

Sir Christopher dying was succeeded by his son,

SIR PATRICK BARNEWALL, of Turvey, who m. Mary, dau. of Sir Nicholas Bagenal, knight marshal of Ireland, by his wife Eleanor, dau. and co-heiress of Sir Edward Griffith, of Pen-thorn, in Wales, and by her he left (with other issue,) a son and successor.

SIR NICHOLAS BARNEWALL, of Turvey, who, in reward for his services during the civil war, was created by King CHARLES I., 29 June, 1646, VISCOUNT BARNEWALL OF KINGSLAND and BARON OF TURVEY. The patent conferring these titles is dated at Bagland Castle, the seat of the devoted loyalist, the Marquess of Worcester. The 1st Viscount Kingsland m. Bridget, eldest dau. and co-heir of Henry, the 12th Earl of Kildare, and widow of Rory O'Donel, Earl of Tyrconnel, and by her had issue: five sons and four daus.:

I. Christopher, d. unm., before his father.

II. Patrick, whose services are mentioned in the preamble to his father's patent, also d. unm., in England, before his father.

III. HENRY, who succeeded to the title.

IV. Francis, of Beggstown and Woodpark, co. Meath: he m. Jane, dau. of Philip FitzGerald, of Alloone, and dying, left issue by her

Nicholas of Beggstown and Woodpark, who m. Catherine, 4th dau. of Robert, 9th Lord Trimleston, and sister of Mathias and John, 10th and 11th lords. By this marriage Nicholas Barnewall left issue, Mathew Barnewall, of Beggstown, who m. Anne, dau. of Thomas McCann, Esq., and left issue.

MATHEW, who became the 6th viscount.

V. Mathew, d. unm.

I. Mary, m. Nicholas, 6th Viscount Gormanston.

II. Mable, m. Christopher, 2nd Earl of Fingall.

III. Eleanor, m. Charles Whyte, of Leixlip.

IV. Frances, d. unm.

The 1st Viscount Kingsland was succeeded by his 3rd but eldest surviving son,

HENRY, 2nd viscount, who m. 1st, Mary, dau. of John, 2nd Viscount Netterville, and by her had an only dau., Marian, who m. Thomas Nugent, styled Lord Riverston; he m. 2ndly, Lady Mary Nugent, 2nd dau. of Thomas, 3rd Earl of Westmeath, and by her left issue at his death in 1688,

I. NICHOLAS, his successor.

II. Richard, d. unm.

III. Joseph, d. unm.

IV. Christopher, who m. Margaret dau. of — Everard, of Randalstown, co. Meath, and by her is stated to have left issue,*

1 George, his successor.

2 Christopher, a catholic priest, d. unm.

Christopher Barnewall was succeeded by his eldest son, George of Wimbleton, co. Dublin, who m. — dau. of — O'Farrell, of Coyne Castle, co. Longford, and left (with two daus.) a son and successor,

Christopher Barnewall, of Wimbleton, who m. — Nos man, dau. of Thomas Norman, of Lanesborough, co. Longford, and by her had issue,

* MS. in the handwriting of the late Sir Aylmer Barnewall, Bart.

- 1 George, who d. unm.
- 2 Thomas, captain in the Longford militia who presented a petition to the House of Lords, in 1835, claiming the titles of Viscount Kingsland and Baron of Turvey, but the matter was never adjudicated on. Captain Barnewall married and had several children.

Henry, 2nd viscount, dying in 1688, was succeeded by his eldest son,

NICHOLAS, 3rd viscount, who m. Mary, youngest dau. and co-heiress (with her sisters, Elizabeth, Viscountess Ross, and Frances, Viscountess Dillon) of George, Count Hamilton (uncle of James, 6th Earl of Abercorn), by his wife, Frances, eldest dau. and co-heiress (with her sister, Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough) of Richard Jennings, of Sandridge, in Hertfordshire; after the death of Count Hamilton she became the wife of Richard Talbot, Earl and afterwards Duke of Tyrconnel: by this marriage the 3rd viscount had two sons and four daus.,

- I. HENRY-BENEDICT, his successor.
- II. George, who m. in 1752, Barbara Belasyse, 2nd dau. of Thomas, 2nd Earl of Falconberg, and at his death in 1771, he left issue by her an only son,
GEORGE, who succeeded as 5th viscount.

- I. Mary.
- II. Harriot, } d. unm.
- III. Elizabeth, }
- IV. Frances, m. Hon. Richard Barnewall, 3rd son of John, 11th Lord Trimlestone. The great grandson of this marriage is

THOMAS, the present and 16th LORD TRIMLESTONE, who is thus heir of line of the Viscounts Kingsland.

The 3rd viscount was succeeded by his eldest son,

HENRY BENEDICT, 4th viscount, who m. 1735, Honora, dau. of Peter Daly, of Quansbury, co. Galway, but by her had no issue; he d. 1744, and was succeeded by his nephew,

GEORGE, 5th viscount, who having been brought up a Protestant, took the oath and his seat in the House of Lords in Ireland, 18 January, 1787: he never married, and at his death, 5 April, 1800, the Turvey and other estates devolved on Lord Trimlestone, and the title remained dormant till 1814, when the House of Lords admitted the claim of MATHEW BARNEWALL, who then became the 6th viscount (vide descendants of Francis, 4th son of 1st viscount): he was three times married but left no issue by any of his wives: he d. in 1833 (for a narrative of this lord's changeable career, see BURKE'S Vicissitudes of Families), and since that period, with the exception of the petition of Captain THOMAS BARNEWALL, already mentioned, who claims to be descended from Christopher, 4th son of the 2nd Viscount, no attempt has been made to revive the honours of the family. The petition of Captain Barnewall was before the House of Lords in 1835.

GERALD, so well known as GIRALDUS CAMBRENSIS, from Cambria, the ancient name of Pembrokeshire, in which county

he was born in the year 1146, at Tenby, or the castle of Mainarpir. About the time of the birth of Philip the August, we find him then twenty years of age, a student at Paris. He was subsequently prebendary of Hereford, and being a person of great learning, was elected in 1176, by the chapter of St. David's, bishop of that see; but he declined the election, because unsanctioned, according to law, by the king, and passed a second time into France, to pursue his studies at Paris, where he became so celebrated that he was chosen in 1179 professor of canon law, by the university; he rejected the honour, however, in expectation of more solid advantages at home. In four years afterwards, he was invited to court by King HENRY II., and appointed one of the royal chaplains. In 1185, he accompanied John, Earl of Moreton (afterwards King JOHN), as his private secretary, into Ireland, and employed a five years' residence there in the collection of materials for writing the Topography of Ireland, and the Vatical History of its Conquest; and having already written a description of England and Wales, he travelled to Jerusalem, and wrote De Mirabilibus Terra Sancta. Upon his return, his uncle David, bishop of St. David's, made him archdeacon of Brecknock; in which capacity he assisted, anno 1188, Baldwin, archbishop of Canterbury, in preaching the Christian doctrine to the Welsh, and inciting them to the Holy War. But in 1197, Jeffry Fitz-Piers, Earl of Essex, having been made justiciary of England, and having marched with a great force into Wales, was so much incensed against Giraldus, by the bishop of Bangor's insinuations of his being an enemy to the king, that he seized upon all his lands at Brecknock, and passing, on his return, through Gloucester, directed a precept to the archdeacon of Oxford to take into his hands all the revenues Giraldus had within his archdeaconry; whereof Gerald complained by letter to the bishop of Ely, the dean of London, and the archdeacon of Bucks, setting forth that among his other sufferings, he had been dis-seized of his prebend of Hereford and his church of Chesterton, in Oxfordshire. He afterwards refused the bishopric of Leighlin and Ferns; but accepted, in 1199, that of St. David's. He could not, however, obtain a confirmation from the Holy See, being opposed by Geoffry, prior of Lanthony, nominated by Hubert, archbishop of Canterbury, which caused his resignation of the archdeaconry. He d. about the year 1215, and was buried in the cathedral of St. David's.

The eldest son,

SIR ROBERT BARRI, accompanied Robert Fitz-Stephen into Ireland, in 1169, to assist Dermot, King of Leinster, to regain his kingdom, and after a series of gallant exploits, which obtained for him the name of "Barry-More," was slain at Lismore, about the year 1185. His brother and successor,

PHILIP DE BARRY, who built the castle of Barry's Court in 1206, was ancestor of

DAVID DE BARRY, styled the 1st VISCOUNT OF BUTTEVANT, who was appointed by the king, in 1267, lord justice of Ireland, subdued the McCarties and Geraldines, and ended the feuds between them and the Burkes. In 1273, he had free warren in all his lands, as Lord of Buttevant, being designated "a rich noble baron." His descendant,

JOHN BARRY, was living at Buttevant in 1317, and was father of

DAVID DE BARRY, from whom we pass to his lineal descendant,

WILLIAM BARRY, who in 1490 sat as premier viscount in parliament, but was slain by his brother, David, archbishop of Cork and Cloyne, in 1499; which David shared himself a similar fate, being killed by Thomas Barry; and after he had been buried twenty days, his body was taken up and publicly burned, by the command of Maurice, Earl of Desmond. William Barry, Viscount Buttevant, left issue, Juliana, m. to Edmund de Courcy, by whom she was grandmother of John, Lord Kingsale, and his successor.

JOHN BARRY, Lord Barry and Viscount Buttevant, who was s. by his son,

JAMES FITZ-JOHN BARRY, Lord Barry and Viscount Buttevant, who on 9 February, 1556, made an entail of his estate, on failure of issue male of his own body, to his cousin, James Fitz-Richard Barry-Roe; and dying s. p. in 1557, was s. by his said kinsman,

JAMES FITZ-RICHARD BARRY-ROE, Lord of Ibawne and Viscount Buttevant, who had a special livery of the inheritance granted him, 27 April, 1561, by the title of James Barry, Viscount Barrymore, alias Lord of Barrymore, and obtained, on 12 March, 1567, from Queen ELIZABETH, a lease for twenty-one years of divers abbey lands, among which were those of Buttevant. In the parliament held at Dublin, 12 January, 1559, he sat as premier viscount. His lordship m. Ellen, dau. of Cormac MacCarthy Reagh, and had issue,

- I. RICHARD, VISCOUNT BUTTEVANT, deaf and dumb, d. s. p.
- II. DAVID, of whom presently.
- III. WILLIAM, of Lislee, whose grandson,

WILLIAM LARRY, of Lislee, forfeited his estate temp. Crom-

WELL; he m. Ellen, dau. and heir of Charles McCarthy, Esq., of Castlemore, co. Cork, and had issue; of which the eldest son, DAVID, was declared by a decree in Chancery, 1706, heir to his maternal grandmother.

From JAMES BARRY, of Ballymacraheen, co. Cork, Esq., stated to have been another son of William Barry, of Lislee, and Ellen McCarthy, his wife, descended

JAMES REDMOND BARRY, Esq., who claimed the Viscounty of BUTTEVANT, in 1825.

The 2nd son,

DAVID FITZ-JAMES BARRY, Viscount Buttevant and Baron of Bawne, was one of the lords of the parliament held by Sir John Perrot, 26 April, 1585, but afterwards joined in the rebellion of the Earl of Desmond. He made his peace, however, in the time of Lord Grey's government, by paying a fine of £500. From that period he became remarkable for his fidelity to the crown, was of council to Sir George Carew, president of Munster, and did great service against the rebels in that province. In 1601, he was made general of the Provincials, and after the defeat of the Spaniards, and raising the siege of Kinsale, anno 1602, the president placed 1,600 men under his command; when his lordship, with his brother John, and Sir George Thornton, commander of 500 English soldiers, did considerable service; and by taking a very large prey of cattle, forced several, from the extreme misery to which they were reduced, to return to their allegiance and to sue for pardon. In recompense of these services, King JAMES I. made his lordship leases for thirty-one years of a great portion of the lands of the McCarthys. His lordship m. Ellen, younger dau. of David, Viscount Fermoy, and had issue,

DAVID FITZ-DAVID, who m. Elizabeth, dau. of Richard, Lord Poer, and dying before his father, left a son,

DAVID, who s. his grandfather.

Honora, m. 1st, to Gerald Fitz-Gerald, of the Decies, by whom she had no issue; and 2ndly, to Patrick Browne, Esq., of Mulrankin, co. Wexford, by whom she had William, Walter, and several daus.

Helena, m. 1st, to John, son and heir of Richard, Lord Poer, of Curraghmore, by whom she had an only son, heir to his grandfather. Her ladyship m. 2ndly, Thomas, Earl of Ormonde, but had no issue; and 3rdly, in 1631, Sir Thomas Somerset (3rd son of Edward, Earl of Worcester), who was created, in 1626, Viscount Cashel, by whom she had an only dau., Helena, who d. unm.

Ellen, m. to Sir John Fitzgerald, Knt., of Ballymaloe, co. Cork.

Catherine, m. to Richard Burke, Esq., of Derry MacLaghny, co. Galway.

Margaret, m. to Robert, Earl of Roscommon.

Lord Buttevant d. 10 April, 1617, and was s. by his grandson,

DAVID BARRY, Viscount Buttevant, who highly distinguished himself by his fidelity to the English interest during the civil commotions in Ireland, and was created, 28 February, 1628, EARL OF BARRYMORE. His lordship m. 29 July, 1621, Alice, eldest dau. of Richard, Earl of Cork, and by her (who m. 2ndly, John Barry, Esq., of Liscarrol) he left at his decease, 29 September, 1642, with two daus. RICHARD BARRY, 2nd Earl of Barrymore, b. in 1630, m. 1st, SUSAN, dau. of Sir William Killegrew, Knt., by whom he had three daus., Mary, m. to the Rev. Gerald Barry; Catherine, m. to John Townshend, Esq., of Castletown, co. of Cork; and SUSAN. He m. 2ndly, in 1656, Martha, dau. of Henry Lawrence, Esq., by whom he had a son LAWRENCE, his heir; and a dau., Theodora, wife of Charles May, Esq.; and 3rdly, Dorothy, dau. and heir of John Ferrer, Esq., of Dromore, co. Down, by whom he had four sons and four daus., Dorothy m. to Sir John Jacob, Bart.; Anne, m. to Dr. Henry Maule, Bishop of Meath; Margaret, m. to Thomas Crosbie, Esq., of Ballyheigue; and Elizabeth, who d. young. The earl d. in 1694, and was s. by his son,

LAWRENCE BARRY, 3rd Earl of Barrymore, who m. in 1682, Catharine, dau. of Richard, Lord Santry, but by her (who m. 2ndly, in 1699, Francis Gash, Esq.; and 3rdly, in 1729, Sir Henry Piers, Bart., of Tristernagh) leaving no issue at his decease, 17 April, 1699, he was s. by his half-brother,

JAMES BARRY, 4th Earl of Barrymore, b. in 1687, a lieutenant-general in the army, who m. 1st, Elizabeth, sister of Charles, Earl of Cork, and by her had a dau., Anne, m. to James Maule, Esq. His lordship m. 2ndly, Lady Elizabeth Savage, dau. and heir of Richard, Earl Rivers, by whom he had a dau. Penelope, wife of Major-General James Cholmondeley; and 3rdly, 12 July, 1716, Lady Anne Chichester, dau. of Arthur, Earl of Donegal, by whom he had issue,

I. JAMES, his heir.

II. Richard, M.P. for Wigan; m. in 1749, Jane, dau. and heir of Arthur Hyde, Esq., of Castle Hyde, M.P. for the county of Cork, but d. s. p. 23 November, 1787.

III. Arthur, d. unm. in 1770.

IV. John-Smith, of Marbury, in Cheshire, b. 28 July, 1725; m. in 1746, Dorothy, dau. and co-heir of Hugh Smith, Esq., of Weald Hall, Essex, and had issue, with a dau., two sons.

1 JAMES-HUGH, of Marbury, Cheshire, and Foaty Island, co. Cork, b. 1748, who d. without legitimate issue: his son was the late JOHN-SMITH BARRY, Esq., of Marbury and Foaty Island.

2 Richard, d. s. p.

1. Catharine, d. in 1739.

II. Anne, m. to — Taylor, Esq., and d. 21 March, 1768.

His lordship d. at Castle Lyons, 5 January, 1747, and was s. by his son,

JAMES BARRY, 5th Earl of Barrymore, b. 25 May, 1717, who m. Margaret, dau. and heir of Paul Davys, Viscount Mountcashel, and dying 19 December, 1751, was s. by his only son,

RICHARD BARRY, 6th Earl of Barrymore (captain 9th dragoons), b. 6 October, 1745, who m. 1767, Lady Emily Stanhope, 3rd dau. of William, Earl of Harrington, and by her (who d. in France, 1782) had issue,

I. RICHARD, his heir.

II. HENRY, successor to his brother.

III. Augustus, b. 16 July, 1773, in holy orders, d. s. p. 27 November, 1813.

1. Carolina, b. 17 May, 1768, m. July, 1788, Louis Pierre Drummond, Count de Melfort, of the French service, son of Louis, Count de Melfort.

His lordship d. at Dromana, 1 August, 1773, and was interred at Castle Lyons, co. Cork. His son,

RICHARD BARRY, 7th Earl of Barrymore, b. 14 August, 1769, M.P. for Heytesbury. Of this nobleman Sir Egerton Brydges gives the following description:—"With talents to shine in a course of honourable ambition, with wit, good nature, and engaging manners, he shone a meteor of temporary wonder and regret, by freaks which would have disgraced Buckingham or Rochester, until the accidental explosion of his musket, while he was conveying some French prisoners from Folkestone to Dover, as captain in the Berkshire militia, put an end to his troubles and his follies on 6 March, 1793." He left no issue. His brother and heir, HENRY BARRY, 8th Earl of Barrymore, lieutenant-colonel South Cork Militia, b. 16 August, 1770, m. 16 January, 1795, Anne, eldest dau. of Jeremiah Coghlan, Esq., of Ardo, co. Waterford, but d. s. p. in 1824, when all his honours became EXTINCT.

BARRY—BARON BARRY, OF SANTRY.

By Letters Patent, dated 19 February, 1661.

Lineage.

The Barrys of Santry derived, it is supposed, from a branch of the Barrymore family.

SIR JAMES BARRY, b. in 1603, eldest son of Alderman Richard Barry, M.P., lord mayor of Dublin in 1610, and nephew of Nicholas Barry, ancestor of the Barrys of Newtown Barry, co. Wexford, entered on the profession of the law, and attained its highest honours, becoming eventually chief justice of the King's Bench in Ireland. He received the honour of knighthood in 1634, and in 1659 was chosen chairman of the convention which met in Dublin, and proceeded to the transaction of business, in defiance of the orders issued by the council of state in England for their dissolution. They asserted their liberty and independence, proclaimed their detestation of the king's murder, and published a declaration for the re-admission of the secluded members into the parliament of England. At the Restoration, these services were not forgotten, and Sir James was advanced, shortly after that auspicious event (by privy seal, dated 18 December, 1660, and by patent dated 18 February, 1661), to the peerage of Ireland as BARON BARRY, of Santry, co. Dublin. His lordship m. Catharine, dau. of Sir William Parsons, lord justice of Ireland, and dying 9 February, 1672, left, with four daus. (Anne, m. 1st, to Stephen Butler, of Belurbet, and 2ndly, to the Hon. Raymond Fitzmaurice; Elizabeth, m. 4 December, 1683, Thomas Anderton, Esq.; Catherine, and Mary), three sons,

I. RICHARD.

II. James

III. William, d. s. p.

The eldest son,

RICHARD BARRY, 2nd Lord Santry, m. Elizabeth, dau. of Henry Jenery, Esq., and d. 1694, leaving (with four daus., Catharine, m. 1st, Lawrence, Earl of Barrymore; 2ndly, Francis Gash, Esq.; 3rdly, Sir Henry Piers, of Tristernagh, Bart., and d. 8 June, 1737; Frances, m. 23 November, 1696, John Keating, Esq.; Elizabeth, wife of James Napper, Esq.; and Dorothea) a son and successor.

HENRY BARRY, 3rd Lord Santry, b. in 1680, who m. 9 February, 1702, Bridget, only dau. of Sir Thomas Domville, Bart., of Templeogue, and dying 27 January, 1734, was s. by his only son.

HENRY BARRY, 4th Lord Santry, b. 3 September, 1710, who was brought to trial before his peers, in 1739, for the murder of Loughlin Murphy, a footman, and found guilty, whereby he was attainted of high treason, condemned to suffer death, and all his estates became forfeited to the crown. By the mediation, however, of the Duke of Devonshire, the lord lieutenant, and several other noblemen, Lord Santry obtained a full pardon for his life, under the great seal, 17 June, 1739, and subsequently, in 1741, a re-grant of his estates. He m. 1st, 8 May, 1737, Anne, dau. of William Thornton, Esq., of Finglas; and 2ndly, Elizabeth Shore, of Derby, but d. without issue, 18 March, 1750-1. By his will he devised his estates to his uncle (ex parte materis) Sir Compton Domville, Bart., of Templeogue, co. Dublin, and Santry is now, in consequence, the seat of the present Sir CHARLES-COMPTON-WILLIAM DOMVILLE, Bart.

BASSET—BARONS BASSET, OF WELDEN.

By Writ of Summons, dated 6 February, 1299

Lineage.

Few families in the early annals of England can boast of a more eminent progenitor than the Bassets, and the descendants of few of the Anglo-Norman nobles attained a higher degree of power than those of

RALPH BASSET (son of Thurstan, the Norman), who was justice of England under King HENRY I. We find his son Ralph, in the reign of STEPHEN, "abounding in wealth, and erecting a strong castle upon some part of his inheritance in Normandy." Ralph Basset, the justice of England, required none of the artificial aids of ancestry to attain distinction; he had within himself powers sufficient at any period to reach the goal of honour, but particularly in the rude age in which he lived. To his wisdom we are said to be indebted for many salutary laws, and among others for that of frank pledge. Like all the great men of his day, he was a most liberal benefactor to the church. He d. in 1120, leaving issue,

- i. THURSTINE, who s. to the manor of Colton.
- ii. Thomas, ancestor of the Bassets of Heddington, from whom diverged the Wycombe Bassets.
- iii. RICHARD, of whom presently. This Richard is called the eldest son by Dugdale and by others, the 2nd.
- iv. Nicholas, who sided with King STEPHEN against the Empress Maud; and his son forfeited all the estates to HENRY II.
- v. Gilbert, of Little Bissington, co. Gloucester, ancestor of the Bassets of Little Bissington.

The 3rd son,

RICHARD BASSET, succeeded his father as justice of England, which high office he filled in the latter part of King HENRY I.'s reign, and through the whole of King STEPHEN's. In the 5th year of the latter monarch, he was sheriff of Surrey, Cambridge, and Huntingdonshire, with Aleric de Vere; and he served the same office for Essex, Hertford, Buckingham, Bedford, Norfolk, Suffolk, Northampton, and Leicestershires. He m. Maud, only dau. and heiress of Geoffrey Ridel, Lord of Witheringe, by Geva, dau. of Hugh Lupus, Earl of Chester, and had issue,

- i. Geoffrey, who, from his mother, assumed the surname of "de Ridel."
- ii. Ralph, of Drayton, co. Stafford (a lordship bestowed upon his mother by the Earl of Chester).
- iii. William, of Sapcoate.

He was s. by his eldest son,

GEOFFREY DE RIDEL. This feudal lord married twice, and had issue by both wives; by the 1st, two sons, viz.,

- i. GEOFFREY, who obtained the principality of Blaye, in France, and is said to have been Geoffrey "The Troubadour."
- ii. RICHARD, of whom presently.

By the 2nd, one son, Hugh. Geoffrey de Ridel was s. at his decease by his eldest surviving son, who re-assuming his paternal surname, and seating himself at Welden, in Northamptonshire, became

RICHARD BASSET, of Welden, and was s. by his son,

RALPH BASSET, who, in the 2nd of HENRY III., paid 30 marks for the fifteen knights' fees he then held, upon the levy of the first scutage for the king. He d. sometime before the year 1257, and was s. by his son,

RALPH BASSET, who had livery of his lands, upon doing homage in the 42nd HENRY III. (1257-8). He was s. by his son,

RICHARD BASSET, who d. in 1275, and was s. by his son,

RALPH BASSET, who d. in 1294, and was s. by his son,

RICHARD BASSET, who was summoned to parliament, 6 February, 1299, as Richardo Basset de Welden. In the 24th EDWARD I., his lordship was in the expedition made against the Scots, in the retinue of Almaric de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, and being subsequently engaged in the same service, he was slain at the battle of Strevelyn in 1314. He was s. by his son (then in minority, whose wardship was granted to Richard de Grey).

RALPH BASSET, 2nd baron, who making proof of his age, had livery of his lands in the 16th EDWARD II. (1321-2). He was summoned 1st EDWARD III. to Newcastle, cum equis et armis, but it does not appear, by the existing enrolments, that he was summoned to parliament. He m. Joane, dau. of John de la Pole, citizen of London, and had issue,

i. RALPH, his successor.

ii. Eleanor, m. to Sir John Knyvett, lord chancellor of England.

iii. Joane, m. to Sir Thomas Aylesbury, Knt.

His lordship was s. at his decease by his son,

RALPH BASSET, 3rd baron, who, becoming a canon regular in the priory of Laund, his son and heir,

RALPH BASSET, doing his homage, had livery of all his father's lands, and dying in the 8th of RICHARD II., was s. by his son,

RICHARD BASSET, who d. s. p. in the 10th of HENRY IV. (1408-9), leaving his cousins,

The male line of Sir John Aylesbury failed with his son, Sir Thomas, who left two daus., co-heiresses, viz.,

- i. Isabel, wife of Sir Thomas Chaworth, Knt.
- ii. Eleanor, m. to Humphrey Stafford, of Grafton.

But from John Knyvett descended the KNYVETTS, of Buckenham, Norfolk (See CLIFTON, Barons), the Knyvetts, of Charlton, Wilts, the Knyvetts, of Eacrick, co. York (See KNYVETT, Baron), the Knyvetts, of Plumstead, Norfolk (ancestors of Lord Berners), &c.

BASSET—BARONS BASSET, OF DRAYTON.

By Writ of Summons, dated 14 December, 1264.

Lineage.

"Immediately after the Norman conquest," says Collins, arose into power and importance, more especially in the midland counties, the great baronial family of Basset" (descended from Thurstan the Norman), which gave a chief justice to England, in the reign of HENRY I., in the person of Ralph Basset, from whom sprang the Lords Basset of Drayton, the Lords Basset of Heddington, &c. About the middle of the 12th century, the Bassets of Cornwall obtained the estates of Tehidy, by marriage with the heiress of the great house of De Dunstanville, and at the commencement of the 16th, the two noble seats of Umberleigh and Heanton Court came into the possession of a branch of the Bassets, elder than the Cornwall branch, by the marriage of Sir John Basset with Joan Beaumont, an heiress, descended from Sir William Beaumont and Isabel, his wife, dau. and co-heir of Sir John Willington, of Umberleigh.

In the 42nd year of King HENRY III. (1257-8),

RALPH BASSET, Lord of Drayton, co. Stafford, great-grandson of Richard Basset, justice of England, and his wife, Maud Ridel, had summons (amongst other great men) to attend the king at Chester, well furnished with horse and arms, to oppose the incursions of the Welsh. But in the 48th of the same monarch, having joined Simon Montford, Earl of Leicester, and the other rebellious barons, he was appointed the next year, after the defeat of the king's arms at Lewes, and capture of the king, governor for those lords of the castles of Salop and Bruges. He fell, however, before the close of the same year, at the battle of Evesham. It is said that when the Earl of Leicester perceived the great force and order of the royal army, calculating upon defeat, he conjured Ralph Basset and Hugh Dispenser to retire, and reserve themselves for better times; but they bravely answered, "that if he perished, they would not desire to live." Lord Basset m. Margaret, dau. of Roger de Someri, Baron of Dudley, and widow of Urian St. Pierre, and had issue,

1. RALPH, his successor.

1. Maud, m. to John, Lord Gray de Wilton.

Notwithstanding the death of Lord Basset, thus in arms against the king, his widow was so favoured by the monarch as to have the chief of his estates settled upon her for life, but soon afterwards, taking the veil, she passed her title in those lands to her son,

RALPH BASSET, 2nd baron, who had summons to parliament, 23 June, 1295, as "Radulphus Basset de Drayton." This nobleman was engaged in the French and Scottish wars of King EDWARD I. In the latter, as one of the retinue of Edmund, Earl of Lancaster, the king's brother. His lordship m. Joan,* dau. of John Grey, Justice of Chester, and had issue,

1. RALPH, his successor.

1. Margaret, m. Edmund, Baron of Stafford, the great-grandson of which marriage, THOMAS, Earl of Stafford, was one of the heirs to Ralph, last Lord Basset of Drayton.

11. Maud, m. William de Heriz, and was mother of JOAN, who m. Jordan le Brett, and had a son or grandson, Sir John Brett, whose dau. Catherine, m. Sir John Caltoft, and their dau. Alice, wife of Sir William Chaworth, Knt., was one of the heirs to Ralph, last Lord Basset of Drayton. The son and heir of this Alice Chaworth was Sir Thomas Chaworth, who m. 1st, Nichola, dau. of Sir Reginald Braybroke, by whom he had a dau. Elizabeth, wife of John, 6th Lord Scrope, of Masham; and 2ndly, Isabel, dau. and co-heir of Sir Thomas Aylesbury, by whom he had two sons, Sir William and George (see p. 111).

His lordship d. in 1299, and was s. by his son,

RALPH BASSET, 3rd Lord Basset of Drayton, summoned to parliament from 29 December, 1299, to 25 February, 1342. This nobleman was one of the eminent persons made knights of the Bath with Prince Edward, in the 34th of EDWARD I., and who attended the king that year into Scotland, but returning thence without leave, orders were issued to the sheriffs of Stafford, Nottingham, and Derbyshire to seize his lands: he received, however, his pardon in the following year. His lordship was for several years afterwards in constant service in Scotland. In the 15th EDWARD II. he was joined in commission with John de Someri, to seize the castle of Kenilworth for the king, by reason of the forfeiture of Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, and in the same year was constituted steward of the Duchy of Aquitaine. During his government there, Lord Basset was embroiled in a contest with the king of France, but being supported by his royal master, he bade defiance to the wrath of the French monarch. He did not remain long, however, in that government, but returning to England in the year but one afterwards, he was made constable of Dover Castle, and warden of the Cinque Ports. In the 1st and 7th of EDWARD III. he was again in the Scottish wars, and in the 8th of the same reign he was appointed justice of North Wales. His lordship m. Joane, dau. of Thomas Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, and had issue,

RALPH, who m. Alice, dau. of Nicholas, Lord Audley, and dying before his father, anno 1323, left issue, RALPH, successor to his grandfather, and a dau. Isabel, whose illegitimacy has been almost positively established. She m. Sir Thomas Shirley, Knt., M.P. for the county of Warwick, and was ancestor of the SHIRLEYS, EARLS FERRERS.

Ralph, Lord Basset, of Drayton, d. 25 February, 1343, and was s. by his grandson,

RALPH BASSET, 4th Lord Basset of Drayton, summoned to parliament from 25 December, 1357, to 6th December, 1389. This nobleman was distinguished in arms during the reigns of EDWARD III. and RICHARD II., and was honoured with the Garter, in consequence of which, his achievement is still to be seen in one of the stalls of the chapel at Windsor. His lordship m. Joane, sister of John, Duke of Brittany, but had no issue. He d. 10 May, 1390, directing by his will, dated 16 January, 1390 (13th RICHARD II.), that his body should be buried at Lichfield, near the altar of St. Nicholas, and devising his estates to Sir Hugh Shirley, his nephew, son of his sister Isabel (see above), upon condition that he should assume the surname and arms of Basset, in failure of which proviso, those estates were then to pass to his cousin, Edmund, Lord Stafford. But the matter is differently represented by other authorities; it is certain, however, that great disputes arose after the decease of Lord Basset, between Humphrey, Earl of Stafford, and Sir Thomas Chaworth, Knt., regarding the lordship of Colston-Basset, co Nottingham, but it does not appear that the Shirleys were engaged in it, nor did they take the name of Basset. Amongst other directions, Lord Basset orders in his will that the person, whosoever it should be, that should first adopt his surname and arms, should have the use of his great velvet bed during his life; and to the same person he also bequeathed four silver basons, with two ewers, whereon his arms were graven, six silver dishes, two silver pots, and four chargers, all marked with his arms; as also a cup, with cover gilt, having one ring on the side thereof. His lordship constituted Walter Skelaw, bishop of Durham, Richard Scrope, bishop of Chester, and Sir Richard Scrope Knt., his executors. The barony of Basset has remained in ABERANCE since the decease of this nobleman, which can only be accounted for by the presumption that Isabel, Lady Shirley, was not the legitimate dau. of his lordship's father, and the supposition becomes almost a certainty by the inquisitions taken after the baron's decease; according to the first, Thomas, Earl of Stafford, was found to be his cousin and next heir; and by the second, the same Thomas, Earl of Stafford, and Alice, the wife of Sir John Chaworth, were found his cousins and next heirs, without any mention whatever of his next relative, were she legitimate, Isabel, Lady Shirley. Glover, the Herald, expressly calls her soror naturalis of the 1st baron, and debruises by a baton her coat of arms. (See COUNTHORPE'S Historic Peerage.) It is but right, however, to add that Sir Egerton Brydges, in his edition of Collins, argues strongly in favour of a contrary view of the case, and considers Isabel's legitimacy established.

* Dugdale, under Basset of Drayton, makes this lady dau. of John, the Justice of Chester, but under Grey, of Wilton, he calls her the dau. of Reginald Grey, the son of John.

BASSET—BARONS BASSET OF SAPCOTE.

By Writ of Summons, dated 14 December, 1264.

Lineage.

This branch of the BASSETS was founded by

WILLIAM BASSET, one of the itinerant justices for Yorkshire, in the 21st HENRY II., who settled at Sapcote in Leicestershire, and was younger brother of Ralph Basset, Lord of Drayton: as deputy to whom he executed the office of sheriff of Warwick and Leicestershire, in the 9th of the same monarch's reign. In the 10th he was sheriff of Leicestershire himself: from the 11th to half of the 16th years, inclusive, sheriff of both shires, and from the 23rd to the 30th, sheriff of Lincolnshire. To this William Basset s. his son,

SIMON BASSET, who m. in the 6th RICHARD I. one of the daus. and co-heiresses of William Avenel, of Haddon, co. Derby, and was s. by his son,

RALPH BASSET, of Sapcote. This feudal lord held the sheriffalty of Lincolnshire from the 25th to the 29th of HENRY III., inclusive, and in four years after performed a pilgrimage to St. James in Galicia. In the 42nd of the same monarch he received command to attend the king at Chester, to repel the incursions of the Welsh, and he was constituted in that year governor of Northampton Castle. But after the battle of Lewes, being summoned to the parliament which the barons held in the king's name (49th HENRY III.), he subsequently sided with Simon Montfort, Earl of Leicester, and fell with that ambitious noble at the battle of Evesham, on 4 August, 1265. His lordship m. Milisent, one of the daus. and co-heiresses of Robert de Chaucombe, and was s. by his son,

RALPH BASSET, Lord of Sapcote, who had summons to parliament, 24 December, 1264: he m. Elizabeth, dau. of Roger Colvil, and one of the co-heirs of Robert, Lord Colvil, and left a son and successor,

SIMON BASSET, 2nd baron, who had summons in the 22nd of EDWARD I. to attend the king, wheresoever he should be, to advise touching the important affairs of the realm, and was shortly afterwards ordered to come to Portsmouth, on 1 September, well equipped with horse and arms, and to accompany the king into Gascony. His lordship was father of Ralph Basset of Sapcote, whose son, Simon Basset, was father of (COUNTHORPE'S Historic Peerage)

RALPH BASSET, 3rd Baron Basset, of Sapcote, who had summons to parliament from 8 January, 1371, to 6 October, 1372. His lordship was one of the gallant soldiers of the martial reign of EDWARD III., and shared in the glories of

Cressy. We find him, however, subsequently experiencing some of the vicissitudes of a soldier's fortune; for being again in France in the 46th of EDWARD III., under the command of the Duke of Lancaster, and sustaining great losses at Douchy and Rabymont, he was reproved by the king upon his return, which preceded that of the duke. His lordship m. 1st, Sybil, dau. of Sir Giles Astley, and had issue

ALICE, who m. SIR ROBERT MOTON, Knt., and carried into that family the estates of Sapcote and Castle Bytham (the latter came to the Bassets through the Colvilles). The grandson and heir of this marriage, SIR ROBERT MOTON, d. 34th HENRY VI., leaving, by Margery, his 1st wife, a son and heir, REGINALD MOTON, of Peckleton, father of two daus., his co-heirs, viz.,

I. ANNE MOTON, who m. William Grimsby, and had an only dau. and heir ANNE, who m. RICHARD VINCENT, of Masingham, co. Lincoln, and had issue. In the heir general of this marriage vests a co-heirship to the Barony of Basset.

II. ELIZABETH MOTON, who m. Ralph de la Pole, Esq., of Radborne, co. Derby, high sheriff, 1477: their grandson and heir,

GERMAN DE LA POLE, Esq., of Radborne, m. Anne, dau. of Sir Robert Plompton, Knt., and d. 1552, having had, with other issue,

1 FRANCIS, of Dale Abbey, in whose heir general vests a co-heirship to the BARONY OF BASSET, OF SAPCOTE; and

2 German, of Lees, ancestor of the family of CHANDOS POLE, OF RADBORNE, co. Derby.

Lord Basset, of Sapcote, m. 2ndly, Alice, dau. of John Derby, and had another dau.,

ELIZABETH, who m. Richard, Lord Grey, of Codnor, and had two sons, whose issue became extinct, and three daus., viz.,

I. ELIZABETH, m. Sir John Zouche, of Codnor: the heir general of which marriage is co-heir of the Barony of Basset, of Sapcote.

II. ELEANOR, m. THOMAS NEWPORT, ancestor of THE NEWPORTS, EARLS OF BRADFORD, whose heir general is the present EARL OF BRADFORD.

III. LUCY, m. SIR ROWLAND LENTHALL, and had two daus., eventual co-heirs of their mother, viz.,

KATHERINE, m. to William, Lord Zouche, of Harringworth: the heiress general of this marriage is the BARONESS DE LA ZOUCHE, who is one of the CO-HEIRS of the Barony of BASSET OF SAPCOTE.

ELIZABETH, m. Sir Thomas Cornwell, Baron of Burford

His lordship d. in 1378, and the BARONY OF BASSET OF SAPCOTE fell into ABERNANCE between his two daus., and so continues amongst their descendants.

BASSET — BARON DE DUNSTANVILLE, OF TEHIDY, AND BARON BASSET, OF STRATTON.

By Letters Patent, dated 17 June, 1796, and 30 October, 1797.

Lineage.

The Bassets of Tehidy derive descent in the direct male line from THURSTAN the Norman.

SIR JOHN BASSET, of White Chaple, acquired UMBERLEIGH and HEANTON, two noble seats in Devonshire, by his marriage with Joan Beaumont, an heiress (descended from Sir William Beaumont, of Shirwell, and Isabel, his wife, dau. and co-heir of Sir John de Willington, of UMBERLEIGH), and had issue a son and heir,

SIR JOHN BASSET, of UMBERLEIGH, and White Chaple, who m. 1st, Elizabeth, dau. of John Denys, by whom he had an only child, Anne, m. to James Courtenay, and 2ndly, Honora, dau. of Sir Thomas Granville, by whom (who m. 2ndly, Arthur Plantagenet, Viscount Lisle) he left at his decease, in 1523, two sons, viz.,

I. JOHN, of UMBERLEIGH, m. Frances, dau. and co-heir of Arthur Plantagenet, Viscount Lisle, and was ancestor of THE BASSETS OF UMBERLEIGH and HEANTON COURT, extinct in the male line, but represented, through an heiress, by ARTHUR DAVIS-BASSET, Esq., of UMBERLEIGH and Watermouth, co. Devon.

BAVENT—BARONS BAVENT.

By Writ of Summons, dated 8 January, 1313.

Lineage.

In the 25th of EDWARD I.,

ROGER BAVENT was in the expedition made then into Gascony, and in the 30th of the same monarch he obtained a charter for a weekly market at Marom, co. Lincoln. From the 6th to the 15th EDWARD II., and from the 6th to the 9th EDWARD III., he was summoned to parliament as BARON BAVENT.

It does not appear from the existing enrolments, that there was not any subsequent summons to parliament to a member of the Bavent family, although it appears that Roger, Lord Bavent, left a son to succeed him. Vincent, the herald, in his pedigree of the Bavents, enters John Bavent, living 22 EDWARD III., as the grandson of Roger, Lord Bavent, and states that he d. s. p., leaving a sister and heiress, Eleanor, m. William de Braose (COURTHOPE'S Historic Peerage), and had a son, Peter de Braose, whose descendant heir-general Beatrice, m. Hugh Shirley, Esq., of Easington, co. Warwick. Certain it is that in the 13th EDWARD III., Thomas de Bavent and Alice, his wife, settled Easton Bavent with Chediston, in Suffolk, on himself for life, remainder to William, his son, and Catherine, his wife, remainder to Felicia, his dau., sister of William, remainder to John, son of Thomas Ubbeston, remainder to Richard, son of John, son of Baldwin Bavent. In the 20th EDWARD III., William Bavent and Robert Paville were Lords of Easton Bavent.

BEAUCHAMP—EARLS OF WARWICK.

Created by WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR or WILLIAM RUFUS, and conveyed to the family of Beauchamp by Isabel de Mauduit, wife of William de Beauchamp, feudal Baron of Elmley.

Lineage.

Amongst the most eminent Norman families in the train of the CONQUEROR, was that of BEAUCHAMP, and amongst those that shared most liberally in the spoils of the conquest.

HUGH DE BEAUCHAMP, the companion in arms of the victorious Norman, who obtained grants to a very great extent from his triumphant chief, as he appears at the general survey, to be possessed of large estates in Hertford, Buckingham, and Bedfordshires, was the founder of this illustrious house in England. This Hugh had issue,

Simon, who d. s. p.

Payne, ancestor of the Beauchamps of Bedford, that barony having been conferred upon him by WILLIAM RUFUS.

WALTER, of whom presently, but some doubts have been thrown upon the question of his having been son of Hugh, Sir H. Nicolas stating him to have been "supposed of the same family."

Milo, of Eaton, co. Bedford.

Adeline, m. to Walter Le Espec, Lord of Kirkham and Helmesley, co. of York.

The 3rd son,

WALTER DE BEAUCHAMP, of Elmley Castle, co. Gloucester, having m. Emeline, dau. and heiress of Urso de Arbitot, constable of the castle of Worcester, and hereditary sheriff of Worcestershire (who was brother of Robert le Despenser, steward to the CONQUEROR), was invested with that sheriffalty by King HENRY I., and obtained a grant from the same monarch (to whom he was steward) of all the lands belonging to Roger de Worcester, with a confirmation of certain lands given to him by Adeline, widow of his father-in-law, the said Urso. Walter de Beauchamp was s., as well in his estates as in the royal stewardship, by his son,

WILLIAM DE BEAUCHAMP, who, for his zeal in the cause of the Empress Maud, was dispossessed of the castle of Worcester by King STEPHEN, to which, and all his other honours and estates, however, he was restored by King HENRY II.; and in that monarch's reign, besides the sheriffalty of Worcestershire, which he enjoyed by inheritance, he was sheriff of Warwickshire (2nd HENRY II.), sheriff of Gloucestershire (from 3rd to the 9th HENRY II. inclusive), and sheriff of Herefordshire (from the 8th to the 16th HENRY II., 1167-70 inclusive). Upon the levy of the assessment towards the marriage portion of one of King HENRY's daus., this powerful feudal lord certified his knight's fees to amount to fifteen. He m. Maud, dau. of William Lord Broose, of Gower, and was s., at his decease, by his son,

WILLIAM DE BEAUCHAMP, who m. Joane, dau. of Sir Thomas

Walerie; and dying before the 13th (1211-12) of King John's reign, was s. by his son (a minor, whose wardship and marriage Roger de Mortimer and Isabel, his wife, obtained for 3,000 marks).

WALTER DE BEAUCHAMP. This feudal lord was appointed governor of Hanley Castle, co. Worcester, in the 17th King John, and entrusted with the custody of the same shire in that turbulent year. Walter de Beauchamp m. Bertha, dau. of William Lord Broose, by whom he had two sons, Walcheline and James. Of this nobleman we find further, that, being one of the barons-marchers, he gave security to the king for his faithful services (with the other lords-marchers), until peace should be fully settled in the realm; and for the better performance thereof, gave up James, his younger son, as a hostage. He d. in 1235, and was s. by his elder son,

WALCHELINE DE BEAUCHAMP, omitted in Sir H. Nicholas' account of the family, m. Joane, dau. of Roger, Lord Mortimer, and dying in the same year as his father, was s. by an only son,

WILLIAM DE BEAUCHAMP, feudal Lord of Elmley. This nobleman attended King HENRY III., in the 37th year of his reign (1252-3), into Gascoigne, and in two years afterwards marched under the banner of Robert de Clare, Earl of Gloucester, against the Scots. In the 41st of the same reign he had summons (with other illustrious persons) to meet the king at Chester on the feast day of St. Peter de Vincula, well fitted with horse and arms to oppose the incursions of Llewelyn, Prince of Wales. Lord Beauchamp m. Isabel, dau. of William Mauduit, of Hanslope, co. Bucks, heritable chamberlain of the exchequer, and sister and heiress of WILLIAM MAUDUIT, EARL OF WARWICK (who inherited that dignity from his cousin, Margery de Newburgh, Countess of Warwick, in the year 1263). His lordship made his will in 1268, the year in which he died. Besides the dau. mentioned above, Lord Beauchamp left four sons, viz.,

WILLIAM, of whom presently.
John, of Holt, co. Worcester.
Walter, of Powyke and Alcester.
Thomas, d. s. p.

The eldest son,

WILLIAM DE BEAUCHAMP, inherited not only the feudal barony of Elmley from his father, but had previously derived from his mother the EARLDOM OF WARWICK (originally possessed by the Newburghs), and the barony of Hanslope (which had belonged to the Mauduits). This eminent nobleman was a distinguished captain in the Welsh and Scottish wars of King EDWARD I. "In the 23rd year of which reign (1294-5), being in Wales with the king," as Dugdale relates, "he performed a notable exploit; namely, hearing that a great body of the Welsh were got together in a plain, betwixt two woods, and to secure themselves, had fastened their pikes to the ground, sloping towards their assailants, he marched thither with a choice company of cross-bowmen and archers, and in the night time encompassing them about, put betwixt every two horsemen, one cross-bowman, which cross-bowman killing many of them that held the pikes, the horse charged in suddenly, and made a very great slaughter. This was done near Montgomery." His lordship m. Maud, widow of Girard de Furnival, and one of the four daus. and co-heiresses of Richard Fitz-John, son of John Fitz-Geffery, chief justice of Ireland, by whom he had surviving issue,

GUY, his successor.
Isabel, m. to Peter Chaworth.
Maud, m. to — Ritheo.
Margaret, m. to John Sudley.
Anne, { nuns at Shoulham, co. Norfolk, a monastery founded
Amy, { by his lordship's maternal great grandfather.

William de Beauchamp, 1st Earl of Warwick of that family, d. in 1298, having previous to his mother's death used the style and title of Earl of Warwick, with what legality appears very doubtful, and was s. by his eldest son,

GUY DE BEAUCHAMP, 2nd earl, so called in memory of his celebrated predecessor, the Saxon, GUY, EARL OF WARWICK. This nobleman acquired high military renown in the martial reign of EDWARD I., distinguishing himself at the battle of Falkirk, for which he was rewarded with extensive grants of lands in Scotland, at the siege of Crierlaverock, and upon different occasions besides beyond the sea. In the reign of EDWARD II. he likewise played a very prominent part. In 1310 his lordship was in the commission appointed by parliament to draw up regulations for "the well governing of the kingdom and of the king's household," in consequence of the corrupt influence exercised at that period by Piers Gaveston, in the affairs of the realm, through the unbounded partiality of the king: and in two years afterwards, when that unhappy favorite fell into the hands of his enemies upon the surrender of Scarborough Castle, his lordship violently seized upon his person, and after a summary trial, caused him to be beheaded at Blacklow Hill, near Warwick. The earl's hostility to Gaveston is said to have been much increased by learning that the favourite had nicknamed him "the Black Dog of Ardenne." For this unwarrantable proceeding his lordship, and all others concerned therein, received within two years the royal pardon, but he is supposed to have eventually perished by poison, administered in revenge by the partizans of Gaveston. The earl m. Alice, relict of Thomas de Laybourne, dau. (by Lady Alice de Bohun) of Ralph de Toni, of Flamsted, co. Herts, and sister and heiress of Robert de Toni, by whom he had issue,

THOMAS, his successor, whose sponsors were, Thomas Plantagenet, Earl of Lancaster, and Henry, his brother, and Thomas de Warrington, prior of Kenilworth.

John, a very eminent person in the reign of EDWARD III., being captain of Calais, admiral of the fleet, STANDARD BEARER at CRESEY, and one of the original knights of the Garter. He was summoned to parliament as a BARON, but dying s. p. the dignity expired.

Maud, m. to Geoffrey, Lord Say.

Emma, m. to Rowland Odingwells.

Isabel, m. to John Clinton.

Elizabeth, m. to Sir Thomas Astley, Knt.

Lucia, m. to Robert or Roger de Napton.

This great Earl of Warwick was, like most of the nobles of his time, a munificent benefactor to the church, having bestowed lands upon several religious houses, and founded a chantry of priests at his manor of Elmley. His will bears date, "at WARWICK CASTLE," on Munday next after the feast of St. James the Apostle, an. 1315," and by it he bequeaths to Alice his wife a proportion of his plate, with a crystal cup, and half his bedding; as also, all the vestments and books belonging to his chapel; the other moiety of his beds, rings, and jewels, he gives to his dau. To his son Thomas, his best coat of mail, helmet, and suit of harness; to his son John, his second suit of mail, &c., appointing that all the rest of his armour, bows, and other warlike provisions, should remain in Warwick Castle for his heir. Alice, widow of the earl, had very extensive estates assigned her in dowry, in the November following the death of her husband, and in the next year she paid a fine of 500 marks, for license to marry William La Zouche, of Ashby, co. Leicester, to whom she was accordingly married. The earl d. at Warwick Castle, on 12 August, 1315, and was s. by his eldest son, then but two years of age.

THOMAS DE BEAUCHAMP, 3rd earl, regarding whom we find the king (Edward II.) in two years subsequently soliciting a dispensation from the pope, to enable him to marry his cousin Catherine, dau. of Roger de Mortimer, Lord of Wigmore, under whose guardianship the young earl had been placed; an alliance eventually formed, when his lordship had completed his fifteenth year. In two years, afterwards, the earl, by special licence from the crown, was allowed to do homage, and to assume his hereditary offices of sheriff of Worcestershire, and chamberlain of the exchequer. This nobleman sustained in the brilliant reign of EDWARD III. the high military renown of his illustrious progenitor, and became distinguished in arms almost from his boyhood. So early as the third year of that monarch, he commanded the left wing of the king's army at Wyntonfosse, where Edward proposed to give the French battle, and from that period was the constant companion of the king, and his gallant son, in all their splendid campaigns. At Cresey, he had a principal command in the van of the English army, under the Prince of Wales, and at Poitiers, where Dugdale says he fought so long and so stoutly, that his hand was galled with the exercise of his sword and pole-axe; he personally took William de Melleun, archbishop of Sens, prisoner, for whose ransom he obtained 3,000 marks. After these heroic achievements in France, the earl arrayed himself under the banner of the cross, and reaped fresh laurels on the plains of Palestine, whence upon his return he brought home the son of the King of Lithuania, whom he had christened at London by the name of Thomas, answering for the new convert himself at the baptismal font; for his lordship was not more distinguished by his valour than his piety, as his numerous and liberal donations to the church while living, and bequests at his decease, testify. This nobleman rebuilt the walls of Warwick Castle, which had been demolished in the time of the Mauduits; adding strong gates, with fortified gateways, and embattled towers; he likewise founded the choir of the collegiate church of St. Mary, built a

* Warwick Castle was almost rebuilt by Thomas, 4th Earl of Warwick, and Richard, his heir and successor, in the reigns of EDWARD III. and RICHARD II. The much admired polygon, Guy's Tower, which is thirty-eight feet in diameter and one hundred and six feet in height was erected it is said by the latter.

The earl was one of the original knights of the Garter. His lordship d. 13 November, 1369, of the plague at Calais, where he was then employed in his military capacity, and had just achieved a victory over the French; he was s. by his eldest son,

THOMAS, 4th earl, K.G., who was appointed by parliament governor of the young king, RICHARD II., in the third year of that monarch's reign, but did not long enjoy the office, for we find him in arms with Thomas, Duke of Gloucester (the king's uncle), long before the majority of Richard, constraining the assembling of parliament, for which proceeding, however, in several years afterwards, he was seized at a feast given to him by the king—tried and condemned to death—a sentence commuted by the king, at the instance of the Earl of Salisbury, to banishment to the Isle of Man, while his castle and manors of Warwick, with his other estates, were granted to Thomas Holland, earl of Kent, to whom the custody of his son and heir, Richard Beauchamp, was also confided. From the Isle of Man, the earl was brought back to the Tower of London, and imprisoned there during the remainder of King RICHARD's reign; but upon the accession of HENRY IV. he was released, and re-instated in all his honours and possessions. His lordship m. Margaret, dau. of William, Lord Ferrara, of Groby, and had issue,

The earl d. in 1401, and was s. by his son.

RICHARD DE BEAUCHAMP, 5th earl, b. 28 January, 1381. This nobleman was made a knight of the Bath at the coronation of King HENRY IV., and at the coronation of the Queen in the following year, attained high reputation for the gallantry he had displayed in the lists. In the 4th year of the same monarch (1402-3), he was pre-eminently distinguished against Owen Glendower, whose banner he captured, and put the rebel himself to flight; and about the same time he won fresh laurels in the memorable battle of Shrewsbury, against the Percys, after which, he was made a knight of the most noble order of the Garter. Of his lordship's pilgrimage to the Holy Land, Dugdale gives the following account:—"In the 9th HENRY IV., obtaining license to visit the Holy Land, he fitted himself with all necessaries for that journey, and passed the sea: in which voyage, visiting his cousin, the DUKE OF BARR, he was nobly received and entertained by him for eight days, who thence accompanied him to Paris; where being arrived, the king of France then wearing the crown, in reverence of that holy feast, made him to sit at his table, and at his departure, sent an herald to conduct him safely through that realm. Out of which, entering Lombardy, he was met by another herald from Sir Pandulph Malacet, with a challenge to perform certain feats of arms with him at Verona, upon a day assigned, for the order of the Garter; and in the presence of Sir Gallot of Mantua; whereunto he gave his assent. And as soon as he had performed his pilgrimage at Rome, returned to Verona, where he and his challenger were first to just, next to fight with axes, afterwards with arming swords, and lastly with sharp daggers. At the day and place assigned for which exercises, came great resort of people, Sir Pandulph entering the lists with nine spears borne before him: but the act of spears being ended, they fell to it with axes; in which encounter Sir Pandulph received a sore wound on the shoulder, and had been utterly slain, but that Sir Gallot cried peace.

"When he came to Jerusalem, he had much respect shewed him by the patriarch's deputy, and having performed his offerings at the sepulchre of our Saviour, he set up his arms on the north side of the temple. While at Jerusalem, a noble person, called Baltredam (the Soldan's lieutenant), hearing that he was descended from the famous Sir Guy of Warwick, whose story they had in books of their own language, invited him to his palace, and royally feasting him, 'presented him with three precious stones of great value,' besides divers cloaths of silk and gold given to his servants. Where this Baltredam told him privately, that he faithfully believed as he did, though he durst not discover himself; and rehearsed the articles of the creed. But on the morrow he feasted Sir Baltredam's servants, and gave them scarlet, with other English cloth, which being shewed to Sir Baltredam, he returned again to him, and said, he would wear his livery, and be marshal of his hall. Whereupon he gave Sir Baltredam a gown of black peak, furred; and had much discourse with him, for he was skilful in sundry languages." At the coronation of King HENRY V., in whose service, when Prince of Wales, his lordship had been engaged, the earl was constituted HIGH STEWARD OF ENGLAND for that solemnity, and in the next year, we find him actively engaged for the king against the Lollards. In the 3rd of HENRY V (1415-16), he was at Calais, and there his chivalric disposition, led him into an encounter with three French knights, the result of which Dugdale thus relates:—"which letters (challenges sent by the earl under fictitious names) were sent to the king's court at France, where three French knights received them, and promised their fellows to meet at a day and place assigned: whereof the first was a knight called Sir Gerard Herbaumes, who called himself Le Chevalier Rouge; the second, a famous knight, named Sir Hugh Launey, calling himself Le Chevalier Blanc; and the third a knight named Sir Collard Fines. Twelfth-day, in Christmas, being appointed for the time that they should meet, in a land called the Parkhedge of Gynes. On which day the earl came into the field with his face covered, a plume of ostrich feathers upon his helm, and his horse trapped with the Lord of Toney's arms (one of his ancestors), viz. argent a manch gules; where, first encountering with the Chevalier Rouge, at the third course he unhorsed him, and so returned with closed vizor, unknown to his pavilion, whence he sent to that knight a good courser. The next day he came into the field with his vizor closed, a chaplet on his helm, and a plume of ostrich feathers aloft, his horse trapped with the arms of Hanslap, viz. silver two bars gules, where he met with the Blanc knight, with whom he encountered, smote off his vizor thrice, broke his besagurs and other harneys, and returned victoriously to his pavilion, with all his own habiliments safe, and as yet not known to any; from whence he sent the Blanc knight a good courser. But the morrow after, viz., the last day of the jousts, he came with his face open, and his helmet as the day before, save that the chaplet was rich with pearls and precious stones; and in his coat of arms, of Guy and Beauchamp quarterly; having the arms of Toney and Hanslap on his trappers; and said, 'That as he had, in his own person, performed the service the two days before, so with God's grace he would the third.' Whereupon, encountering with Sir Collard Fines, at every stroke he bore him backward to his horse; in-somuch, as the Frenchman saying, 'that he himself was bound to his saddle;' he alighted and presently got up again, but all being ended, he returned to his pavilion, sent to Sir Collard Fines a fair courser, feasted all the people, gave to those three knights great rewards, and so rode to Calais with great honor." About this time the earl attended the deputation of bishops and other learned persons from England to the COUNCIL OF CONSTANCE, and during his stay there slew a great duke in jousting. In the next year, he was with King HENRY at the siege of Caen, and upon the surrender of that place was appointed governor of its castle. His lordship continued actively engaged in military and diplomatic services during the remainder of the reign of King HENRY V., by whose will he was appointed governor to his infant son and successor, HENRY VI., which charge having fulfilled with great wisdom and fidelity, his lordship was appointed, upon the death of John Plantagenet, Duke of Bedford, Regent of France, LIEUTENANT-GENERAL of the whole REALM OF FRANCE and DUCHY OF NORMANDY. The earl, who had been created EARL OF ALBEMARLE, for life, in 1417, d. in the castle of Roan, in his French government, on 30 April, 1439—having by his will ordered his body to be brought over to England, where it was afterwards deposited, under a stately monument,* appointed by the deceased lord to be erected in the collegiate church of St. Mary, at Warwick. His lordship m. 1st, Elizabeth, dau. and heiress of Thomas, Lord Berkeley, Viscount Lisle, by whom he had three daus., viz.,

Margaret, m. to John Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury (his lordship's 2nd wife, by whom he had one son, John Talbot, Lord Viscount Lisle, of whom the Dudleys, Earls of Warwick, derived).

Allianor, m. 1st, to Thomas, Lord de Ros, from whom the Dukes of Rutland derive; and 2ndly, to Edmund, Duke of Somerset.

Elizabeth, m. to George Nevil, Lord Latimer.

The earl m. 2ndly, Isabel, dau. and eventually heiress of Thomas le Despencer, Earl of Gloucester, and widow of his cousin, Richard Beauchamp, Earl of Worcester (for which marriage he obtained a papal dispensation), and had a son and dau.,—namely,

HENRY, his successor, whose sponsors were Cardinal Beaufort, Humphrey, Earl of Stafford, and Joane, Lady Bergavenny.

Anne, who m. Sir Richard Nevil, son and heir of Richard, Earl of Salisbury, and grandson of Ralph Nevil, 1st Earl of Westmoreland.

The Earl of Warwick was s. by his son,

HENRY DE BEAUCHAMP, 6th earl, K.G. This nobleman having, before he had completed his nineteenth year, tendered his services for the defence of the Duchy of Aquitaine, was created by charter dated 2 April, 1444, PREMIER EARL OF ENGLAND, and his lordship obtained, at the same time permission for himself and his heirs male to wear a golden coronet about his head, in the presence of the king and elsewhere. In three days after he was advanced to the dignity of DUKE OF WARWICK, with precedence immediately after the Duke of Norfolk, and before the Duke of Buckingham: which extraordinary mark of royal favour so displeased the latter nobleman, that an act of parliament was subsequently passed to appease his jealousy, declaring that from 2 December, then next ensuing, the two dukes should take place of each other alternately year about, but with precedence of the first year to the Duke of Warwick. After which, his Grace of Warwick had a grant in reversion, upon the death of the Duke of Gloucester, of the Isles of Guernsey, Jersey, Serke, Erme, and Alderney, for the annual rent of a rose; also the hundred and manor of Bristol, for £60 a-year, with all the royal castles and manors in the Forest of Dene, for £100 per annum: and he was shortly before his death crowned KING OF THE ISLE OF WIGHT, by the hand of HENRY VI. himself. His grace m. in the life-time of his father, when but ten years old, and then called Lord Despencer, Cicely, dau. of Richard Nevil, Earl of Salisbury, whose portion was 4,700 marks—by whom he left an only dau. and heiress,

ANNE.

His grace d. in the twenty-second year of his age, on 11 June, 1445, when the dukedom (and the male line of this branch of the Beauchamps) EXPIRED, but his other honours devolved upon his dau.,

ANNE DE BEAUCHAMP, Countess of Warwick, then but two years old, who was committed to the guardianship, 1st, of Queen MARGARET, and afterwards of William de la Pole, Duke of Suffolk. Her ladyship dying however in a few years afterwards, on 3 January, 1449, the honours of the illustrious house of Beauchamp reverted to the young countess's aunt,

ANNE, wife of Richard Nevil, Earl of Salisbury, who then became Countess of Warwick, and her husband, the celebrated "King-Maker," was subsequently created Earl of Warwick.—(See NEVIL, EARL OF SALISBURY AND WARWICK).

BEAUCHAMP—BARONS ST. AMAND.

By Writ of Summons, dated 25 March, 1313.

Lineage.

WALTER DE BEAUCHAMP, younger son of John, Lord Beauchamp, of Powyke, a military person of celebrity in the reigns of HENRY IV. and HENRY V., m. Elizabeth, dau., and co-heiress of Sir John Roche, Knt. of Broham, and had issue,

WILLIAM, of whom presently.

Richard, bishop of Salisbury, supposed to have been the first chancellor of the order of the Garter.

Elizabeth m. to Sir Richard Dudley, and had a son and a dau., the latter of whom, Joane Dudley, became heiress to her brother, and m. Sir John Bayntun, Knt., from which marriage, through a long line of distinguished ancestors, descended Edward Bayntun Roit, Esq., of Spyte Park, co. Wilts, who was created a baronet in 1762, an honour now EXTINGUISHED (see p. 588).

The elder son,

WILLIAM DE BEAUCHAMP, m. Elizabeth (afterwards wife of Roger Touchet), eldest dau. and co-heiress of Gerard de Braybrooke, (grandson, and eventually heir of Almaric St. Amand, 3rd and last Baron St. Amand of that family,) and was summoned to parliament in right of his wife, "as William de Beauchamp, Baron of St. Amand," from 2 January, 1449, (the barony had been forty-six years previously in ABEYANCE,) to 26 May, 1455. His lordship was soon afterwards, being then sewer to the king, constituted chamberlain of North Wales. He made his will 18 March, 1457, and d. the following day, being succeeded by his only son,

RICHARD DE BEAUCHAMP, 2nd Baron St. Amand, of the family of Beauchamp, attainted in the 1st of RICHARD III., (1483-4) but fully restored upon the accession of HENRY VII. This nobleman, b. four years before his father's death, was in the expedition made in the 8th of HENRY VII. (1492-3), in aid of Maximilian the Emperor against the French. He d. in 1508, and by his testament dated 12 June, in that year, he desires to be interred in the Black Friars' Church, near Ludgate, within the city of London, and for lack of issue by Dame Anne his wife, settles divers lordships in the co. Wilts, Bedford, Berks, Huntingdon, and Hereford, upon his natural son by Mary Wroughton, Anthony St. Amand, and the heirs of his body. The BARONY at the decease of this nobleman, Nicolas, in his Synopsis, presumes became vested in the descendants and representatives of Isabella, sister of Almaric St. Amand, 2nd Baron St. Amand of that family (Maud wife of John Babington and Allianore, the sisters of Elizabeth Braybrooke, who brought the barony into the family of Beauchamp, the other co-heiresses of Gerard de Braybrooke having died issueless), which Isabella m. 1st, Richard Handlo, and 2nd, Robert de Ildeale; but Sir Harris Nicolas observes further in a note, "that although no other issue is assigned to William Beauchamp, 4th Lord St. Amand (or first of that family), in either of the numerous pedigrees he had consulted, than his son Richard the last Baron, it is to be remarked, that in the will of the said Richard, Lord St. Amand, he bequeathes a cup to his niece Leverseye. This expression was probably used to describe his wife's niece; but it must be observed, that if he had a sister of the whole blood who left issue, the barony became vested in her and her descendants," upon the death of the last lord.

BEAUCHAMP—BARON BEAUCHAMP, OF BLETSHO.

By Writ of Summons, dated 1st June, 1363.

Lineage.

ROGER DE BEAUCHAMP, one of the eminent warriors of the reign of EDWARD III., younger son of Giles, and grandson of Walter de Beauchamp, of Alcester, was summoned to parliament, as Roger de Bello Campo, BARON BEAUCHAMP, OF BLETSHO, from 1 June, 1363, to 20 October, 1379. In the 20th of EDWARD III. (1346-7), we first find this gallant person serving in France, and the next year the king confirming unto him and his wife, Sibel, the manor of Lydeard-Tregoz, in the co. Wilts, granted to them by Peter de Grandison; which Sibel was eldest of the four sisters and co-heirs of Sir William de Patshul, Knt., and grand-dau., maternally, of Mabel, eldest of the four sisters and co-heirs of Otto de Grandison. In the 28th of EDWARD III., Roger de Beaumont was captain of Calais, in the 33rd of the same monarch he attended the king in his expedition into Gascoigne, and in the next year he obtained, in right of his wife, the manor of BLETWESHO, or BLETSHO, in the co. Bedford, which he made the chief place of his residence. In the 46th of EDWARD III., being still captain of Calais, his lordship had license to transport his household goods and other necessities thither without the payment of any custom upon the same, and in the next year he had a special commission to take care that the peace then made between King EDWARD and the Earl of Flanders should be preserved within the marches of Calais. In the 5th of EDWARD, being then CHAMBERLAIN OF THE HOUSEHOLD, Lord Beauchamp had a pension for life of 100 marks per annum, in consideration of his eminent services, out of the farm of the castle and town of Devizes, in Wiltshire. His lordship d. in 1379, and was s. by his son,

ROGER DE BEAUCHAMP, as second BARON BEAUCHAMP, of Bletsho; but this nobleman was never summoned to parliament. His lordship proving his age in the 7th of RICHARD II., had livery of all his lands. In the 18th (1394-5) of the same reign, we find this nobleman attending the king into Ireland; but of his lordship, who m. Johanna Clopton, nothing more is known than that he was succeeded by his son,

JOHN DE BEAUCHAMP, 3rd baron, but never summoned to parliament. This nobleman doing homage in the 8th of HENRY IV. (1406-7), had livery of his lands; but he d. in six years afterwards. He m. Edith, dau. of Sir John Stourton, and left by her (who m. 2ndly Sir Robert Shottesbrook) a son and heir,

JOHN DE BEAUCHAMP, 4th baron, then only two years old, at whose decease the title and estates passed to his only sister and heiress,

MARGARET DE BEAUCHAMP, who m. 1st, Sir Oliver St. John, Knt., and conveyed the BARONY OF BEAUCHAMP, OF BLETSHO, into that family, from which it was carried by Anne St. John, of Bletsho—(see BURKE'S Peerage and Baronetage, article ST. JOHN)—into the family of William, Lord Howard, son and heir of Charles, 1st Earl of Nottingham, whose dau. and heiress, Elizabeth, m. John Mordaunt, 1st Earl of Peterborough, and the barony of Beauchamp of Bletsho, with that of Mordaunt, is now vested in the co-representatives of the Dukes of Gordon (see that title); Margaret de Beauchamp m. 2ndly, John Beaufort, Earl of Somerset, and by him was mother of Margaret, Countess of Richmond, whose son ascended the British throne as King HENRY VII.

BEAUCHAMP—BARONS BEAUCHAMP, OF HACHE, IN THE CO. SOMERSET.

By Writ, dated 29 December, 1299.

Lineage.

The first of this Somersetshire family of whom mention is made by Dugdale, is

ROBERT DE BEAUCHAMP, who, in the 3rd of HENRY II. (1156-7), accounted the king £6 for a mark of gold, and, in the 9th of the same monarch, was sheriff of the cos. Somerset and Dorset. In three years afterwards, this Robert, upon the assessment of the aid for marrying the king's dau., then levied, certified his knight's fees, veteri scoffamento, to amount in number to seventeen, for which, in the 14th of HENRY II., he paid £7 1s. 8d., that is 8s. 4d. for each knight's fee. In the 22nd of the same HENRY, he again enjoyed the sheriffalty for the same cos., and continued in office for five years, and one half of the sixth year following. This feudal lord d. in 1228, leaving in minority, and in ward to Hubert de Burgh, his son and heir,

ROBERT DE BEAUCHAMP, who d. before 1251, and was s. by his son,

ROBERT DE BEAUCHAMP. Of this feudal baron nothing is known beyond his being engaged against the Welsh with HENRY III., and his founding the priory of Fritelstoke, in the co. Devon. He was yet living in 1257, and was s. by his son,

JOHN DE BEAUCHAMP, who, in the 5th of EDWARD I. (1276-7), was made governor of the castles of Kaermerdin and Cardigan. He m. Cicely, dau. and heiress of Maud de Kyme, dau. of William Ferrers, Earl of Derby, by her second husband, William de Vivonia, which William was son of Hugh de Vivonia, by Mabel, one of the co-heirs of William Mallet, a great baron, who d. temp. HENRY III. This John de Beauchamp, who d. 1283, was s. by his son,

JOHN DE BEAUCHAMP, who was summoned to parliament as a baron by the style of "Jo de Bello Campo (de Somerset)," on 29 December, 1229, 28th of EDWARD I., and in the 34th of the same reign was one of the distinguished persons who received the honour of knighthood with Prince Edward, the king's eldest son, being in the expedition made into Scotland in that year. In the 8th of EDWARD II. his lordship was again in the Scottish wars; and in the 14th of the same king he succeeded to the very extensive landed possessions of his mother, comprising the manor of Sturminster-Marshal, in the co. Dorset, a moiety of the manor of West Kington, in the co. Wilts, of the whole manor of Wadmerah, in the co. Surrey, of the manor of Bullingham, in the co. Cambridge, also the hamlets of Watweton and Widecombe. In two years afterwards Lord Beauchamp was made governor of the castle of Bridgewater. In the 7th of EDWARD III. (1333-4), he obtained license to fortify his manor houses at Hacche, Estokes, and South Hainedon, and to embattle their walls. His lordship d. in 1336, up to which period he had regular summonses, and was s. by his son,

JOHN DE BEAUCHAMP, 2nd Lord Beauchamp, of Hacche, summoned to parliament from 24 August, 1336, to 24 February, 1343. This nobleman participated in the glories of EDWARD III.'s reign, being constantly engaged in the French wars of that monarch. His lordship d. in 1343, and was s. by his son (then twelve years of age, and under the guardianship of Robert de Ferrers, and Reginald de Cobham),

JOHN DE BEAUCHAMP, 3rd baron, summoned to parliament from 15 November, 1351, to 20 November, 1360. This nobleman was in the expedition made into Gascoigne, in the 33rd of EDWARD III., and of the retinue of Thomas de Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, whose dau. Alice he had married. His lordship d. in 1360 without issue, when the BARONY OF BEAUCHAMP OF HACCHE fell into ABEYANCE between his three sisters and co-heiresses, and in that state it still continues amongst their descendants. Those ladies were

- i. Cecily, m. 1st, to St. Roger Seymour, by whom she had a son, William, from whom the Duke of Somerset, and Marquess of Hertford, derive; and 2ndly, to Richard Turberville, of Bere Regis, in Dorset, by whom she left a dau., Juliana Turberville.
- ii. Margaret, wife of Thos. Challons.
- iii. Eleanor, m. to — Meriet, and left a son, John Meriet, whose dau. and heiress, Elizabeth, m. a Seymour.

Upon the division of the estates, Cecily had for her share the manors of Hacche, Shipton, Beauchamp, Murifield, and one-third of the manor of Shipton Mallet, in the co. Somerset, with certain lands in Sturminster-Marshal, in the co. Dorset; the manors of Boulberry and Harberton, in Devonshire; the manor of Dourton, in Buckinghamshire; of Little Hawes, in Suffolk, and two parts of the manor of Selling, in Kent.

BEAUCHAMP—BARONS BEAUCHAMP, OF KYDDERMINSTER.

By Letters Patent (the 1st Barony so created), dated 10 October, 1387.

Lineage.

SIR JOHN DE BEAUCHAMP, Knt., of Holt, in co. Worcester, (great grandson of William de Beauchamp, Lord of Elmley, and his wife, Isabel, dau. and heiress of William Mauduit, of Hanslope,—see Beauchamp, Earls of Warwick), having participated in the high achievements of his distinguished family, during the martial reign of EDWARD III., obtained a grant, in the 11th of RICHARD II. (1387-8), of the manors and lands belonging to the priory of Deerhurst, in the co. Gloucester, being then steward of the king's household, and was elevated to the peerage by letters patent, dated 10 October, 1387, (the 1st barony* so conferred), as LORD BEAUCHAMP, OF KYDDERMINSTER. This honour, however, he did not long enjoy, for, in the same year, he was attainted of high treason along with Sir John Tresilian, chief justice of the King's Bench,

* That the solemn investiture of this John, and all other barons who were thenceforth created by patent, was performed by the king himself, by putting on a robe of scarlet, as also a mantle (with two gards on the left shoulder) and a hood, and all furred with minever, there is no doubt; which form of creation continued until the 13th year of King JAMES, that Sir James Hay (a Scotchman) was advanced to the dignity of a baron of this realm by letters patent, date Junii, by the title of Lord Hay, of Sauley, the lawyers then declaring that the delivery of the letters-patent was sufficient without any ceremony.—DUGDALE.

and several others, by the parliament which the nobles forced the king to assemble, and beheaded upon Tower-hill, his sentence being so commuted from hanging and quartering, which latter punishment the chief justice underwent. Lord Beauchamp m. Joane, dau. and heiress of Robert le Fitzwith, and was s. by his only son (then but ten years of age, the lordship of Holt being committed, during his minority to Thomas, Earl of Warwick).

JOHN DE BEAUCHAMP, 2nd baron (the attainder being, we presume, repealed). This nobleman attended King RICHARD II. into Ireland, in the 22nd year of that monarch's reign (1398-9), and executed the office of escheator of the co. Worcester, in the 8th of HENRY IV. (1406-7). His lordship d. in 1420, leaving an only dau. and heiress, Margaret, who m. 1st, John Pauncefort, and 2ndly, John Wysham, when the BARONY OF BEAUCHAMP, OF KYDDERMINSTER, EXPIRED.

BEAUCHAMP—BARONS BEAUCHAMP, OF POWYKE.

By Letters Patent, dated 2 May, 1447.

Lineage.

WALTER DE BEAUCHAMP, a younger son of William de Beauchamp, Lord of Elmley, and his wife, Isabel, sister and heiress of William Mauduit, Earl of Warwick (see Beauchamp, Earls of Warwick), having purchased from Reginald Fitzherbert a moiety of the manor of Alcester, co. Warwick, made that one of his principal seats, calling it Beauchamp Court; the other being at Powyke, co. Worcester. This Walter, who was a very eminent person at the period in which he lived, being signed with the cross for a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, had a legacy of 200 marks bequeathed to him by his father, for his better performance of that voyage. He was steward of the household to King EDWARD I., and attended that monarch to Flanders, and into Scotland, where he shared in the honours of Falkirk on 22 July, 1298. In the 29th of the same reign he was one of the lords in the parliament of Lincoln, being then styled Dominus de Alcester, who signified to the pope, under their seals, the superiority of King EDWARD over the kingdom of Scotland. His lordship m. Alice de Tony, and had issue,

- I. WALTER, successor to his father,
- II. William, a military man of celebrity, who succeeded to part of the estates of his elder brother.
- III. Giles, who inherited the lordship of Alcester, by the settlement of his eldest brother.

The eldest son,

WALTER DE BEAUCHAMP, succeeded his father in 1306, and was the next year in the expedition against the Scots. In 1317, soon after the death of Guy, Earl of Warwick, his kinsman, he had custody of all the lands belonging to Warwick Castle, together with the castle itself, during the minority of the young earl. In 1327 he had a special commission to execute the office of constable of England in a particular case; and dying in the following year, s. p., was s. by his brother,

WILLIAM DE BEAUCHAMP, a military officer of high reputation, who had attended EDWARD I. in several of his expeditions into Flanders and Scotland. In the 10th of that monarch he acted as sheriff of Worcestershire, which office was granted to him during the minority of the heir of his kinsman, Guy, Earl of Warwick. In the 14th of EDWARD II. he was appointed governor of St. Briavel Castle, co. Gloucester, and of the Forest of Dean, and was constituted, in the year following, one of the king's commissioners for the safe custody of the city of Worcester. Dying, however, without issue, his estates devolved upon his brother,

GILES DE BEAUCHAMP, who had already inherited, by the settlement of his eldest brother, the lordship of Alcester, the manor-house of which, called Beauchamp's Court, he had license to fortify in the 14th of EDWARD III. with a wall of stone and lime, and to embattle it; and he obtained similar permission regarding his house at Fresh-Water, in the Isle of Wight, in the 16th year of the same reign, 1342-3. This Giles was s. by his son,

JOHN DE BEAUCHAMP, of whom little is mentioned save his founding a chantry in the parish church of Alcester, temp. EDWARD III., for one priest to celebrate divine service daily at the altar of All Saints, and his being in the expedition against France in the 3rd of RICHARD II. This John de Beauchamp left two sons,

- I. WILLIAM (Sir), his successor.
- II. Walter (Sir), from whom the Beauchamps, Barons of St. Amand, derived (see that dignity), and was s. by the elder,

SIR WILLIAM DE BEAUCHAMP, Knt., who, in the 16th of RICHARD II., was made constable of the castle of Gloucester. In the 3rd of HENRY IV. (1401-2), was appointed sheriff of Worcestershire, and upon the accession of HENRY V., sheriff of Gloucestershire. He m. Catharine, dau., and eventually co-heir, of Sir Gerard de Uffete, and was s. by his son.

SIR JOHN DE BEAUCHAMP, Knt., who purchased from Thomas de Botreaux the other moiety of the manor of Alcester, which has continued in that family for divers descents. In the 17th of HENRY VI., this Sir John de Beauchamp (2 May, 1447) was elevated to the peerage, in consequence of the many good and acceptable services performed by him to that king, and to HENRY V. his father, by the title of Lord Beauchamp, Baron of Powyke. He was also constituted justice of South Wales, with power to exercise that office personally or by deputy: and ere long (28th HENRY VI.) was raised to the office of lord treasurer of England, and honoured with the Garter. His lordship d. in 1475 (says Sir H. Nicholas), and by his last testament, dated 9 April, 1475, bequeathed his body to sepulture in the church of the Dominican Friars, at Worcester, in a new chapel to be made on the north side of the choir. Lord Beauchamp was s. by his only son, then forty years of age,

SIR RICHARD BEAUCHAMP, 2nd Lord Beauchamp, of Powyke, who m. Elizabeth, dau. of Sir Humphrey Stafford, Knt. and had issue,

- I. Elizabeth, m. to Sir Robert Willoughby, Lord Willoughby de Broke, and had an only son, Edward, who predeceased his father, leaving by his wife Elizabeth, dau. of Richard Nevil, Lord Latimer, three daus., of whom the eldest, Elizabeth, alone left issue; which Elizabeth m. Sir Fulke Greville, 2nd son of Sir Fulke Greville, of Milcote, co. Warwick, and from that union descend the extant EARLS OF BROOKE AND WARWICK, the BARONS WILLOUGHBY DE BROKE, FULKE-SOUTHWELL GREVILLE Esq., of North Myms Place, Hert., M.P. for co. Longford, &c., &c.
- II. Anne, m. to Richard Lygon, Esq., of Worcestershire, and from this marriage the present EARL BEAUCHAMP derives. (See BURKE's Peerage and Baronetage.)
- III. Margaret, m. to Richard Rede, Esq., of co. Gloucester.

His lordship d. in 1496, and thus leaving no male issue, the Barony of Beauchamp of Powyke EXPIRED, while the estates of the deceased lord devolved upon the above ladies as co-heiresses. Elizabeth, Lady Willoughby de Broke, having the manor of Alcester, and her sisters Powyke and the other lands in the co. of Worcester.

BEAUCHAMP—EARL OF ALBEMARLE.

By Letters Patent, dated 1417.

(See Beauchamp, 5th Earl of Warwick.)

BEAUFORT—EARL OF DORSET, AND DUKE OF EXETER.

By Letters Patent, dated—18 November, 1416.

Lineage.

This was a branch of the royal house of Plantagenet, springing from the celebrated

JOHN OF GAUNT (4th son of King EDWARD III., and so denominated from the place of his birth, Gaunt, or, as we spell it, Ghent, anno 1340), Earl of Richmond, Duke of Lancaster, and Duke of Aquitaine, E.G., who m., for his 3rd wife, Katherine, dau. of Sir Payn Roet, a knight of Hainault and Guienne King of Arms, and widow of Sir Hugh (or Otes) Swinford, but had the following issue by her before his marriage, who were legitimated by parliament, in the 15th RICHARD II., for all purposes, save accession to the crown, viz.,

JOHN, EARL OF SOMERSET.

HENRY, bishop of Lincoln, 1397, and of Winchester, 1405; CARDINAL, 1426. This was the celebrated CARDINAL BEAUFORT, Lord Chancellor of England, who crowned Henry VI. in Paris as king of France in 1431, and d. at Winchester in 1447.

THOMAS, of whom presently.

JOANE, m. 1st, to Sir Robert Ferrers, 2nd Lord Ferrers, of Wempe; and 2ndly, to Ralph Nevill, Earl of Westmoreland.

The youngest son (surnamed Beaufort, from the castle of Beaufort in France, part of the marriage portion of Blanch of Artois, upon her marriage with Edward Crouchback, 1st Earl of Lancaster),

SIR THOMAS BEAUFORT, having attained some eminence in the reign of RICHARD II., was appointed admiral of the whole fleet to the northwards, in the 6th of HENRY IV., and retained to serve the king in that command with 300 men-at-arms, himself and one banneret being part of the number. In the 10th of the same monarch he was made captain of Calais, and in the next year had another grant of the office of admiral, both of the northern and western seas, for life. In which employments Sir Thomas deported himself with so much discretion that he was soon afterwards (2nd HENRY IV.) appointed lord chancellor of England, with a pension of 500 marks per annum, over and above the ordinary fees and wages of that high office, to enjoy from 31 January preceding, so long as he should hold the same. He obtained likewise a grant of some of the forfeited lands of Sir Robert Belknap, and in addition to the command of the northern and western seas, the admiralship of Ireland, Aquitaine, and Picardy, with six tuns of wine yearly from the port of Kingston-upon-Hull. In the 13th of HENRY IV. he was elevated to the peerage as EARL OF DORSET, and upon the accession of HENRY V., being then lieutenant of Aquitaine, he was retained to serve the king in that capacity for one half-year, with 240 men-at-arms and 1,200 archers. In the 2nd year of the new monarch his lordship was one of the ambassadors to negotiate a marriage between his royal master and Catherine, dau. of the king of France: and in the next year he had the honour of commanding the rear-guard at the celebrated battle of Agincourt. "consisting of archers, and such as were armed with spears halberds, and bills," and was constituted lieutenant of Normandy. In the 4th of HENRY V. (1416-17), his lordship was created DUKE OF EXETER, for life only, in the parliament then held at London, having therewith a grant of £1,000 per annum out of the exchequer, and £40 per annum more payable from the city of Exeter. During the remainder of the martial reign of the gallant HENRY V., at whose solemn funeral he assisted as a mourner, his grace continued constantly engaged upon the plains of Normandy, and reaped fresh laurels in each succeeding campaign. Upon the accession of the new monarch (HENRY VI.) the duke's services in France were retained, with three bannerets, three knights, 182 men-at-arms, and 600 archers, and he obtained in the same year the office of justice of North Wales. His grace m. Margaret, dau. and co-heiress of Sir Thomas Nevill, of Horneby, co. Lincoln, Knt., but had no issue. He d. 27 December, 1417, when the earldom of Dorset and dukedom of Exeter EXPIRED, but his great landed possessions devolved upon his nephew, John, Duke of Somerset. In the last testament of this eminent person, dated 29 December, in the 5th of HENRY VI., he ordains that as soon after his decease (viz., the first day, if possible, or the second or third at the furthest), a thousand masses should be solemnly sung for his soul, &c., that no great cost should be incurred at his funeral and that five tapers only, in so many candlesticks, should be placed round his remains. That as many poor men as he should be years of age at the time of his death should carry a torch at his funeral, each of them having a gown or hood of white cloth, and as many pence as he himself had lived years; likewise the same number of poor women to be similarly attired and remunerated. Furthermore, he bequeathed to each poor body coming to his funeral a penny; and he appoints that at every anniversary of himself, and Margaret his wife, that the abbot of St. Edmundsbury, if present, should have 6s. 8d.; the prior, if present, 3s. 4d.; and every monk there at that time 20d.; giving to the monastery for the support of these anniversaries 400 marks. To Joane, his sister, Countess of Westmorland, he gives a book, called Tristram, and to Thomas Swineford, a cup of silver gilt, with a cover. To the use of poor scholars in Queen's College, Oxon, he bequeaths £100, to be deposited in a chest, to the end that they might have some relief thereby, in loan, desiring that the borrowers should in charity pray for his soul, &c., and upon the like terms he bequeaths £100 more, to be similarly placed to Trinity Hall, Cambridge. The deceased duke was a knight of the Garter.

BEAUFORT—EARLS AND DUKES OF SOMERSET.

Earldom, by Letters Patent, anno 1397.

Dukedom, by Letters Patent, anno 1442.

Lineage.

In the 20th year of RICHARD II., the Lord Chancellor having declared in parliament that the King had created

SIR JOHN BEAUFORT, Knt., eldest son of John of Gaunt, by Catharine Swineford (see Beaufort, Duke of Exeter), EARL OF

SOMERSET. His lordship was advanced in the next year (also in open parliament) to the Marquisate of Dorset, a dignity which he soon afterwards resigned; and was created on the day of his resignation MARQUESS OF SOMERSET. He bore, however, subsequently, the former title, and as Marquess of Dorset, was made constable of Wallingford Castle, and constable of Dover Castle, and warden of the Cinque Ports. In the same year his lordship had extensive grants from the crown, and was appointed admiral of the king's fleet, both to the north and west; but upon the accession of HENRY IV., having been one of the accusers of Thomas de Woodstock, Duke of Gloucester, his right to the marquisate of Dorset was declared void by parliament, and his only title then remaining was Earl of Somerset, by which, in the same year, he was constituted lord chamberlain of England. In the 4th of the new monarch, the commons in parliament, however, petitioned for his restitution to the marquisate of Dorset; but the earl seemed unwilling to re-adopt the designation of marquess, that being then so new a dignity in England. His lordship did at length, though, resume it, for we find him in a few years after appointed, as Marquess of Dorset, lord high admiral of England. The marquess m. Margaret, dau. of Thomas Holland, and sister and co-heiress of Thomas, both Earls of Kent (who m. after his decease, Thomas, Duke of Clarence), and had issue,

HENRY, who s. as 2nd Earl of Somerset.

John, successor to his brother.

Edmund, who, in the 9th of HENRY VI., was appointed, under the title of Lord Morteign, commander of the forces in France (but of him hereafter).

Jane, m. to JAMES I. King of Scotland, who has celebrated her in his poems.

Margaret, m. to Thomas Courtenay, Earl of Devon.

His lordship, who, among other honours, was a knight of the Garter, d. in 1409-1410, and was s. by his eldest son,

HENRY BEAUFORT, 2nd Earl of Somerset, god-son to King HENRY IV., who, dying in his minority, in 1418, was s. by his brother,

JOHN BEAUFORT, 3rd Earl of Somerset, K.G., a distinguished military commander in the reigns of HENRY V. and HENRY VI., by the latter of whom he was created, in 1443, Earl of Kendal and Duke of Somerset, by which title he was made lieutenant-general of Aquitaine, and of the whole realm of France, and Duchy of Normandy. His grace m. Margaret, dau. of Sir John Beanchamp, of Blesto, Knt., and heiress of John, her brother (which lady m. after the duke's decease, Sir Leode Welles), by whom he left an only dau. and heiress,

Margaret, who m. Edmund Tudor, surnamed of Hadham, Earl of Richmond, by whom she was mother of HENRY, EARL OF RICHMOND, who ascended the throne as HENRY VII.

Her ladyship m. 2ndly, Sir Henry Stafford, Knt., and 3rdly, Thomas, Lord Stanley, but had issue by neither. The virtues of this distinguished lady have been greatly celebrated, and Walpole mentions her in his catalogue of noble authors, as having written upon several occasions; and by her son's command and authority, "made the orders for great estates of ladies and noblewomen, for their precedence, attires, and wearing of harbes at funerals, over the chin and under the same."

John, Duke of Somerset, d. in 1444, when that dignity and the Earldom of Kendal EXPIRED; but the Earldom of Somerset devolved upon his brother,

EDMUND BEAUFORT, Marquess of Dorset, as 4th Earl of Somerset. This nobleman commanded, in the 10th of HENRY VI., one of the divisions of the Duke of Bedford's army in Normandy, and upon the death of that eminent general, was appointed joint commander, with Richard, Duke of York, of all the English forces in the duchy. He subsequently (15th HENRY VI.) laid successful siege to Harfleur; and afterwards crossing the Somme, invested, with equal fortune, the Fort of Fulleville, when he formed a junction with Lord Talbot. In a few years following, he acquired an accession of renown by his relief of Calais, then invested by the Duke of Burgundy, and for his good services upon that occasion, was created (24 August, 1441) Earl of Dorset. His lordship continuing to distinguish himself in arms, was advanced, on 24 June, 1442, to the Marquisate of Dorset, by which title he inherited the Earldom of Somerset at the decease of his brother in 1444, and the next year was constituted Regent of France. In three years afterwards (31 March, 1448) he was created Duke of Somerset. His grace was also knight of the Garter, and lord high constable. But the fortune of war veering soon after, and Caen falling into the hands of the French, the Duke had to encounter a storm of unpopularity in England, to which he was recalled, with the hostility of Richard, Duke of York, and espousing the Lancastrian cause, in the lamentable war of the Roses, which about that period broke out, he fell in the first battle of St. Alban's in 1455. His grace had m. Alianore, one of the daus. and co-heiresses of Richard Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, and had issue,

HENRY, Earl of Mortefaign, his successor.

Edmund, successor to his brother.

John, slain at the battle of Tewkesbury.

Alianore, m. 1st, to James Boteler, Earl of Wiltshire, and 2ndly, to Sir Robert Spencer, Knt.

Joane, m. to the Lord Howth, of Ireland, and afterwards to Sir Richard Fry, Knt.

Anne, m. to Sir William Paston, Knt.

Margaret, m. to Humphrey, Earl of Stafford, and afterwards to Sir Richard Dorell, Knt.

Elizabeth, m. to Sir Henry Lewes, Knt.

The duke was s. by his eldest son,

HENRY BEAUFORT, 2nd Duke of Somerset, K.G., a very distinguished personage in the York and Lancaster contest. His lordship, like his father, being a staunch Lancastrian, was constituted, in the 36th of HENRY VI., governor of the Isle of Wight, with the castle of Carisbroke, and in the following year appointed captain of Calais. He subsequently continued high in the confidence of his royal master, until the defeat sustained by the Lancastrians at Towton, on 12 March, 1461, when flying from the field with the unfortunate HENRY, he is accused of abandoning the fallen monarch at Berwick, and of making his peace with the new king (EDWARD IV.) by the surrender of Bamburgh Castle. Certain it is that he was taken into favour by that prince, and obtained a grant from him of 1,000 marks per annum. In the next year, however, upon the appearance of Margaret of Anjou in the north, at the head of a considerable force, his grace resumed "the Red Rose," but falling into the hands of the Yorkists at Hexham, in 1463, he was beheaded the day after the battle, and attainted by parliament in the 5th of EDWARD IV. The duke had no legitimate issue, but left by Joane Hill an illegitimate son, Sir Charles Somerset, K.G., Knight Banneret, from whom the SOMERSETS, DUKES OF BEAUFORT, directly descend. His grace was s. by his brother,

EDMUND BEAUFORT, who after enduring a miserable exile with his brother John in France, is said to have been restored to the honours of his family (49th HENRY VI.) upon the temporary re-establishment of the Lancastrian power, and the 10th of EDWARD IV., when he is said to have been summoned to parliament as Duke of Somerset, though he is absent from the list of summonses for that year, as observes Sir H. Nicolas. His grace commanded the archers at the battle of Barnetfield, in the next year, and upon the loss of that battle fled into Wales, to the Earl of Pembroke. He was subsequently in command at Tewkesbury, where the ill-fortune of the day was attributed to his defection. His grace fled the field, but he was soon overtaken, and paid the forfeit of his head (anno 1471). As he died without issue, all his honours EXPIRED, leaving attainders out of the question, while his sisters or their representatives became his heirs.

BEAUMONT—EARLS OF LEICESTER.

See BELLOMONT.

BEAUMONT—VISCOUNTS BEAUMONT.

By Letters Patent, dated 12 February, 1440.

Lineage.

The original descent of this noble family does not appear to have been clearly ascertained. Some authorities deduce it from Lewis, son of Charles, Earl of Anjou, a younger son of LEWIS VIII., king of France; some from Lewis de Brienne, 2nd son of John de Brienne, the last king of Jerusalem; and some from the Viscounts Beaumont, of Normandy. Certain it is, however, that in the reign of EDWARD I., mention is made of Isabel de Beaumont, wife of John de Vesci; of Lewis, who, in 1294, was treasurer of the church of Salisbury, and afterwards Bishop of Durham; and of

HENRY DE BEAUMONT, who attending the king, 30th EDWARD I. (1301-2), in his expedition against the Scots, obtained a precept to the collectors of the fifteenth in Yorkshire for 200 marks towards his support in those wars. In the 1st year of King EDWARD II. this Henry had a grant in fee of the manors of Folkynham, Edenham, and Barton-upon-Humber, and of all the knight's fees belonging to Gilbert de Gant, which Laura de Gant, his widow, held in dower, and in three years afterwards had a further grant of the Isle of Man, to hold for life, by the services which the lords thereof had usually performed to the kings of Scotland. In the preceding year he had been constituted governor of Roxburgh Castle, and deputed, with Humphrey de Bohun, Earl of Hereford, and Robert de Clifford, to guard the marches. About this period he espoused Alice, dau. and eventually heiress of Alexander Cumyn, Earl of Bognan, constable of Scotland, and, doing his homage, in the 6th of EDWARD II. (1312-13), had livery of her lands. In the 10th of the same monarch, Lord Beaumont (he had been previously styled "consanguineous regis," says Nicolas, and summoned to parliament as a BARON on 4 March, 1309), being then the king's lieutenant in the north, accompanying thither two cardinals who had come from Rome, partly to reconcile the king to the Earl of Lancaster, and partly to inthronize his lordship's brother, Lewis de Beaumont, in the bishopric of Durham, was attacked, near Darlington, by a band of robbers, headed by Gilbert de Middleton, and despoiled of all his treasure, horses, and everything else of value, as were likewise his companions. His lordship and his brother were also made prisoners, the former being conveyed to the castle of Mitford, and the latter to that of Durham, there to remain until ransomed. From this period the baron continued to bask in the sunshine of royal favour, and to receive from the crown further augmentations to his territorial possessions, until the 16th of EDWARD II., when, being required to give his advice in council, regarding a truce then meditated with the Scots, he declined, contemptuously observing, "that he would give none therein," which so irritated the king, that his lordship was ordered to depart the council, and he retired, saying, "he had rather begone than stay." He was in consequence committed, with the consent of the lords present, to prison, but soon after released upon the bail of Henry de Percy, and Ralph de Nevile. He seems within a short time, however, again to enjoy the king's favour, for we find him in two years constituted one of the plenipotentiaries to treat of peace with France, and in two years subsequently nominated guardian to David, son and heir of David de Strabolgi, Earl of Athol, deceased, in consideration of the sum of £1,000. His lordship after this time, entirely deserting his royal master, sided with the queen consort Isabella, and was the very person to deliver up the unhappy monarch to his enemies, upon his abortive attempt to fly beyond the sea. The king thereupon was committed close prisoner to Berkeley Castle, where he was inhumanly murdered in 1327. For this act of treachery Lord Beaumont received a grant of the manor of Loughborough, part of the possessions of Hugh le Despenser, the attainted Earl of Winchester, and was summoned to parliament on 22 January, 1334, 7th EDWARD III., as EARL OF BOGHAN. His lordship, during the reign of EDWARD III., had many high and confidential employments, and took a prominent part in the affairs of Scotland being at one time sent as constable of the king's army into that country for defence of the realm. The earl d. in 1340, leaving by Alice Cumyn, of Buchan, his wife, four sons and six daus., viz., John, his heir; Richard; John; Thomas, of Bolton Percy; Alice; Elizabeth, m. to Nicholas de Audley; Joan, m. to Fulk, Lord FitzWarine; Isabel, m. to Henry Plantagenet, Duke of Lancaster; Beatrice, m. to the Count de Dammartin; and Catherine, m. to David, Earl of Athole. His lordship inherited, upon the decease of his sister, Isabel, wife of John de Vesci, of Alnwick, in Northumberland (one of the most powerful barons of the North), a lady of great eminence in her time, without issue, large possessions in the co. Lincoln, which, added to his own acquirements, placed him amongst the most wealthy nobles in the kingdom at the period of his death. He was s. by his son,

JOHN DE BEAUMONT, 2nd BARON BEAUMONT, styled in the summons to parliament, 25 February, 1342, "Johannes de Bello-monte," but never entitled Earl of Bognan. His lordship m. Lady Alianore Plantagenet, 5th dau. of Henry, Earl of Lancaster, and great grand-dau. of King HENRY III., by whom he had an only child, Henry, born in Brabant, during her ladyship's attendance upon Philippa, Queen Consort of EDWARD III. This nobleman, like his father, was much engaged in the Scottish wars. His lordship d. in 1342, leaving by the Lady Alianore Plantagenet his wife (who m. 2ndly Richard Earl of Arundel) an only son,

HENRY DE BEAUMONT, 3rd BARON, whose legitimacy (owing to his being born beyond the sea) was ratified by act of parliament, in the 25th of EDWARD III. In the 34th of the same monarch, being then of full age, his lordship did homage and had livery of his lands, and was summoned to parliament from 14 August, 1362, to 24 February, 1368. He m. Margaret, dau. of John de Vere, Earl of Oxford, and dying in 1368, left an only son, John, and a dau., Eleanor, m. to — de Molines. The only son was placed, in the 47th EDWARD III., under the guardianship of William Lord Latimer.

JOHN DE BEAUMONT, 4th BARON, K.G., attaining maturity in the 6th RICHARD II. (1382-3), had livery of his lands, and in the same year with Henry de Spencer, bishop of Norwich, was in the English army sent to oppose the adherents of Pope CLEMENT VII. In four years afterwards his lordship accompanied JOHN OF GAUNT, then called King of Castile and Leon, into Spain, but before the close of that year, he was expelled the court, as one of the king's evil advisers, by the great lords assembled at Haringey Park. Soon afterwards, however, he made his peace, and had license to repair to Calais, in order to engage in a tournament, and he had then the honour of tilting with the Lord Chamberlain of the King of France. In the 12th RICHARD II., he was made admiral of the king's fleets to the northwards, and one of the wardens of the marches towards Scotland; "whereupon he entered that country forty miles, spoyled the Market at Fowke, and brought many prisoners back." In the next year he had the castle of Cherburgh in France committed to his custody, and about that time was specially enjoined to abstain from exercising any feats of arms with the French, without permission from Henry de Percy, Earl of Northumberland. In the 16th of the same reign, his lordship received a pension of £100 per annum for his services, and was constituted constable of Dover Castle and Warden of the Cinque Ports; and in the 19th, he was appointed one of the commissioners to negotiate a marriage between the King of England and Isabell, dau. of the King of France. His lordship m. Katherine, dau. of Thomas de Everingham of Laxton, in the co. Nottingham, and had issue,

HENRY, his successor.

THOMAS, Lord of Basquerville and Captain of Galliarde, ancestor of the BEAUMONTS, of Cole Orton, co. Leicester, Barts. (of England, and Viscounts Beaumont, of Ireland), and of the BEAUMONTS of Stoughton Grange, also in Leicestershire, now represented by SIR GEORGE HOWLAND BEAUMONT, Bart.

Richard.

Elizabeth, m. to William, 3rd Lord Botreaux.

The baron, who had been summoned to parliament from 20 August, 1383, to 13 November, 1393, and had the honour of being a KNIGHT OF THE GARTER, d. in 1396, and was s. by his eldest son,

HENRY DE BEAUMONT, 5th baron, who received the honour of knighthood at the coronation of King HENRY IV.; and in the 11th of the same monarch's reign, was constituted one of the commissioners to treat of peace with France. His lordship m. Elizabeth, dau. of William Lord Willoughby de Eresby, and had issue,

JOHN, his heir.

Henry, from whom the Beaumonts of Wednesbury, in the co. Stafford, descended.

Lord Beaumont, who had been summoned to parliament from 25 August, 1404, to 22 March, 1413, d. in the latter year, and was s. by his eldest son,

JOHN DE BEAUMONT, 6th baron, a very distinguished personage in the reign of HENRY VI., and high in that monarch's favour, under whom he enjoyed the most lucrative and honourable employments, and in whose service he eventually laid down his life. In the 14th of King HENRY (1435-6) his lordship obtained by letters patent, to himself and his heirs male, the Earldom of Boloine, being at that time upon his march for the relief of Calais, and in four years afterwards, 12 February, 1440, he was created VISCOUNT BEAUMONT (being the first person dignified with such a title), with precedency above all barons of the realm, and with a yearly fee of 20 marks out of the revenues of the co. Lincoln. His lordship received, subsequently, a patent of precedency (23rd HENRY VI.) above all viscounts thenceforth to be created; and in five years afterwards was constituted Lord High Chamberlain of England. The viscount finally lost his life at the battle of Northampton, fighting under the Lancastrian banner, on 10 July, 1459. His lordship was a knight of the Garter, and had been summoned to parliament, in the BARONY OF BEAUMONT, from 26 February, 1432, to 26 September, 1439. He had m. Elizabeth, only dau. and heiress of Sir William Philip, Lord Bardolf, by whom he left,

WILLIAM, his successor.

Joane, m. to John, Lord Lovel, of Tichmarsh, and dying before her brother, left a son (who succeeded as Lord Lovel, but d. without issue,) and two daus., viz.,

1 Joane, m. to Sir Brian Stapleton, of Carlton, Knt., from which marriage lineally descended

Miles Thomas Stapleton, Esq., of Carleton, who established his co-heirship to the Barony of Beaumont, and was summoned by writ to the House of Peers 16 October, 1840. He was b. 4 June, 1805, and d. 1854, having m. 9 September, 1844, the Hon. Isabella Browne, dau. of Lord Kilmaine, by whom he had issue,

HENRY, now Baron Beaumont, b. 11 August, 1848. Miles, b. 17 July, 1850. (See BURKE'S Peerage.)

2 Frideswide, m. to Sir Edward Norris, of Yattendon, Knight, whose eldest son, John, d. s. p. and whose second, Henry, having been attainted, 1536, his portion of inheritance in the barony was confiscated to the crown. The son of Henry, Sir Henry Norris, was summoned to parliament, 14th ELIZABETH, 1572, as Baron Norris, of Rycote, a barony now merged in the Earldom of Abingdon.

John, Viscount Beaumont, was s. by his only son,

WILLIAM DE BEAUMONT, 2nd viscount and 7th baron, who inherited likewise large possessions from his mother, the heiress of the Bardolfs. This nobleman adhering faithfully to the Lancastrian interest, was made prisoner by the Yorkists at Towton Field, in the 1st year of Edward IV. (1461-2), when he was attainted, and his large possessions bestowed upon Lord Hastings. From this period until the accession of King HENRY VII., his lordship shared the fallen fortunes of his party, but rising with that event, he was restored to his honours and estates by act of Parliament, passed on 7 November, 1485, in the 1st year of the new monarch's reign. The viscount m. 1st, Elizabeth, dau. of Richard Scrope, and niece of Lord Scrope, of Bolton; and 2ndly, Joane, dau. of Humphrey Stafford, Duke of Buckingham, but d. without issue in 1507, when the viscountcy EXPIRED, while the Barony of Beaumont fell into ABEYANCE, and so continued, according to the decision upon the claim of Mr. Stapleton in 1798, "between the co-heirs of William, Viscount Beaumont (in whom it was vested by descent from his father, John, Lord Beaumont, who was summoned to and sat in parliament, 2nd HENRY VI. (1423-4), as a baron in fee), descended from his sister Joane, and that the petitioner Thomas Stapleton, Esq., was one of those co-heirs." The barony, however, as already stated, was revived and assigned forty-two years subsequently to Mr. Stapleton's grand-nephew, Miles-Thomas Stapleton, Esq.

By Letters Patent, dated 1622.

Lineage.

NICHOLAS BEAUMONT, Esq., M.P. for the co. Leicester, temp. ELIZABETH, lineally descended from Thomas, 2nd son of John Beaumont, 4th Lord Beaumont, in the peerage of England, m. Anne, dau. of Wm. Saunders, Esq., of Welford, in Northamptonshire, and had, with other issue, two sons, HENRY, his heir; and Thomas, ancestor of the present SIR GEORGE-HOWLAND BEAUMONT, Bart., of Stoughton Grange, co. Leicester. The eldest son,

SIR HENRY BEAUMONT, Knt., petitioned JAMES I. ineffectually to revive in his person the Viscountcy of Beaumont, forfeited by John, Viscount Beaumont, who fell at the battle of Northampton, on the side of the Lancastrians. Sir Henry m. Elizabeth, dau. and heir of Thomas Lewis, Esq., and was s. by his only son,

SIR THOMAS BEAUMONT, of Cole Orton, M.P., who was created a Baronet of England in 1619, and raised to the peerage of Ireland, as VISCOUNT BEAUMONT, of Swords, in 1622. His lordship was a staunch supporter of the royal cause and had to compound for his estates. He m. Elizabeth, dau. and heir of Henry Sapcote, Esq., of Elton, co. Huntingdon, and left a son and successor,

SIR SAPCOTE BEAUMONT, Bart., 2nd Viscount Beaumont, who, like his father, suffered deeply for his adherence to the royal cause, and died before the Restoration. He m. Elizabeth, dau. of Sir Thomas Monson, Knt., and had issue,

1. THOMAS, his heir.

2. John, governor of Dover Castle, d. s. p., 3 July, 1701.

3. Elizabeth, m. Sir John Hotham, Bart., and left a son and heir, Sir John Hotham, Bart., who died without male issue in 1691.

The son and heir,

SIR THOMAS BEAUMONT, 3rd Viscount Beaumont, m. Mary, dau. of Sir Erasmus Fountain, Knt., but d. without issue, 11 June, 1702, when the peerage became EXTINCT. The estates his lordship bequeathed to Sir George Beaumont, 4th bart. of Stoughton Grange, and they are now possessed by Sir George's descendant, the present Bart. of Stoughton Grange.

Nicholas, inherited the church patronage of his father.

The eldest surviving son,

HENRY BEKE, inherited Eresby and other manors. He m. Hawse or Alice de Multon, sister of Thomas de Multon, and was s. by his son,

WALTER BEKE, Lord of Eresby, who m. Eva, niece of Walter de Grey, archbishop of York, and had issue,

- i. JOHN, his successor in the lordship of Eresby.
- ii. THOMAS, bishop of St. David's, d. 14 April, 1293.
- iii. Anthony, the celebrated bishop of Durham, and patriarch of Jerusalem. "This Anthony," says Dugdale, "was signed with the cross in the 54th HENRY III., in order to his going to the Holy Land with Prince Edward; and on the 3rd of EDWARD I., being then a clerk, was made constable of the Tower of London. Moreover, in anno 1283, being present at the translation of St. William, archbishop of York, and at the whole charge of that great solemnity (the king, queen, and many of the nobility being also there), he was then consecrated bishop of Durham, by William Wickwane, archbishop of York, in the church of St. Peter, within that city. After which, anno 1.94 (22nd EDWARD I.), the king discerning his great losses in Gascoigne, he was sent to Rodolph, king of Almaine, to make a league with him; and the same year, upon the arrival of the cardinals to treat of peace between King EDWARD and the King of France, he readily answered their proposals in the French tongue. Furthermore, in anno 1296, King EDWARD entered Scotland with a powerful army; he brought thither to him no less than 600 horse and 1,000 foot, besides a multitude of Welsh and Irish. After which, the same year, being sent ambassador into that realm, he was solemnly met by the king and nobles; and after much dispute, brought them to such an accord that they totally submitted themselves to the pleasure of King EDWARD. Also, upon that rebellion, which again broke out there the next year following (at which time they used great cruelties to the English), he was again sent thither to inquire the truth, and to advertise the king thereof. And in the 26th of EDWARD I. was again sent into Scotland, with certain forces, at which time he assailed the castle of Dulton, and took it. And lastly, in 33rd of EDWARD I., being with the Earl of Lincoln, and some other bishops, sent to Rome, to present divers vessels of pure gold from King EDWARD to the Pope, his holiness taking especial notice of his courtly behaviour and magnanimity of spirit, advanced him to the title of 'Patriarch of Jerusalem.'"

"Amongst other works of this great prelate," continues Dugdale, "he founded the collegiate churches of Chester and Lancaster, as also the collegiate chappel at Bishops-Auckland, all in the county palatine of Durham. Moreover, it is reported that no man in all the realm, except the king, did equal him for habit, behaviour, and military pomp, and that he was more versed in state affairs than in ecclesiastical duties; ever assisting the king most powerfully in his wars; having sometimes in Scotland 26 standard-bearers, and of his ordinary retinue 140 knights; so that he was thought to be rather a temporal prince than a priest or bishop; and lastly, that he d. 3 March, 1310, and was buried above the high altar in his cathedral of Durham." This prelate was the first bishop that presumed to lie in the church, on account of the interment of the holy St. Cuthbert, and so superstitious were they in those days that they dared not bring in the remains at the doors, but broke a hole in the wall, to convey them in at the end of the church, which breach is said to be still visible.

BECHE—BARONS LA BECHE.

By Writ of Summons, dated 25 February, 1342.

Lineage.

Of this family, De la Beche, of Aldworth, co. Bucks,

NICHOLAS DE LA BECHE was constituted constable of the Tower of London in the 9th of EDWARD III., and had a grant from the crown in two years afterwards of the manor of Whitchurch, with other lands. About this period, too, he obtained license to encastellate his houses at De La Beche, Beaumys, and Watlington. He was subsequently distinguished in the wars in Brittany, and was summoned to Parliament as a baron on 25 February, 1342. In 1343 his lordship became seneschal of Gascony, and the next year was constituted one of the commissioners to treat with ALPHONSE, king of Castile, touching a marriage between the eldest son of that monarch and Joane, dau. of the king of England.

Lord de la Beche d. in 1347, and leaving no issue, the Barony EXPIRED, but the estates passed to the sisters of John de la Beche, who d. nineteen years previously, and is supposed to have been the elder brother of the baron; consequently the co-heiresses were his lordship's sisters likewise. Of those ladies, the elder, JOAN, m. 1st, Sir Andrew Sackville, and 2ndly, Sir Thomas Langford; and the younger m. Robert Danvers.

Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 1st, 9 April, 1689; 2ndly, 15 June, 1774.

Lineage.

This eminent Norman family deduced an uninterrupted descent from

BELASIUS, one of the commanders in the army of 'the Conqueror, distinguished for having suppressed the adherents of Edgar Ethling, in the Isle of Ely, whence the spot where he had pitched his camp was named Belasius Hill, now known by the corrupted designation of Belsar's Hill. The son of this gallant soldier,

ROWLAND, marrying Elgiva, dau. and heiress of Ralph de Belasyse, of Belasyse, co. Durham, assumed, upon succeeding to the inheritance of his wife, the surname of "Belasyse, of Belasyse," and his descendants ever afterwards adhered to the same designation, although the spelling has frequently varied. The great-grandson of this Rowland Belasyse,

SIR ROWLAND BELASYSE attained the honour of knighthood by his gallant bearing at the battle of Lewes, in the 48th of HENRY III. Sir Rowland m. Mary, dau. and heiress of Sir of the protector Cromwell. Of this nobleman Lord Clarendon gives the following account:—"After Cromwell was declared protector, and in great power, he married his dau. to the Lord

Fauconberg, the owner of a very great estate in Yorkshire, and descended of a family eminently loyal. There were many reasons to believe that this young gentleman, being then about three or four-and-twenty years of age, of great vigour and ambition, had many good purposes that he thought that alliance might qualify and enable him to perform. His marriage was celebrated at Whitehall (Wood has given the time at Hampton Court), with all imaginable pomp and lustre. And it was observed, that, though it was performed in public, according to the rites and ceremonies then in use, they were presently afterwards, in private, married by ministers ordained by bishops, and according to the form in the book of Common Prayer, and this with the privity of Cromwell." In 1657, his lordship was made one of the council of state, and sent the next year, by his father-in-law, with a complimentary message to the court of Versailles. This was the only employment Lord

Fauconberg had under the Usurper; for, as the noble author before-mentioned relates, "his domestic delights were lessened

every day; he plainly discovered that his son Fauconberg's heart was set upon an interest destructive to his, and grew to hate him perfectly." Of Lady Fauconberg, Burnet writes:—

"She was a wise and worthy woman, more likely to have maintained the post (of protector) than either of her brothers;

according to a saying that went of her, that those who wore breeches deserved petticoats better; but if those in petticoats had been in breeches, they would have held faster." That his lordship forwarded the Restoration, is evident from his being appointed, by the restored monarch, in 1660, lord-lieutenant of the bishopric of Durham, and in the same year, lord-lieutenant and custos-rotulorum of the North Riding of Yorkshire. He was soon afterwards accredited ambassador to the state of Venice and the princes of Italy, and nominated captain of the band of gentlemen pensioners. In 1679, Lord Faucon-

berg was sworn of the privy council; and again, in 1689, upon the accession of King WILLIAM and Queen MARY, when his lordship was created EARL FAUCONBERG, by letters patent, dated 9 April, in that year. He d. 31 December, 1700, and

BELASYSE—BARONS BELASYSE, OF WORLABY, IN THE COUNTY OF LINCOLN.

By Letters-Patent, dated 27 January, 1644.

Lineage.

THE HON. JOHN BELASYSE, 2nd son of Thomas, 1st Viscount Fauconberg, having distinguished himself as one of the gallant leaders of the royal army during the civil wars, was elevated to the peerage on the 27 January, 1644, as LORD BELASYSE, of Worlaby, co. Lincoln. At the commencement of the rebellion, this eminent person arrayed six regiments of horse and foot under the royal banner, and had a principal command at the battles of Edge-Hill, Newbury, and Knarlesby, and at the sieges of Reading and Bristol; and being appointed, subsequently, governor of York, and commander-in-chief of the king's forces in Yorkshire, he fought the battle of Selby with Lord Fairfax. His lordship being lieutenant-general of the counties of Lincoln, Nottingham, Derby, and Rutland, and governor of Newark, valiantly defended that garrison against the English and Scotch armies, until His Majesty came in person, and ordered it to surrender; at which time he had also the honour of being general of the king's horse-guards. In all those arduous services, General Belasyse deported himself with distinguished courage and conduct, was frequently wounded, and thrice incarcerated in the Tower of London. At the restoration of the monarchy, his lordship was made lord lieutenant of the east riding co. York, governor of Hull, general of His Majesty's forces in Africa, governor of Tangier, and captain of the king's guards of gentlemen pensioners. In the reign of King JAMES II., Lord Belasyse was first lord of the treasury. His lordship m. 1st, Jane, dau. and sole heiress of Sir Robert Boteler, Knt., of Woodhall, co. BELLOMONT—EARLS OF LEICESTER.

By Charter of Creation, dated anno 1103.

Lineage.

ROBERT DE BELLOMONT, OR BEAUMONT (son of Roger, grandson of Turlof of Pont Audomere, by Wevia, sister to Gunnora, wife of RICHARD I., Duke of Normandy), came into England with the CONQUEROR, and contributed mainly to the Norman triumph at Hastings. This Robert inherited the earldom of Mellent in Normandy, from his mother Adelina, dau. of Waleran, and sister of Hugh (who took the habit of monk in the abbey of Bec), both Earls of Mellent. Of his conduct at Hastings, William Pictavensis thus speaks: "A certain Norman young soldier, son of Roger de Bellomont, nephew and heir to Hugh, Earl of Mellent, by Adelina his sister, making the first onset in that fight, did what deserveth lasting fame, boldly charging and breaking in upon the enemy, with that regiment which he commanded in the right wing of the army," for which gallant services he obtained sixty-four lordships in Warwickshire, sixteen in Leicestershire, seven in Wiltshire, three in Northamptonshire, and one in Gloucestershire, in all ninety-one. His lordship did not however arrive at the dignity of the English peerage before the reign of HENRY I., when that monarch created him EARL OF LEICESTER. The mode by which he attained this honour is thus stated by an ancient writer: "The city of Leicester had then four lords, viz., the king, the bishop of Lincoln, Earl Simon, and Yvo, the son of Hugh de Grentemesnel. This Earl of Mellent, by favour of the king, cunningly entering it on that side which belonged to Yvo (then governor thereof, as also sheriff, and the king's farmer there), subjecting it wholly to himself; and by this means, being made an earl in England, exceeded all the nobles of the realm in riches and power." His lordship m. 1096, Isabel, dau. of Hugh, Earl of Vermandois, and had issue,

WALERAN, who s. to the earldom of Mellent.

ROBERT, successor to the English earldom.

Hugh, surnamed Pauper, obtained the EARLDOM OF BEDFORD from King STEPHEN, with the dau. of Milo de Beauchamp, upon the expulsion of the said Milo. Being a person (says Dugdale) remiss and negligent himself he fell from the dignity of an earl to the state of a knight; and in the end to miserable poverty.

With several daus., of whom,

Elizabeth, was concubine to HENRY I., and afterwards wife of Gilbert Strongbow, Earl of Pembroke.

Adeline, m. to Hugh de Montfort.

A dau., m. to Hugh de Novo Castello.

A dau., m. to William Lupellus, or Lovel.

This great earl is characterised as "the wisest of all men betwixt this and Jerusalem, in worldly affairs; famous for knowledge, plausible in speech, skilful in craft, discreetly provident, ingeniously subtle, excelling for prudence, profound in council, and of great wisdom." In the latter end of his days he became a monk in the abbey of Preaux, where he d. in 1118, and was s. in the earldom of Leicester by his 2nd son,

ROBERT (called Bossu), as 2nd earl. This nobleman stoutly adhering to King HENRY I. upon all occasions, was with that monarch at his decease in 1135, and he afterwards staunchly supported the interests of his grandson, HENRY II., upon whose accession to the throne, his lordship was constituted

Justice of England. He m. (1119) Amicia, dau. of Ralph de Waer, Earl of Norfolk, by whom he had a son, ROBERT, and two daus.; one, the wife of Simon, Earl of Huntingdon, the other of William Earl of Gloucester. The earl, who was a munificent benefactor to the church, and founder of several religious houses, d. in 1167, after having lived for fifteen years a canon regular in the abbey of Leicester, and was s. by his son,

ROBERT (surnamed Blanchmaines, from having white hands), as 3rd earl, who adhering to Prince Henry, in the 19th of HENRY II., in his rebellion, incurred the high displeasure of that monarch. The king commanding that his town of Leicester should be laid waste, it was besieged, and the greater part burnt; the inhabitants having permission for £300 to move whither they pleased. He was received however into royal favour in four years afterwards (1177), and had restoration of all his lands and castles, save the castle of Montsorel, in the co. of Leicester, and Pacey in Normandy; but surviving King HENRY, he stood in such favour with RICHARD I., that those castles were likewise restored to him, and he was appointed to carry one of the swords of state at that monarch's coronation. His lordship m. Patronil, dau. of Hugh de Grentemesnil, with whom he had the whole honour of Hinkley, and stewardship of England, and had issue,

ROBERT FITZPARNEL, his successor.

Roger, bishop of St. Andrews, in Scotland.

William, founder of the hospital of St. Leonards, at Leicester.

It is from this William that the great Scottish house of HAMILTON is said to be descended, but the statement is scarcely reconcilable with dates and circumstances. It is more probable that the ancestor of the Hamiltons, if a Bellomont, was a younger son of Robert, 2nd Earl of Leicester.

Amicia, m. to Simon de Montfort, who after the earldom of Leicester expired, with the male line of the Bellomonts, was created Earl of Leicester by King JOHN (see Montfort, Earl of Leicester).

Margaret, m. to Sayer de Quincy.

The earl d. in his return from Jerusalem, at Duras in Greece anno 1190, and was s. by his son,

ROBERT (surnamed Fitz-parnel from his mother), 4th earl, who in 1191, being at Messina, on his journey to the Holy Land, was invested into his father's earldom of Leicester, by King RICHARD, with the cincture of a sword. After which, whilst his royal master was detained in captivity by the emperor, the King of France having invaded Normandy, and taken divers places, this earl coming to Roan, excited the inhabitants to so vigorous a defence, that the French monarch was obliged to retreat. Furthermore, it is related of him, that making a pilgrimage into the Holy Land, he there unhorsed and slew the Soldan in a tournament, when returning into England, he d. in 1204, and was buried in the abbey of Leicester, before the high altar, betwixt his mother and grandfather. His lordship had m. Lauretta, dau. of William, Lord Braose, of Brember, but having no issue, the EARLDOM OF LEICESTER became EXTINCT, while his great inheritance devolved upon his two sisters as co-heirs, which was divided between them, thus—

SIMON DE MONTFORT, husband of Amicia, had one moiety of the earldom of Leicester, with the honour of Hinkley, and was created EARL OF LEICESTER; he also enjoyed the stewardship of England, as in right of the said honour of Hinkley.

SAYER DE QUINCY, husband of Margaret, had the other moiety of the earldom of Leicester, and was shortly after created EARL OF WINCHESTER. (See that dignity).

Arms.—Gu., a cinquefoil, erm., pierced of the field.

BELLOMONT—EARL OF BEDFORD.

(See Beaumont, Earl of Leicester.)

BENHALE—BARON BENHALE.

By Writ of Summons, dated 3 April, 1360.

Lineage.

ROBERT DE BENHALE, a soldier of distinction in the expedition made into France, in the 10th year of EDWARD III., and again in two years afterwards, in the expedition made into Flanders, was summoned to parliament as BARON BENHALE, on 3 April, 1360, but nothing further is known of his lordship, or his descendants, "who never," says Sir Harris Nicolas, "ranked among the barons of the realm." Banks states, however, that this Robert de Benhale was the 4th husband of Eva, dau. and heir of John, Lord Clavering, and that he d. s. p., and was buried in the Abbey of Langley.

BENSON—BARON BINGLEY.

By Letters Patent, dated 21 July, 1713.

Lineage.

ROBERT BENSON, Esq., M.P., for the city of York, son of Robert Benson, Esq., of Wrenthorn, co. York, by Dorothy, dau. of Tobias Jenkins, Esq., having filled the offices of commissioner, and chancellor, and under treasurer of the exchequer, was elevated to the peerage, as BARON BINGLEY, on 21 July, 1713. His lordship was subsequently ambassador to the court of Madrid. He m. Elizabeth, eldest dau. of Heneage Finch, 1st Earl of Aylesford, and had an only dau. and heiress.

HARRIOT, who m. George Fox Lane, Esq., M.P. for the city of York, who was created LORD BINGLEY, in 1772 (see that title.)

His lordship d. 9 April, 1730, and thus leaving no male issue, the Barony of BINGLEY became EXTINCT, while £100,000, and £7,000 a-year, devolved upon his dau., with the fine seat of Bramham Park, erected by the deceased lord.

Arms.—Arg., three trefoils in bend, sa., cotised, gu.

BERESFORD—BARON AND VISCOUNT BERESFORD.

Barony—By Letters Patent, dated 17 May, 1814.

Viscounty—By Letters Patent, dated 22 April, 1823.

Lineage.

SIR WILLIAM CARR BERESFORD, D.C.L., G.C.B., G.C.H., K.T.S., VISCOUNT BERESFORD, of Beresford, co. Stafford, and Baron Beresford, of Albuera and of Dungarvan, co. Waterford; governor of the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, a commissioner of the Royal Military College and Royal Military Asylum, a general officer in the army, governor of Jersey, and colonel of the 16th foot; Duke of Elvas, Marquess of Campo Major and Count Francozo, in Portugal, and a field-marshal in that kingdom; was illegitimate son of George de la Poer Beresford, 1st Marquess of Waterford, and was b. 2 October, 1768. At the age of seventeen he commenced his military career as ensign 6th foot; in 1793 was in the Mediterranean, at the capture of Toulon, and at Bastia in 1795; attained the rank of colonel, and, after service with Sir Ralph Abercromby, in the West Indies, commanded a brigade under Sir David Baird, in Egypt, 1799. He next participated in the reconquest of the Cape of Good Hope, and was thence sent as brigadier-general to Buenos Ayres. That disastrous expedition suffered a fearful repulse, and Beresford was taken prisoner; but in 1807, he effected his escape, and was made governor of Madeira. In the following year, he accompanied the army of Sir John Moore to Spain, fought at Corunna, and assisted in covering the final embarkation of the British force. Subsequently he returned to Portugal with the rank of major-general, to organize and command the Portuguese forces, and, in this important employment, exhibited such unwearied exertion and such sound judgment that the Portuguese became admirably efficient and contributed mainly to the victory of Busago in 1810. During the following campaigns in the Peninsula, Beresford was one of the ablest and most distinguished of Wellington's lieutenants, commanding-in-chief at the sanguinary but glorious battle of Albuera, and being present at Badajoz, Salamanca, Vittoria, the Pyrenees, Nivelle, Nive, and Orthea. For Albuera, Marshal Beresford received the thanks of parliament. In 1814, he was in command of the forces which occupied Bordeaux, and he took a prominent part in the battle of Toulouse.

In 1811 and 1812, he was elected M.P. for the co. of Waterford; in 1814, elevated to the peerage as BARON BERESFORD; in 1822, made lieutenant-general of the ordnance; in 1823 created a viscount; and appointed in 1828 quartermaster-general of the ordnance.

In further consideration of his eminent services, parliament passed a bill in 1814, granting an annuity of £2,000 to himself and his two immediate successors in the barony. His lordship m. 29 November, 1832, Louisa, widow of Thomas Hope, Esq., of Deepdene, in Surrey, and dau. of the Most Reverend Wm. (Beresford) Lord Decies, Archbishop of Tuam, but d. 8 January, 1854, having no issue.

By his will, bearing date 21 January, 1851, Lord Beresford devised his English estates—including his seat, Bodgebury

Park, Kent (anciently the residence of the Colepepers), and Beresford Hall, co. Stafford (the original home of the Beresfords), to ALEXANDER-JAMES-BERESFORD HOPE, Esq., youngest son of the late Thomas Hope, Esq., of Deepdene, co. Surrey, by his wife, the Hon. Louisa Beresford (afterwards Viscountess Beresford), dau. of the Most Rev. William Beresford Lord Decies, archbishop of Tuam. Mr. Alexander Hope assumed, in consequence, the additional and prefix surname of Beresford. His Irish estates, Lord Beresford bequeathed to DENIS WILLIAM PACK, Esq., capt. roy. art., 2nd son of the late Major-General Sir Denis Pack, K.C.B., by his wife, Lady Elizabeth Louisa de la Poer Beresford, dau. of George de la Poer Beresford, 1st Marquess of Waterford; and Captain Pack having, in obedience to Lord Beresford's testamentary injunction, taken the additional surname and arms of Beresford, is the present DENIS WILLIAM PACK-BERESFORD, Esq., of Fenagh Lodge, co. Carlow, M.P., for that county.

Arms—Arg., semée of cross-crosslets fitchée, three fleurs-de-lis, two and one, sa., within a bordure, wavy, pean.

BERKELEY—VISCOUNT BERKELEY, EARL OF NOTTINGHAM, AND MARQUESS OF BERKELEY.

Viscounty, by Letters Patent, dated 12 April, 1481.

Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 28 June, 1483.

Marquessate, by Letters Patent, dated 1488.

Lineage.

The family of Berkeley,* established in England at the Norman conquest, was founded by a leading chief in the Conqueror's army, named

ROGER, who is styled, in the 20th of WILLIAM's reign, "Roger senior de Berkele," from the possession of Berkeley Castle,† co. Gloucester. This Roger bestowed several churches upon the priory of Stanley, with the tithes and lands thereunto belonging, and being shorn a monk there, in 1091, restored the lordship of Shoteshore, which he had long detained from that convent. He was s. at his decease by his nephew,

WILLIAM DE BERKELEY, 2nd feudal lord of Berkeley Castle, who was s. by his son,

ROGER DE BERKELEY. This nobleman, adhering to the Empress MAUD (an adherence, however, denied by SMITH and FOSSBROKE, in the Lives of the Berkeleys, page 11), "underwent," says Dugdale, "a very hard fate, through the perfidiousness and cruelty of Walter, brother to Milo, Earl of Hereford, his seeming friend (and kinsman by consanguinity), being treacherously seized on, stripped naked, exposed to scorn, put into fetters, and thrice drawn by a rope about his neck, on a gallows, at his own castle gates, with threats that if he would not deliver up his castle to the earl, he should suffer a miserable death; and when he was, by this barbarous usage, almost dead, carried to prison, there to endure further tortures." This feudal baron was s. by his son,

ROGER DE BERKELEY, living in 1165 (11th HENRY II.), the last of the original family of Berkeley, of Berkeley Castle, whose dau. and heiress, Alice, at the instigation of King HENRY II., married,

MAURICE DE BERKELEY (son of Robert FitzHardinge, upon whom had been conferred, for his attachment to the Empress MAUD, the lordship of Berkeley and Berkeley Herne, the confiscated possessions of the above Roger, the adherent of King STEPHEN; but, to reconcile the parties, King HENRY, who had restored to Roger his manor and castle of Dursley, caused an agreement to be concluded between them that the heiress of the ousted lord should be given in marriage to the heir of the new baron; and thus passed the feudal castle of Berkeley to another chief, which Maurice de Berkeley became feudal lord of Berkeley upon the decease of his brother Henry, and dying in 1189, left six sons, and was s. by the eldest,

* There is a family of Berkeley or Barclay of high distinction in Scotland, viz., "the BARCLAYS of UBIE," now represented by ARTHUR KETT BARCLAY, Esq., of Bury Hill, co. Surrey, which is of the same lineage as this noble House of Berkeley.

† "The castle," says Rudder, "was begun in the 17th HENRY I., by Roger de Berkeley the 2nd, and finished by Roger the 3rd, in the reign of King STEPHEN. At first it comprehended only the inmost of the three gates and what was within the same; the two outmost, and all the buildings within them, were added by Thomas, eldest son of Robert, and by Thomas the 2nd, in the 6th EDWARD III. (1332-3), and of Thomas the 3rd (8th EDWARD III.)—SMITH and FOSSBROKE's History of the Berkeleys. A plan of the buildings is given in PARKER's Domestic Architecture, vol. iii. part 11.

ROBERT DE BERKELEY, who, in the turbulent times of King JOHN, forfeited his castle and lands by his participation in the rebellious proceedings of the barons, but upon submission, and paying a fine of £965, and one mark, had all restored save the castle and town of Berkeley, in the 1st of HENRY III. This nobleman, who had been a munificent benefactor to the church, d. s. p. in 1219, and was s. by his brother,

THOMAS DE BERKELEY, who, in the 8th of HENRY III. (1223-4), upon giving his two nephews as pledges for his fidelity, had restitution of Berkeley Castle. His lordship m. about the year 1217, Joane, dau. of Ralph de Somery, Lord of Campden, co. Gloucester, and niece of William Marshal, Earl of Pembroke, and dying, aged seventy-six, November 29, 1243, left issue, MAURICE, his heir; Thomas, d. s. p.; Robert; Henry, d. s. p.; William; Richard; and one dau. Margaret, wife of Sir Anselm Basset: the eldest son,

MAURICE DE BERKELEY, m. in 1240, Isabel, dau. of Maurice de Credonia, by his wife Isabel, sister of William de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, d. 4 April, 1281, and was s. by his 2nd son (the eldest, Maurice, having been killed in a tournament at Kenilworth),

THOMAS DE BERKELEY, b. at Berkeley in 1245, who was summoned to parliament by writ as a baron, from 23 June, 1295, to 15 May, 1321. This nobleman was of great eminence in the reigns of EDWARD I. and EDWARD II., being in the French, Welsh, and Scottish wars of those periods, particularly at the celebrated siege of Caerlaverock. He was involved, however, at the close of his life, in the treason of Thomas, Earl of Lancaster. His lordship m. circa 1267, Jane, dau. of William de Ferrars, Earl of Derby, and dying July 23, 1321 (his wife d. 19 March, 1309), left issue,

- I. MAURICE, 2nd baron, of whom later.
- II. Thomas, ancestor of the Berkeleys of Wymondham, co. Leicester, extinct in Sir Henry Berkeley, living 1622.
- III. John, d. s. p. 10th EDWARD II.
- IV. James, a bishop.
- I. Isabel, } both d. unm.
- II. Margaret, }

The eldest son,

MAURICE DE BERKELEY, 2nd baron, b. 1281, d. 1326, having m. Eve, dau. of Eudo le Zouch. He received summons to parliament from 1308 to 1321, during his father's lifetime. He had issue,

- I. THOMAS, 3rd baron, of whom later.
- II. Sir Maurice, who d. at Calais, 21st EDWARD III., having m. Margaret, dau. and heiress of Sir Maurice Berkeley, of Uley, by whom he was ancestor of the family of Stoke-Giffard.
- III. John, constable of Bristol Castle, ancestor of the Shropshire Berkeleys.
- IV. Eudo.
- V. Peter.
- I. Isabel, m. 1st, Robert, Lord Clifford; 2ndly, Thomas, Lord Musgrave.

The eldest son,

THOMAS, 3rd baron, m. 1st, Margaret, dau. of Roger Mortimer, Earl of March, and 2ndly, in 1347, Catherine, dau. of Sir John Clyvedon, widow of Sir Peter le Veil. This lord having adhered to the interests of the Queen, Mortimer, and Prince Edward, afterwards the third of that name, furnished "the only precedent," says Smith, "of a peer being tried by knights, as the peers would have been both judges and jurors." He first assumed a mitre for his crest. He was summoned to parliament from 1329 to 1360. He had issue by his 1st wife, besides his heir, three sons, who d. s. p., and one dau., Joan, wife of Sir Reginald Cobham; by his 2nd wife he had, with three sons, who d. s. p., a 4th, John, ancestor of the Berkeleys of Beverstone. He d. 1361, and was s. by his son,

MAURICE, 4th baron, b. 1330, was knighted at seven years of age, to prevent wardship, which was also avoided by early marriages, and accordingly he m. when eight years old, Elizabeth, dau. of Hugh, Lord De Spencer, whose portion was 1,000 marks, payable by half-yearly instalments of 200 marks. He was summoned to parliament from 1362 to 1368, and d. in August, 1368. He had issue, with dau., who d. unm.,

- I. THOMAS, 5th baron.
- II. Sir James, m. Elizabeth, dau. and heiress of Sir John Bluet, by whom he got Ragland, and by whom (who remarried William Thomas, a Welsh gentleman) he left at his decease, in 1405, a son,

JAMES, 6th Lord Berkeley, of whom later.

III. John d. s. p.

IV. Maurice, m. Joan, by whom he got the manors of Dodecote, &c., co. Devon, and had a son,

Maurice, living 45th EDWARD III. (1371-2).

The eldest son,

THOMAS, 5th Lord Berkeley, m. Margaret (d. aged thirty), dau. and heiress of Gerard Warren, Lord Lisle (contracted when but seven years of age, and required to remain for four years with her father), by whom he left an only child,

Elizabeth, m. to Richard Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick (also contracted when under seven years of age), and had three daus., viz.,

- I. Margaret, m. to John Talbot, 1st Earl of Shrewsbury, (his lordship's 2nd wife).
- 2 Eleanor, m. 1st, to Thomas, Lord de Roa, and 2ndly, to Edmund, Duke of Somerset.
- 3 Elizabeth, m. to John Nevill, Lord Latimer.

His lordship d., say some, on 13 July, 1416; Smith and Fosbroke say 1417, which appears more probable, but even this is not perfectly clear, as this lord received summons to parliament from 16 July, 1381, to 3 September, 1417: his nephew,

JAMES BERKELEY, became his heir; and inheriting, by virtue of a special entail and fine, the castle and lordship of Berkeley, with other lordships in the said fine specified, was summoned to parliament from 9 October, 1421, to 23 May, 1461. His lordship m. 1st, a dau. of Humphrey Stafford, of Hooke, co. Dorset, by whom he had no issue; and 2ndly, Isabel, widow of Henry, son and heir of William, Lord Ferrers, of Groby, and the dau. and co-heir of Thomas Mowbray, 1st Duke of Norfolk, earl marshal of England, by Elizabeth, his wife, eldest sister and co-heiress of Thomas FitzAlan, Earl of Arundel, by whom he had issue,

- I. WILLIAM, his successor.
- II. Maurice, successor to the barony at the decease of his brother, as 8th baron.
- III. James, killed in France.
- IV. Thomas, d. 1484, who m. Margaret, dau. of Richard Guy, Esq., of Minsterworth, and had Richard, of Dursley, husband of Margaret Dyer, and by her father of William, who m. Elizabeth Burgwash, and had Rowland, of Spetchley, M.P. for Worcester, who d. 1611, and by his wife, Catherine, dau. of Thomas Heywood, Esq., left, with others,

1 WILLIAM, of Cotheridge, b. 1582, father of Sir Rowland, one of the intended knights of the royal oak, who was succeeded by the son of his eldest dau. Elizabeth, wife of Henry Green, Esq., of Wykin, Rowland Green, who assumed the name of Berkeley, and dying in 1731, had issue, Rowland Berkeley, Esq., of Cotheridge, whose issue failed, and the Rev. Lucy Berkeley, of Great Whitley, &c., father of the Rev. Rowland Berkeley, LL.D., whose 2nd surviving son, WILLIAM BERKELEY, Esq., of Cotheridge, s. to the property in 1850. (See BURKE'S Landed Gentry.)

2 SIR ROBERT, of Spetchley, b. 1584, who m. Elizabeth, dau. and co-heiress of Thomas Conyers, Esq., of East Barnet, and was s. by his son, Thomas, husband of Anne, dau. of William Dayrell, Esq., of Scotney (founders kin to archbishop Chicheley), and father by her of Thomas, who m. Elizabeth, dau. and heiress of William Holyoke, Esq., of Morton Bassett, and was s. at his death (1719) by his son, Thomas, who m. Mary, dau. and heiress of Robert Davis, Esq., of Clytha, and had issue, Robert, who d. s. p. 1804, and John, who, by Catherine, dau. of Charles Bodenham, Esq., had Robert, of Spetchley, m. 1792, Apollonia, dau. of Richard Lee, Esq., of Llanfoist, co. Monmouth, and left an only surviving son, ROBERT BERKELEY, Esq., of Spetchley. (See BURKE'S Landed Gentry.)

- I. Elizabeth, m. to Thomas Burdett, Esq., of Arrow, co. Warwick.
- II. Isabel, m. to Thomas Trye, Esq., of Hardwick, co. Gloucester.

* "According to the usual descents of baronies in fee (says Nicolas, in a note to his Synopsis), the barony of Berkeley, created by writ of summons of the 23rd EDWARD I., devolved on the said Elizabeth, dau. and heir of Thomas, Lord Berkeley, instead of the heir male; but whether this anomaly arose from an idea then prevailing, that the tenure of the castle of Berkeley conferred the barony, or that the heir male had the greatest political influence, cannot now, perhaps, be ascertained; the inference which may be drawn from the relative situations of the husband of the said Elizabeth, who was one of the most powerful noblemen of the time, and that of James Berkeley, who succeeded to the barony, is, that the tenure of Berkeley Castle was then considered to confer the dignity of baron on its possessor, and consequently that the said James was allowed that dignity as his right rather than by favour of the crown. If, however, modern decisions may be applied to the subject, the barony of Berkeley created by the writ of the 23rd EDWARD I. is now in ABEYANCE between the descendants and representatives of the three daus. and co-heirs of Elizabeth, Countess of Warwick, above mentioned; and the barony merged in the present Earldom of Berkeley is the new one created by the writ of the 6th of HENRY V. to James Berkeley."

III. Alice, m. to Richard Arthur, Esq., of Clapton, co. Somerset.

His lordship m. 3rdly, Joan (by whom he had no issue, and whose portion was 100 marks), dau. of John Talbot, 1st Earl of Shrewsbury, which lady, after his decease, m. Edmund Hungerford, Esq. Lord Berkeley d. 22 October, 1463, and was s. by his eldest son,

SIR WILLIAM DE BERKELEY, Knt., 7th Baron Berkeley, who had been, when a boy, in the retinue of Henry Beaufort, cardinal bishop of Winchester. This nobleman having a dispute with Thomas Talbot, Viscount Lisle, regarding some landed property, the contest ran so high, that they encountered, with their respective followers, at Wotton-under-Edge, in 1463, when Lord Lisle was mortally wounded by an arrow shot through his mouth. In the next year, when the Duke of Clarence and the Earl of Warwick took up arms against the king, we find Lord Berkeley commanded, with Maurice Berkeley, of Beverstone, to muster and array all fitting to bear arms in the county of Gloucester; and so great a regard had King EDWARD IV. for his lordship that he created him Viscount Berkeley, on 21 April, 1481, with a grant of 100 marks per annum, payable out of the customs of the port of Bristol, for life. The viscount was advanced to the Earldom of Nottingham (a dignity enjoyed by his ancestors, the Mowbrays), by King RICHARD III., on 28 June, 1483; but his lordship afterwards espousing the cause of the Earl of Richmond, upon the accession of that nobleman to the throne, as HENRY VII., was constituted in 1485—giving for this purpose "all his part and purpart of 27 manors in Wales and the marches adjoining Shropshire"—earl marshal of England, with limitation of that great office to the heirs male of his body; and created on 28 January, 1489-90, Marquess of Berkeley. His lordship m. 1st, Elizabeth, dau. of Reginald West, Lord de la Warre, from whom he was divorced without having issue; 2ndly, Jane, widow of Sir William Willoughby, Knt., and dau. of Sir Thomas Strangways, Knt., by whom he had Thomas and Catherine, who both died young; and 3rdly, Anne, dau. of John Fienes, Lord Dacre, but had no issue. The marquess d. s. p. on 14 February, 1492, when all the honours acquired by himself became extinct, while the barony and castle of Berkeley, with his lordship's other estates, should have devolved upon his brother Maurice—from whom the title has descended to the present time (see BURKE'S Peerage)—but for a settlement made by the deceased nobleman (who seems to have been offended with his brother for marrying lowly) of the castle of Berkeley upon King HENRY VII. and the heirs male of that monarch's body, which castle and lands were thus alienated until the decease of King EDWARD VI., the last male descendant of HENRY VII., when they returned to the house of Berkeley, and have since been enjoyed by that noble family.*

* The dispute between Viscount Lisle and William Lord Berkeley is thus mentioned by Dugdale:—"But it was not long after, ere this Viscount L'Isle arrived at his full age; and thirsting after the castle of Berkeley, practised with one Thomas Holt, the keeper of Whitley Park, and one Maurice King, porter of the castle, to betray it into his hands; one Robert Veel (the viscount's engineer) being likewise an active person in that design, giving bond to Maurice King in the sum of £100 that as soon as the work should be accomplished, he should be made keeper of Wotton Park, with the fee of five marks per annum during his life. But this plot being discovered by Maurice King so much perplexed the Viscount L'Isle, that he forthwith sent this Lord Berkeley a challenge, 'requiring him of knighthood and manhood, to appoint a day, and to meet him half way, to try their quarrel and title, to eschew the shedding of Christian blood; or to bring the same day the utmost of his power.' This letter of challenge, under the hand of that viscount, was sent 19 Martii, 10th EDWARD IV., he being then not full 22 years of age, having sued out his livery on 14 July before; and his wife then with child of her first-born. Unto which the Lord Berkeley returned this answer in writing, viz., 'that he would not bring the tenth man he could make; and bid him to meet on the morrow, at Nibley Green, by eight or nine of the clock, which standeth (saith he) on the borders of the Livelode that thou keepest untruly from me.' Whereupon they accordingly met, and the Viscount L'Isle's vizor being up, he was slain by an arrow shot through his head."

But as he d. without issue in 1776, it again fell into ABEYANCE, and so remained, until once more called out in favour of Henry Somerset, 5th Duke of Beaufort, son and heir of Charles, 4th duke, by Elizabeth (who d. in 1799), sister and sole heiress of the above mentioned Narborne, the deceased lord. The BARONY OF BOTETOURT is now therefore merged in the DUKEDOM OF BEAUFORT.

BERKELEY—BARONS BERKELEY, OF STRATTON.

By Letters Patent, dated 19 May, 1668.

Lineage.

Descended from the BARONS BERKELEY, of BERKELEY CASTLE, was

SIR RICHARD BERKELEY, Knt., of Stoke-Gifford, co. Gloucester, who d. in 1514, leaving issue by his wife, Elizabeth, dau. of Sir Humphrey Coningsby, Knt., two sons, namely, Sir John Berkeley, of Stoke-Gifford, ancestor to Lord Botetourt, and

SIR MAURICE BERKELEY, K.B., of Bruton, co. Somerset, standard-bearer to King HENRY VIII., and EDWARD VI., and to Queen ELIZABETH. Of this gentleman it is mentioned, that, in the 1st year of Queen MARY, riding casually in London, he met with Sir Thomas Wyatt at Temple Bar, and persuading him to yield himself to the queen, Sir Thomas took his advice, and, mounting behind Sir Maurice, rode to the court. Sir Maurice Berkeley m. 1st, Catherine, dau. of William Blount, Lord Mountjoy, and by her (who d. 25 February, 1559) had issue, two sons and four daus., viz.,

HENRY, of whom presently.

SIR HENRY BERKELEY, Knt., of Bruton, who m. Margaret, dau. of William Lygon, Esq., of Madresfield, co. Worcester, and was s. by his eldest son,

SIR MAURICE BERKELEY, who received the honour of knighthood from the Earl of Essex, while serving under that nobleman in the expedition to Calais, anno 1596. Sir Maurice m. Elizabeth, dau. of Sir Henry Killigrew, of Hanworth, co. Middlesex, and had issue five sons and two daus.; viz.,

1. CHARLES, who received the honour of knighthood at Bewley, in 1623, and, being eminently loyal to King CHARLES I., was sworn of the privy council upon the restoration of the monarchy, and appointed first comptroller, and then treasurer, of the household. Sir Charles m. Penelope, dau. of Sir William Godolphin, of Godolphin, co. Cornwall, Knt., and had issue,

1 Maurice, created a baronet 2 July, 1660, successor to the viscounty of Fitzhardinge, &c. at the decease of his father. He m. Anne, dau. and co-heir of Sir Henry Lee, but d. s. p.

2 CHARLES, who for his fidelity to King CHARLES II. during his Majesty's exile, and other eminent services, was created a peer of Ireland, as Baron Berkeley, of Rathdown, and Viscount Fitzhardinge, with remainder to his father, and his issue male; and a peer of England, 17 March, 1664, by the titles of Baron Botetourt, of Longport, co. Somerset, and Earl of Falmouth. His lordship m. Elizabeth, dau. of Colonel Hervey Bagot, 2nd son of Sir Henry Bagot, Bart., of Blithfield, co. Stafford, by whom he had an only dau.,

Mary, m. to Gilbert Cosyn Gerrard, Esq., eldest son of Sir Gilbert Gerrard, Bart., of Feakerton, co. Lincoln, from whom she was divorced in 1684, and d. in 1693.

Lord Falmouth fell in a naval engagement with the Dutch, 3 June, 1665, and his remains were honourably interred in Westminster Abbey. At the decease of his lordship, his English honours EXPIRED, while those of Ireland reverted, according to the patent, to his father, Sir Charles Berkeley.

3 William (Sir), governor of Portsmouth, and vice-admiral of the White, killed at sea in 1686.

4 John, who succeeded his eldest brother, as VISCOUNT FITZHARDINGE, was treasurer of the chamber, and one of the tellers of the exchequer, in the reign of Queen ANNE. He m. a dau. of Sir Edward Villiers, and sister to the Earl of Jersey, governess to his royal highness William, Duke of Gloucester, and had issue,

Mary, m. to Walter Chetwynd, Esq., of Ingestre, co. Stafford, who was created, in 1717, Baron Rathdown and Viscount Chetwynd, with the remainder to the heirs male of his father.

Frances, m. to Sir Thomas Clarges, Bart.

His lordship d. 19 December, 1712, and thus leaving no male issue, the Irish Barony of Berkeley, and Viscounty of Fitzhardinge, became EXTINCT.

Sir Charles Berkeley, upon the decease of his 2nd son, Charles, Earl of Falmouth, succeeding to that nobleman's Irish honours, became Baron Berkeley, of Rathdown, and Viscount Fitzhardinge, of the kingdom of Ireland; and dying 12 June, 1689, those honours descended to his eldest son, Sir Maurice Berkeley, Bart.

ii. Henry (Sir).

iii. Maurice (Sir).

iv. William (Sir).

v. John (Sir), of whom presently.

i. Margaret.

ii. Jane.

The youngest son,

SIR JOHN BERKELEY, having a command in the army raised to march against the Scots, in 1638, received the honour of knighthood from the king at Berwick, in the July of that year, and at the breaking out of the rebellion, appearing in arms for his sovereign, was one of those very good officers (as Lord Clarendon calls them), who were ordered, with the Marquess of Hertford, to form an army in the west. But, before entering upon that duty (in 1642), Sir John safely conducted a supply of arms and ammunition from the queen into Holland. Soon after this, being constituted commissary-general, he marched into Cornwall at the head of about one hundred and twenty horse, and not only secured the whole of that county, but made incursions into Devonshire; and being in joint commission with Sir Ralph Hopton, obtained divers triumphs over the insurgents of those western shires in the several battles of Braddock, Saltash, Launceston, and Stratton, as also at Modbury, co. Devon; subsequently investing Exeter, he reduced that garrison, and gallantly repulsed the enemy's fleet, then at Topsham, under the command of the Earl of Warwick; when he was constituted governor of Exeter, and general of all his majesty's forces in Devon. Sir John Berkeley stood so high in the estimation of the queen, that her majesty selected the city under his protection as the place of her accouchement, and was delivered, at Exeter, of the Princess Henrietta Maria; "Farewell, my dear heart: behold the mark which you desire to have, to know when I desire any thing in earnest. I pray begin to remember what I spoke to you concerning Jacke Berkeley, for master of the wards." Exeter subsequently surrendered to Sir Thomas Fairfax, but its governor obtained the most honourable terms for its inhabitants and garrison. Sir John Berkeley was afterwards employed with Mr. Ashburnham; in endeavouring to negotiate terms for the unfortunate CHARLES and in a statement which he has given of the affair, attributes the ruin of the king to his misplaced confidence, after his escape from Hampton Court, in Colonel Hammond, governor of the Isle of Wight, at the instigation of Ashburnham, by whom Rapin is of opinion that Charles was betrayed; but Clarendon considers Ashburnham faithful, but outwitted by Cromwell. During the usurpation, Sir John Berkeley remained in exile with the royal family, and after the death of Lord Byron, in 1652, was placed at the head of the Duke of York's family, having the management of all his receipts and disbursements. In a few years afterwards, he was elevated to the peerage by the exiled monarch, as BARON BERKELEY, of Stratton, co. Somerset (one of the scenes of his former triumphs), by letters patent, dated at Brussels in Brabant, 19 May, 1658, in the 10th year of his majesty's reign. Upon the restoration of the monarchy, his lordship was sworn of the privy council; and at the close of the year 1669, was constituted lord lieutenant of Ireland, where he landed in 1670, and continued in the government for two years, when his lordship was succeeded by the Earl of Essex. In 1675, he was accredited ambassador extraordinary to the court of Versailles, and d. 28 August, 1678. His lordship had married Christian, dau. and heiress of Sir Andrew Riccard, president of the East India Company, and widow of Henry Rich, Lord Kensington, son and heir of Henry, Earl of Holland, by whom he had three sons, all of whom eventually succeeded to the title, and one dau., Anne, married to Sir Dudley Cullum, Bart., of Hawsted, co. Suffolk. Lord Berkeley was s. by his eldest son,

CHARLES BERKELEY, 2nd baron, captain of the "Tiger" man-of-war, who d. at sea, unmarried in the twenty-fourth year of his age, 21 September, 1682, and was s. by his brother,

JOHN BERKELEY, 3rd baron, groom of the stole, and 1st gentleman of the bed-chamber to Prince George of Denmark, and in the reign of King WILLIAM, one of the admirals of the fleet, and colonel of the 2nd regiment of marines. His lordship m. Jane Martha, dau. of Sir John Temple, Knt., of East Sheen, co. Surrey (who was afterwards m. to William, Earl of Portland), by whom he had no surviving issue. He d. 27 February, 1697, and was s. by his brother,

WILLIAM BERKELEY, 4th baron, who was constituted chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, and sworn of the privy council to Queen Anne, 20 September, 1710. His lordship m. Frances, youngest dau. of Sir John Temple (aforesaid), and had issue,

- I. JOHN, his successor,
- II. William, captain of the "Tiger" man-of-war, on board of which he died, 25 March, 1733, s. p.
- III. Charles, b. 21 June, 1701, m. in 1745, Frances, dau. of Colonel John West, and dying in 1765, left one surviving child, SOPHIA, m. 1769, SIR JOHN WODEHOUSE, Bart., of Kimberley, co. Norfolk, who was created BARON WODEHOUSE in 1797.

- I. Jane, d. unm.
- II. Francis, m. 1st, 1720, to William, Lord Byron, ancestor, by her, of the subsequent LORDS BYRON; and 2ndly to Sir Thomas Hay, Bart., of Alderston, N.B.
- III. Barbara, m. in 1726, to John Trevanion, Esq., of Caerhays, co. Cornwall, by whom she had a son, William Trevanion, Esq., M.P. of Cuerhays, who d. s. p., and two daus. eventual co-heirs, viz.,

1 FRANCES, who m. John Bettesworth, Esq., LL.D., ancestor by her of the BETTESWORTH-TREVANIONS, of Cornwall; and

2 SOPHIA, who m. Admiral the Hon. John Byron, grandfather, by her, of George Gordon, LORD BYRON, the POET, and of George Anson, 7th LORD BYRON.

- IV. Anne, m. in 1737, to James Cocks, Esq., M.P. for Reigate, by whom she left at her decease in 1739, an only child,

JAMES COCKS, Esq., who d. unm., being slain at St. Cas, on the French coast, in 1758.

His lordship d. 24 March, 1740, and was s. by his eldest son,

JOHN BERKELEY, 5th baron, who was constituted, in 1743, captain of the yeomen of his majesty's guard, sworn of the privy council in 1752, and appointed captain of the band of gentlemen pensioners in 1746. His lordship was subsequently constable of the Tower of London, and lord lieutenant of the Tower Hamlets. He m., but d. s. p. 1773, when the BARONY OF BERKELEY, OF STRATTON, became extinct.

BERKELEY—EARL OF FALMOUTH.

By Letters Patent, dated 17 March, 1664.

Lineage.

CHARLES BERKELEY, Esq., 2nd son of Sir Charles Berkeley, Knt., and nephew of John, 1st Lord Berkeley, of Stratton, standing high in the favour of King CHARLES II., was elevated by that monarch to the peerage of Ireland, as Baron Berkeley and Viscount Fitzhardinge, with remainder, in default of male issue, to his father, and his male descendants; and afterwards created, 17 March, 1664, a peer of England, in the dignities of Baron Botolph, of Langport, co. Somerset, and EARL OF FALMOUTH. His lordship m. Elizabeth, dau. of Colonel Hervey Bagot, 2nd son of Sir Henry Bagot, Bart., of Blithfield, co. Stafford, by whom he had an only dau.,

Mary, who m. Gilbert Cosyn Gerrard, Esq., eldest son of Sir Gilbert Gerrard, Bart., of Feskerton, co. Lincoln, from whom she was divorced in 1684, and d. in 1693.

Lord Falmouth fell in a bloody naval engagement with the Dutch, 3 June, 1665, and his remains were honourably interred in Westminster Abbey. Dying thus without male issue, his lordship's English honours expired, while those of Ireland reverted, according to the limitation of the patent, to his father, Sir Charles Berkeley, who then became Charles, 2nd Viscount Fitzhardinge, of that realm.

BERKELEY—VISCOUNT FITZHARDINGE.

(See BERKELEY, Baron Berkeley, of Stratton, in the Peerage of England.)

BERKELEY—BARON SEGRAVE, AND EARL FITZHARDINGE.

Barony by Letters Patent, dated 10 September, 1831.

Earldom by Letters Patent, dated 17 August, 1841.

Lineage.

COLONEL WILLIAM FITZHARDINGE BERKELEY, who bore during the lifetime of his father, Frederick Augustus, 5th Earl Berkeley the courtesy-title of Viscount Dursley, and had a seat in the lower house of parliament, under that designation, presented a petition to the crown at the earl's death in 1810, for a writ of summons as EARL BERKELEY, but doubts having arisen touching the marriage upon which the petitioner's right to the peerage rested, the petition was referred to the House of Lords, and their lordships came to a resolution, that the petitioner had not substantiated his claim. Colonel Berkeley was, however, some years after, 10 September, 1831, raised to the peerage by patent as BARON SEGRAVE, of Berkeley Castle, co. Gloucester, and made EARL FITZHARDINGE, 17 August, 1841. His lordship, b. 26 September, 1786, was lord lieutenant of the co. Gloucester, and colonel of the South Gloucester Militia; he d. unm. 10 October, 1857, when his honours became extinct. His estates devolved under the entail created by the 5th earl on Admiral Sir MAURICE F. FITZ-HARDINGE BERKELEY, G.C.B., who was created Baron Fitzhardinge 5 August, 1861.

BERMINGHAM—BARONS BERMINGHAM.

By Writ of Summons, dated in 1326.

Lineage.

This family assumed its surname from the town of BERMINGHAM, in Warwickshire, which

PETER DE BERMINGHAM, steward to Gervase Paganell, Baron of Dudley, held of that nobleman in the 12th of HENRY II. (1165-6), with no less than nine knight's fees, de veteri feoffamento, of which William his father, had been enfeoffed in the reign of HENRY I. This Peter had a castle at Bermingham, which stood scarcely a bow-shot from the church to the westward and by a charter from the crown held a weekly Thursday market there, by which charter he had the liberties of Thor, Theam, Sock, Sack, Infangtheof,* to him and his heirs for ever. This Peter was s. by his son,

WILLIAM DE BERMINGHAM, who having m. Isabell, dau. of

* Toll, &c.—A power of punishing offenders within his own bounds; a power of obliging all that live in his jurisdiction to plead in his courts; a cognizance of all courts; a power to punish natives for theft.

Thomas de Estley (or Astley), a great feudal lord, and joining his father-in-law in rebellion, fell at the battle of Evesham, in the 94th of HENRY III., and was s. by his son,

WILLIAM DE BERMINGHAM, who, in the 22nd of EDWARD I., was in the expedition made then into Gascony, and in three years afterwards, he accompanied the Earl of Lincoln and Sir John de St. John to the relief of Belgrade, then besieged by the Earl of Arras. But the English army forming into two divisions, that under General St. John, in which William de Bermingham immediately served, had the misfortune to encounter the whole force of the enemy, led by the Earl of Arras himself, and to be totally routed, numbers falling in the field, and numbers being made prisoners, of which latter was this William Bermingham; to whom s. at his decease, his son,

WILLIAM DE BERMINGHAM, who was s. by his son,

WILLIAM DE BERMINGHAM, who having filled several eminent employments during the reign of EDWARD II., was summoned to parliament as BARON BERMINGHAM, in the 1st year of EDWARD III. But (says Dugdale) never afterwards, so that I shall not pursue the story of him nor his descendants any further, than to observe, that his grandson,

SIR THOMAS DE BERMINGHAM, left issue one sole dau. and heiress, Elizabeth, m. to Thomas de la Roche, of which marriage there were two daus., co-heiresses, viz.,

Elena, m. 1st, to Edward, Lord Ferrara, of Chartley, now represented by the Marquis Townshend; and 2ndly, to Philip Chetwynd.

Elizabeth, m. to George Longvill, Esq., ancestor of Charles Longvill, Baron Grey, of Ruthyn and Hastings, now represented by the Marquis of Hastings.

LODGE, in his Irish Peerage, says that "the family continued to possess the lordship of Bermingham until the reign of HENRY VIII., when Edward Bermingham, Esq., the last male heir, was wrested out of that lordship by John Dudley, afterwards Duke of Northumberland."

BERMINGHAM—BARONS ATHENRY AND EARL OF LOUTH.

Barony by Writ.

Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 3 April, 1760.

Lineage.

PIERS DE BERMINGHAM, Lord of Thetmoy in Offaley, is usually reckoned the 1st BARON of ATHENRY, and was the progenitor of this family, which was known to the Irish as MacFEORIS (MacPierce), in consequence of their descent from him. Throughout the whole of "the Annals of the Four Masters" the name of Bermingham never once occurs; notices of the family are very frequent but always under the adopted Celtic name of MacFEORIS. From this ancient family of the Berminghams is descended a branch settled in Scotland which still retains this old Celtic name of MacFEORIS, or, as they began to write it in the beginning of the 18th century, MACGEORGE. From this line descended the late ANDREW MACGEORGE, of Hillside, co. Dumbarton, writer in Glasgow (see BURKE'S Landel Gentry, ed. 1864), and the present Lieutenant-Colonel WILLIAM MACGEORGE, of Her Majesty's Indian Army. Piers de Bermingham obtained by his sword large possessions in Connaught. His younger son, JAMES, was father of Piers, feudal Baron of Thetmoy (now Monasterorris), from whom the MacFEORIS or MacYeoris, of Tipperary. His eldest son METLER, 2nd Lord Athenry acquired a large territory in Tipperary by marriage with Basilia, sister and heir of William de Wygornia (descended from Philip de Wygornia, lord deputy of Ireland), but exchanged it with Piers, Lord Bermingham, of Thetmoy for other lands. His son,

PETER DE BERMINGHAM, Lord of Athenry, summoned to parliament, d. 1307. He had issue,

I. Meller d. v. p., leaving by Joan his wife, two daus., Philippa, and Elizabeth.

II. RICHARD, of whom presently.

BERTIE — DUKES OF ANCASTER AND KESTIVEN, CO. LINCOLN, MARQUESSES OF LINDSEY.

Barony, by Writ of Summons, dated 28 July, 1313.

Marquisate, by Letters Patent, dated 29 December, 1706.

Dukedom, by Letters Patent, dated 16 July, 1715.

Lineage.

The family of LINDSEY came originally into England from Bertiland, in Prussia, with the Saxons, and obtained from one of our Saxon monarchs a castle and town in the co. Kent, which was denominated from them Bertie-stad (Saxon-town), now Bersted, near Maidstone.

It appears from an old manuscript in the Cotton Library, that

LEOPOLD DE BERTIE was constable of Dover Castle, temp. King ETHELRED, but opposing strongly the government upon some occasion, his son and heir,

LEOPOLD DE BERTIE, upon succeeding to the inheritance, apprehensive of his safety, in consequence of his father's proceedings, fled to ROBERT, King of France, and marrying a French woman, settled in that kingdom, where his posterity continued until the year 1154, when his descendant,

PHILIP BERTIE, de eadem familia, accompanying King HENRY II. to England, was restored by that monarch to his ancient patrimony in Bersted. From this Philip lineally descended

THOMAS BERTIE, Esq., of Bersted, who having "a long tyme used himself in feates of arms" was appointed by HENRY VIII. capitaneus castri de Hurst. He m. Alicia Say, and left a son and heir,

RICHARD BERTIE, Esq., b. 1518, who m. in 1553, Katherine Willoughby, Baroness Willoughby de Eresby, in her own right, and Duchess of Suffolk, in right of her 1st husband, Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, and had issue,

PEREGRINE, his successor.

Susan, m. 1st, to Reginald Grey, Earl of Kent, and 2ndly, to Sir John Wingfield.

During the reign of Queen MARY, the Duchess of Suffolk, being a zealous supporter of the Reformation, was obliged to retire, accompanied by Mr. Bertie from England, and they subsequently encountered great privations and dangers upon the continent, until received under the protection of the King of Poland, and placed by that monarch in the earldom of Crozan in Sanogulla (see "Five Generations of a Loyal House"). Mr. Bertie and his wife returned to England at Queen MARY's death. The duchess d. 19 September, 1580, and Mr. Bertie 9 April, 1582; the son,

PEREGRINE BERTIE, Baron Willoughby de Eresby, being born in the duchy of Cleves, was naturalized by patent, dated 2

August, 1559, and declared by order of Queen ELIZABETH, by the Lord Treasurer Burleigh, the Lord Chamberlain Sussex, and the Earl of Leicester, in the Star Chamber, on 11 November, 1580, entitled to the ancient Barony of Willoughby—just as those high personages were about to sit down to dinner, when his lordship was placed by them in his proper situation at table; and he took his seat in parliament on the Monday following, next to Lord Zouch, of Haringworth. His lordship was deputed in 1582 to attend, with the Earl of Leicester, and other nobles, upon the Duke of Anjou, into Antwerp, and was sent in the same year to FREDERICK, King of Denmark, with the ensigns of the order of the Garter. In the 29th of ELIZABETH (1586-7), Lord Willoughby, reputed "one of the queen's first swordsmen and a great master of the art military," was employed at the siege of Zutphen, in the Netherlands, and in an encounter with the forces of the garrison, overthrew General George Cressiak, commander-in-chief of the cavalry, and took him prisoner. His lordship, in the next year, upon the retirement of the Earl of Leicester, was appointed commander-in-chief of the English auxiliary forces in the United Provinces, and most valiantly defended Bergen-op-Zoom against the Prince of Parma. He subsequently commanded an English army sent into France, in aid of the King of Navarre. Of this nobleman Sir Robert Naunton speaks with high commendation, in his Fragmenta Regalia. His lordship m. Mary, dau. of John Vere, Earl of Oxford, sister and heiress of the whole blood to Edward, 17th Earl of Oxford, and had issue five sons and one dau.,

I. ROBERT, his successor.

II. Peregrine, K.B., m. Margaret, dau. of Nicholas Saunderson, Viscount CASTLETON, and d. 1640, having had issue, Nicholas, of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, who d. January, 1671.

He m. Mary, dau. of Edward Raybone, of Chard, co. Somerset, and had a son Peregrine, b. 14 January, 1655, and d. in 1721, leaving issue, Peregrine, from whom the Berties of Low Layton, co. Essex, are descended.

III. Henry, m. Dorothy, dau. of Corbet, of Clipstow, co. Rutland, and was ancestor of the Berties of Lound, co. Lincoln.

IV. Vere.

V. Roger.

I. Catherine, who m. Sir Lewis Watson, of Rockingham Castle, co. Northampton, afterwards Lord Rockingham.

Lord Willoughby d. in 1601, and was s. by his eldest son,

ROBERT BERTIE, as 10th Baron Willoughby de Eresby. This nobleman claimed the earldom of Oxford, and the baronies of Bulbec, Sandford and Badlesmere, with the office of Lord High Chamberlain of England, in the right of his mother, but succeeded in establishing his right to the chamberlainship only; he was, however, created EARL OF LINDSEY, 22 November, 1626, and in four years after elected a knight of the most noble order of the Garter. In the 7th of CHARLES I. he was constituted constable of England, for the trial of Lord Rea and David Ramsey. In the 11th of the same reign, he was made Lord High Admiral; and in 1639, upon the Scots taking up arms, he was appointed governor of Berwick. His lordship was chosen general of the king's forces at the breaking out of the civil war, and fell at the battle of Edge Hill, in 1642. Lord Willoughby m. Elizabeth, only child of Edward, 1st Lord Montague, of Boughton, and grand-dau., maternally, of Sir John Jefferies, Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, and by her (who d. 30 November, 1654), had issue,

Mary, m. 1st, to the Rev. John Hewit, D.D., beheaded for his loyalty to King CHARLES I., and 2ndly, to Sir Abraham Shipman, Knt.

His lordship was s. by his eldest son,

MONTAGU BERTIE, 2nd earl, who commanded the king's royal regiment of guards, at Edge Hill, and being near his gallant father, when that nobleman fell wounded into the hands of the enemy, voluntarily surrendered himself to a commander of the horse on the rebel side, in order to be in attendance upon his afflicted parent. Being afterwards exchanged, he continued zealously to support the royal cause, and at the head of the guards fought at the three battles of Newberry, at Cropredy, at Lostwithiel, and at the fatal fight of Naseby, where he was wounded; nor did he forsake his royal master to the very last, for being one of the lords of the bedchamber, and of the privy council, he attended personally upon the unhappy monarch, until his majesty put himself into the hands of the Scots. After the death of the king, Lord Lindsey compounded for his estate, and lived in privacy until the restoration of the monarchy, when he was called to the privy council, and elected a knight of the most noble order of the Garter. His lordship had the honour and gratification too of officiating at the coronation of King CHARLES II., as LORD HIGH CHAMBERLAIN OF ENGLAND. The earl m. 1st, Martha, dau. of Sir William Cockain, of Rushton, co. Northampton, Knt., and widow of James Ramsay, Earl of Holderness, by whom (who d. in July, 1641) he had,

BERTRAM—BARONS BERTRAM, OF MITFORD.

By Writ of Summons, dated 14 December, 1264.

Lineage.

At the time of the Conquest the castle of Mitford, in Northumberland, was held by Sir John de Mitford, whose only dau. and heiress, SYBILLA MITFORD, was given in marriage by the Conqueror to a Norman knight of the name of Richard Bertram, and from this alliance sprang the Lords Bertram, of Mitford. From Matthew, the brother of Sir John de Mitford, descend the Mitfords, now of Mitford Castle, Northumberland, the Mitfords of Pithill, co. Sussex, the Mitfords of Exbury, Hants, the Mitfords, Lords Redesdale, &c. In the reign of King HENRY I.,

WILLIAM BERTRAM (son of Richard Bertram, by Sybilla Mitford his wife), founded, with the approbation of his wife and sons, the Augustinian Priory of BRINKBURN, in Northumberland, m. Hawyse, dau. of Sir William Merley, of Morpeth, and left issue, ROGER, Guy, William, and Richard. The eldest son,

ROGER BERTRAM, in the 12th of HENRY II., upon the assessment in aid of the marriage portion of the king's dau., certified his knight's fees to be six and a half; and, in the 18th of the same monarch, paid £6 10s. scutage for not going in person, nor sending soldiers, upon the expedition then made into Ireland. To this feudal lord s. his son and heir, by Ada, his wife,

WILLIAM BERTRAM, who obtained a grant from the crown, in the 5th year of King JOHN, of the manor of Felton, in Northumberland, with all the woods thereunto belonging. He m. Alice, dau. of Robert de Umfravil, and d. in or before the 7th year of the same reign, for at that time we find King JOHN conferring the wardship of his lordship's son and heir, ROGER, upon Peter de Brus, with the custody of his lands during the minority, in consideration of the sum of 300 marks. To the possession of which lands succeeded, when at full age, the said

ROGER BERTRAM. This feudal lord being involved in the proceedings of the barons, in the 17th King JOHN, 1215-16, his castle and lands of Mitford were seized, and conferred upon Philip de Ulecotes; but afterwards making his peace, and Philip de Ulecotes not seeming willing to obey the king's mandate in restoring those lands, he was threatened with the immediate confiscation of his own territorial possessions in the co. of York, Nottingham, and Durham. After this period Roger Bertram appears to have enjoyed the royal favour; and in the 13th of HENRY III., when ALEXANDER of Scotland was to meet the English monarch at York, he was one of the great northern barons who had command to attend him thither. He d. in 1241, and was s. by his son,

ROGER BERTRAM, who, in the 42nd of HENRY III., had command, with other great barons of the north, to march into Scotland for the rescue of the young King of Scots, the King of England's son-in-law, out of the hands of his rebellious subjects; but, in the 48th of the same monarch, being in arms with the other rebellious barons, he was taken prisoner at Northampton, and his castle of Mitford seized upon by the escheator of the crown,* while he was himself committed to the custody of William de Valence. He must, however, have made his peace very soon afterwards, for we find him summoned to parliament as a

BARON (the first by writ,) in the next year, 14 December, 1264. His lordship had issue, by Joan, his wife (who m. 2ndly, Robert de Neville),

ROGER, his successor.

Agnes, m. to Thomas Fitz-William, Lord of Elmeley and Sprotborough, co. York, and had issue,

WILLIAM FITZ-WILLIAM, who was succeeded by his son,

WILLIAM FITZWILLIAM (from whom the extant Earls Fitz-William descend), one of the co-heirs of the BARONY and estates at the decease of his cousin, AGNES BERTRAM.

Isabel, m. to Philip Darcy, and had Norman Darcy, who was s. by his son,

PHILIP DARCY, one of the co-heirs of the BARONY and estates at the decease of his cousin, AGNES BERTRAM. He d. young and s. p.

Christian, m. to Penulbury, and had a son,

ELIAS DE PENULBURY, one of the co-heirs to the BARONY and lands, at the decease of his cousin, AGNES BERTRAM.

Ada, m. to — de Vere, and had a dau., Isabel, whose son,

GILBERT DE ATON, was one of the co-heirs to the BARONY and lands, at the decease of his cousin, AGNES BERTRAM.

The baron was s. at his decease by his son,

ROGER BERTRAM, 2nd baron, but never summoned to parliament. This nobleman d. in 1311, leaving, by Eva his wife, an only dau. and heiress,

AGNES BERTRAM, at whose decease, without issue, the BARONY OF BERTRAM OF MITFORD fell into ABEYANCE, between her ladyship's cousins and co-heirs, mentioned above, and so continues amongst their representatives.

BIGOD—EARLS OF NORFOLK.

By creation of King STEPHEN, and also of King HENRY II.

Lineage.

The first of this great family that settled in England, was ROGER BIGOD, who in the CONQUEROR's time possessed six lordships in Essex, and a hundred and seventeen in Suffolk, besides divers manors in Norfolk. This Roger adhering to the party that took up arms against WILLIAM RUFUS, in the 1st year of that monarch's reign, fortified the castle at Norwich, and wasted the country around. At the accession of HENRY I. being a witness of the king's laws, and staunch in his interests, he obtained Framlingham in Suffolk, as a gift from the crown. We find further of him that he founded, in 1103, the abbey of Whetford, in Norfolk, and that he was buried there at his decease in four years after, leaving, by Adeliza his wife, dau. and co-heir of Hugh de Grentemesnil, high steward of England, a son and heir,

WILLIAM BIGOD, steward of the household to King HENRY I., one of the unhappy persons who perished with the king's children and several of the nobility in the memorable shipwreck which occurred in the 20th of that monarch's reign. This feudal lord leaving no issue his great possessions devolved upon his brother,

HUGH BIGOD, also steward to King HENRY I., who being mainly instrumental in raising Stephen, Earl of Bologne, to the throne, upon the decease of his royal master was rewarded by the new king with the EARLDOM OF THE EAST ANGLER, commonly called NORFOLK, and by that designation we find him styled in 1140 (6th STEPHEN). His lordship remained faithful in his allegiance to King STEPHEN through the difficulties which afterwards beset that monarch, and gallantly defended the castle of Ipswich against the Empress MAUD and her son, until obliged at length to surrender for want of timely relief. In the 12th HENRY II. this powerful noble certified his knight's fees to be one hundred and twenty-five "de veteri feoffamento," and thirty-five "de novo," upon the occasion of the assessment in aid of the marriage of the king's daughter; and he appears to have acquired at this period a considerable degree of royal favour, for we find him not only re-created EARL OF NORFOLK, by charter, dated at Northampton, but by the same instrument obtaining a grant of the office of steward, to hold in as ample a manner as his father had done in the time of HENRY I. Notwithstanding, however, these and other equally substantial marks of the king's liberality, the Earl of Norfolk sided with Robert, Earl of Leicester, in the insurrection incited by that nobleman in favour of the king's son (whom HENRY himself had crowned,) in the 19th of the monarch's reign; but his treason upon this occasion cost him the surrender of his strongest castles, and a fine of 1,000 marks. After which he went into the Holy Land with the Earl of Flanders, and died in 1177. His lordship had married twice; by his 1st wife, Julian, dau. of Alberic de Vere, he had a son, ROGER; and by his 2nd, Gundred, he had two sons, Hugh and William. He was s. by his eldest son,

ROGER BIGOD, 2nd earl, who, in the 1st year of RICHARD I., had a charter dated at Westminster, 27 November, reconstituting him EARL OF NORFOLK, and steward of the household, his lordship obtaining at the same time restitution of some manors, with grants of others, and confirmation of all his widespread demesnes. In the same year he was made one of the ambassadors from the English monarch to PHILIP of France, for obtaining aid towards the recovery of the Holy Land. Upon the return of King RICHARD from his captivity, the Earl of Norfolk assisted at the great council held by the king at Nottingham; and at his second coronation, his lordship was one of the four earls that carried the silken canopy over the monarch's head. In the reign of King JOHN he was one of the barons that extorted the great CHARTERS OF FREEDOM from that prince, and was amongst the twenty-five lords appointed to enforce their fulfilment. His lordship m. Isabel, dau. of Hamelyn, Earl of Warrenne and Surrey, and had issue,

HUGH, his successor.

William, m. Margaret dau. of Robert de Sutton, with whom he acquired considerable property.

Thomas.

Margery, m. to William de Hastings.

Adeliza, m. to Alberic de Vere, Earl of Oxford.

Mary, m. to Ralph Fitz-Robert, Lord of Middleham.

The earl d. in 1220, and was s. by his eldest son,

HUGH BIGOD, 3rd earl, who m. Maud, eldest dau. of William Mareschal, Earl of Pembroke, and by her (who m. 2ndly, William Earl of Warrenne and Surrey,) had issue,

1. ROGER, his successor.

II. Hugh, an eminent lawyer, appointed CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND by the barons in 1257. He m. 1st, Joane, dau. of Robert Burnet, by whom he had issue,

1 ROGER, successor to his uncle in the earldom.

2 John.

He m. 2ndly, Joane, dau. of Nicholas Stuteville, and widow of — Wake, but had no issue. His lordship fell under the baronial banner at the battle of Lewes.

III. Ralph, m. Berta, dau. of the Baron Furnival, and had a dau.,

Isabel, who m. 1st, Gilbert, son of Walter de Lacy, Lord of Meath, in Ireland; and 2ndly, John Fitz Geoffrey.

His lordship, who was also one of the twenty-five barons appointed to enforce the observance of MAGNA CHARTA, d. in 1225, and was s. by his eldest son,

ROGER BIGOD, 4th earl, whose guardianship ALEXANDER, King of Scotland, obtained for 500 marks. This nobleman attained high reputation in all martial and warlike exercises. Skillful and valiant alike in the tilting and battle field, he held a high rank amongst the chivalrous spirits of his day, and won many a trophy in court and camp. In the tournament held at Blithe, in Nottingham (21st HENRY III., 1237), which terminated in a conflict between the southern and northern lords, the Earl of Norfolk was pre-eminently distinguished, and in a few years afterwards he gained new laurels at the battle of Zantoigne. But the most remarkable event in his lordship's life was his personal dispute with King HENRY III., as thus stated by Dugdale:—"In the 39th HENRY III. the Earl of Norfolk, making a just apology for Robert de Ros (a great baron of that age), then charged with some crime, which endangered his life, he had very harsh language given him by the king, being openly called traytor; whereat, with a stern countenance, he told him (the king) that he lied; and, that he never was, nor would be a traytor; adding, 'if you do nothing but what the law warranteth, you can do me no harm.'—"Yes," quoth the king, 'I can thrash your corn, and sell it, and so humble you.' To which he replied, 'If you do so, I will send you the heads of your thrashers.' But by the interposing of the lords then present this heat soon passed over, so that (shortly after) he was, together with the Earl of Leicester and some others, sent on an embassy to the King of France, to treat with him for restoring some rights which he withheld from the king." His lordship was subsequently appointed by the barons, after their victory at Lewes (48th HENRY III.), governor of the castle of Orford, in Suffolk. To this nobleman, by reason of his mother Maud being the eldest co-heiress of William Mareschal, Earl of Pembroke, the MARSHALSHIP OF ENGLAND, with the rights thereunto belonging, was assigned. His lordship m. Isabel, sister of ALEXANDER, King of Scotland, but died issueless in 1270, when all his honours and possessions devolved upon his nephew (refer to Hugh, 2nd son of the 3rd earl),

ROGER BIGOD, 5th Earl of Norfolk, and 2nd earl marshal of this family. This nobleman took a distinguished part in the wars of King EDWARD I., having previously, however, in conjunction with the Earl of Hereford, compelled even that resolute monarch to ratify the GREAT CHARTER AND CHARTER OF THE FOREST. His lordship m. 1st, Aliva, dau. and heiress of Philip, Lord Bassett, and widow of Hugh Despencer, slain at Evesham, and 2ndly, Joane, dau. of John de Avenne, Earl of Bayonne, but had no issue by either. In the 29th of EDWARD I. the earl constituted that monarch his heir, and surrendered into his hands the marshal's rod, upon condition that it should be returned in the event of his having children, and that he should receive £1,000 prompt, and £1,000 a-year for life; in consequence of which surrender his lordship was re-created EARL OF NORFOLK in 1302, with remainder to his heirs male by his 1st wife, but dying without issue, as stated above, in five years afterwards, the EARLDOM became (according to the surrender) EXTINCT in the BIGOD family, although his lordship left a brother,

JOHN BIGOD, his heir-at-law, whose right seems to have been annihilated in this very unjust and extraordinary manner, and so completely destroyed that he did not even inherit any of the great estates of his ancestors.

BLOUNT—BARONS MOUNTJOY, OF THURVESTON, CO. DERBY, AND EARL OF DEVON.

Barony, by Charter, dated 20 June, 1465.

Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 21 July, 1603.

Lineage.

The origin of this most ancient and distinguished family is traced from the COUNTS OF GUINES, in Picardy, a race of nobles descended from the Scandinavian rulers of Denmark. Rodolph, 3rd Count of Guisnes, had three sons, by his wife Rosetta, dau. of the Count de St. Pol, all of whom accompanied WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR in his expedition against England, in 1066, and contributing to the triumph of their chief, shared amply in the spoils of conquest. One of the brothers returned to his native country; the other two adopted that which they had so gallantly helped to win, and abided there. Of these, Sir William le Blount, the younger, was a general of foot at Hastings, and was rewarded by grants of seven lordships in Lincolnshire; his son was seated at Saxlingham, in Norfolk, and the great-granddau. of that gentleman, sole heiress of her line, Maria le Blount, marrying, in the next century, Sir Stephen le Blount, the descendant and representative of her great-great-great-uncle, Sir Robert le Blount, united the families of the two brothers.

SIR ROBERT LE BLOUNT had the command of the CONQUEROR's ships of war, and is styled "Dux Navium Militarium." His portion of the spolia optima embraced thirteen manors in Suffolk, in which county he was the 1st feudal Baron of Ixworth (the place of his residence), and Lord of Orford Castle. He m. Gundreda, youngest dau. of Henry, Earl Ferrers, and had a son and heir,

GILBERT LE BLOUNT, 2nd Baron of Ixworth, who came into England with his father. This feudal lord founded a priory of black canons at Ixworth, and marrying Alicia de Colekirke, was s. by his son,

WILLIAM LE BLOUNT, 3rd Lord of Ixworth, temp. HENRY II., who rebuilt the priory of Ixworth, which had been destroyed during the contest between the Empress MAUD and King STEPHEN. By his wife, Sarah, dau. of Hubert de Monchenai, he was father of

GILBERT OF HUBERT LE BLOUNT, 4th Baron, living 20th HENRY II. (1173), who m. Agnes de L'Isle (de Inaula), alive 10th RICHARD I. (1198), and had two sons, viz.,

1. WILLIAM, b. in 1153, who s. as 5th LORD OF IXWORTH, and, marrying Cecilia de Vere, had issue,

1 WILLIAM, his successor.

1 Agnes, m. to Sir William de Cricelot; and Roisia, m. to Robert de Valoings, Lord of Orford, in Suffolk, co-heirs to Muir brother.

This Baron d. at the age of thirty-two, in 1185, and was s. by his son,

WILLIAM LE BLOUNT, 6th Lord of Ixworth, who was standard-bearer to Simon de Montfort, Earl of Leicester, and fell at Lewes on 14 May, 1264. He was afterwards attainted in parliament, when the Barony of Ixworth became FORFEITED. He had m. Alicia de Capella (who lived to the 10th EDWARD I., anno 1281), but having no issue, his sisters became his co-heirs.

II. STEPHEN (Sir), of whose line we treat.

The chief branch of the family, the Barons of Ixworth, having, as just stated, EXPIRED with the 6th feudal lord, at the battle of Lewes, the representation devolved upon the line of the younger son of Gilbert, by Agnes de L'Isle, viz.,

SIR STEPHEN LE BLOUNT, living in the 10th RICHARD I., anno 1198. He m. his kinswoman, Maria le Blount, sole dau. and heiress of Sir William le Blount, the descendant and representative of Sir William le Blount, of Saxlingham, in Suffolk, one of the brothers who came over with the CONQUEROR, and thus the lines of the brothers merging formed the parent stock, whence have since sprang the different families of the name. Of this marriage there were two sons, Sir John Blount (the younger), who m. Constance, one of the sisters and co-heirs of Sir Richard de Wrotham, justice of the Common Pleas, and the son and heir,

SIR ROBERT LE BLOUNT, who was a witness to the charter of Wilton Abbey, in Staffordshire, in the 8th HENRY III. (anno 1223). He m. Isabel, dau. and co-heir of the feudal lord of Odiñsela, and acquired the manor of Belton, co. Rutland, as a part of the lady's portion. He d. in the 17th EDWARD I. (anno 1288), leaving two sons, viz.,

- I. RALPH (Sir), Lord of Belton, who recovered lands 14th EDWARD I. (anno 1285), in Saxlingham, which had been his grandfather's. He m. Cecilia or Alicia, dau. and co-heir of Sir John Lovet, of Hampton Lovet, co. Worcester, and was grandfather of Sir Thomas Blount, summoned to parliament as BARON BLOUNT, of Belton, in the 1st EDWARD III. (anno 1327), and of NICHOLAS LE BLOUNT, who adopted the surname of CROKE, and was ancestor of the Crokes of Studley Priory.

II. WILLIAM (Sir).

The younger,

SIR WILLIAM LE BLOUNT, m. the Lady Isabel de Beauchamp, dau. of William, 1st Earl of Warwick, and widow of Henry Lovet, of Elmley Lovet, co. Worcester, and d. 9th or 10th of EDWARD II. (1315 or 1316), having had issue,

PETER, one of the chamberlains in 1313 to King EDWARD II., d. s. p.

WALTER, of whom we treat.

The 2nd son,

SIR WALTER LE BLOUNT, of the Rock, co. Worcester, m. JOHANNA, 3rd sister and co-heir of SIR WILLIAM DE SODINGTON, who d. 30th EDWARD I. (anno 1301), and thus became proprietor of the manor of Sodington, co. Worcester. He d. in 1322, and was s. by his son,

SIR WILLIAM LE BLOUNT, of Sodington, who had a command in Scotland in 1335. He m. Margaret, 3rd dau. and co-heir of Theobald de Verdon, Lord of Alton Castle, co. Stafford, lord justice of Ireland. The lady was b. in 1310; there was no issue of the marriage, and Sir William dying, 11th EDWARD II. (anno 1337), seized of the castle of Woobly, in Herefordshire, Batterby, and lands in Fenton, Romesore, and Biddulph, in Staffordshire, Sodington and Timberlake, in Worcestershire, was s. by his brother,

SIR JOHN LE BLOUNT, then thirty-nine years of age, who was in the service of the Earl of Lancaster, and had obtained from that nobleman a grant for life of the manor of Passingham, co. Northampton. He had also lands from the earl in Holland and Duffield, co. Derby, and Tiberton, in Gloucestershire. He had two wives, 1st, ISOLDA, dau. and heir of Sir Thomas de Mountjoy, by whom he acquired a large accession of estates, and had issue,

JOHN (Sir), who m. twice, 1st, Juliana, dau. of — Foulhurst, and 2ndly, Isabella, dau. and heir of Sir Bryan Cornwall, of Kinlet. By the 2nd he was ancestor of the BLOUNTS of Kinlet, co. Salop, whose heir-general is WILLIAM LACON CHILDE, Esq., of Kinlet. By his 1st wife, Juliana Foulhurst, Sir John had a son,

JOHN BLOUNT, of Sodington, ancestor of the BLOUNTS, Baronets of Sodington.

Walter, d. s. p.

Sir John Blount's 2nd wife was Eleanor, 2nd dau. of John Beauchamp, of Hache, co. Somerset, and widow of John Meriet, of Meriet, in the same shire. By this lady he left at his decease, 32nd HENRY III. (1358), a son, the heroic

SIR WALTER BLOUNT, so celebrated for his martial prowess in the warlike times of EDWARD III., RICHARD II., and HENRY IV., and immortalized by the muse of Shakespeare for his devotion, even unto death, to King HENRY. Sir Walter fell at the battle of Shrewsbury, 22 June, 1403, wherein, being standard bearer, he was arrayed in the same armour as his royal master, and was slain, according to the poet, in single combat, by the Earl of Douglas, who had supposed he was contending with the king himself.

In 1367 we find Sir Walter accompanying the BLACK PRINCE and his brother, the DUKE OF LANCASTER (John of Gaunt), upon the expedition into Spain to aid PETER THE CRUEL, King of Castile, and assisting on 3 April in that year at the battle of Najara, which restored PETER to his throne. Thenceforward for a series of years, indeed until the prince's decease, he appears to have been immediately and confidentially attached to the duke, having chosen his wife, whom he m. about the year 1372, from amongst the ladies in the suite of CONSTANTIA OF CASTILE (eldest dau. of PETER, and his successor on the throne, who became the royal consort of JOHN OF GAUNT) when the princess visited England in 1369. In 1396 the duke granted 100 marks a-year to Sir Walter for the good services which had been rendered to him by the knight and his wife, the Lady Sancha. The Lady Sancha's maiden designation was DONNA SANCHA DE AYALA; she was the dau. of DON DIEGO GOMEZ DE TOLEDO, alcalde mayor and chief justice of Toledo, and notario mayor or principal secretary of the kingdom of Castile, by his wife, Inez Alfon de Ayala, one of the most ancient and illustrious houses in Spain. JOHN OF GAUNT, at his decease, appointed Sir Walter one of his executors, and bequeathed him a legacy of 100 points, £ 6 6s. 8d.

In 1374, Sir Walter's half-brother, Sir John Blount, of Sodington, conveyed to him numerous manors, which he had inherited from his mother, Isolda, heiress of the Mountjoy family. In 1381 he became proprietor, by purchase, of the large estates of the BAKEFUTE family, in co. Derby, Stafford, Leicester, and Hertford. In 1386 he obtained a charter for a fair and free warren in his demesne lands at Barton, and other manors in Derbyshire. In 1399 he was ranger of Needwood Forest and knight of the shire for co. Derby. By his wife, Donna Sancha, who survived him, and lived until 1418, he left issue,

- I. JOHN (Sir), his heir, one of the great warriors who have immortalized the reign and times of HENRY V.
- II. THOMAS (Sir), successor to his brother.
- III. James (Sir), who m. Anne, dau. of Roger Parker, Esq., of Lillinghall, and was father of Roger Blount, of Grendon, ancestor of the BLOUNTS of Grendon, Eldersfield, Orleton, &c.; the present male representative of the BLOUNTS of Orleton, co. Hereford, is WILLIAM BLOUNT, Esq., of that place.
- IV. Peter, d. s. p.
- I. Constantia, m. to John Sutton, Lord Dudley.
- II. Anne, m. to Thomas Griffith, of Wichnor, co. Salop, living in 1416.

Sir Walter was s. by his eldest son,

SIR JOHN BLOUNT, K.G., who was governor of Calais, and defeated in Aquitaine, in 1412, a French army commanded by a marshal of France, for which achievement he was created a knight of the Garter the next year. In 1418, when Rouen was besieged by King HENRY V., Sir John Blount assisted at the siege. He d. without issue, and was s. by his brother,

SIR THOMAS BLOUNT, treasurer of Normandy, who was then seated at Elwaston, in Derbyshire, and to whom the Duke of Exeter gave 1,000 marks (£666 6s. 8d.) to found a charity at Leicester. Sir Thomas m. 1st, Margaret, dau. of Sir Thomas Greaseley, Knt., of Greaseley, and dying in 1466, left issue,

- I. WALTER (Sir), Lord High Treasurer of England, of whose line we treat.
- II. THOMAS (Sir), of Milton Ross, co. Leicester, ancestor of the BLOUNTS of Maple Durham, co. Oxford, still resident at that ancient seat. (See BURKE'S Landed Gentry.)
- I. Elizabeth, m. to Ralph Shirley, of West Heston, in Sussex.
- II. Sanchia, m. to Edward Langford.
- III. Agnes, m. to — Wolsey.

The eldest son,

WALTER BLOUNT, was made treasurer of Calais, 39th of HENRY VI., and had the same office confirmed to him upon the accession of King EDWARD IV. In the 4th year of which latter monarch's reign, he was constituted, by letters patent, dated 24 November, LORD TREASURER OF ENGLAND, and the next year, advanced, by charter, dated 20 June, to the peerage, by the title of BARON MOUNTJOY, of Thurstaston, co. Derby. This nobleman became so staunch an adherent of the House of York, that he shared largely in the confiscated estates of the leading Lancastrians—particularly in those of Sir William Carey, Sir William Vaux, and Thomas Courtenay, Earl of Devon, obtaining thereby extensive territorial possessions in the counties of Devon, Cornwall, and Worcester. He was also honoured with the Garter. His lordship m. 1st, Helena, dau.

of Sir John Byron, of Clayton, Lancashire; and by her (who was buried at Grey Friars, London) he had three sons;

- I. WILLIAM, m. Margaret, dau. and heir of Sir Thomas Echingham, d. before his father in 1471, leaving issue,
 - 1 John, d. s. p.
 - 2 EDWARD, 2nd Lord Mountjoy.
- 1 Elizabeth, m. to Andrew, Lord Windsor.
- 2 Anne, m. 1st, Sir Thomas Oxenbridge, and 2ndly, Sir David Owen.
- II. JOHN, 3rd Lord Mountjoy, s. his nephew.
- III. James (Sir), knighted by HENRY VII. on his landing at Milford Haven, and made knight banneret 2nd HENRY VII., after the battle of Newark.

His lordship, who m. 2ndly, Anne, dau. of Ralph Nevil, Earl of Westmoreland, and relict of Humphrey, Duke of Buckingham, d. 1 August, 1474, and was s. by his grandson,

EDWARD BLOUNT, 2nd baron, who died the following year, having attained only the eighth year of his age, when his estates devolved upon his sister, but the Barony of Mountjoy reverted to his uncle,

SIR JOHN BLOUNT, 3rd baron, who d. in 1485, leaving by his will, bearing date 6 October in that year, a chain of gold with a gold lion set with diamonds, to his son, Rowland Blount, and to his dau., Constantia, £100 for her marriage portion. His lordship, who was governor of Guinesa, m. Lora, dau. of Sir Edward Berkeley, of Beverton Castle, co. Gloucester. His issue were, WILLIAM, his heir; Rowland, d. s. p., 1509; Lora, d. 1480; and Constantia, m. to Sir Thomas Tyrrell, of Heron, Essex. The elder son,

WILLIAM BLOUNT, 4th baron, K.G., was called to the privy council upon the accession of HENRY VII., and was constituted in the 1st year of HENRY VIII. master of the Mint in the Tower of London, as also throughout the whole realm of England, and the town of Calais. His lordship subscribed, in the latter reign, to the articles against Cardinal Wolsey, and the letter to Pope CLEMENT VII., regarding the king's divorce from Queen CATHERINE. He m. 1st, Elizabeth, dau. and co-heiress of Sir William Say, by whom he had two daus., Gertrude, m. to Henry Courtenay, Marquess of Exeter; and Mary, m. to Sir Henry Bouchier, Earl of Essex. His lordship m. 2ndly, Alice Kibel, and had a son CHARLES, his heir; and a dau. Catherine, m. 1st, to John Champenon, and 2ndly, to Sir Maurice Berkeley, of Bruton. His lordship m. 3rdly, Dorothy, dau. of Thomas Grey, Marquis of Dorset, relict of Robert Willoughby, Lord Brooke, and had issue, John, d. s. p.; Dorothy, m. to Roger Blewet; and Mary, m. to Sir Robert Denny. He d. in 1535, and was s. by his son,

CHARLES BLOUNT, 5th baron, who in the 36th HENRY VIII., served in the rear-guard of the army then sent into France. His lordship d. 14 October, 1544, leaving issue by his wife Anne, dau. and heir of Robert Willoughby, Baron Brooke, JAMES; John d. s. p.; Francis m. Catherine, dau. of John Carleton, Esq., of Brightwell, Oxon, and d. s. p.; and William, d. s. p. The eldest son,

JAMES BLOUNT, s. as 6th baron. This nobleman was one of the peers who sat in judgment upon Thomas, Duke of Norfolk, temp. ELIZABETH. His lordship m. Catherine, dau. and sole heir of Sir Thomas Leigh or Lee, of St. Oswalds, co. York, and had issue, WILLIAM; Charles; Christopher (Sir), m. Letitia, eldest dau. of Sir Francis Knowlis, K.G., and was beheaded in 1601; and Anne, d. s. p. He d. in 1593, and was s. by his eldest son,

WILLIAM BLOUNT, 7th baron, who d. in 1594, s. p., and was s. by his brother,

CHARLES BLOUNT, 8th baron. Before he inherited the peerage, this nobleman, being a person of high military reputation, had a command in the fleet which defeated the famous Spanish Armada; and a few years afterwards succeeded the Earl of Sussex in the governorship of Portsmouth. In 1597 his lordship was constituted lord lieutenant of Ireland; and in two years after repulsed the Spaniards with great gallantry at Kinsale. Upon the accession of King JAMES, he was reinvested with the same important office, and created by letters patent, dated 21 July, 1603, EARL OF DEVONSHIRE, being made at the same time a knight of the Garter. The high public character of the earl was, however, considerably tarnished by one act of his private life, the seduction of Penelope, sister of the Earl of Essex, and wife of Robert, Lord Rich. By this lady he had several children; and upon his return from Ireland, finding her divorced from her husband, he married her at Wanstead, in Essex, on 26 December, 1605, the ceremony being performed by his chaplain, William Laud, afterwards archbishop of Canterbury. Camden says that this nobleman was so eminent for valour and learning, that in those respects "he had no superior, and but few equals," and his secretary Morjson, writes, "that he was beautiful in person, as well as vallant; and learned, as well as wise." His lordship d. 3 April, 1606, and leaving no legitimate issue, all his honours became EXTINCT.

BLOUNT—BARON BLOUNT.

By Writ of Summons, dated 3 December, 1326.

Lineage.

SIR THOMAS LE BLOUNT, Lord of Belton (son of Sir Ralph le Blount, Lord of Belton, by Cecilia Lovet, his wife—refer to BLOUNT, BARONS MOUNTJOY), an accomplished soldier, temp. EDWARD I., was appointed governor of Drosselan Castle, in Wales, in 1311, and was summoned to parliament as a BARON, from 3 December, 1326, to 15 June, 1328. He m. twice, the name of the 1st, whom he m. in 1325, is unknown; the 2nd was Juliana de Leyborne, a great Kentish heiress, only child of Sir Thomas de Leyborne, and widow of John de Hastings, Lord Bergavenny. In the 20th of EDWARD II., Lord Blount being steward of the king's household, espoused the cause of the queen after the taking of Bristol, and the flight of the king into Wales. He d. in 1330, leaving no issue by his 2nd wife Juliana, who m. for her 3rd husband, Sir William de Clinton, Earl of Huntingdon. By his 1st wife he appears to have had two sons, WILLIAM and NICHOLAS. From the 2nd, NICHOLAS, sprang the family of Croke, alias Le Blount, so distinguished in our legal annals, and the CROKES, of Studley Priory, Oxfordshire, whose representative, the late SIR ALEXANDER CROKE, wrote a very able and elaborate History of the Blounts. The elder son, SIR WILLIAM LE BLOUNT, Lord of Belton, had, with a dau. Isabel, m. Alanus de Atkinson, a son Sir John Blount, custos of London, constable of the Tower, Lord of Belton. By his 1st wife, whose name is unknown, Sir John was father of Sir Thomas Blount, Lord of Belton, who was beheaded, s. p. in 1400; by his 2nd wife, Elizabeth Fournaux, he had William, who d. s. p., by Maud his wife; and Alice, who m. 1st, Richard Stafford, 2ndly, Sir Richard Stury, and d. circa 1415, s. p. when Sir John Blount, of Sodington, was found to be her heir.

BOHUN—EARLS OF HEREFORD, EARLS OF ESSEX, EARLS OF NORTHAMPTON, AND HIGH CONSTABLES OF ENGLAND.

First earldom, by Charter of Creation, dated 28 April, 1199.

Second, by the same, of King HENRY III.

Third, by the same, dated 17 March, 1337.

Lineage.

The founder of this family in England was

HUMPHREY DE BOHUN, kinsman and companion in arms of WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, generally known as "Humphrey with the Beard." Of this Humphrey little more is ascertained than that he possessed the lordship of Taterford, in Norfolk, and was s. by his son,

HUMPHREY DE BOHUN, surnamed the GREAT, who by command of King WILLIAM RUFUS m. Maud, dau. of Edward de Saresbury (progenitor of the ancient Earls of Salisbury), by whom he acquired large estates in the co. of Wilts, and had issue, Maud, and his successor,

HUMPHREY DE BOHUN, who was steward and sewer to King HENRY I. This feudal lord m. Margery, dau. of Milo de Gloucester, Earl of Hereford, Lord High Constable of England, and sister and co-heiress of Mabel, last Earl of Hereford, of that family. At the instigation of which Milo, he espoused the cause of the Empress MAUD and her son, against King STEPHEN, and so faithfully maintained his allegiance that the empress, by her especial charter, granted him the office of steward and sewer, both in Normandy and England. In the 20th of HENRY II., this Humphrey accompanied Richard de Lacy (Justice of England) into Scotland, with a powerful army to waste that country; and was one of the witnesses to the accord made by WILLIAM, King of Scots and King HENRY as to the subjection of that kingdom to the crown of England. He d. 6 April, 1187, and was s. by his son,

HUMPHREY DE BOHUN, who was EARL OF HEREFORD and CONSTABLE OF ENGLAND, in right of his mother, if the Chronicles of Lanthony be correct. His lordship m. Margaret of Scotland, dau. of Henry, Earl of Huntingdon, sister of WILLIAM, King of Scots, and widow of Conan le Petit, Earl of Brittany and Richmond, and was s. by his son,

HENRY DE BOHUN, who in reality was the 1st EARL OF HEREFORD of this family, being so created by charter of King JOHN, dated 28 April, 1199; but the constablership he inherited from his father. His lordship, taking part with the barons against King JOHN, had his lands sequestered, but they were restored at the signing of MAGNA CHARTA, at Runnymede, the earl being one of the twenty-five lords, appointed there, to enforce the observance of the celebrated charters. His lordship was subsequently excommunicated by the pope, and he became a prisoner at the battle of Lincoln, in the 1st year of HENRY III. He m. Maud, dau. of Geoffrey Fitz-Piers, Earl of Essex, and eventually heiress of her brother, William de Mandeville, last Earl of Essex of that family (see MANDEVILLE, Earls of Essex), by whom he acquired the honour of Essex and other extensive lordships,—and had issue, Henry, d. young, HUMPHREY, and Ralph, and a dau. Margery, who m. Waleran, Earl of Warwick. His lordship d. 1 January, 1220, and was s. by his son,

HUMPHREY DE BOHUN, as EARL OF HEREFORD, and possessing the honour of Essex through his mother, was created EARL of that county by King HENRY III., at whose marriage his lordship performed the office of marshal in the king's house, and in three years afterwards, anno 1239, was one of the godfathers at the font, for Edward, eldest son of the king, there being no less than nine sponsors on the occasion, viz., five temporal and four spiritual lords. He was Lord High Constable of England. In 1250 he took up the cross and proceeded to the Holy Land. In three years afterwards, his lordship was present, with other peers, when that formal curse was denounced in Westminster Hall, with bell, book, and candle, against the violators of Magna Charta; in which year he founded the church of the Fryers Augustines, in Broad-street, within the city of London. In the great contest between the king and his barons, this nobleman fought for the latter at Evesham, where he was taken prisoner, but he did not long continue in bondage, for we find him soon after again in favour, and receiving new grants from the crown. His lordship d. 1275, having m. 1st, Maud, dau. of Ralph, Count d'Eu, by Yolande his wife, dau. of Robert, Count de Dreux, Earl of Ewe, and had issue,

HUMPHREY, a very distinguished person amongst the rebellious barons, in the reign of HENRY III. In the 47th of that monarch he was excommunicated, with Simon de Montfort, Earl of Leicester, and others, for plundering divers churches and committing sacrilege. He was afterwards one of the commanders at the battle of Lewes, where the king was made prisoner, and was constituted governor of Goodrich and Winchester Castles. In the year following he commanded the infantry at the battle of Evesham, where he fell into the hands of the royalists, and was sent prisoner to Beaton Castle in Cheshire, where he soon afterwards died, leaving issue, by his wife Eleanor, dau. and co-heir of William de Braose, of Brecknock, and co-heir of her mother Eve, one of the five daus. and co-heirs of William Marshal, Earl of Pembroke,

HUMPHREY, who s. his grandfather.

Maud, m. to Anselm Mareschal, Earl of Pembroke.

Alice, m. to Roger Thony.

—, m. to — Quincy.

Humphrey, Earl of Hereford and Essex, d. 1275, and was s. by his grandson,

HUMPHREY DE BOHUN, Earl of Hereford, Earl of Essex, and Lord High Constable. This nobleman inheriting the high and daring spirit of his predecessors, often strenuously opposed the measures of the court, and was often therefore in disgrace, but he appears at the close of his career to have regained royal favour, for we find him attending the king into Scotland when that monarch (EDWARD I.) obtained a great victory near Roxburgh. His lordship m. Maud, dau. of Sir Ingelram de Fiennes, and dying in 1297, was s. by his son,

HUMPHREY DE BOHUN, as Earl of Hereford, Earl of Essex, and Lord High Constable. In the 30th EDWARD I., this nobleman gave and granted unto the king, by a formal conveyance, the inheritance of all his lands and lordships, as also of his earldoms of Hereford and Essex, and the constablership of England, which, upon his marriage with Elizabeth Plantagenet, widow of John, Earl of Holland, and dau. of the king, were regranted to him, and entailed upon his issue lawfully begotten by that lady; in default thereof, and from and after the death of himself and wife, then the lordship of Plassets, and certain other lordships in Essex, and elsewhere, together with the constablership, should remain wholly to the king and his heirs for ever. In the 34th of the same reign he had a grant similarly entailed of the whole territory of Annandale, in Scotland. After this his lordship was in the wars of Scotland and was taken prisoner, in the 7th EDWARD II. (1313-14), at the disastrous battle (to the English) of Stryvelin. But he was exchanged for the wife of Robert Bruce, who had long been captive in England. From this period we find him constantly engaged in the service of the crown, until the 14th year of the king's reign, when EDWARD learning that the earl was raising forces in the marches of Wales, against Hugh de Spencer the younger, sent him a peremptory command to forbear, which his lordship not only refused obeying, but forthwith joined Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, in the great insurrection then incited by that nobleman, for the redress of certain grievances, and the banishment of the Spencers. In this proceeding, however, he eventually lost his life, being run through the body by a soldier at the battle of Boroughbridge, in Yorkshire, where his party received so signal a defeat on 16 March, 1321. The earl had issue five surviving sons and two surviving daus., viz.,

JOHN; HUMPHREY; and Edward; successors primogenitively to the honours. The eldest was made a knight of the Bath in the 20th EDWARD II., having, by special command of Prince Edward, the robes for that solemnity out of the royal wardrobe, as for an earl.

WILLIAM, a personage of great eminence in the turbulent times in which he lived, and one of the gallant heroes of Cressy. In the parliament held at London, in the 11th EDWARD III., upon the advancement of the Black Prince to the dukedom of Cornwall, he was created EARL OF NORTHAMPTON (17 March, 1337), and from that period his lordship appears the constant companion in arms of the martial EDWARD, and his illustrious son. At Cressy he was in the second battalia of the English army, and he was frequently engaged in the subsequent wars of France and Scotland. He was entrusted at different periods with the most important offices, such as ambassador to treat of peace with hostile powers, commissioner to levy troops, &c., and he was finally honoured with the Garter. His lordship m. Elizabeth, dau. of Bartholomew de Badlesmere, one of the co-heirs of her brother Giles, and widow of Edmund de Mortimer, by whom he had issue,

HUMPHREY, 2nd Earl of Northampton, of whom hereafter, as successor to his uncle in the earldoms of Hereford and Essex and constablership of England.

Elizabeth, m. to Richard Fitzalan, 10th Earl of Arundel.

He d. in 1360.

Allanore, m. 1st, to James Butler, Earl of Ormonde, and 2ndly, to Sir Thomas Dagworth, Lord Dagworth.

Margaret, m. to Hugh Courtenay, son of the Earl of Devon.

The earl was s. by his eldest son,

SIR JOHN DE BOHUN, K.B., as Earl of Hereford, Earl of Essex, and Lord High Constable. This nobleman, who had served in the Scottish wars, being in an infirm state of health, was allowed in the 4th EDWARD III. to depute his brother Edward to execute the duties of constable. His lordship m. 1st, Lady Alice Fitzalan, dau. of Edmund, Earl of Arundel, and 2ndly, Margaret, dau. of Ralph, Lord Basset, of Drayton, but had no issue. He d. in 1335, when all his honours and estates devolved upon his next brother,

HUMPHREY DE BOHUN, Earl of Hereford, Earl of Essex, and Lord High Constable, K.G. This nobleman was one of the great lords who assisted, in the 15th of EDWARD III., at the celebrated feast and joust which the king then held at London in honour of the Countess of Salisbury, and, in the 20th of the same monarch, attended the king to the relief of Agillon, then besieged by the French. His lordship never married, and dying in 1361, his honours and estates reverted to his nephew,

HUMPHREY DE BOHUN, K.G., 2nd Earl of Northampton, then a minor, and under the guardianship of Richard, Earl of Arundel. His lordship did not, however, long enjoy this great accumulation of wealth and honour, for he d. in 1372, in the thirty-second year of his age, leaving by his wife Joane, dau. of his late guardian, the Earl of Arundel, two daus., his co-heirs, viz.,

ALIANORE, m. to Thomas, of Woodstock, Duke of Gloucester, 6th son of King EDWARD III.

MARY, m. to Henry, Earl of Derby (son of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster), who afterwards ascended the throne as HENRY IV.

Upon the decease of this nobleman, the EARLDOM OF HEREFORD EXPIRED; but his son-in-law, the Earl of Derby was subsequently created (in 1397) DUKE OF HEREFORD, prior, of course, to his becoming KING OF ENGLAND, while the lordships of Essex and Northampton, and the constablership fell to his other son-in-law, the Duke of Gloucester, and the EARLDOMS OF ESSEX and NORTHAMPTON became EXTINCT.

BOHUN—BARONS BOHUN, OF MIDHURST.

By Writ of Summons, dated 1 June, 1363.

Lineage.

In addition to the illustrious house of Bohun, Earls of Hereford, Essex, and Northampton, there was another family of the same name, and probably descended from the same source, whose chief seat was at Midhurst, co. Sussex.

ENGILER DE BOHUN, temp. WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, was father of SAVARIC DE BOHUN, temp. HENRY I., who had two sons, Savaric, who d. s. p., and JELDEWIN DE BOHUN, whose son,

FRANCO DE BOHUN (1st RICHARD I.), Lord of Midhurst Ford, Clumping, and Rushington, was father of

JOHN DE BOHUN, who m. Sibel, dau. of William Ferrars, 2nd Earl of Derby, and d. 12th of EDWARD I., having had two sons and a dau.,

1. John d. s. p.
2. JAMES, of whom presently.
1. Elizabeth, m. to Sir John Lesley, and had two daus. and co-heirs,

- 1 Elizabeth, m. to John Bramahott, and had issue, Thomas.
- 2 Eva, m. to Sir John Barford, and was mother of a dau. and heir,

Elinor, m. to Thomas Cooke, of Wreckham, and was mother of Richard Cooke, of Rushington, ancestor of the COOKES, of Westburton and Goring. Their descendant, Sir John Cooke had a dau. and heir, Elizabeth, m. to John Covert, of Sullington, in 1558.

The 2nd son,

JAMES DE BOHUN (4th EDWARD I.), m. Joan, dau., and co-heir of William de Braose, Lord of Bramber, and was father of

JOHN DE BOHUN, who was summoned to parliament as Baron of Midhurst, 1364 (37th EDWARD III.) "This is he (says Dugdale) who for his great services in Flanders, and elsewhere beyond sea, in 14th EDWARD III. (when the king first laid claim to the crown of France), as also in that famous expedition into France, 19th EDWARD III. (shortly after which, the king obtained that glorious victory at Cressy, whereof our historians make ample mention), became afterwards one of the BARONS of the realm, being summoned to sit in parliament, in 37th, 38th, and 39th of that king's reign." By his 1st wife, Isabel, he had a dau. Joan, m. to John de Lisle de Gatcombe, in the Isle of Wight, and by his 2nd wife, Cicely, dau. and heir of John Filliol, he had a son John. His lordship d. 41st EDWARD III., his son,

JOHN DE BOHUN (7th RICHARD II.) had two sons, JOHN and Humphrey (Sir), of Midhurst, who d. s. p. 1468. The eldest son,

JOHN DE BOHUN (10th HENRY VI., 1432), left two daus. and co-heirs,

MARY, m. to SIR DAVID OWEN, of Easbourne, Knt., natural son of Owen Tudor, grandfather of King HENRY VII., &c., and was mother of HENRY, Jasper, Roger, and Anne. The eldest son,

SIR HENRY OWEN, of Easbourne, m. Dorothy West, dau. of Thomas La War, and had issue, Ursula, m. to Sir Robert Southwell, of Norfolk, and d. s. p.

Sir David Owen, having married MARY, at length sole heir of the last John Bohun, who d. temp. HENRY VII., s. to their several manors of Midhurst, Easbourne, Ford, and Clumping; and in 1528 (19th HENRY VIII.) sold them to Sir William Fitzwilliam, K.G., treasurer of the king's household, for the sum of £2,198 6s. 8d. But after the demise of Sir David Owen, the said manors of Ford and Clumping to revert to Sir Henry Owen, his son and heir, abating of the above-mentioned sum, £1,432 6s. 8d. But by a subsequent indenture, dated 1532, it appeared that Sir Henry Owen having no right, a fine and recovery were suffered, and Sir William Fitzwilliam gained immediate possession. By an inquisition held at East Grinstead, 1645, three years after his death, it is certified that he died seized of these and other manors, holden of Sir Anthony Browne, K.G. For, in 1539, he had by indenture settled all his manors of Midhurst, Crowdray, and Rushington, to his own use, and that of Mabel his wife; and then to his brother of the half-blood, Sir Anthony Browne, K.G. Then to his bastard son, Thomas Fitzwilliam, otherwise Fisher; and lastly to John Fitzwilliam, son of Thomas Fitzwilliam, of Masborough, co. York. These manors were held in capite of the crown, by the said Sir Anthony Browne, in 1547, and descended to George Samuel, 8th Viscount Montague, who d. in 1793, when they passed to the Hon. Elizabeth Mary Browne, his only sister and heir, the wife of William Stephen Poynts, Esq., M.P. for Callington, co. Cornwall.

BOLEYNE—VISCOUNT ROCHFORD, EARL OF WILTSHIRE AND EARL OF ORMONDE.

Viscounty, by Letters Patent, dated 18 June, 1525.

Earldoms, by Letters Patent, dated 8 December, 1529.

Lineage.

The family of Bullen, or Boleyn, is said to have been of ancient date in the county of Norfolk; we shall, however, begin with

SIR GEOFFREY BOLEYNE (son of Sir Geoffrey Boleyn, of Salle, co. Norfolk, by Alice Bracton his wife), who, settling in the city of London, attained great opulence there, and filled the lord mayor's chair in the year 1458, when he was made a knight. He m. Anne, eldest dau. and co-heiress of Thomas, Lord Hoo and Hastings, by whom (who m. 2ndly, Sir T. Fynes), he had several children, of which the eldest son,

SIR WILLIAM BOLEYNE, K.B., settled at Brickling, in Norfolk, and m. Margaret, youngest dau. and co-heiress of Thomas Butler, 7th Earl of Ormonde, and niece and co-heiress of James Butler, Earl of Wiltshire, by whom, with other issue, he left, at his decease (10 October, 1505), a son and heir,

SIR THOMAS BOLEYNE. This gentleman took up arms in the 12th of HENRY VII., with his father and other persons of rank, against the Cornish rebels; and in the beginning of the next reign, being one of the knights of the king's body, was constituted governor of the castle of Norwich, jointly with Sir Henry Wyatt, Knt., master of the king's jewel-house. In the next year he was one of the ambassadors to the Emperor MAXIMILIAN, touching a war with France; and a few years afterwards was appointed sole constable of Norwich Castle. In the 11th of the same reign, being ambassador to France, he arranged the preliminaries for the famous interview between his royal master and FRANCIS I., between Guisnes and Ardres. In three years afterwards he was ambassador to the court of Spain, and was advanced to the peerage 18 June, 1525, in the dignity of Viscount Rochford. In 1527 his lordship was one of the commissioners to invest the King of France with the order of the Garter. In 1529 he subscribed the articles then exhibited against Cardinal Wolsey; and on 8 December, in the same year, being then a knight of the Garter, he was advanced to the EARLDOMS OF WILTSHIRE AND ORMONDE—the former to the heirs of his body, and the latter to heirs-general, to the injury, however, of Sir Piers Butler, the 8th earl rightfully of Ormonde, who instead was created Earl of Ossory. In the January following, his lordship was nominated lord privy-seal, soon after which he was again accredited to the court of Spain. The earl m. Elizabeth, dau. of Thomas Howard, Duke of Norfolk, and had issue,

I. GEORGE, who was summoned to parliament in the lifetime of his father, viz., 5 January, 1533, as Viscount Rochford. This nobleman was deputed by King HENRY to announce his private marriage with his lordship's sister, Anne Boleyn, to the King of France, and to solicit that monarch's advice regarding its public avowal. In two years afterwards he was made constable of Dover Castle, and lord warden of the Cinque Ports. Again the viscount was accredited to Versailles in the 27th (1535-6) of his brother-in-law's reign, touching a projected union between the king's infant dau. Elizabeth, and one of the sons of France. His lordship, who had risen with his sister, shared in the downfall of that unhappy lady—was committed to the Tower 2 May, 1536, and arraigned and beheaded on the 17th of the same month. He m. Jane, dau. of Sir Henry Parker (eldest son and heir of Henry, Lord Morley), an infamous woman, who continued a lady of the bed-chamber to the three succeeding queens, but eventually shared the fate of Katherine Howard. His lordship had no issue. He was attainted soon after his execution.

II. ANNE, created MARCHIONESS OF PEMBROKE, 1 September, 1532, m. in the following year to King HENRY VIII., and thus became QUEEN CONSORT OF ENGLAND. Beheaded in 1536, leaving an only child,

ELIZABETH, who ascended the English throne, as QUEEN REGNANT, at the decease of her half-sister, Mary, 17 November, 1558.

III. Mary, m. to William Carey, Esq., whose son and heir was created, in 1559, Baron Hunadon (see CAREY, LORD HUNADON).

The Earl of Wiltshire and Ormonde d. in 1538, two years after his unhappy son and dau., when the VISCOUNTY OF ROCHFORD and EARLDOM OF WILTSHIRE became EXTINCT; that of ORMONDE being to heirs-general, fell into ABEYANCE between the representatives of his dau. "On the death of Queen ELIZABETH," says Nicolas, "the only issue of Anne Boleyn, the eldest co-heir, became EXTINCT, when it is presumed that the abeyance, agreeably to the limitation, terminated, and consequently that dignity reverted to the representative of the other co-heir, the heir-general of whom is the present Earl of Berkeley, and under the said limitation, must probably be considered as EARL OF ORMONDE."

BOLEYNE—MARCHIONESS OF PEMBROKE.

By Letters Patent, dated 1 September, 1532.

Lineage.

This dignity was conferred by King HENRY VIII. upon his unhappy Queen Anne Boleyn, prior to his marriage. For that unfortunate lady's family see BOLEYNE, EARL OF WILTSHIRE AND ORMONDE.

BONVILLE—BARON BONVILLE.

By Writ of Summons, dated 23 September, 1449.

Lineage.

In the 4th of RICHARD II., SIR WILLIAM DE BONVILLE was constituted sheriff of the cos. of Somerset and Dorset, which trust he also held the next ensuing year; and in the 13th of the same reign was sheriff of Devonshire. He d. in 1408, and was s. by his grandson,

SIR WILLIAM BONVILLE (son of John de Bonville, by Elizabeth his wife, Lady of Chuton, dau. of Henry FitzRoger). This Sir William, in the 6th of HENRY V., in the expedition then made into France, was of the retinue of Thomas, Duke of Clarence, the king's brother. In the 1st of HENRY VI. Sir William was appointed sheriff of Devonshire, and being afterwards engaged in the French wars, wherein he deported himself with great valour, he was constituted seneschal of the duchy of Aquitaine, and had summons to parliament as a BARON, from 23 September, 1449, to 30 July, 1460, under the title of Lord Bonville, of Chuton. His lordship subsequently espousing the interests of the house of York, was one of those to whom the custody of King HENRY VI. was committed after the battle of Northampton, but the tide of fortune turning, his lordship lost his head, with the Duke of Exeter and the Earl of Devon, after the second battle of St Alban's. Lord Bonville m. Margaret Meriet, and had (with a dau. Mary, m. to Sir William Courtenay), an only son,

WILLIAM, who d. before the baron, having m. Elizabeth de Harrington, dau. and heir of William, Lord Harrington, and leaving an only child,

WILLIAM, commonly called Lord Harrington, who m. Lady Catherine Nevil, dau. of Richard, Earl of Salisbury, and had an only dau., Cecily. This William was slain at the battle of Wakefield, fighting under the banner of the house of York, in the 39th HENRY VI.

Lord Bonville was s. at his decease by his great-grand-dau. the above-mentioned CECILY BONVILLE, who m. 1st, Thomas Grey, Marquess of Dorset, and 2ndly, Henry Stafford, Earl of Wiltshire, but had issue by the former only. Through this union the BARONIES OF BONVILLE AND HARRINGTON were conveyed to, and continued in the family of Grey, until the attainder of Henry Grey, Duke of Suffolk (grandson of the said Thomas and Cecily), in 1554, when, with his grace's other honours, those dignities expired.

Queen ELIZABETH, during his minority, under the guardianship of her favourite, Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester. In the latter end of her majesty's reign Sir George received the honour of knighthood, and upon the institution of the order of baronet, he was amongst the first raised to that dignity, on 22 May, 1611. Sir George Booth m. 1st, 18 February, 1577, his 2nd cousin Jane, only dau. and heiress of John Carrington, Esq., of Carrington, co. Chester, by whom he had no issue, nor did he live long with her, yet he inherited the lands of her father; the same being strictly so settled by that gentleman before the marriage of his daughter, to descend to the family of Booth: in which settlement, among other provisions, is one particularly worthy of notice:—"That if she, the said Jane, should, after marriage, be detected of incontinency, the estate should remain to the family of Booth." After the decease of this lady, Sir William m. Catherine, dau. of Chief Justice Anderson, of the court of Common Pleas, and had several children, of whom

1. WILLIAM, the eldest son, m. in May, 1619, Vere, 2nd dau. and co-heir of Sir Thomas Egerton, eldest son of Thomas, Viscount Brackley, Lord Chancellor of England, and predeceasing his father (26 April, 1636), left issue,

1. GEORGE, of whom presently, as successor to the baronetcy.

2. Nathaniel, b. 1627, m. Anne, 3rd dau. of Robert Ravenscroft, Esq., of Bretton, co. Flint, whose line terminated with his great-grand-dau., Hannah Vere Booth, in 1766.

1. Catherine, m. to Sir John Jackson, of Hickleton, co. York, baronet

11. John, the youngest son, having actively espoused the cause of King CHARLES II., received the honour of knighthood after the Restoration, anno 1660. Sir John m. 1st, Dorothy, dau. of Sir Anthony St. John, younger son of Oliver, Earl of Bolingbroke, and, 2ndly, in 1659, Anne, widow of Thomas Legh, Esq., of Adlington, and by the former left several children at his decease, in 1678.

1. Alice, m. George Vernon, Esq., of Heslinton, co. Chester, afterwards Judge Vernon.

11. Susan, m. Sir William Brereton, of Handforth, co. Chester, Bart.

111. Elizabeth, m. to Richard, Lord Byron (his lordship's 2nd wife), and d. s. p.

Sir George Booth, who served the office of sheriff of Cheshire twice, and as often of Lancashire, d. 24 October, 1652, and was s. in his title and estates by his grandson (whose guardianship he had purchased from the crown for £4,000),

SIR GEORGE BOOTH, 2nd baronet. This gentleman was committed prisoner to the Tower of London during the usurpation, for his zeal in the royal cause and his efforts to restore the exiled prince. He had the pleasure eventually, however, of being chosen one of the twelve members deputed by the House of Commons, in May, 1660, to carry to that prince the recal of the house, in answer to his majesty's letters. And on Monday, 13 July, 1660, the House of Commons ordered, "that the sum of £10,000 be conferred on Sir George as a mark of respect for his eminent services and great sufferings in the public cause;" which order obtained the sanction of the House of Lords in the ensuing month. In addition to which honourable grant, the baronet was elevated to the peerage, by letters patent, dated 20 April, 1661, as BARON DELAMERE, of Dunham Masric, in the county of Chester. His lordship m. 1st, Lady Katharine Clinton, dau. and co-heir of Theophilus, Earl of Lincoln, by whom (who d. 5 August, 1643) he had an only dau., Vere, who d. unm. in 1717, in the 74th year of her age. He m. 2ndly, Lady Elizabeth Grey, eldest dau. of Henry, Earl of Stamford, by whom he had seven sons and five daus., of whom,

1. William, d. before his father, 1662.

11. HENRY, succeeded to the title.

111. Charles.

1iv. George, m. Lucy, dau. of the Right Hon. Robert Robartes, Viscount Bodmin, son and heir of John, Earl of Radnor, by whom he had an only son, Charles-Henry, who d. unm.

v. Robert, in holy orders, archdeacon of Durham in 1691, and dean of Bristol in 1706. This gentleman m. 1st, Ann, dau. of Sir Robert Booth, chief justice of the court of Common Pleas in Ireland, by whom he had a son, Henry, who died an infant. He m. 2ndly, Mary, dau. of Thomas Hales, Esq., of Howlets, in Kent, and had five sons and four daus., of whom,

1. NATHANIEL, the 4th and only surviving, succeeded to the BARONY OF DELAMERE, but of him hereafter.

1. Mary, d. unm.

2. Elizabeth, m. to Charlton Thruppe, Esq., of the city of London.

3. Vere, m. to George Tyndale, Esq., of Bathford, Somersetshire, and dying 31 May, 1753, had a son, George Booth Tyndale, Esq., of Bathford, barrister-at-law, father of the late George Booth Tyndale, Esq., of Hayling, Hants, and of two other sons (see BURKE'S Landed Gentry).

i. Elizabeth, m. to Edward, Earl of Conway.

11. Diana, m. to Sir Ralph Delaval, Bart., of Seaton-Delaval, Northumberland, and after his decease to Sir Edward Blacket, Bart., of Newby, co. York.

George, 1st Lord Delamere, d. 8 August, 1684, and was s. by his eldest surviving son,

HENRY BOOTH, 2nd baron. This nobleman, who had been committed to the Tower prior to the death of King CHARLES II., was brought to trial, in the reign of King JAMES, for high treason, before the Lord Chancellor Jeffreys, constituted high steward on the occasion, and a select number (27) of peers, but was most honourably acquitted. After which he lived in retirement until the revolution, when espousing the cause of the Prince of Orange, he was deputed with the Marquess of Halifax, and the Earl of Shrewsbury, upon the arrival of the prince at Windsor, 17 December, 1688, to bear a message to the fallen monarch, requiring that his majesty should remove from Whitehall; an office which his lordship executed so delicately that King JAMES was afterwards heard to remark, "that the Lord Delamere, whom he had used ill, treated him with much more regard than those to whom he had been kind, and from whom he might better have expected it." His lordship was afterwards sworn of the privy council, and appointed chancellor of the exchequer, an office which he held but one year; when, upon his retirement, he was advanced to the dignity of EARL OF WARRINGTON, by letters patent, dated 17 April, 1690. The earl m. Mary, dau. and sole heiress of Sir James Langham, Bart., of Cottesbrooke, co. Northampton, by whom (who d. 23 March, 1690,) he had four sons and two daus., viz.,

James, died an infant.

Langham, groom of the bedchamber to GEORGE II., and M.P. for co. Chester, b. 1684, d. unm. 12 May, 1724.

Henry, b. 17 July, 1687, d. 2 February, 1726.

Elizabeth, m. to Thomas Delves, Esq., son and heir apparent of Sir Thomas Delves, Bart., of Dodington, co. Chester, and d. s. p. in 1697.

Mary, m. to the Hon. Russel Robartes, and had issue,

Henry, last Earl of Radnor of that family.

His lordship, who published a Vindication of his friend Lord Russell, and other literary productions mentioned in Walpole's Catalogue, d. on 2 January, 1693-4, and was s. by his 2nd, but eldest surviving son,

GEORGE BOOTH, 2nd Earl of Warrington. This nobleman m. Mary, eldest dau. and co-heiress of John Oldbury, Esq., of London, merchant, by whom he had an only dau. and heiress,

MARY, who m. in 1736, Henry Grey, 4th Earl of Stamford, and d. 10 December, 1772, having had issue,

GEORGE HARRY, 5th EARL OF STAMFORD, created in 1796, EARL OF WARRINGTON (see BURKE'S Peerage).

Booth, b. 1740, M.P. for Leicester, m. 10 May, 1782, Elizabeth, dau. of Charles Mainwaring, Esq., of Bromborough, and had issue, BOOTH, of Aston Haye, co. Chester, d. s. p., and Elizabeth Kynaston, m. 1826, to Rev. Charles Mytton, who took the name of Thornycroft.

John, b. 1743, m. 22 July, 1773, Susanna, 4th dau. of Ralph Leicester, Esq., of Toft, and d. 12 July, 1802, having had issue,

HARRY, b. 8 July, 1783, m. 14 May, 1811, Frances, dau. of Hugh Ellis, Esq., of Carnarvon.

BORTHWICK—LORD BORTHWICK.

By Letters Patent, dated 1433.

Lineage.

SIR WILLIAM BORTHWICK, of Borthwick, was a person of consequence in the time of King JAMES I. He is repeatedly mentioned by Rymer, in particular in the year 1421, when he was one of the hostages for the king's ransom and liberation. In 1430, he obtained a licence from King JAMES I. to build the castle of Borthwick, and soon after this he was created a PEER OF PARLIAMENT.* He was s. by his son,

WILLIAM BORTHWICK, 2nd Lord Borthwick, who was s. by

WILLIAM BORTHWICK, 3rd lord, who sat in parliament, 1467, as Lord Borthwick, and in a number of other parliaments down to 1505. He was slain at Flodden in 1513. He m. Maryota de Hope Pringle, and had (with several daus.) two sons, viz.,

WILLIAM, his successor.

Alexander, of Nenthorn,† whose descendant and heir male, HENRY BORTHWICK, was adjudged by the House of Lords, in 1772, to be 10th Lord Borthwick.

He was s. by his elder son,

WILLIAM BORTHWICK, 4th Lord Borthwick, m. in 1491, Margaret, eldest dau. of John, Lord Hay, of Yester, and by her had issue,

I. WILLIAM, Master of Borthwick, m. Mariot, dau. of George, Lord Seton, d. s. p. in the lifetime of his father.

II. JOHN, 5th Lord Borthwick.

I. Catherine, m. to Sir James Crichton, of Frendraught.

II. Janet, m. Alexander, son and heir of Alexander Lauder, of Hatton.

The 2nd son,

JOHN BORTHWICK, 5th Lord Borthwick, m. Lady Isabel Lindsay, eldest dau. of David, 7th Earl of Crawford, and d. 1565, leaving issue,

I. WILLIAM, 6th Lord Borthwick.

II. Mariota, m. to Andrew Hope Pringle, of Galashiels.

WILLIAM BORTHWICK, 6th Lord Borthwick, m. Grissel, eldest dau. of Sir Walter Scott, of Brainholm, and by her (who m. 2ndly, Walter Cairncross, son of John Cairncross, of Colmahie,) had two sons,

I. William, Master of Borthwick, d. 17 March, 1570-1.

II. JAMES, 7th Lord Borthwick.

JAMES BORTHWICK, 7th Lord Borthwick, m. 1582, Margaret, eldest dau. of William, Lord Hay, of Yester, and by her (who m. 2ndly, Sir Robert Lauder, of Popil, Knt.,) left at his decease, in December, 1599, a son,

JOHN BORTHWICK, 8th Lord Borthwick, who was served heir of his father, 4 July, 1621. He m. Lady Lillias Kerr, 5th dau. of Mark, 1st Earl of Lothian, by whom he had a dau., m. to Robert Dundas, of Harviestown, 2nd son of Sir James Dundas, of Arnistown, and a son,

JOHN BORTHWICK, 9th Lord Borthwick; who d. s. p. in 1672, and from that period until 1762 the title lay dormant, when it was adjudged by the House of Lords to Henry, the descendant and heir male of Alexander Borthwick, of Nenthorn, who consequently became

HENRY BORTHWICK, 10th Lord Borthwick;‡ who m. at Edinburgh, 5 March, 1770, Margaret, dau. of Geo. Drummond, of Broich, co. Stirling; but d. without issue, at Newcastle, on his way to London, 6 September, 1772, when the title became again DORMANT, and so continues.

Arms—Arg., three cinquefoils, sa.

* According to the abbreviation of the "Scotichronicon," the creation of Lord Borthwick took place in 1433, when "Creatus est DOMINUS DE BORTHWICK."

† ALEXANDER BORTHWICK, of Nenthorn, was s. by his son,

WILLIAM BORTHWICK, who d. before 1542, leaving a son,

WILLIAM BORTHWICK, who had two sons,

I. WILLIAM, of Soltray, from whom descended

Henry Borthwick, declared Lord Borthwick, in 1772.

II. ALEXANDER, of Reidhall, whose descendant,

ARCHIBALD BORTHWICK, banker, in Edinburgh, claimed the BARONY OF BORTHWICK.

‡ Previously to the adjudication in his favour by the House of Lords, his lordship had voted in 1734, and at many subsequent elections of the Scottish peers, and continued to do so until 14 December, 1761, when the House of Lords made an order on him and several others, who had assumed dormant peerages, not to take on them their titles until the same should be allowed in due course of law.

NOTE.—At the time of Lord Borthwick's death, his heir male Archibald Borthwick, was in Norway. In 1807 that gentleman presented a petition to the king, claiming the dignity of Lord Borthwick, which was referred to the House of Lords, and opposed by JOHN BORTHWICK, Esq., of Crookston, when there was laid before the House of Lords the "Case of John Borthwick, Esq., of Crookston, objecting to the claim of Mr. Archibald Borthwick;" according to which

SIR WILLIAM BORTHWICK, created 1st Lord Borthwick, d. before 1458, leaving William, 2nd lord; and JOHN DE BORTHWICK, who acquired the estate of Crookston, in 1446, and from whom the objector, Mr. Borthwick, of Crookston descended, through ten generations, in a direct male line. Various proceedings were taken before the Lords, but no decision had; John Borthwick, of Crookston, whose case was submitted to the Lords, left a son and successor, JOHN BORTHWICK, of Crookston, whose son and heir is the present JOHN BORTHWICK, Esq., of Crookston.

BOTELER—BARONS BOTELER, OF OVERSLEY AND WEMME.

By Writ of Summons, dated 10 March, 1308.

Lineage.

In the reign of the 1st HENRY,

RALPH BOTELER, so called, from holding the office of butler to Robert, Earl of Mollent and Leicester, seated himself at Overley, co. Warwick, where he erected a strong castle, and at a mile distant, founded a monastery for Benedictine monks (anno 1140, and 5th STEPHEN). This Ralph was s. by his son,

ROBERT BOTELE, who was s. by his son,

RALPH BOTELE, one of the barons who took up arms against King JOHN, and whose lands were seized in consequence; but making his peace he had restitution on paying 40 marks upon the accession of HENRY III., in whose reign he was constituted a commissioner for collecting the fifteenth then levied in the counties of Warwick and Leicester. In the former of which shires he was likewise a justice of assize. He was s. at his decease by his son,

MAURICE BOTELE, one of the justices of assize for the co. of Warwick, in the 13th and 16th HENRY III., and a commissioner for assessing and collecting the fourteenth part of all men's moveable goods, according to the form and order then appointed. This feudal lord filled the office of justice of assize for the same shire, a second and third time, and was repeatedly justice for the gaol delivery at Warwick, in the same king's reign. He was s. by his son,

RALPH BOTELE, who m. Maud, dau. and heiress of William Pantulf, by whom he acquired the great lordship of Wemme, in the co. of Salop. This feudal baron had divers summonses to attend the king, HENRY III., in his wars with the Welsh, and adhering faithfully to that monarch, against Simon de Montfort, and the revolted barons, he was amply rewarded by grants of lands and money from the crown. He was s. at his decease by his son,

WILLIAM BOTELE, who, in the lifetime of his father, had m. Ankeret, niece of James de Aldithley. He died, however, in a very few years after inheriting his paternal property (anno 1283), leaving three sons, JOHN, GAVINE, and WILLIAM, and was s. by the eldest,

JOHN BOTELE, at whose decease in minority, anno 1286, the inheritance devolved upon his brother,

GAVINE BOTELE, who, dying issueless (1289), was s. by his brother,

WILLIAM BOTELE, who, in the 24th EDWARD I., was in ward to Walter de Langton, lord treasurer of England, and Walter de Beauchamp, of Alcester, steward of the king's household. This feudal lord obtaining renown in the Scottish wars of the period, was summoned to parliament as a BARON from 10 March, 1308, to 10 October, 1325. His lordship m. 1st, Ankeret, dau. of Griffin, and had an only son, WILLIAM, his successor. He m. 2ndly, Ela, dau. and co-heiress of Roger de Herdeburgh, by whom he had two sons, Edmund and Edward, who both died issueless, and four daus., viz.,

Ankeret, m. to John Le Strange, of Blackmere.

Ida, m. to Wm. Trussell.

Alice, m. to Nicholas Langford.

Dionysie, m. to Hugh de Cokesey.

He d. in 1334, and was s. by his eldest son,

WILLIAM BOTELE, 2nd Baron Boteler, of Wemme, but never summoned to parliament. This nobleman m. Margaret, dau. of Richard FitzAlan, Earl of Arundel, and dying in 1361, was s. by his son,

WILLIAM BOTELE, 3rd Baron Boteler, of Wemme, summoned to parliament from 23 February, 1368, to 6 April, 1369. His lordship m. Joane, elder sister and co-heir of John, Lord Sudley, and dying in 1369, left an only dau. and heiress,

Elizabeth, who m. 1st, Sir Robert Ferrers, a younger son of Robert, 2nd Baron Ferrers, of Chartley, and conveyed to him the lordship of Wemme, co. Salop, and the said Robert was summoned to parliament as "Robert Ferrers de Wemme, Chev." in the 49th EDWARD III. Elizabeth Boteler m. 2ndly, Sir John Say, and 3rdly, Sir Thomas Molinton, who styled himself "Baron of Wemme," but was never summoned to parliament. Her ladyship had no issue by her second and third husbands, but by the first she left a son,

ROBERT FERRERS, who inherited the Barony of Boteler, as well as that of Ferrers of Wemme, but was never summoned to parliament. His lordship d. in 1410, leaving two daus., co-heiresses, viz.,

Elizabeth, m. to John, son of Ralph, Lord Greystock.

Mary, m. to Robert Nevill, Earl of Westmoreland.

Between whose representatives those BARONIES are still in ABEYANCE.

BOTELE—BARON SUDLEY.

(See SUDLEY, Baron Sudley.)

BOTELER—BARONS BOTELER, OF WARINGTON.

By Writ of Summons, dated 23 June, 1295.

Lineage.

The first of this family who assumed the surname of BOTELER was

ROBERT LE BOTELER, from filling the office of boteler or butler to Ranulph de Gernons, Earl of Chester, and under that designation he founded an abbey for Cistercian monks in the year 1158. This Robert left a son Robert, but nothing further is known of the family until the time of King JOHN, when

WILLIAM LE BOTELER was certified to hold eight knight's fees, in capite of the king, in the co. of Lancaster. To this William s. another,

WILLIAM LE BOTELER, who, in the 43rd of HENRY III., was constituted sheriff of the co. of Lancaster, and governor of the castle there. But being involved with the turbulent barons of that period he appears subsequently to have lost his lands, until making his peace in the 49th of the same monarch, soon after the battle of Evesham, the sheriff of Lancashire had orders to restore them. In the early part of the next reign this William le Boteler had charters from the crown to hold markets and fairs upon some of his manors, and was summoned to parliament as a BARON, from 23 June, 1295, to 26 August, 1296. In the 34th of EDWARD I. his lordship was engaged in the Scottish war, having been previously upon military service in Gascony. He was s. at his decease by his son and heir,

JOHN LE BOTELER, who had summons to parliament in the 14th EDWARD II., but after this nobleman nothing further is known of the family.

Arms—Az., a bend between six garbs, or.

IV. Robert.

I. Elizabeth, m. 1st, to William, Lord Latimer, and 2ndly, to Robert Ufford.

II. Johanna, contracted to Robert, son and heir of Robert Fitzwalter, Lord of Wodeham, in Essex.

Lord Botetourt, who was one of the eminent military characters of the reign of EDWARD I., took a leading part in the Scottish wars of that monarch, and was entrusted with the government of the strongest castles, the command of the fleet, and other duties of the highest importance. His lordship d. in 1324, and was s. by his grandson,

JOHN DE BOTETOURT, 2nd baron, who had livery of his lands in the 14th EDWARD III., and in two years afterwards attended the king in the expedition made then into France, in the train of Thomas de Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick. From that period his lordship appears to have been constantly engaged in the French wars of his sovereign, and was summoned to parliament from 25 February, 1342, to 3 February, 1385. He m. 1st, Matilda, dau. of John de Grey, Baron Grey, of Ruthfield, and had two daus., Elizabeth, m. or contracted to be m. to Baldwin Freville, Esq., of Baldwin Castle, Knt., and Joyce, who m. 1st,

Katherine, m. to Maurice de Berkeley, of Stoke Gifford, co. Gloucester, and left an only son and heir,

MAURICE DE BERKELEY, who m. Joan, dau. of Sir John Denham, Knt., and his descendant (refer to BERKELEY, Baron Botetourt), NARBONNE, was summoned to parliament as BARON BOTETOURT in 1764, and d. s. p. in 1776, which caused the title to fall once more into ABERYANCE.

Elizabeth, heiress to her brother, m. to Charles, 4th Duke of Beaufort, in favour of whose son, Henry, 5th duke, the Barony of Botetourt was revived, by patent dated 4 June, 1803, to him and the heirs of his body.

John, 2nd Lord Botetourt, d. in 1385, leaving Joyce, Lady Burnell, his grand-dau., his heiress; but that lady dying in 1406, the BARONY OF BOTETOURT then fell into ABERYANCE between his three surviving married daus., and so continued amongst their descendants for more than three centuries and a-half, when it was at length called out in favour of the representative of Katherine de Berkeley (see BERKELEY, Baron Botetourt).

BOTHWELL—LORD HOLYROODHOUSE.

By Letters Patent, dated 20 December, 1607.

Lineage.

JOHN BOTHWELL, of Alhammer, eldest son of Adam Bothwell, bishop of Orkney, was, on his father's resignation, appointed a lord of session, 2 July, 1593, and sworn of the privy council to JAMES VI., whom he accompanied to England in 1603. He was created a peer by the title of LORD OF HOLYROODHOUSE, by charter, dated at Whitehall, 20 December, 1607, to him and the heirs male of his body; which failing, to the heirs male of Adam, bishop of Orkney, his father; which failing, to his heirs and assigns. He d. in November, 1609, leaving (by Mary his wife, dau. of Sir John Carmichael, of Carmichael, with whom he got 12,000 marks of portion) a son,

JOHN BOTHWELL, 2nd Lord Holyroodhouse, who was served heir to his father, 17 January, 1629; and d. unm. 1635; from which period the Barony of Holyroodhouse has remained dormant, although claimed, in 1734, by Henry Bothwell, of Glencombe (great-great-grandson of William Bothwell, 3rd son of Adam, bishop of Orkney), who petitioned the crown for an acknowledgment of his title, but no decision was ever come to respecting his claim.

BOULDE, or BOLDE, BARON OF RATOATH.

By Letters Patent, dated 13 August, 1468.

Lineage.

SIR ROBERT BOULD, or BOLDE, Knt., was created BARON RATOATH, in the peerage of Ireland, by patent, dated at Drogheda, 13 August, 1468. His lordship m. twice. By his 2nd wife, Ismay, dau. and heir of Sir John Serjeant, of Castle Knock, near Dublin, and widow of Sir Nicholas Barnewall, of Cricks-town, he had no child; but by his 1st wife, whom he had married in England, he had a dau. and heir, KATHARINE, who m. Edmund Barnewall, Esq., of Dunbrow, co. Dublin, and had issue, Robert Barnewall, of Dunbrow, and Elizabeth, m. to Richard Talbot, of the house of Templeogue.

BOURCHIER—BARONS FITZ-WARINE, EARLS OF BATH.

Barony, by Writ of Summons, dated 23 June, 1292.

Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 9 July, 1536.

Lineage.

SIR WILLIAM BOURCHIER (3rd son of WILLIAM BOURCHIER, EARL OF EWE, in Normandy, and Anne his wife, dau. and heiress of Thomas, of Woodstock, Duke of Gloucester, youngest son of King EDWARD III.,) having m. Thomasine, dau. and heiress of Richard Hanchford, Esq., by Elizabeth his wife, sister and heiress of Fulke Fitz-Warine, 7th and last Baron Fitz-Warine, of that family, who d. s. p., in 1429, was summoned to parliament, jure uxoris, as BARON FITZ-WARINE, from 2 January, 1449, to 7 September, 1469. This nobleman, who was one of the foresters in the reign of EDWARD IV., had license from that monarch to export, duty free, a thousand woollen cloths of his own goods. His lordship appears to have married 2ndly, Catherine, widow of — Stukeley, by whom he had a dau. Elizabeth, to whom her mother bequeaths in her last will, dated in 1466, "a girdle of red tissue." Lord Fitz-Warine d. about the year 1470, and was s. by his son,

SIR FULKE BOURCHIER, Knt., 2nd Baron Fitz-Warine, who was summoned to parliament on 19 August, 1472. This nobleman m. Elizabeth, sister and heiress of John, Lord Dynham, and had issue,

JOHN, his successor.

Joane, m. to James, Lord Audley.

His lordship d. in 1479, and was s. by his son,

JOHN BOURCHIER, 3rd Baron Fitz-Warine, who, in the 6th of HENRY VII., being of full age, had livery of his lands, and was summoned to parliament from 12 August, 1492, to 8 June, 1536. His lordship inherited, likewise, the large estates of his mother, the heiress of the Lords Dynham. This nobleman signed the celebrated letter to Pope CLEMENT VII., in the 22nd HENRY VIII., wherein the subscribing lords apprised his holiness of the frail tenure of his supremacy, should he refuse the pontifical assent to the divorce of the king from Queen KATHARINE. Lord Fitz-Warine was subsequently advanced, by letters patent, dated 9 July 1536, to the EARLDOM OF BATH. His lordship m. Cecilia, dau. of Giles, Lord D'Aubeney, and sister and heiress of Henry D'Aubeney, Earl of Bridgewater, and had, with other issue,

JOHN, his successor.

Elizabeth, m. to Edward Chichester, Esq.

Dorothy, m. to Sir John Fulford, Knt.

The earl d. 30 April, 1539, leaving amongst other directions in his will, "that an honest secular priest should sing mass for the health of his soul, for the space of twenty years after his decease." His lordship was s. by his eldest son,

JOHN BOURCHIER, 4th Baron Fitz-Warine, and 2nd EARL OF BATH. This nobleman, upon the decease of EDWARD VI., being amongst the first to declare for Queen MARY, was constituted one of the commissioners for receiving the claims of those who in respect of their tenures were to perform service upon the day of her majesty's coronation. His lordship m. 1st, Elizabeth, dau. of Sir Walter Hungerford, Knt., by whom he had one dau., Elizabeth. He m. 2ndly, Eleanor, dau. of George Manners, Lord Ros, and sister of Thomas, 1st Earl of Rutland, of that family, and had issue,

I. John, Lord Fitz-Warine, who d. in the lifetime of his father, leaving by his wife Frances, dau. of Sir Thomas Kitson, Knt., of Hengrave, co. Suffolk,

WILLIAM, who s. to the honours of his grandfather.

II. Henry.

III. George (Sir), general of the army sent to suppress the rebellion in the province of Munster, in Ireland, anno 1580; m. Martha, dau. of William, Lord Howard, of Effingham, and had issue,

Sir Henry Bouchier, Knt., who s. as 6th EARL OF BATH.

IV. Fulke.

I. Mary, m. to Hugh Wyot, of Exeter.

II. Cecilia, m. to Thomas Peyton, Customer of Plymouth.

The Earl m. 3rdly, Margaret, dau. and heiress of John Donington, Esq., and widow of Sir Richard Long, Knt., and of this marriage there were two daus., viz.,

Susanna.

Bridget, wife of Thomas Price, Esq., of Vaynor, co. Montgomery.

His lordship d. in 1500, and was s. by his grandson,

WILLIAM BOURCHIER, 5th baron and 3rd earl. This nobleman was in the expedition (28th ELIZABETH) to the Netherlands, in aid of the Dutch, under Robert, Earl of Leicester. His lordship m. Elizabeth, dau. of Francis Russell, Earl of Bedford, and had surviving issue,

EDWARD, who was made knight of the Bath at the coronation of HENRY, Prince of Wales, anno 1610.

Frances, d. unm.

The earl d. 12 July, 1623, and was s. by his son,

EDWARD, 6th baron and 4th earl, who m. 1st, Dorothy, dau. of Oliver, Lord St. John, of Bletso, and sister of Oliver, Earl of Bolingbroke, by whom he had surviving issue,

i. Elizabeth, m. to Basil, Earl of Denbigh, and d. s. p.

ii. Dorothy, m. to Thomas, Lord Grey, of Groby, eldest son of Henry Grey, 1st Earl of Stamford, and had issue,

1 Thomas, who s. his grandfather as Earl of Stamford, his father dying previously, but d. s. p. viv. in 1719-20, when his cousin s. as 3rd earl.

1 Elizabeth, m. to Henry Benson, Esq.

2 Anne, m. to James Grove, Esq., serjeant-at-law.

Her ladyship m. 2ndly, Gustavus Mackworth, Esq., by whom she had

Mary, m. —.

iii. Anne, m. 1st, to James Cranfield, Earl of Middlesex, by whom she had a dau.,

Elizabeth, m. to John, Lord Brackley, but d. s. p.

Lady Middlesex m. 2ndly, Sir Chichester Wrey, Bart., from whom the present Sir Bouchier-Palk Wrey descends, and who inherits the mansion of Tawstock, co. Devon, the chief seat of the Earl of Bath

His lordship m. 2ndly, Anne, dau. of Sir Robert Lovet, Knt., of Liscombe, co. Buckingham. The earl dying thus in 1636, without male issue, the BARONY OF FITZ-WARINE fell into ABEYANCE between his three daus., and so continues among their descendants, of whom the present Sir Bouchier-Palk Wrey, Bart., is one, while the EARLDOM OF BATH devolved upon (General Sir George Bouchier's son, refer to the 3rd son of the 2nd earl) his cousin, HENRY BOURCHIER, 5th earl, who m. Rachael, dau. of Francis Fane, Earl of Westmoreland, but d. s. p. 15 August, 1654, when the EARLDOM OF BATH became EXTINCT.

BOURCHIER—BARONS BOURCHIER, EARLS OF ESSEX.

Barony by Writ of Summons, dated 25 February, 1342.
Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 30 June, 1461.

Lineage.

In the reign of King EDWARD II.,

SIR JOHN DE RUCKER, or BOURCHIER, Knt., one of the justices of the Court of King's Bench, marrying Helen, dau. and heiress of Walter de Colchester, and niece maternally of Roger de Montchensy, acquired the manor of Stansted Hall, co. Essex, and took up his abode there. Sir John had two sons, ROBERT and John, and was s. at his decease by the elder,

ROBERT DE BOURCHIER, who in the 4th EDWARD III. (1330-1), obtained a royal charter for holding a court leet at Halsted, and in the 10th of the same monarch, had permission to impark his woods there. In four years afterwards this eminent person was constituted Lord Chancellor of England, with £500 a-year above the customary fees, for his suitable maintenance; and in the next year he had license to make a castle of his mansion-house at Halstead. Uniting the civic and military characters, his lordship was subsequently distinguished in arms, particularly at the battle of Cressy, where he was attached to the division of the army under the immediate command of the Black Prince. He m. Margaret, dau. and sole heiress of Sir Thomas Prayers, of Sible-Hedingham, co. Essex, by Anne, dau. and heiress of Hugh de Essex, descended from a younger son of Henry de Essex, Baron of Raleigh, standard-bearer of England, and had issue,

JOHN, his successor.

William, m. Eleanor, dau. and heiress of Sir John de Louvaine, and dying in 1365, left,

WILLIAM, who was made constable of the Tower of London, and created EARL OF EWE, in Normandy, by HENRY V. His lordship m. ANNE PLANTAGENET, widow of Edward, Earl of Stafford, and dau., and eventually sole heiress of Thomas of Woodstock, Duke of Gloucester, son of King EDWARD III., and left at his decease four sons and a dau., viz.,

HENRY, EARL OF EWE, of whom hereafter, as EARL OF ESSEX.

Thomas, bishop of Ely, and subsequently archbishop of Canterbury.

William, Lord Fitz-Warine, see that dignity.

John, Lord Berners.

Anne, m. to John Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk.

Lord Bouchier, who had been summoned to parliament from 25 February, 1342, to 10 March, 1349, d. in the latter year, and was s. by his elder son,

SIR JOHN BOURCHIER, Knt., as 2nd Baron Bouchier; summoned to parliament from 16 July, 1381, to 30 September, 1399. This nobleman was engaged during the greater part of his life in the French wars of EDWARD III. and RICHARD II., and was installed a knight of the Garter for his gallant services therein. In the 9th year of the latter king his lordship was appointed chief governor of Flanders, and particularly of the town of Gaunt, at the express desire of the Flemings. Prior to his decease he obtained a special exemption, owing to age and infirmity, from parliamentary duties, and from attending councils. His lordship m. Elizabeth, dau. of Sir John Coggeshall, and dying in 1400, was s. by his only son,

BARTHOLOMEW BOURCHIER, 3rd Baron Bouchier, summoned to parliament from 5 September, 1400, to 26 October, 1409. This nobleman obtained, like his father, when he became old and infirm, an exemption from parliament and council, and from military service in Scotland and beyond the seas. His lordship m. 1st, Margaret, widow of Sir John de Sutton, but had no issue. He m. 2ndly, Idonea Lovey, widow, first, of Edmund, son of Sir John de Brooksburn, and afterwards of John Glevant, and dying in 1409, left an only dau.,

ELIZABETH BOURCHIER, Baroness Bouchier, who m. 1st, SIR HUGH STAFFORD, Knt., who thereupon assumed the dignity of LORD BOURCHIER, but had summons to parliament from 21 September, 1411, to 22 March, 1415, as "Hugoni Stafford" only. His lordship d. however, s. p., and his widow remarried with Sir Lewis Robsart, K.G., standard-bearer to King HENRY V., who assumed also the title of BOURCHIER, but was summoned, in like manner, in his own name only, from 24 February, 1425, to 3 August, 1429. He likewise d. issueless in 1431, and upon the decease of Lady Bouchier, in 1432, the barony devolved upon her ladyship's cousin and next heir,

HENRY BOURCHIER, 2nd Earl of Ewe, in Normandy—(revert to William, 2nd son of Robert, 1st Baron Bouchier)—who had summons to parliament in the 13th HENRY VI., viz., 5 July, 1435, in his Norman dignity, but never subsequently under that title. In the 25th HENRY VI., 14 December, 1446, his lordship was advanced to the dignity of Viscount BOURCHIER, and had summons accordingly; and in the 33rd of the same monarch he was constituted Lord Treasurer of England. But, notwithstanding such sterling marks of royal favour, the Lord Treasurer forsook his royal master, and, espousing the interests of the Earls of March and Warwick, was re-invested with the treasurership by the former (his brother-in-law) upon his accession as EDWARD IV., and created, by letters-patent, dated 30 June, 1461, EARL OF ESSEX. His lordship m. Isabel, dau. of Richard, Earl of Cambridge, Protector of England (grandson of King EDWARD III.), and aunt of King EDWARD IV., by whom he had issue,

i. WILLIAM, who m. Anne, dau. of Richard Widville, Earl Rivers, and sister of Elizabeth, queen of King EDWARD IV., and by her (who m. 2ndly, George, Earl of Kent) he left at his decease, s. p., a son and a dau.,

HENRY, successor to his grandfather.

Cecily, m. to John Devereux, Lord Ferrers, of Chartley, who left a son, SIR WILLIAM DEVEREUX, Lord Ferrers, of Chartley, from whom sprang the house of DEVEREUX, EARLS OF ESSEX, which s. to the Barony of Bouchier on the death of Anne, Lady Parr (see later), that title falling into ABEYANCE on the death, in 1646, of the Earl of Essex, and though the Barony of Ferrers, of Chartley, was revived in favour of the heir-general of Sir Robert Shirley, viz., the Marquess Townshend; that of Bouchier was overlooked and continued in abeyance.

ii. HENRY (Sir), m. Elizabeth, dau. and heiress of Thomas, Lord Scates.

iii. Humphrey, m. Jane, niece and co-heiress of Ralph, Lord Cromwell.

- iv. John (Sir), m. Elizabeth, niece and heiress of William Lord Ferrers, of Groby.
- v. Thomas (Sir), m. Isabel, dau. and heiress of Sir John Barre, Knt., and widow of Humphrey Stafford, Earl of Devon.
- vi. Edward (Sir), slain at the battle of Wakefield.
- 1. Fulke, } both d. young.
- ii. Isabel, }

This nobleman shared largely in the confiscated estates of the Lancastrians, particularly in those of the attainted Earls of Devon (Thomas Courtenay) and Wiltshire, and the Lord Roos. His lordship d. in 1483, and was s. by his grandson.

HENRY BOURCHIER, 2nd Earl of Essex, who had special livery, 9th HENRY VII. (1493-4), of the great estates which descended to him from the Earl of Essex, his grandfather, his father, Isabel his grandmother, Anne his mother, and Sir Thomas Bouchier, Knt., his uncle, to all of whom he was heir. This nobleman, who is represented to have been a person of singular valour and worth, was of the privy council of King HENRY VII., and had a chief command at the battle of Blackheath, in the 12th of that monarch. Upon the accession of HENRY VIII. his lordship was appointed captain of the king's horse-guard, then newly constituted as a body-guard to that monarch. The corps consisted of 50 horse, "trapped with cloth of gold, or goldsmith's work; whereof every one had his archer, a demi-lance, and coustrill." In the 5th of the same king he attended his highness into France, as lieut.-general of all the spears; and at the famous tournament which HENRY held on 19 and 20 May, 1516, in the 8th year of his reign, in honour of his sister, MARGARET, Queen of Scotland, the Earl of Essex, with the king himself, the Duke of Suffolk, and Nicholas Carew, Esq., answered all comers. In the 12th of HENRY his lordship again attended his sovereign into France, and swelled the pageantry of the monarch in his magnificent interview with FRANCIS I. upon the Field of the Cloth of Gold. The earl m. Mary, eldest dau. and co-heiress of Sir William Say, Knt., by whom he had an only dau.,

ANNE, who m. Sir William Parr, Knt. (brother of Queen Katherine Parr), but that marriage was annulled by parliament in the 5th of EDWARD VI. (1551-2), and the issue thereof bastardized.

The earl died in consequence of a fall from his horse, at his manor of Basse, co. Hereford, in 1539, when the EARLDOM OF ESSEX, the VISCOUNTY OF ESSEX, and, apparently, the VISCOUNTY OF BOURCHIER expired; while the BARONY OF BOURCHIER devolved upon his only dau., Anne Lady Parr; but that lady's issue being, as above stated, illegitimated, it passed, at her decease, to Walter Devereux, Baron Ferrers, of Chartley, son and heir of Cecily, the deceased earl's sister—(see descendants of William, eldest son of the 1st earl)—and became united with the Barony of Ferrers, until the decease, issueless, of Robert, 11th Baron Ferrers, of Chartley, and Earl of Essex, in 1646, when it fell into ABETANCE between his lordship's two sisters and co-heiresses, Frances, Marchioness of Hertford, and Dorothy, wife of Sir Henry Shirley, Bart.; and it so continues between the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, as heir-general of Frances, the elder co-heir; and Marmon Edward Ferrers, Esq., of Baddesley Clinton, co. Warwick; and Lady Elizabeth-Margaret Boulton, the co-representatives of the junior.

BOURCHIER—BARON CROMWELL.

(See CROMWELL, BARON CROMWELL, OF TATSHALL.)

BOURKE—VISCOUNT BOURKE, OF MAYO.

By Letters Patent, dated 21 June, 1628.

Lineage.

SIR EDMOND-ALBANACH BOURKE, 4th in descent from William Fitzadelm, and great-grandson of Richard de Burgo, Lord of Connaught and Trim, who d. in 1243, was ancestor of the Mayo Bourkes, and, by the law of tanistry, became elective head of that family, with the title of Lord Mac William Bourke, five years after the murder of his kinsman, William de Burgo, (the Brown) Earl of Ulster, by Sir John Mandeville, in 1333. Sir Edmond d. "well stricken in years," in 1375, leaving one son, by his wife Sabina, dau. of Dermott O'Malley, of the Owles (the Baronies of Muirick and Burrischoole, co. Mayo).

SIR THOMAS BOURKE, who s. his father as Lord MacWilliam Bourke, and d. in 1402, leaving five sons by his wife, O'Connor's dau.,

- i. Walter, of Kilmaine (barony), co. Mayo, s. his father as Lord MacWilliam Bourke, which title he held for twenty years, and was ancestor of the Bourkes, of the Neale, Gweashedan, Cloneen, Elestran, Cloonegashel, Shrule, Ballinrobe, Cloghens, Daurus, and Castle Carra, co. Mayo, and of those of Newtown and Thomastown, co. Tipperary, now EXTINCT. He founded the cell of Armagh (for the abbey of Cong).
- ii. EDMOND OF THE BEARD, of whom presently.
- iii. Thomas, of Moyne, co. Mayo, was elected Lord Mac William Bourke on the death of his brother Edmond, in 1463, and founded the abbey of Moyne, in the said county, two years afterwards.
- iv. John, ancestor of the Bourkes of Munster-Creaghane, Moyla-Lebinay, and Moynycrower, co. Mayo. The present Earl of Mayo is descended from him.
- v. Richard, of Turlough, co. Mayo, s. his brother Thomas in the MacWilliamship in 1460, and d. nine years after (having previously resigned his lordship). He was ancestor of the Bourkes of Turlough. Thomas Bourke, of this family, was M.P. for co. Mayo in 1639, and Sir William was included in the royal declaration of thanks, as for services beyond sea. In 1689, Walter Bourke, of Turlough, was M.P. for co. Mayo, and colonel of a regiment in the service of King JAMES. Two of his brothers were in the same service; Theobald as colonel, and Thomas, who was M.P. for Castlebar, as captain. Colonel Walter Bourke and Captain Thomas Bourke were included in the royal commission of 10 March, 1690. After the treaty of Limerick, the former retired to France with his regiment, called the regiment of Athlone. He was greatly distinguished in subsequent campaigns, and d. a field-marshal in 1715. At the siege of Cremona, which he defended against Prince Eugene in 1703, his regiment, and that of Henry Dillon, repulsed the Austrians, who had surprised the sleeping garrison.

The 2nd son,

EDMOND BOURKE OF THE BEARD, of Newport and Burrischoole, co. Mayo, s. his brother as Lord Mac William Bourke, and d. in 1488, leaving three sons, by his wife Honoria, dau. of Ulick Roe MacWilliam, of Clanricarde, BOYD, LORDS BOYD AND EARLS OF KILMARNOCK.

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 1459.

Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 7 August, 1601.

Lineage.

The first recorded ancestor of this noble family, SIMON, brother of Walter, high steward of Scotland, witnessed the foundation charter of the monastery of Paisley in 1160, and is therein designated "frater Walteri filii dapferi." He was father of ROBERT, called BOYT or BOYD, from his complexion (the Celtic word Boidh signifying fair), and from him derived the various families of the name. The lands of Kilmarnock were granted by ROBERT THE BRUCE to his gallant adherent,

SIR ROBERT BOYD, who had been among the first associates of the prince in his arduous attempt to restore the liberties of Scotland. Sir Robert was father of three sons, SIR THOMAS, his heir; Alan, who commanded the Scottish archers at the siege of Perth, in 1339, where he was slain; and James. The eldest son,

SIR THOMAS BOYD was taken prisoner, together with King DAVID II., at the battle of Durham, in 1346. His son and successor,

SIR THOMAS BOYD, of Kilmarnock, m. Alice, dau. and co-heir of Hugh Gifford, of Yester, and had a son and heir,

SIR THOMAS BOYD, of Kilmarnock, one of the hostages for the ransom of King JAMES I., in 1424. He d. 1432, leaving, by Joanna, dau. of Sir John Montgomery, of Ardrossan, two sons, viz.,

THOMAS (Sir), his heir.

William, abbot of Kilwinning, who received a dispensation from Rome, and had a charter from JAMES III. He also obtained lands in Lanarkshire, which descended to his representative, the Rev. WILLIAM BOYD, D.D., of Merton Hall, co. Wigton, grandfather of the present MARK BOYD, Esq., of Merton Hall, co. Wigton.

The elder son,

SIR THOMAS BOYD, of Kilmarnock, was killed in a feud, 1439, leaving issue,

ROBERT, his heir.

Alexander (Sir), of Duncrow, executed 1469.

Janet, m. to John Maxwell, of Calderwood.

Margaret, m. to Alexander, Lord Montgomerie.

The son and heir,

ROBERT BOYD, was created in 1459, by King JAMES III., a peer of parliament, as LORD BOYD, twice sent ambassador to England, constituted governor of the kingdom till the sovereign came of age, and appointed great chamberlain of Scotland for life, in 1467. The power of the house of Boyd was destroyed as speedily as it arose. In 1469, the mind of the king became alienated from the Boyds; and their chief, the Lord Boyd, having had recourse to arms, sentence of high treason was passed upon them. Sir Alexander Boyd was beheaded on the Castle Hill of Edinburgh, 22 November, 1469, and his brother, the Lord Boyd, escaped to England, where he died in poverty at Alnwick, in 1470. His lordship m. Mariota, dau. of Sir Robert Maxwell, of Calderwood, and had (with two daus., Elizabeth, m. to Archibald, 5th Earl of Angus; and Annabella, wife of Sir John Gordon, of Lochinvar) three sons, viz.,

THOMAS, EARL OF ARROW. (See that title.)

ALEXANDER, of whom presently.

Archibald, 1st of the Boyds, of Bonshaw.

The 2nd son,

ALEXANDER BOYD, chamberlain of Kilmarnock for the crown in 1505, m. a dau. of Sir Robert Colvill, of Ochiltree, and had three sons,

ROBERT, his heir,

Thomas, of Pitcon, ancestor of the Boyds of Pitcon, the last male descendant of whom in Ayrshire was THOMAS BOYD, comptroller of customs in Irvine. Pitcon was sold by the Boyds in 1770, and is now, after various changes, the property of Alexander Alison, Esq.

Adam, of Pinkill, co. Ayr, m. Helen, dau. of John, Lord Kennedy, and was ancestor of the Boyds of Pinkill and Trochrig, whose male descendant and representative, the late SPENCER BOYD, Esq., of Pinkill, m. Margaret, dau. of William Loeh, Esq., of Newcastle, and d. in 1827, leaving an only son, SPENCER BOYD, Esq., now of Pinkill.

The eldest son,

ROBERT BOYD, of Kilmarnock, a man of judgment and resolution, had a confirmation from Queen MARY of all the estates, honours, and dignities that had belonged to his grandfather, the late Robert, Lord Boyd. He m. Helen, dau. of Sir John Somerville, of Cambusnethan, and left (with a dau. Margaret, wife of John Montgomery, of Lainshaw,) a son and successor,

ROBERT BOYD, 4th Lord Boyd, a devoted adherent of MARY STUART, who m. Margaret, or Mariot, dau. and heir of Sir John Colquhoun, of Glins; and d. 3 January, 1589, leaving issue,

I. Robert, Master of Boyd, d. s. p.

II. THOMAS, 5th Lord Boyd.

III. Robert, of Badenheath, d. in July, 1611.

II. Agnes, m. to Sir John Colquhoun, of Luss.

III. Christian, m. to Sir James Hamilton, of Evendale.

IV. Elizabeth, m. to John Cunningham.

The 2nd son,

THOMAS BOYD, 5th Lord Boyd, fought with his father for Queen MARY at Langside. His lordship m. Margaret, 2nd dau. of Sir Matthew Campbell, of Loudoun; and dying in 1611, left issue,

I. ROBERT, Master of Boyd, d. before his father in May, 1597. He m. Lady Jean Ker, eldest dau. of Mark, 2nd Earl of Lothian, and by her (who m. 2ndly, David, 10th Earl of Crawford,) had two sons,

1 ROBERT, 6th Lord Boyd.

2 JAMES, 8th Lord Boyd.

II. Thomas (Sir), of Bedlay.

III. Adam, m. Marion, sister of Robert Galbraith, of Kilmcroich.

IV. John.

I. Marion, m. to James, 1st Earl of Abercorn.

II. Isabel, m. to John Blair, of Blair.

III. Agnes, m. Sir George Elphinstone, of Blythwood.

The eldest son,

ROBERT BOYD, 6th Lord Boyd, m. 1st, Margaret, dau. of Robert Montgomery, of Giffin, and relict of Hugh, 5th Earl of Eglinton, but by her had no issue. His lordship m. 2ndly, Lady Christian Hamilton, eldest dau. of Thomas, 1st Earl of Haddington, and relict of Robert, 10th Lord Lindsay, of Byres, and by her left at his decease, in 1628, a son and six daus., viz.,

I. ROBERT, 7th Lord Boyd.

II. Helen, who d. unm.

VI. Isabel, m. 1st, to John Sinclair, of Stevenston; 2ndly, to John Grierson Fiar, of Ség.

VII. Christian, m. to Sir Wm. Scott, of Harden.

The eldest son,

ROBERT BOYD, 7th Lord Boyd, who m. Lady Anne Fleming, 2nd dau. of John, 2nd Earl of Wigton, but by her (who m. 2ndly, George, Earl of Dalhousie) he left no issue at his decease, which occurred 17 November, 1640, when he was s. by his uncle,

JAMES BOYD, 8th Lord Boyd, 2nd son of Robert, Master of Boyd. He m. Catharine, dau. of Robert Creyke, Esq. of Cottingham, co. York, the disinherited son of Ralph Creyke, Esq., of Marton, and had (with a dau. Eva, wife of Sir David Cunningham, of Robertland,) a son and successor,

WILLIAM BOYD, 9th Lord Boyd, s. his father in 1654, and was created EARL OF KILMARNOCK, by patent to him and his heirs male for ever, 7 August, 1661. His lordship m. 25 April, 1661, Lady Joan Cunningham, eldest dau. of William, 9th Earl of Glencairn; and dying in 1692, left (with two daus., Mary, wife of Sir Alexander Maclean, and Catherine, m. to Alexander Porterfield, of Porterfield,) four sons,

- I. WILLIAM, 2nd EARL OF KILMARNOCK.
- II. James (Capt.)
- III. Charles (Capt.), d. in September, 1737.
- IV. Robert.

The eldest son,

WILLIAM BOYD, 2nd Earl of Kilmarnock, m. Lettice, dau. of Thomas Boyd, Esq., of the city of Dublin, and had two sons, viz.,

WILLIAM, his heir.

Thomas, an advocate, m. Eleanora, dau. of Sir Thomas Nicolson, Bart., of Carnock, co. Stirling; and that lady m. 2ndly, John Craufurd, Esq., of Craufurdland, and was by him, mother of Lieut.-Col. John Walkinshaw Craufurd, of Craufurdland, who attended Lord Kilmarnock to the scaffold; and held, according to tradition, a corner of the cloth which received the earl's head.

The earl d. 20 May, 1692, and was s. by his son,

WILLIAM BOYD, 3rd Earl of Kilmarnock, a steady supporter of the Union and of the Hanoverian succession; who m. Eupheme, eldest dau. of William, 11th Lord Ross, and dying in September 1717, was s. by his son,

WILLIAM BOYD, 4th Earl of Kilmarnock; who engaging in the rising of 1745, was taken prisoner at Culloden, conveyed to London, convicted of high treason, and executed on Tower Hill, 18 August, 1746, when the honours and estates of his family were forfeited. His lordship m. Lady Anne Livingstone, dau. and heir of James, 5th Earl of Linlithgow and Calender, by Lady Margaret Hay his wife, dau. of John, 12th Earl of Erroll, and by her (who d. 18 September, 1747,) left three sons,

- I. JAMES, Lord Boyd, who served in the Scots Fusiliers, at Culloden, on the side opposed to his father, and recovered eventually, in 1752, the lands of Kilmarnock, which he afterwards sold to the Earl of Glencairn; in 1758 he succeeded to the EARLDOM OF ERROLL, and d. 3 June, 1778; his great-grandson, William-Henry, is the present EARL OF ERROL, who, were it not for the attainder of 1746, would also be EARL OF KILMARNOCK.

BRADESTON—BARONS BRADESTON.

By Writ of Summons, dated 25 February, 1322.

Lineage.

The first person of this family, of whom anything memorable occurs, is

SIR THOMAS DE BRADESTON (son of Henry de Bradeston, by Isabel his wife), seated at Bradeston, co. Gloucester, the ancient residence of his predecessors (all of whom were homagers to the castle of Berkeley, for their manors of Bradeston and Stinchcombe, which they held by knight's service). In the 10th and 11th of EDWARD II. he was engaged in the Scottish wars, but in the 15th (1321-2) of the same monarch, adhering to the Lord Berkeley against the favourite Spencer, his lands were seized by the crown: he was, however, the next year included in a general amnesty, and upon paying 100 marks and renewing his oath of allegiance, had his property restored. He was afterwards constituted keeper of Kingswood Chase, near Bristol and governor of Berkeley Castle; and subsequently taking part with the queen consort, Isabella, he was made one of the gentlemen of the privy chamber, at the accession of the young king, EDWARD III. In the 11th of EDWARD III. (1337-8), he had a grant of a ship, called "The Christmas," taken in fight from the French by the merchants of Bristol; and, in the next year was in the grand expeditions made into Flanders and Scotland and for his good services was made a KNIGHT BANNERET. Continuing actively engaged in foreign warfare, and acquiring fresh reputation each succeeding campaign, Sir Thomas de Bradeston was summoned to parliament as a BARON 25 February, 1342, and from that period until 3 April, 1360, during which interval his services were remunerated by extensive territorial grants, and by high and lucrative employments. The nobleman appears to have had one son, ROBERT, who predeceased him, leaving an only son, Thomas. Of Robert, the only thing memorable is, that having been taken prisoner in the 19th of EDWARD III., by the citizens of Pisa, on his journey to the Holy Land, the English monarch caused all the merchants of Pisa, as well as those of St. Lucia, then in London with their goods, to be seized, until he was released, twelve of the principal of whom were committed to the Tower, and not discharged until bail was given that young Bradeston should be forthwith enlarged. His lordship d. in 1360, and was s. by (the son of Robert de Bradeston and Isabel his wife) his grand son,

SIR THOMAS DE BRADESTON, 2nd baron. This nobleman was in the expedition against France, in the 43rd of EDWARD III. before he had attained majority. He d. however, in five years afterwards, leaving (by his wife Adela de Burgh) an infant, only dau. and heiress,

ELIZABETH, who, in the reign of Richard II., made proof of her age, and had livery of her lands, being then the wife of Sir Walter de la Pole (1st cousin of William, Earl of Suffolk), by whom she left a dau. and heiress.

1. WILLIAM (Sir), his heir.

2. THOMAS (Sir), K.G., who living to witness the accession of his patron to the crown, as HENRY VII., was made one of the esquires of that king's body, and bore his buckler at the battle of Stoke. In consideration of which, and other services he obtained the wardship of Richard Fenys, son and heir of William Fenys, Lord Say, with the benefit of his marriage; and before the termination of the same reign, was installed a knight of the most noble order of the Garter. Sir Thomas d. in the 1st year of HENRY VIII., being then one of the knights of the king's body, and marshal of the court of Common Pleas. He left no issue.

3. Robert (Sir), d. s. p.

1. MARGARET, m. Sir Gregory Lovell, and had a dau. and heiress.

MARGARET LOVELL, m. to John Kersey, Esq.

2. ANN, m. to John Sydney, Esq., of Penshurst (See SYDNEY, EARL OF LEICESTER).

3. ALIANORA, m. John Glenham, Esq.

4. KATHERINE, m. Henry Gurney, Esq., and had three daus., co-heiresses, viz.,

1. Christian Gurney, m. fifty, 1552, m. James Darnell, Esq., and had a son, Adam Darnell, Esq., of Thornholme.

2. Elizabeth Gurney, m. Walter Ayscough, and had issue.

3. Elizabeth, m. John Trye, Esq., of Hardwicke, co. Gloucester, and had a son,

JOHN TRYE, Esq., ancestor of the TRYES of Hardwicke, and the TRYES of Leckhampton Court, co. Gloucester.

5. ELIZABETH, m. to John Cavendish, Esq.

The eldest son,

Sir WILLIAM BRANDON, standard-bearer at Bosworth, fell by the hand of King RICHARD in that celebrated field, leaving by his wife Elizabeth, dau. and co-heir of Sir Henry Bruyn, Knt., a son and heir,

CHARLES BRANDON, K.G. "Which Charles," says Dugdale, "being a person of comely stature, high of courage, and conformity of disposition to King HENRY VIII., became so acceptable to him, especially in all his youthful exercises and pastimes, as that he soon attained great advancement, both in titles of honour and otherwise." In the 1st of HENRY he was made one of the esquires of the king's body, and chamberlain of the principality of North Wales: in the 4th he distinguished himself in a naval engagement off Brest; and the next year, attending the king upon the expedition of Therouenne and Tournay, he was elevated to the peerage (5 March, 5th HENRY VIII.) as Viscount L'ISLE, and appointed commander of the advanced guard of the army: in which campaign he behaved so valiantly, that in reward of his distinguished services, he was created in the following February (anno 1514) DUKE OF SUFFOLK; and shortly afterwards, assisting at the coronation of the Lady Mary King HENRY's sister, then wife of LEWIS XII. of France, at St. Denis, he acquired so much renown by overthrowing the knight with whom he tilted at a princely tournament, celebrated upon the occasion, that he won the affections of the queen, who, upon the decease of her royal husband, which occurred soon after, bestowed upon him her hand; and having promoted the Kings of England and France to the union, he obtained from the former a grant in general tail of all the lordships, manors, &c., which had previously belonged to Edmund de la Pole, Duke of Suffolk (who was beheaded and attainted in 1513). His grace made one of the retinue of his royal master at his magnificent interview with FRANCIS I. upon "the Field of the Cloth of Gold," between Guisnes and Ardres, in Picardy; and, in the next year (15th HENRY VIII.) he led an army almost to the gates of Paris, to the great consternation of the good citizens, whose destruction was averted only by the recall of the general. In the 21st of HENRY VIII.

he was one of the peers who subscribed the articles against Cardinal Wolsey, and, in the next year, the declaration to Pope CLEMENT VII. regarding the king's divorce from Queen Katherine. His grace was afterwards constituted chief justice in Eyre of all the king's forests, and at the dissolution of the great monasteries he had a large proportion of the spoil. The duke was also a knight of the most noble order of the Garter. His grace married no less than four wives, 1st, Margaret, dau. of John Nevil, Marquess of Montagu, and widow of Sir John Mortimer, by whom he had no issue; 2ndly, Anne, dau. of Sir Anthony Browne, Knt., governor of Calais, by whom he had two daus.,

Anne, m. to Sir Edward Grey, Lord Powys.

Mary, m. to Thomas Stanley, Lord Monteagle.

His grace m. 3rdly at Greenwich, 13 May, 1515, the Lady Mary Tudor, 2nd dau. of King HENRY VII., and Queen Dowager of Louis XII., King of France, by whom he had issue,

1. HENRY, created EARL OF LINCOLN in 1525, who predeceased the duke unmar., when the EARLDOM of Lincoln EXPIRED.

2. FRANCES, m. 1st, to Henry Grey, 3rd Marquess of Dorset, who was created DUKE OF SUFFOLK after the decease of his wife's half brother, Henry Brandon (last duke of that family), in 1551, but beheaded and attainted in three years afterwards. The issue of this marriage were

1. LADY JANE GREY, the amiable but unfortunate aspirant to the crown at the decease of Edward VI. She m. Lord Guildford Dudley, but was beheaded 12 February, 1554, leaving no issue.

2. Lady Katherine Grey, died a prisoner in the Tower, (1567), m. 1st, Henry, Lord Herbert, and 2ndly, Edward Seymour, Earl of Hertford, by the latter of whom she had a son, Edward, Lord Beauchamp, father of two sons, William, Duke of Somerset (husband of Arabella Stuart), and Francis, Lord Seymour, of Trowbridge.

3. Lady Mary Grey, m. to Martin Keya, groom porter to Queen ELIZABETH, and d. s. p. 1578.

Her grace m. 2ndly, Adrian Stokes.

3. Eleanor, m. to Henry Clifford, Earl of Cumberland, and left an only dau. and heiress,

MARGARET, m. to Henry Stanley, Earl of Derby.

His grace m. 4thly, Catherine, Baroness Willoughby de Eresby (only dau. and heiress of William, Lord Willoughby), who d. in 1525, by whom he had two sons,

HENRY, his successor.

Charles.

CHARLES BRANDON, DUKE OF SUFFOLK, d. in 1545, and was s. by his elder son,

HENRY BRANDON, 2nd duke, who, with his brother Charles, died in minority, on the same day, 14 July, 1551, at the residence of the bishop of Lincoln at Bugden, in Huntingdonshire, of the sweating sickness, when the DUKEDOM OF SUFFOLK became EXTINCT. The patent of the VISCOUNTY OF L'ISLE was cancelled soon after its creation, owing to the refusal of Elizabeth Grey (only dau. and heiress of John Grey, Viscount L'Isle at whose decease that dignity EXPIRED in the Grey family, in 1512) to fulfil, on coming of age, her marriage contract with his grace, then Charles Brandon, Viscount L'Isle, the said patent being in reversion to his issue by that lady. Miss Grey afterwards m. Henry Courtenay, 2nd Earl of Devonshire, and died issueless.

Arms—Barry of ten, arg. and gu., over all a lion rampant, or, crowned per pale, of the first and second.

NOTE.—In the 2nd of ELIZABETH, the extensive possessions of this celebrated Duke of Suffolk were shared amongst the descendants of Sir William Brandon, his grandfather, viz.,

Sir Henry Sydney, Knt., descended from John Sydney and Anna Brandon.

William Cavendish, Esq., from John Cavendish and Elizabeth Brandon.

Thomas Glenham, Esq., from Alianora Brandon.

Francis Kersey, Esq., son of John Kersey, by Margaret Lovell, dau. and heiress of Margaret Brandon, by her husband, Lovell.

Christian Darnell, widow.

Walter Ayscough, Esq., and his son, Henry.

John Trye, Esq., of Hardwicke.

BRANDON—EARL OF LINCOLN.

(See BRANDON, DUKE OF SUFFOLK.)

BRAOSE—BARON BRAOSE, OF GOWER.

By Writ of Summons, dated 29 December, 1299.

Lineage.

WILLIAM DE BRAOSE came into England with the Conqueror, and held at the general survey considerable estates in the counties of Berks, Wilts, Surrey, Dorset, and Sussex. He was s. by his son, PHILIP DE BRAOSE, whose son WILLIAM, m. Berta, dau. of Milo de Gloucester, Earl of Hereford, and co-heir of her brother, William, Earl of Hereford, by whom he acquired Brecknock, with other extensive territorial possessions. He had two sons, WILLIAM and Reginald, and was s. by the elder,

WILLIAM DE BRAOSE, who likewise inherited the large estates of his grandmother, and besides possessed of the Honour of Braose, in Normandy. This feudal lord was a personage of great power and influence during the reigns of HENRY II. and RICHARD I., from the former of whom he obtained a grant of the "whole kingdom of Limeric, in Ireland," for the service of sixty knight's fees, to be held of the king and his younger son, JOHN. For several years after this period he appears to have enjoyed the favour of King JOHN, and his power and possessions were augmented by divers grants from the crown. But in the 10th of the king's reign, when the kingdom laboured under an interdiction, and JOHN deemed it expedient to demand hostages from his barons to ensure their allegiance, should the Pope proceed to the length of absolving them from obedience to the crown, his officers who came upon the mission to the Baron de Braose, were met by Maud his wife, and peremptorily informed that she would not intrust any of her children to the king, who had so basely murdered his own nephew, Prince ARTHUR. De Braose rebuked her, however, for speaking thus, and said that if he had in any thing offended the king, he was ready to make satisfaction, according to the judgment of the court, and the barons his peers, upon an appointed day, and at any fixed place, without however giving hostages. This answer being communicated to the king, an order was immediately transmitted to seize upon the baron's person, but Braose having notice thereof fled with his family into Ireland. This quarrel between De Braose and King JOHN, is, however, differently related by other authorities. The monk of Lanthony states, that King JOHN disinherited and banished him for his cruelty to the Welsh, in his war with Gwenwynwyn, and that his wife Maud, and William, his son and heir, died prisoners in Corfe Castle. While another writer relates, "that this William de Braose, son of Philip de Braose, Lord of Buelt, held the lands of Brecknock and Went, for the whole time of King HENRY II., RICHARD I., and King JOHN, without any disturbance, until he took to wife the Lady Maud de St. Walerie, who, in revenge of Henry de Hereford, caused divers Welshmen to be murdered in the castle of Bergavenny, as they sat at meat: and that for this, and for some other pickt quarrel, King JOHN banished him and all his out of England. Likewise, that in his exile, Maud his wife, with William, called Gaw, his son, were taken and put in prison; where she died, the 10th year after her husband fought with Wenwynwyn, and slew three thousand Welch." From these various relations, says Dugdale, it is no easy matter to discover what his demerits were; but what usage he had at last, take here from the credit of these two historians, who lived near that time. "This year, viz. anno 1240," quoth MATTHEW OF WESTMINSTER, "the noble lady Maud, wife of William de Braose, with William, their son and heir, were miserably famished at Windsor, by the command of King JOHN; and William, her husband, escaping from Scorcham, put himself into the habit of a beggar, and privately getting beyond sea, died soon after at Paris, where he had burial in the abbey of St. Victor." And Matthew Paris, putting his death in anno 1212 (which differs a little in time), says, "That he fled from Ireland to France, and dying at Ebula, his body was carried to Paris, and there honourably buried in the abbey of St. Victor." "But after these great troubles in his later days," continues Dugdale, "I shall now say something of his pious works. Being by inheritance from his mother, Lord of Bergavenny, he made great grants to the monks of that priory, conditionally, that the abbot and convent of St. Vincenti, in Maine (to which this priory of Bergavenny was a cell) should daily pray for the soul of him, the said William, and the soul of Maud his wife."

This great, but unfortunate personage, had issue by his wife, Maud de St. Walerie,

1. William, who perished by starvation with his mother, at Windsor. He m. Maud, dau. of the Earl of Clare, with whom he had the town of Buckingham, in frank marriage, and left a son,

JOHN, surnamed Tadody, of whom hereafter.

II. GILES, bishop of Hereford.

III. REGINALD, who s. his brother, the bishop, in the representation of the family.

IV. John (Sir), who is stated to have had from his father the manor of Knylle, or Knill, in the marches of Wales, and thence to have adopted the surname of KNILL, and to have been ancestor of JENKIN KNILL, Esq., of Knill, who m. Anne, dau. and co-heiress of Sir Richard Devereux, 2nd son of William, Lord Ferrers, K.G., and d. in 1508. His grandson,

FRANCIS KNILL, Esq., of Knill, a justice of the peace for Herefordshire, temp. ELIZABETH, m. Joane, dau. of Thomas Lewis, Esq., of Harpton Court, in Radnorshire, and dying in 1590, was s. by his only son,

JOHN KNILL, Esq., of Knill, who d. unm. in 1609, when his estates devolved upon his sister and heiress,

BARBARA KNILL, who conveyed them to her husband, John Walsham, Esq., of Presteigne, by whose lineal descendant,

SIR JOHN WALSHAM, Bart., they are still possessed.

I. Joane, m. to Richard, Lord Percy.

II. Loretta, m. to Robert Fitz-Parnell, Earl of Leicester.

III. Margaret, m. to Walter de Lacy.

IV. Maud, m. to Griffith, Prince of South Wales, living circa 1188, son of Rhys ap Griffith, Prince of South Wales, called "the Lord Rhys," and dying in 1202, left, with junior issue, two sons: Rhys ap Griffith, Prince of South Wales, whose only dau. and heiress, Gwellian, m. Gilbert de Talbot, ancestor of the Earls of Shrewsbury, and Owen ap Griffith, Prince of South Wales, ancestor of the dynasty of South Wales.

When the contest between King JOHN and the barons broke out, GILES DE BRAOSE, bishop of Hereford, arraying himself under the baronial banner, was put in possession by the people of Bergavenny and the other castles of the deceased lord; and eventually King JOHN, in the last year of his reign, his wrath being then assuaged, granted part of those lands to the bishop's younger brother and heir,

REGINALD DE BRAOSE, which grant was confirmed by King HENRY III., and he had livery of the castle and honour of Totness, with the honour of Barnstaple, having had previous possession of other estates. He m. Græcia, dau. of William de Bruere, and dying in 1221, was s. by his son,

WILLIAM DE BRAOSE. This feudal lord fell a victim to the jealousy of LLEWELLYN, Prince of Wales, who suspecting an intimacy between him and the princess, his wife, King HENRY's sister, invited him to an Easter feast, and treacherously cast him into prison at the conclusion of the banquet. He was soon afterwards put to death with the unfortunate princess. He had married Eve, dau. of Walter Mareschal, and sister of Richard, Earl of Pembroke, by whom he had four daus., his co-heirs, viz.,

1. ISABEL, m. 1st, to Prince David, who on the demise of his father, 1240, usurped the crown of North Wales, eldest son (by Joan, his 3rd consort, natural dau. of JOHN, King of England) of LLEWELLYN, the Great King of North Wales. David ap Llewelyn d. s. p. Isabel his widow m. Peter Fitzherbert.

II. MAUD, m. to Roger, Lord Mortimer, of Wigmore.

III. EVE, m. to William de Cantilupe, Lord of Abergavenny, jure uxoris, and left a son, and two daus.,

1 George, who d. s. p.

1 Millicent, m. 1st, to John de Montalt, and 2ndly, to Endo le Zouche, ancestor by her of the ZOUCHES, of Haryngworth.

2 Joan, m. to Henry de Hastings.

IV. Eleanor, m. to Humphrey de Bohun (see BOHUN, Earl of Hereford).

The line of this branch thus terminating in heiresses, we proceed with that founded by the bishop of Hereford's nephew,

JOHN DE BRAOSE, surnamed Tadody, who had been privately nursed by a Welch woman, at Gower. This John had grants of lands from King HENRY III., and was also possessed of the Barony of Brembye, in Sussex, where he died in 1231, by a fall from his horse, his foot sticking in the stirrup. He married, it is stated, Margaret, dau. of LLEWELLYN, Prince of Wales, by whom (who m. afterwards Walter de Clifford) he had a son, his successor,

WILLIAM DE BRAOSE, who in the 41st HENRY III., when Llewellyn ap Griffith menaced the marches of Wales with a great army, was commanded by the king to defend his own marches about Gower, and the next year he had a military summons to attend the king at Chester. In two years afterwards, he was again in arms, under Roger de Mortimer, against the Welsh; and was one of the barons who became pledged for King HENRY, abiding the award of Louis, King of France. He d. in 1290, leaving by Isabel de Clare, his first wife, a son,

WILLIAM DE BRAOSE, who in the 22nd of EDWARD I., had summons to attend the king with other great men, to advise regarding the important affairs of the realm. And about the beginning of the ensuing September, was one of those who embarked at Portsmouth, with horse and arms, in the king's service, for Gascony. In the 28th and 29th of the same reign, he was in the wars of Scotland, and in the latter year he had summons to parliament as a BARON. In the 32nd, he was again in the Scottish wars, and then enjoyed so much favour, that the king not only confirmed to him and his heirs, the grant of Gower Land, made by King JOHN to his ancestor, but granted that he and they should thenceforth enjoy all regal jurisdiction, liberties, and privileges there, in as ample a manner as Gilbert de Clare, son of Richard de Clare, sometime Earl of Gloucester, had in all his lands of Glamorgan. For several years afterwards his lordship appears to have been constantly engaged upon the same theatre of war, and was always eminently distinguished. In the 14th EDWARD II., being, according to Thomas of Walsingham, "a person who had a large patrimony, but a great unthrift," his lordship put up for sale his noble territory of Gower Land, and absolutely sold it under the king's license to the Earl of Hereford; but its contiguity to the lands of the younger SPENCER (who was then high in royal favour, and the king's chamberlain,) attracting the attention of that minion, he forcibly possessed himself of the estate, and thus gave rise to the insurrection headed by Thomas Plantagenet, Earl of Lancaster. Lord Braose m. Aliva, dau. of Thomas de Moulton, and had issue, ALIVA, m. 1st, to John de Mowbray, and 2ndly, to Sir Richard de Pershall, younger brother of Adam de Pershall, Lord of Pershall, co. Stafford, and had issue by each. Elizabeth, grand-dau. and heiress of Sir Richard de Pershall, m. 1st, Henry Grendon, and 2ndly, Sir Richard Bacon, Knt. JOANE, m. to John de Bohun, of Midhurst.

His lordship, who had regular summons to parliament, to 18 September, 1322, d. in that year, when the BARONY OF BRAOSE, OF GOWER, fell into ABEYANCE between his daus. and co-heirs, and it so continues with their representatives.

BRAOSE—BARONS BRAOSE.

By Writ of Summons, dated 25 February, 1342.

Lineage.

SIR THOMAS DE BRAOSE, Knt., son of Peter, half-brother of William, Lord Braose, of Gower, was found heir to his grandmother, Mary de Ros (his grandfather, William de Braose's 3rd wife), and having distinguished himself in the wars of EDWARD III., was summoned to parliament as a BARON, from 25 February, 1342, to 15 July, 1353. His lordship m. Beatrix, dau. of Roger de Mortimer, and widow of Edward, son of Thomas, of Brotherton, Earl of Norfolk, and Earl Marshal of England, by whom he had issue,

- 1 JOHN, his successor. 2 Thomas (Sir). 3 Peter, s. p.
- 1 Joane, d. s. p.
- 2 Beatrice, m. William Lord Say, and was mother of Elizabeth, Lady Heron.

He d. in 1361, and was s. by his elder son,

JOHN DE BRAOSE, 2nd Baron, who m. Elizabeth, dau. of Edward de Montague, but dying s. p., was s. by his brother,

SIR THOMAS DE BRAOSE, 3rd Baron, who d. 1395, leaving by Margaret, his wife, a son, Thomas, and a dau. Joan, who both d. young, when the BARONY OF BRAOSE became EXTINCT, and the estates passed to Elizabeth, wife of Sir William Heron, Knt., the niece, through his sister Beatrice, of the last Baron.

BRAYE—BARONS BRAYE.

By Writ of Summons, dated 8 November, 1529.

Lineage.

The name of the SIEUR DE BRAY occurs in the roll of Battel Abbey, amongst the associates in arms of the CONQUEROR, and although the authenticity of that celebrated record has in many instances been questioned, in this the statement is confirmed by the fact of WILLIAM DE BRAY being one of the subscribing witnesses to the charter of the year 1080, conferred by the NORMAN on the abbey he had founded in commemoration of his triumph at Hastings. No grant of lands appears, however, in Doomsday Book to the Brays; but that the family supplied sheriffs to Northamptonshire, Bedfordshire, Bucks, and some other counties, between 1202 and 1273, is fully established.

SIR RICHARD BRAY, the descendant and representative of the NORMAN knight, is said by some to have been of the privy council to HENRY VI.; by others he is called the king's physician; the former is the more probable, as he was buried in Worcester Cathedral. He had two wives; by the 1st, Margaret, dau. of John Sandes, Esq., of Furnes Felles, in Lancashire, he had an only son, JOHN (Sir), whose only dau. and heir, Margaret, m. Sir William Sandys, Baron Sandys of the Vine; by the 2nd, Joan, Sir Richard had two other sons, viz., SIR REGINALD BRAY, knight-banneret, and K.G., Lord Treasurer temp. HENRY VII., and

JOHN BRAY, Esq., who was buried in the chancel of the church at Chelsea, had (with a dau., the wife of Sir John Norris) three sons,

- I. EDMUND (Sir), summoned to parliament as Baron Bray, 21st HENRY VIII., ancestor of the BARONS BRAYE.
- II. EDWARD (Sir), ancestor of the BRAYS OF SHERE, co. Surrey. (See BURKE's Landed Gentry.)
- III. Reginald, of Barrington, co. Gloucester, ancestor of the BRAYS OF BARRINGTON.

The eldest son,

SIR EDMUND BRAYE, Knt., of Braye, co. Bedford, was summoned to parliament as a BARON, it was alleged, 21st HENRY VIII.; but as neither the original writ issued to him, nor the enrolment thereof, could be found, the fact could not, in the investigation recently before the House of Lords, be positively substantiated. The reasoning in support of the allegation, however, and the cases adduced in point were deemed conclusive. Lord Braye m. Jane, dau. and heir of Sir R. Hallighwell, of Holwell, and dying 18 October, 1539, left issue,

- I. JOHN, his heir.
- I. ANNE BRAYE, m. to George Brooke, Lord Cobham. Her grandsons,

HENRY BROOKE, Lord Cobham, who d. in 1619, s. p., and GEORGE BROOKE, being both attainted of high treason (the latter was executed), and the attainder never having been reversed, the representation of this, the elder co-heir, vested in the crown.

- II. ELIZABETH BRAYE, m. to Sir Ralph Verney, Knt., of Pendley and Middle Claydon, co. Bucks, and had issue, 1 Edward Verney, d. s. p. in 1558; 2 John Verney, d. s. p.; and 3 SIR EDMUND VERNEY, m. 1st, Frances, dau. of John Hastings, Esq., of Ilford, co. Oxford, but by her had no issue. He m. 2ndly, Audrey, dau. of William Gardner, Esq., of Fulmere, Bucks, and widow of Sir Peter Carew, and by that lady had an only child, SIR FRANCIS VERNEY, of Penley, who m. Ursula, dau. and co-heir of William St. Barbe; and d. s. p. abroad, having sold the estate. Sir Edmund m. 3rdly Mary, dau. of John Blackney, Esq., of Sparrowham, and widow of Geoffrey Turville, of Leicestershire, and had by her, SIR EDMUND VERNEY, Knt., marshal and standard-bearer to King CHARLES I., killed at the battle of Edge Hill, 23 October, 1642, leaving by Margaret his wife, dau. of Sir Thomas Benton, Knt., a son, SIR RALPH VERNEY, who was created a baronet in 1696, and was s. by his son, SIR JOHN VERNEY, 2nd baronet, who was created a peer of Ireland, temp. ANNE, as Baron Verney and Viscount FERMANAUGH. He m. Elizabeth Palmer, of Little Chelsea, and had issue,

1. RALPH VERNEY, 2nd Viscount FERMANAUGH, who was created EARL VERNEY. His lordship's line entirely failed on the death of his grand-dau., Mary Verney, who was created BARONESS FERMANAUGH, and d. s. p. in 1810.

- 1 ELIZABETH VERNEY, d. unm. in 1767.
- 2 MARY VERNEY, m. to Col. John Lovett, of Soulbury, Bucks, and her issue all d. unm.
- 3 MARGARET VERNEY, m. Sir Thomas Cave Bart., of Stamford Hall, co. Leicester, and was great-grandmother of SARAH OTWAY-CAVE, late BARONESS BRAYE.

- III. FRIDESWIDE-BRAYE, m. Sir Percival Hart, Knt., of Lullingstone, and from her descended (her representative) SIR PERCIVAL HART-DYKE, Bart., who was one of the co-heirs to the BARONY OF BRAYE.

- IV. MARY BRAYE, m. Sir Robert Peckham. Her descendants are presumed to be EXTINCT.

- V. DOROTHY BRAYE, m. to Edmund, Lord Chandos; and her grand-dau., the Hon. CATHERINE CHANDOS, having m. Francis Russell, 4th Earl of Bedford, she is now represented by William, Duke of Bedford.

- VI. FRANCES BRAYE, m. to Thomas Liffield, Esq., of Stoke d'Aubernon, co. Surrey, and had a dau. and heiress,

JANE LIFIELD, who m. Thomas Vincent, Esq., and from that marriage descends SIR FRANCIS VINCENT, Bart., of Stoke d'Aubernon, who was stated to have been one of the co-heirs of the BARONY OF BRAYE.

Lord Braye was s. by his son,

JOHN BRAYE, 2nd Baron, summoned to parliament from 3 November, 1545, to 21 October, 1555. This nobleman was a commanding officer in the expedition made into France under the Earl of Hertford, in the 38th of HENRY VIII.; and upon the insurrection in Norfolk, in the 2nd of EDWARD VI., his lordship marched with the Marquess of Northampton for its suppression; and in three years afterwards he was appointed to attend the same nobleman upon his embassy into France, as bearer of the order of the Garter to the French monarch. In the 4th year of MARY, he assisted at the siege of St. Quintina, in Picardy. His lordship m. Anne, dau. of Francis, Earl of Shrewsbury, but dying s. p. 19 November, 1557, was buried at Chelsea Church. His estates devolved upon his sisters, and the BARONY OF BRAYE fell into ABEYANCE amongst these ladies, and so continued until 3 October, 1839, when the abeyance was determined in favour of

SARAH OTWAY CAVE, by letters patent, to hold the said dignity to her and the heirs of her body, she being one of the co-heirs of John, Lord Bray, who was the only son of Sir Edmund Braye, summoned to parliament by writ, 21st HENRY VI. Her ladyship m. in 1790, Henry Otway, Esq., of Castle Otway, co. Tipperary, and by him (who d. 13 September, 1815,) had

- I. Robert, M.P. for co. Tipperary, m. 19 October, 1838, Sophia, eldest dau. of the late Sir Francis Burdett, Bart., and d. s. p. 30 November, 1844.
- II. Thomas, major in the army, d. unm. 19 January, 1851.
1. Maria.
- II. Anne, m. 1st, in 1828, to J. A. Arnold, Esq., of Lutterworth, who d. s. p. in 1844; and 2ndly, 2 December, 1847, the Rev. Henry Kemp Richardson, rector of Leire, co. Leicester.
- III. Catherine, m. 1st, in 1826, to Henry Murray, Esq., (youngest son of Lord George Murray), who d. 26 November, 1830; and 2ndly, 11 February, 1850, to Earl Beauchamp, who d. in 1853.
- IV. Henrietta, m. 24 September, 1844, to the Rev. Edgell Wyatt Edgell, rector of North Cray, Kent, and has issue,
 - 1 Edmund Verney.
 - 2 Henry Adrian, b. 17 May, 1847.
 - 3 Alfred Thomas Townshend, b. 23 July, 1849.
 - 4 Frances, Catherine, Sarah, twins, b. 16 August, 1845.

Her ladyship d. 21 February, 1862, when her barony again fell into ABEYANCE: her daus. are co-heirs to it.

BROMFLETE—BARON OF VESCY.

By Writ of Summons, dated 24 January, 1449.

Lineage.

In the 11th year of RICHARD II.,

THOMAS DE BROMFLETE obtained a charter of free warren in all his demesne lands in the co. of York, and marrying in two years afterwards, Margaret, dau. and heiress of Sir Edward St. John, Knt., by Anastasia his wife, dau. and co-heir of William de Aton, Lord of Vesel, had livery of the lands of her inheritance. In the 19th of the same reign he was constituted the king's chief butler, and received the honour of knighthood. He d. in the 9th of HENRY VI. (1430-1), and was s. by his only surviving son,

SIR HENRY DE BROMFLETE, Knt., who had then livery of his lands. In the 12th of HENRY VI., Sir Henry was sent ambassador to the great council holden at Basil, in Germany; having license to take with him, in gold, silver, jewels, and plate, to the value of £2,000 sterling, and an assignation of £300 for every half year he should be detained upon the mission, beyond the first six months. In the 27th of the same reign, he was summoned to parliament by special writ, dated 24th January (1449), as "HENRICO BROMFLETE DE VESCI, CHEVALIER," in remainder to the heirs male of his body, being the first and only writ with such a limitation. His lordship had afterwards a specific dispensation from the duty of attending parliament, in consideration of his eminent services to King HENRY V., in that monarch's wars of France and Normandy, for which he had never received any remuneration, and in consideration, likewise, of his advanced age. Lord Vesey d. 6 Jan., 1468, without male issue, when the BARONY EXPIRED, according to the terms of the writ. A portion of his lordship's estates were devoted, by his will, to religious purposes, while the remainder devolved upon his only dau. (by Eleanor his wife, dau. of William, Lord Fitzhugh),

BROOKE—BARONS COBHAM.

By Writ of Summons, dated 8 January, 1313.

Lineage.

This ancient barony came into the family of Brooke with Joane, only dau. and heiress of Sir Reginald Braybrooke, and his wife, Joane de la Pole, grand-dau. and heiress of John Cobham, 2nd and last Lord Cobham of that family (see COBHAM, Barons Cobham), which

JOANE BRAYBROKE, m. SIR THOMAS BROKE, Knt., and had issue,

EDWARD, of whom we treat.

Reginald, of Aspall, co. Suffolk, from whom derived, 9th in descent,

FRANCIS BROOKE, Esq., of Woodbridge, father, by Anne his wife, dau. and heiress of Samuel Thompson, Esq., of Ufford, Place, co. Suffolk, of the REV. CHARLES BROOKE, of Ufford Place, whose only child is the present FRANCIS CAPPEL BROOKE, Esq., of Ufford Place.

The eldest son,

SIR EDWARD BROOKE, Knt., summoned to parliament as "EDWARD BROOKE DE COBHAM, CHEVALIER," from 13 January, 1445, to 30 July, 1460. (The Barony of Cobham had lain dormant from the execution of Sir John Oldcastle, Lord Cobham, until the issue of the first of these summonses.) His lordship was a zealous supporter of the house of York, under whose banner he participated in the victory of St. Albans, in the 33rd of HENRY VI., and commanded the left wing of the Yorkshiresmen at Northampton. He m. Elizabeth, dau. of James, Lord Audley, and dying in 1464, was s. by his son,

JOHN BROOKE, who was summoned to parliament as LORD COBHAM, from 19 August, 1472, to 16 January, 1497. This nobleman distinguished himself in arms in the reigns of EDWARD IV. and HENRY VII. His lordship m. Margaret, dau. of Edward Nevil, Lord Abergavenny, and dying in 1506, was s. by his son,

THOMAS BROOKE, summoned to parliament from 17 October, 1509, to 12 November, 1515. His lordship attended King HENRY VIII. into France at the taking of Tournay. He m. thrice, but had issue only by his 1st wife, Dorothy, dau. of Sir Henry Heyden, and dying in 1529, was succeeded by his eldest son,

GEORGE BROOKE, summoned to parliament, from 3 November, 1529, to 20 January, 1558. Upon the dissolution of the greater monasteries in the reign of HENRY VIII., this nobleman obtained a grant in fee of the manor of Chiddingfold in Kent; as also of the college of Cobham, and in the 5th of EDWARD VI., on some apprehension of danger from the French, he was constituted lieutenant-general of those forces which were sent into the north for the purpose of fortifying some havens there. At the accession of Queen MARY he was committed to the Tower on suspicion of being implicated in the treason of Sir Thomas Wyatt, but was soon afterwards liberated. His lordship m. Anne, dau. of Edmund, Lord Bray, and had issue, WILLIAM, his successor, with seven other sons, the 5th of whom, HENRY, was father of JOHN BROOKE, of Hekington, created BARON COBHAM, in 1645, and two daus., viz.,

Elizabeth, m. to William Parr, Marquess of Northampton (his lordship's 2nd wife).

Katherine, m. to John Jerningham, Esq.

Lord Cobham, who was a knight of the Garter, d. at Cobham Hall, on 29 September, 1558, and was s. by his eldest son,

WILLIAM BROOKE, summoned to parliament, from 1558, to 1593. This nobleman being lord warden of the Cinque Ports at the death of Queen MARY, was deputed to announce to the Spaniards, in the Netherlands, the accession of ELIZABETH, and to acquaint them that her majesty had added to the commission appointed to negotiate a peace at Cambray, William, Lord Howard, of Effingham. In the 14th of ELIZABETH (1571-2), his lordship being one of those committed to the Tower of London for participating in the designs of the Duke of Norfolk, regarding that nobleman's marriage with MARY, Queen of Scots, made a discovery of all he knew of the affair, in the hope of obtaining his own pardon. The baron was subsequently employed upon two occasions to treat of peace with France. He was afterwards constable of Dover Castle, and warden of the Cinque Ports, lord chamberlain of the household, and a knight of the Garter. His lordship m. 1st, Dorothy, dau. of George, Lord Abergavenny, by Mary, dau. of Edward, Duke of Buckingham, by whom he had an only dau.,

CHRISTIANA, m. to Sir Peter Temple, of Stowe, Bucks, whose grandson, Sir Richard Temple, was created in 1714, Baron Cobham, and in 1718, Viscount and Baron Cobham. (See TEMPLE, Lord Cobham, under the head of BUCKINGHAM, in BURKE's Peerage and Baronage).

His lordship d. in 1596, and was s. by his eldest son,

HENRY BROOKE, summoned to parliament on 24 October, 1597. This nobleman was constituted by Queen ELIZABETH warden of the Cinque Ports; but in the reign of King JAMES, being arraigned with his brother George for participation in the alleged treason of Sir Walter Raleigh, they were found guilty and condemned to death, but George Brooke alone suffered. His lordship was reprieved, yet nevertheless attainted and left to drag on in misery, and the most wretched poverty, the remainder of an unhappy life in imprisonment, wherein he died 24 January, 1618. His wife was Frances, dau. of Charles Howard, Earl of Nottingham, but he had no issue. Under the attainder of this unfortunate nobleman the ancient BARONY OF COBHAM EXPIRED, although his nephew and heir, William Cobham (son of the beheaded and attainted George), was restored in blood in 1610, but "not to enjoy the title of Lord Cobham without the king's especial grace," which was never conferred upon him.* Cobham Hall, Lord Cobham's fine seat near Gravesend, was granted by King JAMES I. to James Stewart, Duke of Richmond, and has descended to his grace's heir-general, the EARL OF DARNLEY.

BROOKE—BARON COBHAM.

By Letters Patent, dated 3 January, 1645.

Lineage.

SIR JOHN BROOKE OF HEKINGTON (son of the Honourable Henry Brooke, 5th son of George, 4th Lord Cobham of that family), having eminently distinguished himself in the cause of King CHARLES I., was elevated to the peerage 3 January, 1645, as LORD COBHAM, "to enjoy that title in as ample a manner as any of his ancestors had done," save that the remaindership was limited to heirs male of his body, a new barony being thus created. His lordship d. in 1651, s. p., when the barony EXPIRED.

Arms—Gu., a chev., arg., a lion rampant, sa., crowned, or.

* The plot in which Henry, Lord Cobham, and his brother the Honourable George Brooke were involved, is known as the "Raleigh Conspiracy," and amongst the principal actors were the Lord Grey, of Wilton, Sir George Carew, and other persons of eminence. Lord Cobham appears to have been not many degrees removed from a fool, but enjoying the favour of the queen, he was a fitting tool in the hands of his more wily associates. Upon his trial he was dastardly to the most abject meanness.

The mode of bringing the prisoners on the scaffold, and aggravating their sufferings, with momentary expectation of their catastrophe, before the pre-intended pardon was produced, was a piece of management and contrivance for which King JAMES was by the sycophants of the court very highly extolled, but such a course was universally esteemed the pitiful policy of a weak contemptible mind.

On this occasion, however, says Sir Dudley Carleton, Cobham, who was now "to play his part," did much cozen the world, for he came to the scaffold with good assurance and contempt of death. And in the short prayers he made, so outprayed the company which helped to pray with him, that a stander-by observed, "that he had a good mouth in a cry, but was nothing single."

The eldest son,

ANTHONY BROWNE, was appointed in the 1st year of HENRY VII. standard-bearer for the whole realm of England and elsewhere; and the next year, being one of the esquires of the king's body, was constituted governor of Queenborough Castle, Kent. At this period, participating in the victory achieved over the Earl of Lincoln and Lambert Simnel at Newark, he received the honour of knighthood, 1486. He m. Lucy, 4th dau. and co-heir of JOHN NEVIL, MARQUESS OF MONTAGU, and widow of Sir Thomas Fitz-Williams, of Aldwarke, co. York, and had issue, Lucy, m. 1st, to Sir Thomas Clifford, Knt., 3rd son of Henry, Earl of Cumberland; and 2ndly, John, son of Sir John Cutts, Knt.

Sir Anthony was s. by his son,

Sir ANTHONY BROWNE, who was with the Earl of Surrey, Lord High Admiral, at Southampton, in the 14th HENRY VIII. (1522-3), when he convoyed the emperor from that port to Biscay; and after landing at Morlaix, in Brittany, was knighted for his gallantry in the assault and winning of that town. In two years afterwards, being then an esquire of the household, he was one of the challengers in feats of arms held at Greenwich before the king; and the next year he was appointed lieutenant of the Isle of Man during the minority of the Earl of Derby. After this he was twice deputed on important occasions ambassador to the court of France; and obtained in 30th of the same reign a grant of the office of master of the horse, with the annual fee of £40; in which year he had also a grant of the house and site of the late monastery of Battle, co. Sussex. In the next year he was elected, with the Lord Chancellor Audley, a knight of the most noble order of the Garter. In the 30th of HENRY, Sir Anthony was constituted standard-bearer to the king, and was nominated by his majesty one of the executors to his will. Sir Anthony Brown m. Alice, dau. of Sir John Gage, K.G., and by her (who was buried at Battle,) had issue,

Sir Anthony d. 6 May, 1543, and was s. by his eldest son,

SIR ANTHONY BROWNE, Knt., sheriff of Surrey and Sussex in the last year of EDWARD VI., who was elevated to the peerage by Queen MARY on 2 September, 1554, in the dignity of Viscount MONTAGU, and immediately after deputed, by order of parliament, with Thomas Thurbury, bishop of Ely, to the Pope, for the purpose of reuniting the realm of England with the church of Rome. In the next year his lordship was installed a knight of the most noble order of the Garter; but upon the accession of Queen ELIZABETH his name was left out of the privy council, and he voted soon after, in his place in parliament, with the Earl of Shrewsbury, against abolishing the Pope's supremacy. Yet, according to Camden, he contrived to ingratiate himself with her majesty. "Queen ELIZABETH," says that writer, "having experienced his loyalty, had great esteem for him (though he was a stiff Romanist), and paid him a visit some time before his death; for she was sensible that his regard for that religion was owing to his cradle and education, and proceeded rather from principle than faction, as some people's faith did." His lordship m. 1st, Jane, dau. of Robert Ratcliffe, Earl of Sussex, and had issue,

i. ANTHONY, who predeceased him on 29 June, 1592, leaving by his wife Mary, dau. of Sir William Dormer, Knt., of Etherp, co. Bucks, and who re-married successively Sir Edward Twedale and Sir Thomas Gerard, of Bryn, Bart.,

His lordship d. 9 April, 1787, and was s. by his son,

GEORGE-SAMUEL BROWNE, 8th viscount, b. 26 June, 1769, who met an untimely fate in a rash attempt to pass the waterfalls of Schaffhausen, accompanied by his friend, Mr. Sedley Burdet, in a small flat-bottomed boat, contrary to the advice, and even restriction of the local magistrate, who, knowing the certain result of so unprecedented an enterprise, had placed guards to intercept the daring travellers. They found means, however, to elude every precaution, and having pushed off, passed the first fall in security, but in attempting to clear the second they disappeared, and were never afterwards seen or heard of. It is presumed that the boat, impelled by the violence of the cataract, got jammed between the two rocks, and was thus destroyed. This melancholy event occurred in 1793, and about the same period his lordship's magnificent mansion at Cowdray* was accidentally burnt to the ground. His lordship (b. 26 June, 1769) dying unm. the viscounty was supposed to devolve upon (the great-grandson of Stanislaus Browne, Esq., son and heir of John Browne, Esq., brother of Anthony, 2nd viscount, and grandson of the 1st lord) his cousin, MARK ANTHONY BROWNE, Esq., 9th Viscount Montagu, at whose decease, in 1797, without issue, the dignity is supposed to have become EXTINCT.

BRUCE—BARON BRUCE, OF ANANDALE.

By Writ of Summons, dated 23 June, 1295.

Lineage.

ROBERT DE BRUS was a wealthy baron in Yorkshire in the reign of WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, with whom he had come from Normandy. He had the castle and manor of Skelton, in Yorkshire, and Hert and Hertness, in the Bishoprick of Durham, and before the end of the reign of the CONQUEROR was possessed of ninety-four lordships in Yorkshire. His son (or, by some accounts, the son of his son ADAM),

ROBERT DE BRUCE, Lord of Skelton, made a figure at the

ROBERT DE BRUCE became Lord of Annandale, as his father's gift, and was founder of the great House of Bruce in Scotland. He flourished under DAVID I., MALCOLM IV., and WILLIAM THE LION. The name of his wife was Euphemia, by whom he had issue, ROBERT and WILLIAM.

ROBERT DE BRUCE, lord of Annandale, m. in 1183, Isabel, natural dau. of King WILLIAM THE LION, by whom he had no issue: he was s. before 1191, by his brother,

WILLIAM DE BRUCE lord of Annandale, and possessor of large estates in the north of England. He obtained from King JOHN the grant of a weekly market at Hartilpool, and he granted lands to the canons of Gysburn. He d. in 1215, and was s. by his son,

ROBERT DE BRUCE, lord of Annandale. He m. Isabel, 2nd dau. of David, Earl of Huntingdon, son of Henry, Prince of Scotland, and grandson of King DAVID I. It was in consequence of this royal alliance, that their son entered into competition for the Scottish crown, and that their descendants became co-heirs of the ancient Scoto-Pictish and Anglo-Saxon kings. Isabel was co-heir of her brother, John the Scot, Earl of Chester; she d. in 1251, having survived her husband six years. He d. in 1245, and was s. by his son,

ROBERT DE BRUCE, lord of Annandale. He was an able and strenuous baron, and acted a great part in the reign of ALEXANDER III. In 1255, he was appointed one of the fifteen Regents of Scotland. In 1284, he was one of the Magnates Scotum who consented to accept Margaret of Norway as their sovereign, on the demise of ALEXANDER III. In 1291, he entered into an unsuccessful competition with John Balliol for the crown of Scotland. He d. at Lochmaben Castle, in 1295, aged eighty-five. In 1240, he m. Isabella, dau. of Gilbert de Clare, 3rd Earl of Gloucester, by whom he had

ROBERT, his heir.

BERNARD, of Conington and Exton. Sir Bernard Bruce was the ancestor of the only cadet branch of the House of Bruce which can boast of royal descent. He was seated at Exton, co. Rutland, and was father of SIR JOHN BRUCE, of Exton, whose only dau. and heir, JANE BRUCE, of Exton, was wife of Sir Nicholas Green. Her dau. and heir, JOAN GREEN, of Exton, was wife of Sir Thomas Culpeper, and her dau. and heir, CATHERINE CULPEPER, of Exton, was wife of Sir John Harington. Her descendant in the fourth degree, SIR JOHN HARINGTON, of Exton, heir-general of the only cadet branch of the royal Bruces, m. Lucy Sydney, dau. of Sir William Sydney of Penshurst, by whom he had a son, JOHN HARINGTON, created Lord Harington, of Exton, by King JAMES I., whose line failed, and a dau., ELIZABETH HARINGTON, wife of Sir Edward Montague, of Boughton. Through her the three families of the House of Montague, viz., the DUKES OF MONTAGUE and MANCHESTER, and the EARL OF SANDWICH: SONDER, EARL OF FEVERSHAM, and his descendants, LORDS MONSON and SONDER; and CHOLMELEY, BARONET OF EASTON; are all descended from the royal blood of Bruce. The competitor for the Scottish crown had also a dau., CHRISTIAN BRUCE, wife of Patrick Dunbar, 7th Earl of March, ancestress to a long line of Earls of March.

Robert Bruce, the competitor, was s. by his eldest son,

ROBERT BRUCE, Lord of Annandale, who was Earl of Carrick, in right of his wife, Margaret, Countess of Carrick (to whom he was m. in 1271), dau. and heir of Niel, Earl of Carrick, and widow of Adam de Kilconecath, Earl of Carrick. On the death of his countess, in 1292, he resigned the Earldom of Carrick to his eldest son. In 1296, he, along with his eldest son, swore fealty to King EDWARD I., and was summoned to parliament as a BARON of England from 23 June, 1295, to 26 January, 1297. He d. in 1304. By the Countess of Carrick he had issue,

I. ROBERT, eventually King of Scotland.

II. EDWARD, crowned King of Ireland in 1316, and killed at the battle of Dundalk, in 1318. He had issue, ROBERT, ALEXANDER, and THOMAS (stated to have been illegitimate), who were successively Earls of Carrick.

III. Thomas, s. p.

IV. Alexander, s. p.

V. Nigel, s. p.

I. ISABEL, wife, 1st, of Sir Thomas Randolph, high chamberlain of Scotland; 2nd, of the Earl of Athol; 3rd, of Alexander Bruce. By Randolph she had issue, THOMAS RANDOLPH, EARL OF MORAY, Regent of Scotland, whose dau. and eventual heir, AGNES RANDOLPH, m. her cousin, Patrick Dunbar, 9th Earl of March. Her son, GEORGE, 10th Earl of March, was father of the 11th earl, and of two daus., 1 ELIZABETH, betrothed in 1399 to the Duke of Rothsay; 2 JANET, wife, 1st, of Sir John Seton; and 2ndly, of Sir Adam Johnstone. She was ancestress to the Earls of Winton, and the Johnstones, baronets of Westerhall.

II. MARY, wife, 1st, of Sir Neil Campbell, of Lochowe, by whom she was ancestress to the House of Argyll; 2nd, of Sir Alexander Frazer, high chamberlain of Scotland.

III. CHRISTIAN, wife, 1st, of Gratney, Earl of Mar; 2nd, of Sir Christopher Seton; 3rd, of Sir Andrew Moray, of Bothwell.

IV. MATILDA, wife of Hugh, Earl of Ross.

The three other daus. are said to have m. into the families of Carliyle, Dishington, and Brechin.

ROBERT BRUCE, the eldest son, b. 11 July, 1274, was the glorious restorer of the Scottish monarchy. He became Earl of Carrick on his father's resignation, in 1292, and s. as 2nd Baron Bruce. He asserted his claim to the Scottish crown, and ascended the throne of his ancestors, being crowned at Scone, in 1306. His power and the liberties of his country were finally vindicated by the splendid victory of Bannockburn, in 1314. He d. in June, 1329, in the fifty-fifth year of his age. King ROBERT I. m. 1st, Isabella, dau. of Donald, 10th Earl of Mar, by whom he had an only dau., PRINCESS MARJORY, his eldest co-heir, who, failing her brother, was heiress of the Scottish crown. She was wife of WALTER, LORD HIGH STEWARD of Scotland, by whom she had issue, ROBERT, who afterwards ascended the throne of Scotland as King ROBERT II., and who was ancestor of the long line of STUART Kings; his heirs-general are the DUKE OF MODENA, the DUKE OF PARMA, and the KING OF NAPLES. King ROBERT I. m. 2ndly, Elizabeth de Burgo, dau. of Richard, 2nd Earl of Ulster, by whom he had issue a son, who s. him as King DAVID II.; and two daus.,

The Princess MARGARET, his junior co-heir. She was wife of William, 4th Earl of Sutherland. Her descendant and representative is GEORGE, 2nd DUKE OF SUTHERLAND, who is junior co-heir general of King ROBERT BRUCE.

The Princess MATILDA, his junior co-heir, wife of Thomas de Izac, by whom she had a dau., JOANNA LE ISAC, the wife of John de Ergadia, Lord of Lorn, by whom she had a dau., who transmitted to her descendants and representatives the junior co-heirship of King ROBERT BRUCE, viz., JANET DE ERGADIA, wife of Robert Stewart, brother of John Stewart, of Innermeath. She was ancestress of the STEWARTS OF ROSSYTH, co. Fife, and of the STEWARTS OF CRAIGIE HALL, afterwards of NEW HALLS, co. Linlithgow.

King ROBERT had also a dau., who is believed to have been illegitimate, who was wife of Sir Walter Oliphant, of Aberdalgy, the ancestor of the Lords Oliphant. King ROBERT was s. in 1329 by his only son, DAVID II., King of Scotland, who was crowned at Scone, in 1331. He had no issue by either of his wives—the Princess Joanna of England, dau. of EDWARD II., or Margaret de Logie, and he closed his inglorious reign in 1371, in the forty-seventh year of his age. With him and his cousin, Sir John Bruce, of Exton, ended the royal male line of Bruce, which continued to be represented as heirs-general by the STUART Kings of Scotland, the EARLS OF SUTHERLAND, the STEWARTS OF ROSSYTH, and (of the junior branch) the HARRINGTONS OF EXTON.

But the great House of Bruce continued to be perpetuated in the male line by a most distinguished family of baronial rank, which has been prolific of high and important branches. The family of Bruce of Clackmanan, from which all the principal houses of the name in Scotland are descended, claims to be of the same stock with the ancient Lords of Annandale and of Skelton, and this claim was distinctly admitted by the head of the family, King DAVID II., in a charter to Sir Robert Bruce, the son of Thomas Bruce, of the castle and manor of Clackmanan, together with the lands of Wester Kennet, Garlet, &c., &c., dated 9 December, 1359. In this charter, the King designates Sir Robert Bruce thus: "Dilecto et fideli consanguineo suo Roberto de Bruis."

The family of BRUCE of CLACKMANAN was the parent stem of the BRUCES of KENNET, co. Clackmanan, whose chief is Alexander Hugh Bruce, Esq., of Kennet, and their junior branch of Garlet, now represented by William Downing Bruce, Esq., F.S.A., of Lincoln's Inn, barrister-at-law; of the BRUCES of

Blair Hall, whose chief is the EARL OF ELGIN; the BRUCES of AIRTH, and their cadet in Ireland, BRUCE or BRUCK, of KILLBOOT; the BRUCES of STENHOUSE, &c., &c. Their detailed pedigrees may be seen in DRUMMOND'S "Noble British Families."

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 1 August, 1641.

Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 18 March, 1664.

Lineage.

THOMAS BRUCE, 1st Earl of Elgin in the peerage of Scotland, was created a peer of England, 1 August, 1641, as BARON BRUCE, OF WHORLTON, in the co. of York, and dying in 1643, was s. by his only son,

ROBERT BRUCE, 2nd Earl of Elgin, who was advanced in the peerage of England, 18 March, 1664, to the dignities of Baron Bruce, of Skelton, co. York, Viscount Bruce of Amphilh, co. Bedford, and EARL OF AYLESBURY. His lordship m. Diana, dau. of Henry, 2nd Earl of Stamford, and dying in 1685, was s. by his only surviving son,

THOMAS BRUCE, 3rd Earl of Elgin, and 2nd Earl of Aylesbury, who m. 1st, in 1676, Elizabeth Seymour, dau. of Henry, Lord Beauchamp, and heiress of her brother, William, 3rd Duke of Somerset, by whom he had issue,

1. CHARLES, his successor, who was summoned to parliament in 1711, as LORD BRUCE, OF WHORLTON.

2. Elizabeth, m. to George Brudenell, 3rd Earl of Cardigan, and had issue,

1. GEORGE, 4th Earl of Cardigan, m. Mary, dau. of John, Duke of Montagu, and, assuming the surname of Montagu, was advanced, at the decease of his father-in-law, to the Marquisate of Monthermer, and DUKEDOM OF MONTAGU. His grace d. in 1790, leaving one married dau.,

ELIZABETH, Duchess of Buccleuch, grandmother of the present DUKE OF BUCCLEUCH.

2. James, successor to his brother, as 5th Earl of Cardigan.

3. Robert, whose son inherited as 6th Earl of Cardigan.

4. THOMAS, who, upon succeeding his uncle, the Earl of Aylesbury, in the Barony of BRUCE, of Tottenham, assumed the surname of Bruce, and was subsequently created EARL OF AYLESBURY.

His lordship, who m. 2ndly, Charlotte, Countess of Sannu, and had an only dau., Charlotte-Maria, wife of Prince Horno, d. in 1741, and was s. by his only surviving son,

CHARLES BRUCE, 3rd Earl of Aylesbury, and 4th Earl of Elgin. This nobleman m. 1st, Anne, eldest dau. and one of the co-heirs of William Savile, Marquess of Halifax, by whom he had issue,

Robert, m. Frances, dau. of Sir William Blackett, Bart., and d. s. p. before his father.

MARY, m. 1728, Henry Brydges, 2nd Duke of Chandos, and was mother of James Brydges, 3rd Duke of Chandos, whose only dau. and heiress, ANNE ELIZA, m. in 1796, Richard, Earl Temple, afterwards DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM AND CHANDOS; and was grandmother of Richard-Plantagenet-Campbell, DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM AND CHANDOS, who thus, by descent from the BRUCES and SEYMOURS, derives in a direct line from the Princess Mary, and, in her issue, sister and co-heir of King HENRY VIII.

Elizabeth, m. in 1732, to Hon. Benjamin Bathurst, son and heir of Allen, Lord Bathurst, and d. s. p.

His lordship, m. 2ndly, Juliana, 2nd dau. of Charles Boyle, Earl of Burlington, but had no issue. He m. 3rdly, in 1739, Caroline, only dau. of John Campbell, 4th Duke of Argyll, by whom he had an only dau.,

Mary, m. in 1757, to Charles, Duke of Richmond.

After the decease of his son, the Earl of Aylesbury and Elgin obtained, by letters patent, dated 17 April, 1746, the English Barony of BRUCE OF TOTTENHAM, co. Wilts, in remainder to his nephew, the Hon. Thomas Brudenell. His lordship d. 10 February, 1747, when his Scottish honours passed to his heir-general. (See ELGIN, BRUCE'S Peerage and Baronetage.) The English BARONY OF TOTTENHAM as limited, and the EARLDOM OF AYLESBURY, with his lordship's other English honours, EXPIRED.

BRUGES—EARL OF WINCHESTER.

By Creation in open Parliament, 13 October, 1472,

Lineage.

LEWIS DE BRUGES, Lord of Gruthuse, and Prince of Steenhouse, in Burgundy, "who" (says COURTHOPE, Historic Peerage) "was a knight of the Golden Fleece, and is stated by Philip de Comines to have been governor in Holland for the Duke of Burgundy," having evinced the greatest sympathy for King EDWARD IV., during that monarch's exile (when forced to fly by the Lancastrians in the 10th year of his reign,) at the court of his brother-in-law, Charles de Valois, Duke of Burgundy, was received in two years afterwards by EDWARD, then re-established monarch in his English dominions, with the highest honours, and as a testimony of the gratitude felt by the nation towards so staunch a friend of its sovereign, the House of Commons, in parliament assembled, besought the king, through their speaker, William Alyngton, to bestow upon the foreign Prince some especial mark of royal favour. In compliance with which request EDWARD advanced him, 13 October, 1472, to the dignity of EARL OF WINCHESTER, in the parliament chamber, by cincture with a sword, and granted to the new peer for upholding the dignity, the sum of £200 annually. In the November following his lordship obtained a patent of arms as Earl of Winchester, viz., "Azur dix mascles d'or ornés d'une canton de armes de Angleterre; c'estaavoit de gules, a une léopard passant d'or, armé d'azur," which were so depicted in colours in the roll wherein his patent for them is recorded. But in the 15th of HENRY VII. (1499), which was about twenty-seven years after, both these grants were surrendered to the king, then at Calais, and upon each of their enrolments a wacat made, without having any reason assigned for the proceedings. His lordship m. Margaret, dau. of Henry de Boreville, and had issue,

JOHN, Lord of Gruthuse, father of REGINALD, who d. without male issue.

Arms.—Az., ten mascles, four, three, two, and one, or, on a canton, gu., a lion passant guardant of the second.

BRYAN—BARON BRYAN.

By Writ of Summons, dated 25 November, 1350.

Lineage.

In the 29th of HENRY III.,

GUY DE BRIAN, whose chief seat was in the marches of Wales, received command to assist the Earl of Gloucester against the Welch; and in the 42nd of the same reign, he had a second military summons for a similar service. We find him subsequently, however, arrayed under the baronial banner, and constituted after the victory of his party, at Lewes, governor of the castles of KARDIGAN and KERMERDYN, but he soon afterwards returned to his allegiance, and was one of the sureties (51st HENRY III.) for Robert de Vere, Earl of Oxford, that that nobleman should thenceforward deport himself peaceably, and abide by the dictum of Kenilworth, for the redemption of his lands. This Guy de Brian, m. twice; one of his wives being Eve, only dau. and heiress of Henry de Traci, and had by her an only dau., Maud, m. to Nicholas

Martin, Baron of Kemea. By the other wife, Guy de Bryan left at his decease a son,

SIR GUY DE BRYAN, who, in the 4th EDWARD III., was constituted governor of the castle of Haverford, but he was found next year to be of unsound mind—when an agreement was made, that the Barony of Chastel Walweyn should at once come into possession of his son GUOYEN, upon his undertaking to provide for his two sisters from the revenues thereof. This

GUOYEN DE BRYAN, thus invested with the Barony of Chastel-Walweyn, served in the Scottish wars, in the 11th of EDWARD III., and in consideration of his special services, had an annuity of £40 granted him by the king, out of the exchequer, for life. In the 15th of the same reign, he was made governor of St. Briavel's Castle, and warden of the forest of Dene, co. Gloucester; and from the 16th to the 20th he was engaged in the French wars. He d. in 1350, and was s. by his son,

GUY DE BRYAN, who became a person of considerable note. About the time of his father's death he was standard-bearer to King EDWARD III., in the celebrated fight with the French at Calais, and deporting himself with great valour upon that occasion, he had a grant of 200 marks per annum, out of the exchequer, for life. He was also constituted governor of St. Briavel's Castle, and warden of the forest of Dene; and was summoned to parliament as a BARON from 25 November, 1350, to 6 December, 1389. In 1354 his lordship was one of the ambassadors to the court of Rome to procure the papal ratification of a league, then made, between the Kings of England and France; the next year, he attended King EDWARD in his expedition into France, when he was made a banneret, and he continued for several years subsequently in the French wars. In 1361 he was again accredited upon a mission of importance to the holy see, and being some years afterwards once more engaged against the French, he was made admiral of the king's fleet, a command renewed to his lordship in the next year (44th EDWARD III.), and he was soon after elected a knight of the Garter. In the reign of RICHARD II., Lord Bryan also served against the French, and he was in the expedition made into Ireland, with Edward Mortimer, Earl of March. His lordship m. Elizabeth, dau. of William de Montacute, Earl of Salisbury, and widow of Hugh le Despenser, by whom (with two younger sons, who d. issueless), he had,

GUY, who d. in 1368, in the lifetime of his father, leaving issue,

PHILIPPA, m., 1st, to John Devereux, and 2ndly, to Sir Henry le Scrope, Knt., but d. s. p. 8th HENRY IV.

ELIZABETH, m. to Sir Robert Lovell, Knt., and had an only dau. and heiress,

MAUD LOVELL, who m., 1st, John Fitzalan, Earl of Arundel, and had issue,

HUMPHREY, EARL OF ARUNDEL, d. s. p.

Her ladyship m. 2ndly, Sir Richard Stafford, and had a dau.,

AVICE, m. to James Butler, Earl of Ormonde, and d. s. p. in 1456.

His lordship d. in 1390, leaving his two grand-daughters, Philippa, then twelve, and Elizabeth, nine years of age, his co-heiresses, between whom the BARONY OF BRYAN fell into ABEYANCE, and it became EXTINCT, at the decease of AVICE, COUNTESS OF ORMONDE, in 1456.

BRYDGES—BARONS CHANDOS, OF SUDELEY CASTLE, CO. GLOUCESTER, EARLS OF CARNARVON, DUKES OF CHANDOS.

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 8 April, 1554.

Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 19 October, 1714.

Dukedom, by Letters Patent, dated 30 April, 1729.

Lineage.

SIR SIMON DE BRUGGE, of the county of Hereford, supposed to have sprung from the old Counts de Bethel, in the province of Champagné, in France, having taken part against HENRY III., lost by confiscation a great proportion of his lands, which were conferred upon Roger, Lord Clifford. Sir Simon was father of another

SIMON DE BRUGGE (commonly omitted in the printed pedigrees), who m. the dau. of Walwyn, a family of distinction in the co. of Hereford even to the present times, and had issue,

JOHN DE BRUGGE, M.P. for the co. of Hereford, 16th EDWARD II., 1322, who left issue,

SIR BALDWIN BRUGGE, who m. Isabel, dau. and heiress (or co-heiress) of Sir Piers Grandison (son of Sir William Grandison, by Sibel, dau. and co-heir of John, Lord Tregoz), and had three sons,

THOMAS, his heir

John (Sir), who was in the battle of Agincourt, 25 October, 1415, and the next year served the office of sheriff of Herefordshire, at which period he bore for his arms, arg., on a cross, sa., a leopard's face, or, as since used, and has been borne by Simon de Brugge, one of the same family, when he was sheriff of this county, in 1379. Sir John was also sheriff of Gloucestershire, in the 7th HENRY V., and was returned to parliament by that county the following year. He left at his decease, an only dau. and heiress, Joanna, who m. Sir John Baskerville, of Erdley, Herefordshire.

Simon, of the Leye, co. Hereford, left a numerous posterity, of whom the chief branch was still living at the Leye, when Gregory King made his visitation of that county in 1684. And hence descended Sir John Bridges, who was lord mayor of London, 12th HENRY VIII., whose dau. Winifrede, m. 1st, Sir Richard Sackville, by whom she was mother of Thomas Sackville, Lord Buckhurst, and Earl of Dorset, the celebrated poet. Her ladyship m. 2ndly, John Powlett, Marquess of Winchester.

Sir Balwin Brugge was s. by his eldest son,

THOMAS BRUGGE, or BRUGES, who m. Alice, dau. and co-heir of Sir Thomas Berkeley, of Coberley, co. Gloucester, by Elizabeth, sister and co-heiress of Sir John Chandos (see that dignity), and acquired the seat of Coberley, and other large estates, which descended down to George Brydges, 6th Lord Chandos, who d. in 1654. By this great heiress, Thomas Bruges had issue,

GYLES, of whom presently.

Edward, of Lone, co. Gloucester, who d. in 1436, leaving a dau. and heiress, ISABEL, who m. John Throckmorton, Esq. (younger son of John Throckmorton, Esq., and Eleanor his wife, dau. and co-heir of Sir Guy de Spineto, Lord of Coughton, co. Warwick), and was mother of John Throckmorton, Esq., ancestor of the Throckmortons, extinct Baronets of TORTWORTH.

The elder son,

SIR GYLES BRUGES, was seated at Coberley, co. Gloucester, and in the 7th HENRY V. (1419) was amongst the persons of note of that county who had command to serve the king in person for the security of the realm, all those then required so to do being such (as the words of the writ impart,) "as did bear ancient arms by descent from their ancestors." In 1429, he was sheriff of Gloucestershire, and again in 1453. In the next year, Sir Gyles Bruges and William Whittinton were returned members of parliament for that shire. He m. Catherine, dau. of James Clifford, Esq., of Frampton, co. Gloucester, and widow of Anselm Guise, Esq., of Elmore, by whom he had,

THOMAS, his successor.

Cicily, who m. 1st, Thomas Gates, Esq.; and 2ndly, John Wellesborne, Esq.

Sir Gyles d. in 1466, and was s. by his son,

THOMAS BRUGES, Esq., of Coberley, who was returned to parliament by the co. of Gloucester in 1459, and by the co. of Hereford in 1472. He m. Florence, dau. of William Darell, Esq., of Littlecot, in Wilts, and had issue,

I. GILES, his successor.

II. Henry, of Newberry, Berks, who m. a dau. of John Hungerford, Esq., and had a dau., m. to Gifford, of Itchel House, Hants, and a son and heir,

SIR RICHARD BRIDGES, of Shefford, Berks, and of Ludgershall, Wilts, K.B., who m. Jane, dau. of Sir William Spencer, of Wormleighton, ancestor to the Duke of Marlborough, and had issue,

1. ANTHONY, of Great Shefford, whose heiress, ELEANOR, carried that estate to Sir George Browne, of the Montague family, by whom she had no issue.

2. Edmund, of Bradley, co. Somerset.

I. Elizabeth, m. to William Cassey, Esq., and subsequently to Walter Bowdon, Esq.

II. Elice, m. to Thomas Chicheley, of Wimpole, co. Cambridge.

III. Eleanor, m. to Sir Thomas Fauncefoot, Knt.

The eldest son,

SIR GILES BRUGES, of Coberley, received the honour of Knighthood, for his valour at the battle of Blackheath, 22 June, 1497. He m. Isabel, dau. of Thomas Baynham, and had issue,

I. JOHN, of whom presently.

II. Thomas, of Cornbury, Oxfordshire, and Keinsham Abbey, Somersetshire. This gentleman was sheriff of Gloucestershire in the 3rd of EDWARD VI., and of Berkshire and Oxfordshire in the 3rd and 4th of PHILIP and MARY. In the reign of Queen MARY, he was an officer of the Tower, under his brother, Lord Chandos. He d. 14 November, 1559, leaving issue by Anna, dau. and co-heiress of John Sidenham, Esq., of Orchard, co. Somerset, Mary, m. to Rowland Arnold,

Esq., of Higham, co. Gloucester; Ellen, m. to John Ashfield, Esq.; and a son and heir, HENRY BRIDGES, Esq., of Keinsham, who m. Anne, dau. of John Hungerford, Esq., of Down Ampney, co. Gloucester; and was s. by his son, SIR THOMAS BRIDGES, of Keinsham, whose son, THOMAS BRIDGES, Esq., m. Philippa, dau. of Sir George Speke, K.B., and left with a dau. Philippa, who m. Major Henry Guise of Winterbourne, a son, SIR THOMAS BRIDGES, of Keinsham, an eminent loyalist, who m. Anne, dau. and co-heiress of Sir Edward Rodney, of Stoke Rodney, co. Somerset, by whom he had, with other issue,

1. HARRY BRIDGES, Esq., who inherited the estates, and m. Lady Diana Holles, dau. of John, 2nd Earl of Clare, by whom he had a dau., Arabelle, m. to John Mitchell, Esq., of Kingston Russel, Dorset. Mr. Brydges m. 2ndly, Miss Freeman, and had two more daus.; upon his decease, his estates devolved, by an entail, upon his nephew, GEORGE-RODNEY BRIDGES.

2. GEORGE-RODNEY BRIDGES, of Avington, Hants, m. Lady Anne Maria Brudenell, dau. of Robert, 2nd Earl of Cardigan, and widow of Francis Talbot, 11th Earl of Shrewsbury, and had a son,

GEORGE-RODNEY BRIDGES, of Avington, who inherited the estates upon the decease of his uncle, Harry Brydges, as stated above. He was M.P. for the city of Winchester from 1714 to 1751. This gentleman was found drowned in the canal of his garden, at Avington, in the seventy-second year of his age; leaving no issue, the greater part of his estates reverted to the Chandos branch of the family, but he devised a property at Alresford, in Hampshire, to George Brydges Rodney, afterwards the great Admiral, Lord Rodney.

Sir Giles Bruges d. 1511, and was s. by his elder son and heir,

SIR JOHN BRUGES, who was under age at his father's decease, and was in ward to King HENRY VIII. He had an early ambition of military glory, and though very young, attended the king in his expedition into France, 1513, when Terouenne and Tournay were taken. He was likewise at the battle of Spurs, and for his valiant conduct in those engagements received the honour of knighthood. In the 10th of HENRY VIII., Sir John covenanted to serve the king with 100 archers under his command; and being one of the knights of the king's body, was in his train at Bulloign, at the interview at Sadingfield with the French king, attended by three servants and one horse keeper, according to the appointment then made. In 1537 he was constituted constable of Sudeley Castle, and in the same year was, amongst those of the court, summoned with the nobility and bishops to be present, October 15, at the christening of Prince Edward. In the year 1544 he passed the seas with the king, and for his gallant behaviour at the siege of Bulloign, was on the surrender thereof, appointed deputy-governor of the town; in which post he was continued by King EDWARD VI. He had also, in the 1st year of that king, a grant of divers manors in consideration of his services. In 1549 (3rd EDWARD VI.), Bulloign being besieged by the French, he had the command of the place as deputy-governor, and successfully defended it against the French king in person, and an army flushed with the conquest of Newhaven and other places. On the death of EDWARD VI., Sir John Bruges waited upon Queen MARY, assisted her against those who had usurped the government; and upon her majesty's entrance into London to the Tower, was one of the principal persons in her train; for which services he was then appointed governor of the Tower, and had a grant, at the same time, of the castle and manor of Sudeley, in Gloucestershire. He was subsequently, Sunday, 8 April, 1554, elevated to the peerage in the dignity of BARON CHANDOS, of Sudeley, to him and the heirs male of his body, "in consideration not only of his nobility and loyalty, but of his probity, valour, and other virtues." Four days afterwards he attended Lady Jane Grey to the scaffold, and that unhappy lady presented him (as related by some), in testimony of his civilities to her, with her prayer book; but according to others it was a table book, with some Greek and Latin verses which she wrote in it, upon his lordship's begging her to write something that he might retain as a memorial of her. His last will bears date 2 March, in the 2nd and 3rd of PHILIP and MARY, and he d. 4 March following (1557), an adherent to the old religion. His lordship m. Elizabeth, dau. of Edmund, Lord Grey de Wilton, sister to the gallant soldier, William, Lord Grey de Wilton, and aunt to Arthur, Lord Grey de Wilton, the celebrated lord-deputy of Ireland. By this lady he had seven sons and three daus., of the latter, Catherine, m. Edward Sutton, Lord Dudley; Elizabeth, m. John Tracy, Esq., of Todington, co. Gloucester, and Mary, m. George Throckmorton, Esq., son of Sir George Throckmorton, of Coughton; of the sons,

EDMUND, inherited the title.

Charles, of Wilton Castle, near Ross, in Herefordshire, became cup bearer to King PHILIP, and was deputy-lieutenant of the Tower to his father, John, Lord Chandos, when the warrant came for executing the Princess Elizabeth, which he refused to obey, until he should receive orders from the king and queen, and thereby was the means of saving her life; for the order being disowned at court, a stop was put to the execution. Mr. Brydges lived to an advanced age, and was sheriff of Herefordshire, in the 32nd of ELIZABETH. He m. Jane, dau. of Sir Edward Carne, of Ewenny, co. Glamorgan, Knt., and dying in 1619, was s. by his eldest son,

GILES BRYDGES, Esq., of Wilton Castle, who was created a baronet, 17 May, 1627. Sir Giles m. Mary, dau. of Sir James Scudamore, and was s. by his eldest son,

SIR JOHN BRYDGES, 2nd baronet, who m. Mary, only dau. and heir of James Pearle, Esq., of Dewsal and Anconbury, co. Hereford, and dying in 1651, was s. by his only son,

SIR JAMES BRYDGES, 3rd baronet, of whom hereafter, as 8th LORD CHANDOS.

Anthony, m. Catherine, dau. of Henry Fortescue, Esq., of Faulkbourne Hall, Essex; from this marriage the Rev. EDWARD TYMEWELL BRYDGES, who eventually claimed the Barony of Chandos at the death of the last Duke of Chandos, endeavoured, unsuccessfully, to establish a descent.

Lord Chandos was s. by his eldest son,

EDMUND BRUGES, 2nd baron, who adopted early the profession of arms, and served under the Earl of Hertford, in the reign of King HENRY VIII., and in 1547, behaving himself with great bravery in the famous battle of Musselburgh, he was made a knight banneret by the Duke of Somerset. In the reign of Queen ELIZABETH he was elected a knight of the Garter, and installed at Windsor, 17 June, 1572. His lordship m. Dorothy, 5th dau., and eventually co-heir of Edmund, Lord Braye, and dying 11 September, 1573, was s. by his elder son,

GILES BRUGES, 3rd baron, who, in the lifetime of his father, represented the co. of Gloucester in parliament. His lordship m. Lady Frances Clinton, dau. of Edward, 1st Earl of Lincoln, admiral of England, by whom he had two daus., Elizabeth, who m. Sir John Kennedy, of Scotland, and d. s. p., and Catherine, m. to Francis, Lord Russell, of Thornhaugh, afterwards Earl of Bedford. Those ladies were his heirs. His lordship d. 21 February, 1593-4, and was s. in the peerage by his brother,

WILLIAM BRUGES, 4th baron, who m. Mary, dau. of Sir Owen Hopton, lieutenant of the Tower, and dying in 1602, was s. by his elder son,

GREY BRUGES, 5th baron, K.B. This nobleman, from the magnificence of his style of living at his mansion, in Gloucestershire, and the splendour of his retinue when he came to court, acquired the title of KING OF COTSWOLD. He had an ample fortune, which he expended in the most generous and liberal manner. His house was open three days in the week to the gentry, and the poor were fed as constantly from the remnants of his entertainments. On 8 November, 1617, Lord Chandos was appointed to receive and introduce the Muscovite ambassadors, who had brought rich and costly presents from their master to the king. His lordship m. Lady Anne Stanley, dau. and co-heir of Ferdinando, 5th Earl of Derby, and great grand-dau. of the Princess Mary Tudor, by her husband, Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, and dying 10 August, 1621, was s. by his elder son,

GEORGE BRUGES, 6th baron. This nobleman, who was but a year old at the decease of his father, became at the breaking out of the civil wars, in 1641, a stout supporter of the royal cause. At the battle of Newbury his lordship had three horses killed under him, which so far from damping his ardour, roused his valour to a higher pitch, for mounting a fourth charger he renewed the attack, and was mainly instrumental in breaking the enemy's cavalry. In consideration of his splendid conduct in this action, Lord Chandos had an offer from the king to be created Earl of Newbury, but he modestly declined, until it should please God to restore his majesty to the crown, an event which he did not survive to see: but, on the contrary, many severe mortifications and sufferings, and much mental adversity, as well as worldly oppression. When the parliamentarians triumphed, his lordship, besides having suffered imprisonment, paid at one time £3,973 10s., and what was left him he generously bestowed in relieving the distressed clergy, and those who had suffered by the wars.

In the year, 1652, Lord Chandos had a difference with Colonel Henry Compton, grandson of Henry, Lord Compton, which unhappily ended in a duel at Putney Heath, on 13 May, when Colonel Compton fell. His lordship and his second, Lord Arundel, of Wardour, having been imprisoned more than a year, were at length arraigned in the upper bench, 17 May, 1654, and found guilty of manslaughter. He d. in the February of the following year of the small-pox, and was buried at Sudeley. His lordship m. 1st, Susan, dau. of Henry, Earl of Manchester, and had two daus., Mary, m. to William Brownlow, Esq., of Humby, co. Lincoln, and Elizabeth, m. 1st, to Edward, Lord Herbert of Cherbury; and 2ndly, to William, Earl of Inchiquin; and 3rdly, to Charles, Lord Howard, of Esrick. Lord Chandos m. 2ndly, Jane, dau. of John Savage, Earl Rivers, by whom he had with two other daus. that d. unm., Lucy, m. to Adam Loftus, Viscount Lisburne, in Ireland. His lordship dying thus, without male issue, the major part of his fortune passed under settlement to Jane, his last wife, who afterwards m. George Pitt, Esq., of Strathfeldsay, ancestor of the Pitts, Lords Rivers, and conveyed to that gentleman Sudeley Castle, and other lands of great value. The peerage devolved upon his lordship's brother,

WILLIAM BRUGES, 7th baron, who m. Susan, dau. and co-heir of Gerrot Keire, of London, merchant, but having no male issue (he left three daus., Mary, Frances, and Rebecca), the title devolved at his decease, in 1676, upon his kinsman (referred to Charles, 2nd son of John, 1st Lord Chandos),

SIR JAMES BRYDGES, Bart., of Wilton Castle, as 8th Baron Chandos. This nobleman was accredited ambassador to Constantinople in 1680, where he resided for some years in great honour and esteem. His lordship m. Elizabeth, eldest dau. and co-heir of Sir Henry Bernard, Knt., an eminent Turkey merchant. By this lady he had no less than twenty-two children, of which number fifteen only were christened, and seven of those dying young, the remainder were,

I. JAMES, his successor.

II. Henry, in holy orders, of Adlestrop, Gloucestershire, archdeacon and prebendary of Rochester, and rector of Agmondesham, Bucks. Mr. Brydges m. Annabella, dau. of Henry, and grand-dau. of Sir Robert Atkyns, lord chief baron of the Exchequer, by whom he had issue,

1 Robert, a lunatic, d. s. p. 1779.

2 James, of Pinner, m. Jane, dau. and co-heir of John, Marquess of Carnarvon, and d. s. p. 1789.

1 Elizabeth Louisa, m. Sir Robert Walter, Bart., of Saresden, and d. s. p.

2 Annabella, m. to Colonel Inwood.

3 Mary, m. to Simon Whorwood Adeane, Esq., ancestor, by her, of the Adeanes of Babraham, co. Cambridge.

4 Henrietta, m. the Rev. John Kearney, D.D., and had issue.

5 Catherine, m. to Lindley Simpson, Esq.

III. Francis, receiver general of the duties on malt, m. Sarah Western, and d. s. p. 1714.

I. Mary, m. to Theophilus Leigh, Esq., of Adlestrop, co. Gloucester, ancestor, by her, of the Leighs of Adlestrop, Lords Leigh, of Stoneleigh.

II. Elizabeth, m. 1st, to Alexander Jacob, Esq.; and 2ndly, to the Rev. Dr. Thomas Dawson, vicar of Windsor.

III. Emma, m. to Edmund Chamberlayne, Esq., of Mangersbury House, co. Gloucester, ancestor, by her, of the present Joseph Chamberlayne-Chamberlayne, Esq., of Mangersbury House.

IV. Anne, m. Charles Walcot, Esq., of Walcot, co. Salop, ancestor, by her, of the Walcots now of Bitterley Court, co. Salop.

V. Catherine, m. 1st, to Brereton Bouchier, Esq., of Barnsley Court, co. Gloucester; and 2ndly, to Henry Perrot, Esq., of North Leigh, co. Oxford.

His lordship d. in 1714, and was s. by his eldest son,

JAMES BRYDGES, 9th baron, who, upon the accession of King GEORGE I., was created, by letters patent, dated 19 October, 1714, Viscount Wilton, and EARL OF CARNARVON, with a collateral remainder to the issue male of his father; and in the November following, a patent passed the great seal, granting to his lordship and his two sons, John and Henry, the reversion of the office of clerk of the hanaper in chancery. In 1729, on 30 April, his lordship was advanced to the Marquisate of Carnarvon, and DUKEDOM OF CHANDOS, and he acquired by his magnificence the appellation of the princely Chandos. He m. 1st, 28 February, 1696-7, Mary, only surviving dau. and heir of Sir Thomas Lake, of Cannons, Middlesex, by whom he had two surviving sons,

I. JOHN, Marquess of Carnarvon, d. v. p. 8 April, 1729; m. in 1724, Lady Catharine Tollemache, dau. of Lionel, 2nd Earl of Dysart, by whom he had issue,

1 Catherine, m. 1st, to William Berkeley Lyon, Esq., of the horse-guards; and 2ndly, to Edwyn Francis Stanhope, Esq. (a descendant of the 1st Earl of Chesterfield), and was grandmother of Sir EDWIN FRANCIS SCUDAMORE-STANHOPE, Bart., of Holme Lacy, co. Hertford.

2 Jane (a posthumous child), m. her cousin, James Brydges, Esq., of Pinner, and d. s. p.

II. HENRY, Marquess of Carnarvon, after the decease of his brother.

His grace m. 2ndly, Cassandra, dau. of Francis Willoughby, Esq., and sister of Thomas Willoughby, Lord Middleton; and 3rdly, Lydia Catherine Van Hatten, widow of Sir Thomas Davall, Knt., but had no issue by either of these ladies. He d. at his noble seat of Cannons, near Edgeware, 9 August, 1744, and was s. by his only surviving son,

HENRY BRYDGES, 2nd duke, who m. in 1723, Mary, eldest dau. and co-heir of Charles, Lord Bruce, only son and heir apparent of Thomas, Earl of Aylesbury, by whom he had issue,

JAMES, Marquess of Carnarvon.

Caroline. m. 10 March, 1755, John Leigh, Esq., of Adlestrop, co. Gloucester, and was grandmother of Chandos Leigh, Esq., created in 1839, BARON LEIGH, of Stoneleigh.

His grace m. 2ndly, 25 December, 1744, Anne Jeffreys, and by her he had a dau., Augusta-Anne, m. to Henry John Kearney, Esq. The duke m. 3rdly, 18 July, 1767, Elizabeth, 2nd dau. and co-heir of Sir John Major, Bart., of Worlingworth Hall, Suffolk, by whom he had no issue. He d. 28 November, 1771, and was s. by his son,

JAMES BRYDGES, 3rd duke, b. 27 December, 1731. This nobleman, upon the accession of his majesty King GEORGE III., was appointed one of the lords of his bed-chamber. In 1775, he was sworn of the privy council, and was afterwards constituted lord-steward of the household. His grace m. 22 March, 1753, Margaret, dau. and sole heiress of John Nicol, Esq., of Southgate, Middlesex, by whom he acquired Minchenhall House at Southgate, together with the whole fortune of his father-in-law. By this lady, who d. in 1768, he had no issue. The duke m. 2ndly, 21 June, 1777, Anne-Eliza, dau. of Richard Gamon, Esq., and widow of Roger Hope Elletson, Esq., by whom he had one surviving dau. and heiress, ANNE-ELIZA, who m. in 1796, RICHARD, Earl Temple, afterwards DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM AND CHANDOS, and left issue.

His grace d. without male issue 29 September, 1789, when all his honours became EXTINCT, but the BARONY OF CHANDOS was immediately claimed by the Rev. EDWARD TYMEWELL BRYDGES, M.A., of Wootton Court, Kent, as next heir male of the body of Sir John Brydges, LORD CHANDOS, the first grantee, who d. in 1557. The first hearing of this celebrated cause took place before the committee of privileges of the House of Lords, 1 June, 1790; the second, 21 December, in the same year; the 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th, in 1794; the 8th and 9th in 1795; the 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th, in 1802; thirteen other hearings in 1803; and at length, after a few more investigations, it was resolved by the committee for privileges, 17 June, 1803, "that the said Rev. Edward Tymeowell Brydges had not made out his claim to the said barony." Mr. Brydges, the claimant, was elder brother of the late distinguished writer, SIR SAMUEL JOHNSON BRYDGES, Bart.

BULMER—BARON BULMER.

By Writ of Summons, dated 25 February, 1342

Lineage.

In the reign of King HENRY I.

ALAN DE BULMER, son of Henry de Bulmer, Lord of Bulmer and Brancepeth, m. and had three sons, viz.,

- I. BERTRAM, Lord of Bulmer and Brancepeth, whose only dau. and heiress, m. Robert, Lord Neville of Raby.
- II. ANKETELL, of whom presently.
- III. Alphonsus.

The 2nd son,

ANKETELL DE BULMER, gave twelve oxgangs of land, lying in Bramham, to the canons of Nostell, and was father of

BERTRAM DE BULMER, sheriff of Yorkshire temp. King STEPHEN and HENRY II., and founder of the priory of Barton, in that county. This Bertram was s. by

STEPHEN DE BULMER, who, upon the aid being levied in the 12th HENRY II., towards the marriage portion of that monarch's dau., certified his knights' fees to amount to the number of five de veteri feoffamento, and one-and-a-half, and fourth part, de novo, for which, in two years afterwards, he paid six marks and a-half. Stephen de Bulmer was s. by his son,

THOMAS DE BULMER, who, in the 18th HENRY II., paid a hundred shillings scutage for not joining the expedition then made into Ireland. He was s. by his son,

ROBERT DE BULMER, living 26th HENRY II., who was s. by his son,

BERTRAM DE BULMER. This feudal lord left an only dau. and heiress, EMME, who m. Geoffrey de Nevill, and conveyed to the Nevills the Lordship of Branspeth, co. Durham, which had previously been the family seat of the Bulmers.

The male line of the original feudal house thus failing, the next of the name met with is

JOHN DE BULMER, who in the 53rd HENRY III., m. Theophania, one of the three daus. and co-heiress of Hugh de Morewyke, of Morewyke, co. Northumberland, whose son and heir,

RALPH DE BULMER, obtained a special charter from the crown, in the 4th EDWARD II., enabling him to hold his park at Riceberg, and keep dogs to hunt therein, and to have free warren in all his demesne lands. In the 9th of the same monarch, we find this Ralph doing homage, and having livery of the estates which descended to him upon the decease of his mother; and in the next year he was in the wars of Scotland, and again in two years afterwards. In the 20th EDWARD II. he was made deputy governor of the castle of York, to William de Ros, of Hamlake, and upon the accession of King EDWARD III. was summoned to parliament (viz., 25 February, 1342, and until 10 March, 1349) as a BARON. In four years afterwards he had special license to make a castle of his manor-house of Milton, co. York, being the same year constituted sheriff of Yorkshire, and governor of the castle at York. His lordship participated again (the 8th EDWARD III.) in the wars of Scotland. He d. in 1357, and was s. by his son, then in his sixteenth year,

RALPH BULMER, who was placed under the guardianship of the king's dau. Isabel, and by her assigned to Ralph de Nevill. He had livery of his lands, upon attaining maturity, in the 36th EDWARD III., after which, 40th EDWARD III., he had license, together with William, a younger son of Ralph, Lord Nevill, of Raby, to travel into foreign parts. He d. at the close of that year, but does not appear by the existing enrolments to have been summoned to parliament, leaving a son and heir, then but a year old,

RALPH BULMER, "whose descent," says Dugdale, "I shall not trace down farther, in regard that none of this family after the before-specified Ralph, who was summoned to parliament from the 1st till 23rd EDWARD III., were barons of the realm." The male line of this branch of Bulmers continued, however, to the time of PHILIP and MARY, when it terminated with Sir Richard Bulmer, Knt.

BURGH—EARL OF KENT.

By Charter of Creation, dated 11 February, 1226.

Lineage.

JOHN, EARL OF COMTIS, and Baron of Tonsburgh, in Normandy, being general of the king's forces, and governor of his chief towns, there obtained the surname "DE BURGH," and took his motto "Ung roy, ung foy, ung loy" from that of Caen, a chief town in his jurisdiction. He had issue,

HARLOWEN, of whom presently.

Eustace, Baron of Tonsburgh.

Millicent, m. to Fulk, Earl of Anjou, who s. as King of Jerusalem in 1131.

The eldest son,

HARLOWEN DE BURGH, m. Ariotta, mother of WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, and dying before his father, left issue,

Odo, bishop of Bayeux, created Earl of Kent (see Odo, EARL OF KENT), and

ROBERT, EARL OF MORETON, in Normandy, who, participating with his brother, the bishop of Bayeux, in the triumph of Hastings, was rewarded by his victorious kinsman, Duke William, with the EARLDOM OF CORNWALL (anno 1068), and grants of not less than seven hundred and ninety-three manors. This nobleman m. Maud, dau. of Roger de Montgomery, Earl of Shrewsbury, and had issue, and three daus., one of whom m. Andrew de Vetrei; another, Guy de Val; and the youngest, the Earl of Thoulouse, brother of Raymond, Count of St. Giles, who behaved so valiantly in the Jerusalem expedition. The period of the decease of Robert, Earl of Moreton and Cornwall, is not ascertained, but he appears to have been s. by his son,

WILLIAM, his successor,

WILLIAM DE MORETON, Earl of Cornwall, who, rebelling against King HENRY II., died a prisoner, having had his eyes put out by order of that monarch, and his earldom of Cornwall transferred to Stephen of Blois (see DE MORETON, Earl of Cornwall). This unfortunate nobleman left two sons,

ADELME, from whom the extant house of CLANRICARDE, and the numerous families of De Burgh, Burgo, Burke, and Bourke, derive their descent,

And

JOHN DE BOURGH, whose son,

HUBERT DE BOURGH, became one of the most eminent and conspicuous nobles of his time; and as a subject was considered the greatest in Europe during the reigns of King JOHN and HENRY III. "The first mention of this Hubert, I find," says Dugdale, "is that he was servant to King RICHARD I., as also to King JOHN, being sent by the latter from Roan, in the 1st year of his reign, to treat of a marriage for him with a daughter to the king of Portugal; and had such great estimation from that king, that in the 3rd of his reign, being lord-chamberlain of the household, he was constituted warden of the marches of Wales, and had a hundred soldiers to attend him in those parts." In the next year we find him employed on an embassy to PHILIP of France, to treat for the restitution of Normandy, then seized upon by that monarch—and for some years after engaged in the important duties of sheriff for the cos. of Dorset, Somerset, Hereford, Berks, and Lincoln. At the period that the barons rose against King JOHN, this even then powerful nobleman was seneschal of Poitou, and, taking part with his royal master, he was nominated one of the commissioners to treat with the insurrectionary lords at Runnymede, in which capacity he witnessed the signing of MAGNA CHARTA, and was advanced by the king, before he left the field, to the high station of Justice of England. In ten days afterwards he was constituted sheriff of the cos. of Kent and Surrey, and governor of the castle of Canterbury, and within a month made sheriff of Herefordshire, governor of the castle of Hereford, and governor of the castles of Norwich and Oxford. In the October following he obtained a grant of the lordship and hundred of Hoar, in Kent, part of the possession of Robert Bardolph; and was again constituted, on 19 of the ensuing November, one of the commissioners upon the part of the king to treat with Richard, Earl of Clare, and others, then deputed by the barons, in the church of Erith, in Kent, touching a peace between the king and those turbulent nobles. He subsequently augmented his reputation by the gallant defence of Dover Castle against LOUIS of France, when King JOHN was compelled to fly to Winchester, and after the death of that monarch, by still faithfully holding the castle for the young king, HENRY III., although the highest honours and rewards were tendered him personally by the French prince for its surrender. In the 4th year of the new king he succeeded William Marechall, Earl of Pembroke, just then deceased, in the guardianship of young Henry (at that time but fourteen years of age), and in the government of the kingdom; and he suppressed in the next year a dangerous insurrection of the Londoners, begun by one Constantine, a chief man of the city, whom he caused to be hanged. His great power soon after, however, exciting the jealousy of the barons, the Earl of Chester, and others of the discontented party, signified to the king, that unless he forbore to require their castles, and to hearken to the counsels of this Hubert, who then assumed a higher deportment than any nobleman in the kingdom, they would all rise in rebellion against him; but it does not appear that this cabal prevailed, for we find in the next year, when the king solemnized the festival of Christmas at Westminster, this Hubert, by especial royal appointment, proposing to the lords spiritual and temporal, then assembled, an aid "for vindicating the injuries done to the king and his subjects in the parts beyond sea." And soon afterwards, having executed the office of sheriff for the cos. of Norfolk and Suffolk, from the 1st to the 9th of HENRY III. inclusive, and of the co. of Kent, from the 3rd to the 11th of the same reign, he was created (on 11 February, 1226,) EARL OF KENT, with most extensive territorial grants from the crown. Within the year, too, he was constituted, by the advice of the peers of the whole realm, Justice of England. His lordship afterwards, however, incurred the temporary displeasure of his royal master, as Dugdale thus states—"But before the end of this thirteenth year (about Michaelmas), the king having a rendezvous at Portsmouth, of the greatest army that had been seen in this realm (it consisting of English, Irish, Scotch, and Welch), designing therewith the recovery of what his father had lost in foreign parts, and expecting all things in readiness, with ships for their transportation, but finding not half so many as would suffice for that purpose, he wholly attributed the fault to this Hubert, and publicly calling him Old Traytor, told him that he had taken 5,000 marks as a bribe from the Queen of France, and thereupon drawing out his sword would have killed him on the spot, had not the Earl of Chester, and some others, prevented it, but displaced him from his office of Justice, whereupon he withdrew until the king grew better pacified, as, it seems, he soon was; for the next ensuing year, when divers valiant knights, coming to the king out of Normandy, earnestly besought him to land forces in that country, assuring him that it might be easily recovered, this Hubert wholly dissuaded him from attempting it, and prevailed with him to make an expedition into Gascony and Poitou, where he succeeded so well, that having little opposition, he freely received the homage of the inhabitants of those countries."

His lordship subsequently so fully re-established himself in royal favour, that he obtained permission, under certain circumstances, to execute the office of Justice of England by deputy, and he soon afterwards had a grant of the office of Justice of Ireland; and was appointed governor of the Tower of London, castellan of Windsor, and warden of Windsor Forest. Here, however, he appears to have reached the summit of his greatness, for, sharing the common fate of favourites, he was soon afterwards supplanted in the affections of the king, and exposed to the hostility of his enemies, so that at one period his life was saved only by his taking sanctuary in the church of Merton. He was afterwards dragged from before the altar of the chapel at the bishop of Norwich's manor-house in Essex, and conveyed prisoner, with his legs tied under his horse, by Sir Godfrey de Crawcombe, to the Tower of London; "whereof," (says Dugdale,) "when they made relation to the king, who had sate long up to hear the news, he went merrily to bed. Howbeit," (continues the same authority,) "the next morning, Roger, bishop of London, being told how they had dragged him from the chapel, went immediately to the king, and boldly rebuked him for thus violating the peace of holy church, saying, that if he did not forthwith free him of his bonds, and send him back to that chapel, whence he had been thus barbarously taken, he would pronounce the sentence of excommunication against all who had any hand therein. Whereupon the king, being thus made sensible of his fault, sent him back to the same chapel upon the 5th calend of October, but withall directed his precept to the sheriff of Essex and Herefordshire, upon pain of death, to come himself in person, as also to bring with him the posse comitatus, and to encompass the chapel, so to the end he should not escape thence, nor receive any manner of food, which the sheriff accordingly did, making a great ditch, as well about the bishop's house as the chapel, resolving to stay there forty days." From this perilous situation the earl was relieved through the influence of his stanch friend, the archbishop of Dublin, upon condition of expatriating himself, being conveyed in the interim again to the Tower; when the king, learning that the disgraced lord had deposited great treasure in the new temple of London, peremptorily demanded the same, but the Templars as peremptorily refused surrendering the property entrusted to them, without the consent of the owner, which latter being obtained, "great store of plate, both of gold and silver, much money, and divers jewels of very great value" were seized and deposited in the royal treasury. His lordship was subsequently committed close prisoner to the castle of Devizes, where, it is said, upon hearing of the death of his great enemy, the Earl of Chester (5 November, 1233,) "he fetched a deep sigh, and exclaimed, God have mercy on his soul; and calling for his psalter, stood devoutly before the cross, ceasing not before he had sung it all over, for the health of his soul." Soon after this the earl received a full and free pardon for his flight and outlawry, with a grant that his heirs should enjoy all the lands of his own inheritance, but as to such as he had otherwise acquired, "they should stand to the king's favour and kindness, and such terms as the king should think fit." Whereupon, relinquishing his title to the office of Justice of England, and entering into obligation upon oath never again to claim it, he had restitution of numerous extensive lordships and manors. He did not, however, obtain his freedom, but was still closely confined at Devizes, from whence he eventually made his escape into Wales, and was ultimately pardoned, with the other English nobles who had joined Llewellyn, Prince of Wales, upon the conclusion of peace with that chieftain. Again, though, he incurred the displeasure of the king, in consequence of his dau. Margaret having m. Richard, Earl of Gloucester, a minor, without license, but was pardoned upon clearing himself of all cognizance of the matter, and paying a fine. He was, however, again in disgrace, and again mulct, and so on until he was strip of almost all his splendid possessions.

The Earl's marriages are differently given by different authorities. Dugdale assigns him four wives, but Milles, three only. According to Milles, he m. 1st, Margaret, dau. of Robert de Arsic, by whom he had two sons; 2ndly, Isabel, dau. and co-heiress of William, Earl of Gloucester, and widow of Geoffrey de Mandeville; and 3rly, Margaret, dau. of WILLIAM, King of Scotland. By the last he is said, but erroneously, to have had two sons; his only issue by the Princess were two daus., who both d. s. p., Margaret, m. to Richard de Clare, Earl of Gloucester and Magota. The Earl had, however (besides these two daus., his only children by the princess), two sons previously mentioned, viz.,

I. John (Sir), m. Hawyse, dau. and heiress of William de Lanvalay, and left issue a son, John. This Sir John de Burgh never inherited the Earldom of Kent. He fought under the banner of the barons at the battles of Lewes and Evesham, in the reign of HENRY III. The period of his decease is not ascertained. His son and heir,

JOHN, d. in the 8th EDWARD I., leaving the extensive manors and estates which he inherited from his father and mother to three daus., as co-heirs, viz.,

- 1 Hawyse, m. to Robert de Greilly.
- 2 Dervorgild, m. to Robert Fitz-Walter.
- 3 Margerie, a nun at Chiksand, co. Bedford.

II. HUBERT, ancestor of the BARONS BOROUGH, of Gainsborough.

Hubert de Bourgh, thus celebrated as Earl of Kent, d. 4 March, 1243, and his remains were honourably interred within the church of the Friars preachers (commonly called the Black-Friars), in the city of London. With his lordship the EARLDOM OF KENT, in the family of Burgh, EXPIRED, which Collins accounts for in his parliamentary precedents, by the allegation that the patent by which the earldom was conferred, was in remainder to his heirs male by the Scottish princes only, and that lady leaving no male issue, the dignity of course ceased.

BURGH—BARONS BURGH, OR BOROUGH, OF GAINSBOROUGH CO. LINCOLN.

By Writ of Summons, dated 1 September, 1487.

Lineage.

This family sprang directly from HUBERT DE BURGH, younger son of the celebrated HUBERT DE BURGH, EARL OF KENT,* but it does not appear to have attained much importance until the reign of EDWARD IV., when,

SIR THOMAS DE BURGH joined Sir William Stanley in rescuing that prince from Neville, Earl of Warwick, whose prisoner he was at the castle of Riddleham, but allowed the privilege of hunting for his recreation, upon one of which recreations his escape was effected. Sir Thomas fought afterwards under the banner of the same monarch, and shared with him in the fruits of the victory of Barnet Field. He m. Elizabeth, dau. and co-heiress of Sir Henry Percy, of Athol, Knt., son of Sir Thomas Percy (2nd son of Henry, 1st Earl of Northumberland), by his wife, Elizabeth, dau. and co-heiress of David Strabolgi, Earl of Athol, by which lady the Percys acquired the manor of Gainsborough, and thus it passed to the De Burghs. Sir Thomas de Burgh was s. by his son,

SIR THOMAS DE BURGH, who was created a knight of the Garter by King RICHARD III., and was summoned to parliament as BARON BOROUGH, OF GAINSBOROUGH, 1 September, 1487, and until 14 October, 1495. His lordship m. Margaret, dau. of Thomas, Lord Roos, of Hamlake, and widow of Sir Thomas Botreaux, by whom he had issue,

EDWARD (Sir). Thomas.
Elizabeth, m. to Richard, Lord Fitz-Hugh.
Anne, m. to Sir George Talbois, of Kyme.

The baron d. in 1496, and was s. by his son,

EDWARD DE BURGH, 2nd baron, but never summoned to parliament, who m. Anne, dau. and heiress of Sir Thomas Cobham, of Sterborough, and had two sons,

* SIR HUBERT DE BURGH, 2nd son of the renowned Hubert de Burgh, Earl of Kent, was the ancestor of the BARONS BURGH OF GAINSBOROUGH. (See BURKE'S Peerage, CLANRICARDE.)

THOMAS, his heir.

Henry, m. Catherine, dau. of Sir Ralph Neville, and had a dau., Anne, wife of Richard Vaughan.

The elder son,

THOMAS DE BURGH, 3rd baron, summoned to parliament from 3 November, 1529, to 8 September, 1552. This nobleman m. Anne, dau. of Sir Thomas Tyrwhit, of Kettleby, co. Lincoln, and dying in 1552, was s. by his son,

THOMAS DE BURGH,* 4th baron, who m. 1st, Elizabeth, dau. of Sir David Owen, Knt., but the lady proving faithless, and having children by another person, his lordship obtained an act of parliament to bastardize those children. By Alice, his 2nd wife, he had issue,

Henry d. in the lifetime of his father, s. p.

WILLIAM, successor to the title.

Dorothy, m. to Sir Anthony Nevill, Knt.

His lordship was s. by his son,

WILLIAM DE BURGH, 5th baron, summoned to parliament from 14 August, 1553, to 23 January, 1559, one of the peers who sat in judgment upon the Duke of Norfolk, in the reign of ELIZABETH (called 4th baron by Nicolas). His lordship m. Katherine, dau. of Edward Clinton, Earl of Lincoln, and had issue,

THOMAS, his successor.

Henry, slain by Holcroft.

John (Sir), d. in 1594, "late admiral of England, renowned for his exploits by sea and land; governor of Duisburgh. He was twice knighted, 1st, in Holland, by his excellency the Earl of Leicester, next by HENRY IV., King of France, on the victory of St André; but, unhappily, fighting the enemy, who fought with much courage, he fell by an untimely death, to the great grief of his men, and his country's loss, in the fifty-third year of his age, March 7, 1594."

Mary, m. to — Bulkeley.

Elizabeth, m. to — Rider.

Anne, m. to Sir Henry Ashley, Knt.

The baron was s. at his decease by his eldest son,

THOMAS BURGH, 6th baron, summoned to parliament 11 January, 1563. This nobleman was sent, in the 36th ELIZABETH, upon an embassy into Scotland to incite King JAMES against the Spanish faction there, and in four years afterwards succeeded Sir William Russell in the lieutenancy of Ireland. His lordship m. and had issue,

I. ROBERT, his successor.

II. THOMAS, d. in minority, s. p.

1 ELIZABETH, m. to George Brooke, 4th son of Lord Cobham, and had issue,

Sir William Brooke, K.B., who m. Penelope, dau. of Sir Moyes Hill, of Hillsborough Castle, and left two daus. and co-heirs, the eldest of whom,

HILL BROOKE, m. 1st, the Hon. Mr. Wilmot, eldest son of Lord Wilmot; 2ndly, Sir William Boothby, Bart.; and 3rdly, Edward Russell, brother of the Earl of Bedford. Hill's heir-general, THOMAS THORP, archdeacon of Bristol, one of the co-heirs of the Barony of Burgh.

II. FRANCES, m. to Francis Coppinger, Esq., her heir-general, is HUBERT DE BURGH, Esq., of West Drayton, co. Middlesex, one of the co-heirs of the Barony of Burgh.

III. ANNE, m. to Sir Drew Drury.

IV. CATHERINE, m. to Thomas Knevit, Esq., and d. in 1640. Her heir-general is LORD BERNERS, one of the co-heirs of the Barony of Burgh.

His lordship, who was a knight of the Garter, d. in 1594, and was s. by his elder son, ROBERT BURGH, 7th baron, at whose decease, nam. in minority (his brother having d. previously), his estates devolved upon his sisters and co-heiresses, while the BARONY OF BOROUGH, OF GAINSBOROUGH, fell into ABERNACE amongst those ladies, and so continues with their representatives.

BURGH—BARONS SOMERHILL, VISCOUNTS TUNBRIDGE, EARLS OF ST. ALBANS.

Barony and Viscounty, by Letters Patent, dated 3 April, 1624. Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 23 August, 1628.

Lineage.

RICHARD BURKE, OR DE BURGH, 4th Earl of Clanricarde, in the peerage of Ireland, was created a peer of England, 3 April, 1624, as BARON SOMERHILL AND VISCOUNT TUNBRIDGE, both in Kent, and advanced to the EARLDOM OF ST. ALBANS, 23 August,

* Sir Harris Nicolas omits this Thomas de Burgh as if he considered him identical with Thomas, the 3rd baron.

1628. His lordship m. Frances, dau. and heiress of Sir Francis Walsingham, and widow of Sir Philip Sydney, and of the unfortunate Earl of Essex, by whom he had issue, ULICK, his successor.

Margaret, m. to the Hon. Edmond Butler, son of James, Earl of Ormonde.

Honora, m. to John Paulett, Marquess of Winchester.

His lordship d. 12 November, 1635, and was s. by his son,

ULICK BURKE, OR DE BURGH, 5th Earl of Clanricarde, and 2nd Earl of St. Albans, who was created MARQUESS OF CLANRICARDE, in Ireland, 21 February, 1644. This nobleman, who was appointed lord-lieutenant of Ireland in 1650, took so distinguished a part against the rebels in the unhappy times of CHARLES I., that he was excepted from pardon for life or estate, in the act passed by Cromwell's parliament for the settlement of Ireland, 12 August, 1652. His lordship m. in December, 1622, Lady Anne Compton, then only dau. of William, Earl of Northampton, and by her had an only child, Margaret, who m. 1st, Charles, Viscount Muskerry, and had issue.

CHARLES JAMES, who s. his grandfather, Donogh, Earl of Clancarty.

Frances, d. unm.

Her ladyship m. 2ndly, in 1676, Robert Villiers, called Viscount Purbeck, by whom she had an only son, John Villiers, who claimed the Earldom of Buckingham.

She m. 3rdly, Robert Fielding, Esq., and d. in 1698.

His lordship d. in 1659, when the Irish marquissate, and the English EARLDOM OF ST. ALBANS, with the minor English honours, became EXTINCT; his other dignities passed to his heir at law.

BURGH—BARONS DOWNES.

By Letters-Patent, dated 10 December, 1822.

Lineage.

The family of DOWNES, from which the last Lord Downes maternally descended, and through which he inherited the peerage, appears to have been of considerable antiquity in the co. Suffolk, its progenitors having been seated there so far back as the 14th century. From this root branches subsequently spread into Norfolk and Northampton.

DIVE DOWNES, of East Haddon, d. in 1629, leaving an only son,

THE REV. LEWIS DOWNES, rector of Thornby, father of DIVES DOWNES. This gentleman, having finished his education at Trinity College, Dublin, took holy orders, was made archdeacon of Dublin in 1690, and consecrated bishop of Cork and Ross in 1699. He m. four times. By his 1st and 2nd wives he had no issue; by the 3rd, Elizabeth, dau. of Thomas Becher, Esq., of Sherkin, co. Cork, he had one dau., Elizabeth; and by the 4th (whom he m. 19 August, 1707), Catherine, sister of Robert, 19th Earl of Kildare he left a son,

ROBERT, his heir,

and a posthumous dau.,

Anne, who m. Thomas Burgh, Esq., of Bert, co. Kildare, and had, with other children,

Thomas Burgh, Esq., who m. Anne, only dau. of David Algoin, Esq.; and d. in 1810, leaving ULYSSES, last Lord Downes.

The bishop was s. at his decease by his only son,

ROBERT DOWNES, Esq., of Donnybrooke, M.P. for the co. Kildare; who m. 18 February, 1737, Elizabeth, dau. of Thomas Twigg, Esq., of Donnybrooke, by whom he had issue,

Dive, in holy orders, LL.D., who d. unm. in 1798,

and

WILLIAM DOWNES, Esq., who was called to the bar of Ireland in 1786, elevated to the bench there in 1792, and constituted, in 1803, upon the death of Lord Kilwarden, lord chief justice of the Court of King's Bench, and sworn of his Majesty's most honourable privy council in Ireland. His lordship retired from the judicial seat in 1822, when he was elevated to the peerage of Ireland (10 December in the same year), by the title of BARON DOWNES, with remainder, in default of male issue, to his cousin

Sir Ulysses Burgh, upon whom, at the decease of his lordship, 2 March, 1826, the dignity devolved. Lord Downes was vicer-chancellor of the university of Dublin.

FAMILY OF BURGH.

On the murder of WILLIAM, 3rd Earl of Ulster, his kinsman seized such portions of his daughter's inheritance as lay in the Irish districts, and adopted Irish names and habits, as it was only thus they could hope to hold them adversely to the heir-general, who according to Norman, but not to Irish notions, had a better right to them than the cadets of the De Burgos.

Mr. Lodge derives McWilliam Eighter, represented by the Marquess of Clanricarde, and McWilliam Oughtier, from whom the extinct viscounts and extant Earls of Mayo descend, alike from Sir William de Burgo, brother to the 1st Earl of Ulster; whilst he makes the Bourkes, Lords Castle Connell and Brittas, spring direct from the 1st earl himself.

A barony of Clanwilliam in Tipperary, and a barony with the same name in the co. of Limerick, bear testimony to the early period at which the Bourkes were settled in that country. But the name seems also to imply that they were descended from Sir William.

The BOURKES, of Dromkeen, in Clanwilliam, however, known as "Sloght Meyler," are clearly of the MacWilliams, and were the senior branch of MacWilliam Oughtier.

EDMOND, the 1st McWILLIAM OUGHTIER, was s. in that Irish chieftainship by his eldest son, THOMAS. This rank henceforth went by tanistry, and hence it was enjoyed in turn by the eldest and 2nd sons of this Thomas. From the latter the EXTINCT VISCOUNTS MAYO descended. But Walter, the eldest son, left three sons. Of the 2nd, Lodge states that the male line is EXTINCT. The EARL OF MAYO descends from the 3rd, whilst the eldest, JOHN BOURKE, acquired Dromkeen, in Clanwilliam (co. Limerick), with the third part of that barony, from the Bourkes of Clanwilliam in exchange for his wife's territory of Coshma.

He d. at Dromkeen, and his eldest son, WILLIAM DUFFE BOURKE, was father of MEYLER BOURKE, of Dromkeen, who gave a patronymic to this branch of the De Burgos.

The early pedigree of this family is recorded in Ulster's office. But the change of name, temp. CHARLES I., requires two or three descents to be noticed.

RICHARD OGE BOURKE, who d. 6 June, 1596, was then chief of this family, and was found by inquisition to be seized of Dromkeen and Drumrusk, &c.

WILLIAM BOURKE, the eldest son, inherited the chief part of the property, but it eventually passed to the grandson of his brother Meyler; which MEYLER succeeded to Drumrusk on his father's death in 1596. His son, Ulick, was father of RICHARD BURKE, who adopting the established religion, and taking holy orders, anglicised, as was not uncommon, his name, and was the first to write it Burgh. He inherited the Dromkeen property under an entail, and it passed at his death to his eldest son, ULICK (anglicised to ULYSSES) BURGH, D.D., also in holy orders, rector of Grean and Killeely (near Dromkeen), in 1672, and dean of Emly in 1686. He adhered to the Prince of Orange, and when he, as WILLIAM III., advanced to the siege of Limerick, Dr. Burgh received him at Dromkeen, and attended him throughout the siege, being of much service to the army from his personal acquaintance with that district. When that first siege proved abortive, the Irish party burned Dromkeen, but King WILLIAM rewarded the owner with the bishoprick of Ardagh in 1692, a preferment which he only held for a few months, dying soon after his consecration. He had m. Mary, dau. of William Kingsmill, Esq., of Ballyowen, colonel in the army, and M.P. for Mallow, by Dorothy, dau. of Sir Warham St. Leger, Knt., by Ursula, dau. of George, Lord Abergavenny, and grand-dau. of Edward Stafford, Duke of Buckingham. From this alliance spring the BURGHs of Dromkeen, the BURGHs of Oldtown, the BURGHs of Bert, of whom SIR ULYSSES BURGH, G.C.B., became 2nd LORD DOWNES, and, in the female line, the HUSSEY-BURGHs of Donora and Dromkeen. By Mary Kingsmill his wife, Bishop Burgh had issue,

1. RICHARD, in holy orders, who s. at Dromkeen, and was father of two sons, THOMAS, of Dromkeen, whose dau. and heir, m. Philip Wolfe, Esq.; and RICHARD, of Mount Bruis, co. Tipperary, in holy orders, whose only dau. Mary, m. in 1781, Captain William Byam, 3rd son of William Byam, Esq., of Byams, in Antigua, and left surviving issue,

1 Richard-Burgh Byam, in holy orders, vicar of Kew and Petersham.

2 Edward-Samuel Byam.

1 Martha.

2 Alicia-Juliana, wife of Major William Levese, of Torrington House, Sussex.

II. WILLIAM, of whom presently.

III. Thomas, of Old Town, co. Kildare, engineer and surveyor-general, who m. Mary, dau. of William Smith, bishop of Kilmore, and had (with a son, THOMAS, of Old Town, grandfather of the late Very Rev. John T. Burgh, dean of Cloyne) two daus., of whom Elizabeth, m. Ignatius Hussey, Esq., and was mother of WALTER HUSSEY-BURGH, lord chief baron of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, whose grandson was the late WALTER HUSSEY-BURGH, Esq., of Dromkeen and Donore. (See BURKE'S Landed Gentry.)

I. Dorothy, m. to Thomas Smyth, D.D., Bishop of Limerick, ancestor of Viscount Gort.

II. Catherine, m. to the Rev. Alexander Alcock, of Ferns, co. Wexford.

The 2nd son,

WILLIAM BURGH, Esq., of Bert, co. Kildare, m. in 1693, Margaret, dau. of Thomas Parnell, Esq., of Congleton, in Cheshire; and dying about the year 1744, was s. by his eldest surviving son,

THOMAS BURGH, Esq., of Bert, who m. Anne, dau. of the Right Rev. DIVE DOWNES, bishop of Cork and Ross (as in the lineage of the family of Downes), and had issue,

I. WILLIAM, LL.D., his successor.

II. THOMAS, comptroller-general and commissioner of the revenue in Ireland.

III. Robert, of the E. I. Co.'s service, m. Anne, dau. of Hugh Hickman, Esq., of Fenloe, co. Clare, and left two daus.,

1 Mary, m. to the Rev. John Hussey-Burgh, of Dromkeen.

2 Catherine, m. to Alexander Hamilton, Esq.

I. Margaret-Emilia, m. the Right Hon. John Foster, and was created Baroness Oril and Vicomtesse Ferrard.

II. Anne, m. to the celebrated WALTER HUSSEY-BURGH, lord chief baron of the exchequer.

III. Dorothy, m. to John Rochfort, Esq., of Clogrenane, co. Carlow.

IV. Harriet-Charlotte.

Mr. Burgh, whose will bears date 15 November, 1754, was s. by his eldest son,

WILLIAM BURGH, LL.D., who m. Mary, dau. and heir of George Warburton, Esq., of Firmount, co. Kildare; but d. s. p., when the estate devolved upon his brother,

THOMAS BURGH, Esq., of Bert House, co. Kildare, who m. in 1775, Anne, only dau. of David Aiglon, Esq., and by her (who d. in 1831) left issue,

ULYSSES, 2nd Lord Downes.

Anne, m. to Nathaniel Sneyd, Esq.

Mary, m. to John-Staunton Rochfort, Esq., of Clogrenane, co. Carlow.

Elizabeth.

Charlotte, m. 17 February, 1815, to the Rev. Zachariah Cornock, of Cromwell's Fort, co. Wexford; and d. in 1827.

Mr. Burgh d. in 1810: his son and heir,

SIR ULYSSES BURGH, G.C.B., K.T.S., and S.A., a general officer, colonel 29th foot, b. 15 August, 1788, s. his cousin, William, Lord Downes, as 2nd BARON DOWNES, 2 March, 1826, and became a representative peer for Ireland. His lordship m. 1st, 20 June, 1815, Maria, only dau. and heir of the late Walter Bagenal, Esq., heir male and representative of the great family of Bagenal, of Bagenalstown, and by her (who d. 20 August, 1842) had two daus.,

ANNE, m. 27 April, 1838, to John-Henry, Earl of Clonmel.

CHARLOTTE, m. 12 February, 1851, to the Hon. Lieut.-Colonel James Colborne, now Lord Seaton, and d. 26 April, 1863.

His lordship, m. 2ndly, 4 August, 1846, Christopheria, widow of John-Willis Fleming, Esq., of Stoneham, Hants, and dau. of James Buchanan, Esq. (which lady d. 18 October, 1860). In 1848, his lordship and his cousins, Thomas Burgh, Esq., of Oldtown, Rev. Walter Burgh, vicar of Naas, Major John Burgh, and Rev. William Burgh, were authorized to re-assume their ancient name of DE BURGH. Lord Downes d. without male issue 26 July, 1864, when the barony became EXTINCT.

Arms—Quarterly: first and fourth, or, a cross, gu., for BURGH; second and third, arg., three pales, wavy, gu., for DOWNES.

BURGHESH—BARONS BURGHESH.

By Writ of Summons, dated 12 November, 1303.

Lineage.

In the 26th year of EDWARD I.,

ROBERT DE BURGHESH had his commission renewed, as constable of Dover Castle and lord warden of the Cinque Ports, and was summoned to parliament in six years afterwards, as BARON BURGHESH; in which dignity he had summons from 12 November, 1303, to 13 June, 1305. His lordship d. in 1306, and was s. by his son,

STEPHEN DE BURGHESH, 2nd baron, but never summoned to parliament; this nobleman had issue,

BARTHOLOMEW, his successor.

Henry, bishop of Lincoln, temp. EDWARD II., and in the reign of EDWARD III. Lord Treasurer and Lord Chancellor. This distinguished prelate d. at Ghent, in 1343, and his remains were brought over and interred in Lincoln Cathedral. A story subsequently circulated—that his lordship having incurred many a bitter curse, for despoiling his poorer tenantry of their grounds, to form a park at Tynghurst, appeared after his decease, to a certain person (who had been one of his esquires), in the habit of a keeper, with his bow, quiver of arrows, and a horn by his side, arrayed in a short green coat, and thus addressed him—"Thou knowest how I have offended God, and injured the poor, by my inclosure of this park: for this cause, therefore, am I enjoined penance, to be the keeper of it, till it be laid open again. Go, therefore, to the canons of Lincoln (my brethren), and intreat them from me to make a restitution to the poor of what I thus wrongfully took from them." Whereupon having delivered the message to the canons, they sent one of their company, called William Batchelor, to see the desired restitution accomplished; who caused the banks and pales to be forthwith thrown down, and the ditches to be filled up.

Stephen de Burghersh was s. by his elder son,

BARTHOLOMEW DE BURGHESH, 3rd baron, who had summons to parliament from 25 January, 1330 (4th EDWARD III.), to 15 March, 1354, latterly with the addition of "Seniari." This nobleman was in the wars of Scotland and France, temp. EDWARD II., in the retinue of Bartholomew, Lord Badlesmere; but in the 15th of the same reign, joining Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, against the Spencers, he was taken prisoner with Lord Badlesmere, after the battle of Borough-bridge, upon the surrender of that nobleman's castle of Leeds, in Kent, and sent to the Tower of London. He was restored, however, to his freedom and rank, on the arrival of Queen Isabel and Prince Edward, and constituted governor of Dover Castle and warden of the Cinque Ports—trusts confirmed to him by King EDWARD III., in whose reign his lordship became still more highly distinguished, participating in the glories of Cressy, and filling several important offices, such as lord chamberlain of the household, constable of the Tower, &c. Lord Burghersh, m. Elizabeth, dau. and co-heiress of Theobald de Verdon, a great Staffordshire baron, by whom he had issue,

Henry, who m. Isabel, one of the sisters and co-heiresses of Edmund de St. John, but d. s. p.

BARTHOLOMEW, his successor.

Joane.

A dau., m. 5th Earl of Kildare.

His lordship d. in 1355, and was s. by his only surviving son,

BARTHOLOMEW DE BURGHESH, 4th baron, summoned to parliament from 15 December 1357 (31st EDWARD III.), to 24 February, 1368. This nobleman was one of the most eminent warriors of the martial times of EDWARD III., having served in the immediate staff (as we should now call it) of the BLACK PRINCE in the French wars, and attaining therein so much renown, as to be deemed worthy of one of the original Garters, upon the institution of that order. In a few years afterwards, he journeyed into the Holy Land; and he was subsequently, for several years, again in attendance upon his royal master, the BLACK PRINCE, during which period he participated in the triumph of Poitiers. His lordship m. 1st, Cecily, dau. and heiress of Richard de Weyland, by whom he had an only dau., and, eventually, heiress,

ELIZABETH, who m. Sir Edward le Despencer, K.G., and carried the Barony of Burghersh into the family of her husband. The great-grand-dau. and representative of this marriage,

MARY, only dau. and heiress of Henry Nevill, last Lord Abergavenny and Despencer, m. Sir Thomas Fane, Knt., whose son, Sir Francis Fane, K.B., was created, in 1624, BARON BURGHESH, and EARL OF WESTMORELAND, honours now enjoyed by his lordship's descendant, Francis-William-Henry Fane, 12th EARL OF WESTMORELAND, C.B.

Lord Burghersh m. 2ndly, Margaret, sister of Bartholomew Lord Badlesmere, but had no issue. His lordship d. in 1369, in which year, his last will and testament bears date, at London, 4 April. By this instrument he directs that his body be interred in the chapel of Massingham, before the image of the blessed Virgin; that a dirge be there said, and in the morning a mass; and that a dole should be daily given to the poor of that place, at the discretion of his executors. To Sir Walter Pavely (whom, with Lord Badlesmere, he had constituted executors) he bequeathed a standing cup, gilt, with an L upon the cover, as also his whole suit of arms for the justs, with his coat of mail and sword. Upon the demise of this nobleman, the last male representative of this branch of the family of Burghersh, the BARONY OF BURGHESH, passed with his dau., as stated above, into the family of Despencer, and the dignity is now vested, although not assumed, in Mary-Frances Boscawen, Baroness Le Despencer, Viscountess Falmouth.

Arms.—Gu., a lion rampant, double queue, or.

NOTE.—Of this family was

JOHN DE BURGHESH, who m. Maud, one of the daus. and heiresses of Edmund Bacon, of the co. Essex, and left a son,

SIR JOHN DE BURGHESH, Knt., who was in the expedition, made in the 47th EDWARD III. into Flanders. This Sir John m. Ismania, dau. of Simon Hanap, of the co. Gloucester, and by her (who m. Sir John Raleigh of Nettlecomb, Knt.) he left two daus., his co-heirs, viz.,

BURNELL—BARONS BURNELL.

By Writ of Summons, dated 19 December, 1311.

Lineage.

"That this family," says Dugdale, "hath been of great antiquity, here in England, an old Martyrologe (sometime belonging to the abbey of Buldwade, co. Salop,) doth plainly demonstrate; for thereby appeareth that Sir Robert Burnell, Knt., d. 15 November, 1087; Sir Philip, 14 December, 1107; Sir Roger, 5 February, 1140; Sir Hugh, 7 January, 1149; Sir Richard, 20 January, 1189; Sir Hugh, 12 May, 1242; and another Sir Robert, 6 December, 1249."

The next persons of the name upon record are

WILLIAM BURNELL, who took part with the rebellious barons at the close of King HENRY III.'s reign, and his brother,

ROBERT BURNELL, who, in the 54th of the same monarch, obtained a charter for a weekly market, and two fairs yearly, to be holden at his manor of Acton Burnell, co. Salop; and before the end of the same year we find him, amongst others, signed with the cross for a voyage to the Holy Land with Prince Edward. He was, however, drowned, along with his above-mentioned brother, in 1282, when he was s. by his nephew (the son of his brother Philip).

PHILIP BURNELL, who was s. by his 1st cousin (son of his uncle, Hugh Burnell), Philip Burnell, who, in the 19th EDWARD I., had a charter for free warren in all his demesne lands in the co. of Salop, and in two years afterwards inherited estates in the co. of Southampton, Wilts, Berks, Stafford, Essex, and Surrey, from his uncle, Robert Burnell, bishop of Bath and Wells. This feudal lord m. Maud, dau. of Richard Fitz-Alan, Earl of Arundel, and had issue,

EDWARD, his successor.

Maud, m. 1st, to John Lovel, of Tichmarch, co. Northampton, by whom she had issue,

John Lovel, who was deprived of his inheritance by fine.

Maud, m. 2ndly, John de Handlo, who was summoned to parliament, as BARON HANDLO, in 1342. (See that dignity.)

Philip Burnell d. in the 23rd of EDWARD I., and was s. by his son,

EDWARD BURNELL, who, being in the wars of Scotland, had summons to parliament, as BARON BURNELL, from 19 December, 1311, to 24 October, 1314. His lordship m. Olivia, dau. of Hugh le Despenser, but dying s. p. in 1315, the barony EXPIRED, while his estates, save those held by his widow in dower, devolved upon his only sister MAUD (mentioned above), as sole heiress, BURNELL—BARONS BURNELL, OF HOLGATE, CO. SALOP.

By Writ of Summons, dated 25 November, 1350.

Lineage.

MAUD BURNELL, sister and sole heiress of Edward Lord Burnell, who d. in 1315, when his barony EXPIRED, took for her 2nd husband John de Handlo, afterwards summoned to parliament as LORD HANDLO, and had issue, two sons, viz.,

Richard, who d. v. p., leaving a son,

Edmund de Handlo, who s. to the Barony of Handlo. (See HANDLO.)

And

NICHOLAS DE HANDLO, who inherited in the 22nd EDWARD III., the estates of his mother, and assumed, in consequence, the surname of BURNELL; by which designation he was summoned to parliament, as a BARON, on 25 November, 1350. His lordship distinguished himself in arms, and participated in the glory acquired by his victorious sovereign upon the French soil. He d. 19 January, 1383, and was s. by his son,

SIR HUGH BURNELL, Knt., as 2nd BARON BURNELL. This nobleman was constituted governor of the castle of Bridgenorth, co. Salop, in the 10th of RICHARD II.; but being denounced, in the next year, as one of the favourites and evil counsellors of that unhappy prince, he was banished the court. He regained popular favour, however, so much within a few years, that upon the deposal of his royal master, he was one of the lords deputed to receive the unfortunate king's resignation of the crown and government, at the Tower of London. In the next reign we find Lord Burnell entrusted with the government of several strong castles on the Welch border. His lordship m. 1st, Lady Philippa de la Pole, dau. of Michael, 2nd Earl of Suffolk, and 2ndly, Joyce, dau. of John Botetourt, and grand-dau. and heiress of John, 2nd Lord Botetourt; by the latter he had no issue; but by the former he had an only son,

EDWARD, who, dying v. p., left, by his wife Alice, dau. of Thomas, Lord Strange, three daus., viz.,

Joyce, m. to Thomas Erdington, Esq., and d. s. p.

Margery, m. to Edmund, son of Sir Walter Hungerford, Knt., and had issue. In the co-representatives of this marriage, one moiety of the BARONY OF BURNELL now vests.

Katherine, m. to Sir John Ratcliffe, whose son, Sir John Ratcliffe, K.G., m. Elizabeth, dau. and heiress of Walter, Lord Fitz-Walter. In the representatives of this marriage, a moiety of the BARONY OF BURNELL now vests.

Lord Burnell, who had been summoned to parliament from 20 August 1383, to 21 October, 1420, d. in the latter year; when his above-mentioned grand-daus. became his heirs, and the BARONY OF BURNELL fell into ABEYANCE amongst them, as it still continues with their representatives.

BUTLER—EARL OF WILTSHIRE.

By Letters Patent, dated 8 July, 1449.

Lineage.

JAMES BUTLER, son and heir of James, 4th Earl of Ormonde, in Ireland, by Joan, dau. of William Beauchamp, Lord Abergavenny, was elevated to the peerage of England, by letters patent, dated 8 July, 1449, as EARL OF WILTSHIRE, and succeeded to the Irish honours, as 5th Earl of Ormonde, at the decease of his father, in 1452. This nobleman, who was a staunch adherent of the house of Lancaster, was made lieutenant of Ireland in the 30th HENRY VI., and in three years afterwards Lord Treasurer of England. Shortly after this his lordship was with King HENRY in the first battle of St. Albans, where the Yorkists prevailing, he fled, and cast his armour into a ditch. In the 38th of the same monarch he was reconstituted Lord Treasurer, and appointed keeper of the forest of Pederton, co. Somerset, and of Craneburn Chase, lying in the co. of Wilts and Dorset; being at the same time honoured with the Garter. His lordship participated this year in the triumph of his party at Wakefield, where the Duke of York fell; but sharing also their defeat at Mortimer Cross, he fled the field: and pursuing a similar course after the unfortunate issue to the Lancastrians, of Towton Field, he was taken prisoner by Richard Salkeld, Esq., and beheaded at Newcastle, 1 May, 1461. His lordship d. s. p., and being attainted by parliament in the November following his execution, his EARLDOM OF WILTSHIRE EXPIRED, as should the Irish honours of the family, the deceased lord's brother and heir, John Butler, being also attainted for his Lancastrian principles, and being likewise engaged at the battle of Towton, but that the said John was restored in blood by King EDWARD IV., and thus enabled to inherit as 6th Earl of Ormonde. James, Earl of Ormonde and Wiltshire, m. thrice; 1st, Amy, dau. of John

Fitz-Alan, Earl of Arundel; 2ndly, Amicea, dau. of Sir Richard Stafford, a great heiress; and 3rdly, Eleanor, dau. of Edmund Beaufort, Duke of Somerset, but never had issue.

BUTLER — BARON BUTLER, OF WESTON, CO. HUNTINGDON.

By Letters Patent, anno 1673.

Lineage.

LORD RICHARD BUTLER, 2nd son of James, 1st Duke of Ormonde, was advanced to the peerage of Ireland, as EARL OF ARRAW, in 1662, and created a peer of England, by the title of BARON BUTLER, OF WESTON, in 1673. Upon his father's quitting Ireland in 1682, this nobleman was left deputy until his return, and performed great service against the mutinous garrison of Carrick-Fergus. His lordship distinguished himself also in the celebrated naval engagement with the Dutch in 1673. He m. 1st, Mary, dau. of James Stuart, Duke of Richmond and Lenox, but had no issue. He m. 2ndly, Dorothy, dau. of John Ferrers, Esq., of Tamworth Castle, co. Warwick, by whom he had an only surviving dau.,

CHARLOTTE, m. to CHARLES, LORD CORNWALLIS. (See that title.)

He d. in 1685, when leaving no male issue, all his honours EXPIRED, but were revived in the person of his nephew, the Hon. Charles Butler (see BUTLER, Baron Butler, of Weston).

BUTLER—BARON BUTLER, OF WESTON, CO. HUNTINGDON.

By Letters Patent, dated 23 January, 1693.

Lineage.

The Honourable

CHARLES BUTLER, 2nd son of the celebrated Thomas, Earl of Ossory (by courtesy), and Lord Butler, of Moorpark, by writ, eldest son of James, Duke of Ormonde, was elevated to the peerage of Ireland on 8 March, 1693, as Baron Cloghgrenan, Viscount Tullough, and Earl of ARRAW, and created at the same time a peer of England, by the title of BARON BUTLER, OF WESTON, co. Huntingdon. This nobleman was one of the lords of the bedchamber, and colonel of horse, in the reign of King WILLIAM; governor of Dover Castle, and deputy-warden of the Cinque Ports, and master of the ordnance in Ireland, temp. Queen ANNE, and chancellor of the university of Oxford in the reign of King GEORGE I. His lordship m. Elizabeth, 4th dau. and co-heiress of Thomas, Lord Crew, of Stene; but dying s. p. in 1769, all his honours EXPIRED. His lordship was also lord high steward of Westminster, and a lieutenant-general in the army.

BUTLER — BARONS BUTLER, OF LANTHONY, CO. MONMOUTH, AND EARLS OF BRECKNOCK, IN THE PEERAGE OF ENGLAND.

By Letters Patent, dated 20 July, 1660.

Marquesses and Dukes of Ormonde, and Earls of Ossory, in Ireland.

Lineage.

The Right Honourable

JAMES BUTLER, Marquess of Ormonde, and Earl of Ossory, in Ireland, for his faithful adherence to King CHARLES I. was created a peer of England at the restoration of the monarchy (20 July, 1660,) in the dignities of Baron Butler, of Lanthony,

co. Monmouth, and EARL OF BRECKNOCK,* and the next year advanced to the Irish DUKEDOM OF ORMONDE, while he was elevated to the same rank in England by the same title on 9 November, 1682. This nobleman distinguished himself first in public life by a disposition to oppose the government of the Earl of Strafford in Ireland, and his political career commenced in the following singular manner. Lord Strafford, upon calling a parliament to meet at Dublin Castle, issued a proclamation that none of the members, lords or commons, should enter with their swords; an injunction obeyed by all but the young Marquess of Ormonde, who told the black rod at the door "that he should have no swords of his except in his guts." This so irritated the lord-deputy, that the refractory lord was called upon in the evening to account for his conduct; when he produced his majesty's writ, summoning him to parliament, "cinctus cum gladio." So resolute a reply, at once fixed his lordship's fortune, and it being deemed more prudent to conciliate than to provoke so ardent a spirit, he was immediately called to the privy council; from that period he attached himself zealously to the cause of the king, and used all his efforts to defeat the accusations against the Earl of Strafford, who thenceforward felt so much gratitude towards him that he made it his last request to his royal master to bestow the Garter upon Ormonde; a request cheerfully complied with. The marquess was afterwards lord-lieutenant of Ireland, and his valour, conduct, and loyalty were in the highest degree conspicuous throughout the whole of the Civil Wars. He was a second time chief governor of Ireland after the Restoration. Burnet says of this eminent person, "that he was every way well fitted for a court; of a graceful appearance, a lively wit, and a cheerful temper; a man of great expense, but decent even in his vices, for he always kept up the forms of religion: too faithful not to give always good advice; but when bad ones were followed, too complaisant to be any great complainer. He had got through many transactions with more fidelity than success; and in the siege of Dublin, miscarried so far, as to lessen the opinion of his military conduct: but his constant attendance on his master and his great sufferings raised him (after the Restoration) to be lord steward of the household and lord-lieutenant of Ireland."

His grace m. Elizabeth, only dau. of Richard Preston, Earl of Desmond, by whom he had issue,

I. Thomas, who d. young.

II. THOMAS, EARL OF OROBY, who was summoned to parliament 24 September, 1666, as LORD BUTLER, of Moor Park, co. Hert. This nobleman was b. at Kilkenny, on 8 July, 1634, and by the time he had reached majority, gave such proofs of discretion, talent, and noble bearing, that Sir Robert Southwell thus depicts him at that period. "He was a young man with a very handsome face; a good head of hair; well set; very good natured; rides the great horse very well; is a very good tennis player, fencer, and dancer; understands music, and plays on the guitar and lute; speaks French elegantly; reads Italian fluently; is a good historian; and so well versed in romances, that if a gallery be full of pictures and hangings, he will tell the stories of all that are there described. He shuts up his door at eight in the evening, and studies till midnight; he is temperate, courteous, and excellent in all his behaviour." In 1661 his lordship was general of the horse in Ireland, and a member of the privy council. He was deputy to his father while lord-lieutenant, and attained the highest reputation in the cabinet and in the field. His lordship pre-eminently distinguished himself in the great naval engagement with the Dutch in 1673, "wherein" (saith Anthony Wood,) "he gallantly acted beyond the fiction of romance." He m. in 1659, Amelia, eldest dau. of Louis de Nassau, Lord of Auverquerque, natural son of Maurice, Prince of Orange, by whom he had two surviving sons, and three daus., viz.,

1 JAMES, who s. his grandfather.

2 Charles, created Earl of Arran.

1 Elizabeth, m. to William Richard George, 9th Earl of Derby.

2 Emilia.

3 Henrietta, m. to Henry D'Auverquerque, Earl of Grantham.

His lordship d. v. p. of a fever, at Whitehall, deeply lamented by the kingdom at large, on 30 July, 1680.

III. Richard, created Earl of Arran in Ireland, and LORD BUTLER, OF WESTON, in England.

IV. John, created EARL OF GOWRAN, d. s. p. in 1677.

The duke d. the year of the revolution, 1688, and was s. by his grandson,

JAMES BUTLER, 2nd Duke of Ormonde, both in England and

Ireland, and 2nd EARL OF BRECKNOCK, IN ENGLAND. This nobleman being one of the first to espouse the cause of the Prince of Orange, was made a knight of the Garter, upon the elevation of his highness to the throne: and constituted Lord High Constable of England for the day, at the coronation of his Majesty and Queen MARY. In 1690 his grace attended King WILLIAM at the battle of the Boyne, and in three years afterwards was at Landen, where he received several wounds, had his horse killed under him, and was taken prisoner by the French, and carried to Namur. In 1702 he was appointed by Queen ANNE commander-in-chief of the land forces sent against France and Spain, when he destroyed the French fleet and the Spanish galleons, in the harbour of Vigo, for which he received the thanks of parliament. In 1712, he succeeded the Duke of Marlborough, as captain-general and commander-in-chief of all his majesty's land forces in Great Britain, or employed abroad in conjunction with her allies; and on the Queen's death was one of the privy council who signed the proclamation, disclaiming GEORGE I. King of England; on whose arrival he was at first graciously received by his majesty, but in a few days after was removed from his great offices; and within a short time (1715) impeached in parliament of high crimes and misdemeanours. Whereupon retiring into France, he was attainted, his estates confiscated, and all his honours extinguished, on 20 August, 1715. But in 1721, an act of parliament passed, enabling his brother the Earl of Arran to purchase the escheated property, which he accordingly did. The duke m. twice, 1st, Lady Anne Hyde, dau. of Laurence, Earl of Rochester, who d. with her only infant child; and 2ndly, Lady Mary Somerset, dau. of Henry Duke of Beaufort, by whom he had an only surviving dau., Mary, m. to John, Lord Ashburnham. He d. at Madrid, at the advanced age of ninety-four, on 16 November, 1745.

NOTE.—The illustrious house of ORMONDE originally sprang from the great feudal family of Walter; thus,

In the 3rd HENRY II., in the sheriff's account for Norfolk and Suffolk, mention is made in those shires of

HUBERT WALTER, to whom s.

HENRY WALTER, who had five sons, Hubert, THEOBALD, Walter, Roger, and Hamon, of whom,

Hubert, the eldest, a churchman, became archbishop of Canterbury, and the 2nd,

THEOBALD WALTER, obtained from King RICHARD I. a grant in fee of the lordship of PRESTON, in Lancashire, with the whole wayenake and forest of Amunderness, to hold by three knights' fees: which grant bears date 22 April, in the 1st year of that king's reign, being the Friday immediately after his coronation. And five years after he was appointed sheriff of the co. Lancaster, and continued to fulfil the duties of that high office from the 6th of RICHARD to the 1st of JOHN, inclusive. This feudal lord was a great benefactor to the church, and a founder of several religious houses, amongst which were the Augustinian Abbey of Cockerand, in Lancashire, and (being BUTLER of Ireland) the monastery of Arklow, and the abbey of Mothney, co. Limerick, and Nenagh, co. Tipperary, in Ireland. In the 5th of King JOHN he gave two palfreys for license to go into that kingdom, and having m. Maud, dau. of Robert Vavasour, with whom he acquired the manors of Edlington and Newborough, and the lands of Boulton, departed this life in the 9th of the same monarch; when Robert Vavasour above-mentioned gave to the king a fine of 1,200 marks, and two palfreys, for the benefit of the widow's marriage and dowrie. The lady m. subsequently Fulke Fitz-warine. Theobald Walter left issue,

THEOBALD, who assumed from his office in Ireland the surname of BUTLER or BUTLER, and from this great feudal lord, who m. Maude, sister of the celebrated Thomas-a-Becket, archbishop of Canterbury, immediately descended the BUTLERS OF ORMONDS.

Maud, whose tuition King JOHN committed to Gilbert Fitz-Reinfrid, Baron of Kendall.

BUTLER—BARONS CAHER, VISCOUNTS CAHER, AND EARLS OF GLENGALL.

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 6 May, 1583.

Earldom and Viscounty, by Letters Patent, dated 22 January, 1816.

Lineage.

The feudal barony of Kilteneen, of which Caher Castle became the chief seat, with Knockgraston, &c., were granted by King John to Philip de Wygornia, lord-deputy of Ireland, in 1184, and very incorrectly supposed by some writers to be the same with his enemy, Philip de Braose. The heiress of this family, Basilia, brought it in marriage to Meyler de Bermingham, Lord Athenry, who exchanged it with Piers de Bermingham, Lord of Thetmoy, for other lands (circa 1290); and his descendants, styled MAC FEORIS or MAC YORIS, retained this barony until Ellice, dau. and heir of MAC FEORIS MORE, brought it in marriage to PIERCE BUTLER, sprung from James le Botiller, illegitimate son of James, 3rd Earl of Ormonde, but upon whose family the Ormonde estates were entailed by the 10th earl, next after the Lords Dunboyne. His eldest son,

THOMAS BUTLER, of Caher-dun-Eske, Esq., m. Ellice, dau. of Thomas, 8th Earl of Desmond, and was father of EDMUND BUTLER, who, by Catharine, dau. of Sir Pierce le Poer, Knt., left issue,

- I. THOMAS, of whom presently.
- II. Pierce, who was father of

THEOBALD, who became Baron Caher.

The eldest son,

THOMAS BUTLER, Esq., was elevated to the peerage of Ireland, 10 November, 1543, by the title of Baron of Caher, with remainder to his heirs-general. His lordship m. Eleanor, 5th dau. of Pierce, Earl of Ormonde, and by her had a surviving son EDMUND, his successor. He m. 2ndly, Ellen, dau. of Thomas, Earl of Desmond, and left two daus., Joan, m. to Thomas Prendergast, Esq., of Newcastle; and Eleanor, m. 1st, to Sir John Fitzgerald, Knt., brother of the Earl of Desmond; and 2ndly, to Sir John Oge, Knt. His lordship d. 1557, and was s. by his only surviving son,

EDMUND, 2nd baron, who d. s. p., when the barony EXPIRED, and his two half-sisters became his heirs. The dignity was, however, revived 6 May, 1583, by a new patent granted to his lordship's 1st cousin,

SIR THEOBALD BUTLER, Knt., who thus became Baron Caher. The queen did not, however, feel authorized in conferring the Barony of Caher again, though by a new creation, and with only the new precedence to do so, without the consent of the heirs-general. But one of these heirs who had m. Mr. Prendergast, dying during the negotiations, the queen then signed the patent, the release being executed a little later by the son of the deceased lady, though only ten years of age at the time. This nobleman received the honour of knighthood, in 1567, from the Lord-Deputy Sidney, who thus mentions him in a letter to the lords of the council, dated Limerick, 27 February, 1577:—"There were with me that descended of English race, Sir Maurice Fitzgarrold, brother to the Vicounte Decies; Sir Thibald Butler, whose uncle and cozen-germaine were Barones of the Cayre, whose lands he lawfullye and justlye enjoyeth, and better deserveth that title of honor than any of them ever did; for whome I entende more speciallye to write; for trulye, for his deserte, he is worthie any commendation." His lordship m. Mary, dau. of Sir Thomas Cusack, of Cusington, co. Meath, lord chancellor of Ireland, and left,

- I. THOMAS, his successor.
- II. Edmund, of Cloghcallie, co. Tipperary, m. Eleanor, dau. of Pierce Butler, Esq., of Callan, co. Kilkenny, and left a son,

THOMAS, who s. as 3rd baron.

- III. Pierce, d. s. p.

IV. Richard, of Clonbrogan, father of Thomas, who d. 1690 (leaving an only child, Ellen, m. to Theobald Stapleton, Esq.), and of PIERCE, of Knockanamagh, who m. a dau. and heir of Donogh O'Brien, and was father of THEOBALD, 5th Lord Caher.

V. JAMES, of Knocklofty, m. 1st, Honor, dau. of Walter Walsh, Esq., of Castlehoel, co. Kilkenny; and 2ndly, Margaret —, and dying 17 April 1630, was buried in the abbey of Clonmel, having had issue,

JAMES, of Glengall, in Tipperary, whose will, dated 28 May, 1732, was proved 29 January, 1737; he had issue,

- 1 Theobald, d. unm.
- 2 Richard, m. Jane, dau. of Richard Butler, of Ballynahinch, in Tipperary, and d. before 1750, leaving issue, JAMES, who s. his cousin PIERCE, as 9th Lord Baron Caher.
- 3 Ellen, m. to — Ryan, of Banshigh.
- 4 Anastasia, wife of — Murphy.
- 5 Elinor, wife of — Macenery.
- 6 Mary, wife of — Fitzgerald, and had issue.

- 2 Thomas.
- 3 Richard.
- 1 Mary.
- 2 Catharine.
- 3 Elinor.

VI. John, of Cloughbridy, father of three sons, Edward, John, and Walter.

I. Ellen, m. to Richard Butler, Esq., of Ballyboe, co. Tipperary.

II. Mary, m. to Sir Cormac M'Carthy, of Blarney.

Lord Caher d. in 1596, and was s. by his eldest son,

THOMAS BUTLER, 2nd baron. This nobleman d. 31 January, 1627, and leaving an only dau. and heir, Margaret, who m. Edmund, 3rd Lord Dunboyne, the barony devolved upon his nephew,

THOMAS BUTLER, 3rd baron (refer to 3rd son of 1st lord). His lordship m. Eleanor, dau. of Richard, Lord Power, and was s. by his grandson,

PIERCE BUTLER, 4th baron (only son of the Hon. Edmund Butler, by Eleanor, 2nd dau. of Edmund, Lord Dunboyne). His lordship m. in 1663, Elizabeth, dau. of Toby Mathew, Esq., of Thurles, by whom (who m. 2ndly, Daniel M'Carty, of Carrig-navar) he had four daus., Elinor, m. to Sir John Everard, Bart., of Fethard; Margaret, m. to Theobald, Lord Caher; Anne, who d. unm.; and Mary, m. to Robert Walsh, Esq., but dying in 1676, without male issue, the dignity devolved upon his kinsman,

THEOBALD BUTLER, Esq., of Knockanamagh, as 5th baron (grandson of Richard, 4th son of the 1st lord). This nobleman was outlawed in 1691 for his adhesion to JAMES II., and suffered much privation in consequence, having had his estates for some time laid waste, and afterwards seized upon by the crown. The outlawry was, however, reversed in Michaelmas term, 1693, and his lordship restored to his honours and estates. He m. 1st, Mary, eldest dau. of Sir Redmond Everard, Bart., of Fethard, by whom he had one son and two daus., Mary, wife of James Long, Esq., of Dublin, and Joanna, m. to James Butler, Esq., of Caherbane; and 2ndly, Margaret, 2nd dau. of Pierce, 4th Lord Caher, and had one son, and two daus., nuns at Ypres. His lordship d. in 1700, and was s. by his eldest son,

THOMAS BUTLER, 6th baron, who m. in 1709, Frances, eldest dau. of Sir Toby Butler, Knt., solicitor-general to JAMES II., and dying 22 May, 1744, left issue,

- I. JAMES, 7th lord.
- II. Theobald, d. young.
- III. PIERCE, 8th lord, successor to his brother.
- IV. Jordan, d. s. p.
- V. Thomas, d. s. p.
- VI. John, d. s. p.
- I. Mary.
- II. Margaret, m. to Andrew Kennedy, Esq.

He was s. by his eldest son,

JAMES BUTLER, 7th baron, at whose decease, s. p., at Lyons, in France, 6 June, 1786, the title devolved upon his brother, PIERCE BUTLER, 8th baron, who d. at Paris, 10 June, 1789, when this branch of the family being deemed to have become EXTINCT, the title and estates devolved upon

JAMES BUTLER, 9th Lord Caher, who m. Sarah Nichols; d. 1788, having had issue,

i. RICHARD, his heir.

ii. James, d. young.

i. Jane, m. to the Right Hon. Thomas Manners, high chancellor of Ireland.

He was s. by his son,

RICHARD BUTLER, Esq., as 10th baron. He took his seat in the Irish House of Lords, 4 February, 1796. His lordship, b. 13 November, 1775, m. 13 August, 1793, Emily, youngest dau. of James St. John Jefferys, Esq., of Blarney Castle, co. Cork, by Arabella his wife, sister of John Fitzgibbon, Earl of Clare, and by her (who d. in 1836) he had issue,

RICHARD, his heir.

Harriet-Anne, m. in 1822, to George-Hamilton, Earl of Belfast, afterwards Marquess of Donegal, and d. 14 September, 1860.

Charlotte, m. in December, 1836, to Christopher-Rice Mansel Talbot, Esq., M.P., of Margam, Glamorganshire, and d. 23 March, 1846.

Emily-Arabella-Georgiana, m. 1st, 1836, to Richard Pennefather, Esq., of Darling Hill, who d. 1849; and 2ndly, 1852, to Major-General H.-A. Hankey.

Lord Caher was created VISCOUNT CAHER and EARL OF GLENGALL 22 January, 1816; he d. 30 January, 1819, and was s. by his son,

RICHARD BUTLER, 2nd Earl of Glengall, a representative peer; b. in May, 1794, who m. 20 February, 1834, Margaret-Lauretta, younger dau. and co-heir of the late William Mellish, Esq., of Woodford, Essex, and by her (who d. 1863) had issue,

MARGARET, m. 2 August, 1858, to Lieut.-Colonel the Hon. RICHARD CHARTERIS, 2nd son of Francis, 5th Earl of Wemyss.

MATILDA, d. unm. 18 March, 1861.

His lordship d. 22 June, 1858, when the Earldom of Glengall and Viscounty of Caher became EXTINCT, but it is possible that the Barony of CAHER may be still successfully claimed.

BUTLER—VISCOUNT GALMOYE.

By Letters Patent, dated 16 May, 1646.

Lineage.

THOMAS BUTLER, 10th Earl of Ormonde and Earl of Ossory, K.G., surnamed, from the darkness of his complexion, the "Black Earl," left at his decease, in 1614, a legitimate dau. and heiress, and had besides an illegitimate son,

PIERS-FITZ-THOMAS BUTLER, in whose favour the earl executed a deed of conveyance, in 1597 (when the said Piers had reached majority), of certain church-lands, considerable in amount, which had been granted by Queen ELIZABETH, in 1576, to James Butler, the earl's brother, and which reverted to his lordship at the decease of the said James' son, James, without issue. This Piers-Fitz-Thomas m. Katherine, eldest dau. and co-heiress of Thomas, Lord Slane, by whom he had two sons, and dying in 1601, was s. by the elder,

SIR EDWARD BUTLER, Knt., who was elevated to the peerage of Ireland, 16 May, 1646, as VISCOUNT OF GALMOYE, in the co.

of Kilkenny. His lordship m. Anne, dau. of Edmund, 2nd Viscount Mountgarret, by whom he had two sons, viz.,

i. PIERS, of Barrowmount, colonel of dragoons in the royal army, who fell at the battle of Worcester in 1650; he m. Margaret, dau. of Nicholas, 1st Lord Netterville (settlement dated 20 November, 1626), and had issue,

1 EDWARD, who s. his grandfather.

2 Nicholas, d. s. p. in 1653.

3 Richard, d. in 1678, without male issue.

4 James, d. s. p.

5 EDMUND, of Killoshulan, co. Kilkenny, ancestor of the present family, of whom hereafter.

1 Frances, m. to Hervey Morres, grandfather of the 1st Viscount Mountmorres.

2 Eleanor, m. to William Grace, Esq., of Ballylinch, and had a younger son, John Grace, ancestor of the DUKES OF BUCKINGHAM (see BURKE'S Landed Gentry).

ii. Thomas, whose only child,

Anne, m. William Cook, Esq., of Painstown.

The viscount d. in 1653, and was s. by his grandson,

EDWARD, 2nd viscount; who m. Eleanor, Lady Aston, dau. of Sir Nicholas White, Knt., of Leixlip, co. Kildare, by whom he had two sons,

i. PIERS, his successor.

ii. Richard, a col. in the army, and captain in the royal guards, who m. Lucy Kavanagh, of the Morris family, and by her (who d. 1708) had with other issue who d. unm., an eldest son,

1 JAMES, who assumed the title as 4th viscount, and d. s. p. in 1769.

1 Sophia, m. William Hay, Esq., of Nantes, ancestor of the Chevalier Hay, of the same place.

His lordship d. in 1667, and was s. by his elder son,

PIERS, 3rd viscount, a distinguished officer in the royal army (King JAMES's) at the battle of the Boyne, who was outlawed in consequence, 11 May, 1691; but being in the October following one of the commissioners for the surrender of Limerick, his lordship was included of course in the celebrated treaty of that city. Following, however, the fortunes of his royal master (who had created him Earl of Newcastle) into France, he was despoiled of all his estates, and attainted in 1697, by the statute of 9th William III., c. 5. His lordship, who had the rank of lieutenant-general in the French service, m. Elizabeth, dau. of Theobald Mathew, of Thurles, co. Tipperary, and had an only son, Edward, colonel in King JAMES's army, who d. in the lifetime of his father, having been slain in the battle of Malplaquet, 18 September, 1709, s. p. His lordship d. 18 June, 1740, without male issue, when the viscounty was assumed, notwithstanding the attainder, by his nephew and next male heir,

COL. JAMES BUTLER, of the Irish brigade in the French service (eldest son of the deceased lord's only brother, the Hon. Richard Butler, of his majesty King JAMES's body-guard), as 4th viscount. His lordship d. s. p. 1771, when the dignity was assumed by the illegitimate son of his youngest brother, Captain Francis-Piers Butler, of the Irish brigade, by Catherine-Julie de Vallory (a lady whom Captain Butler eventually married, and acknowledging the said son, legitimated him according to the laws of France, but indisputably, not according to the laws of England).

PIERS-LOUIS-ANTOINE, as 5th viscount. This Piers dying without issue in 1826, it is of no importance whether he assumed, consistently with the English law of descent, the representation of the family or not; but while he lived, the branch which should have inherited the peerage did not urge their claim, owing to ignorance of the taint in the birth of the said Piers; but upon his decease, the next claimant and male heir to the (assumed) 4th viscount, Garret Butler, Esq., of Garrendenny Castle, Queen's Co., lost no time in asserting his right, upon which the law officers of Ireland came to the favourable conclusion hereafter mentioned.

We shall now deduce the line of the said GARRET:—

* EDMUND BUTLER, Esq., of Killoshulan, co. Kilkenny (youngest son of the Hon. Piers Butler, and brother of Edward, the 2nd viscount), a major in the army of King JAMES II., m. Catharine, dau. of Sir Nicholas Crisp, of Luddenham, co. Kent; and dying in 1691, left a son,

PIERS BUTLER, Esq., of Newtown and Urlingford, major of dragoons in King JAMES's army, comprehended within the articles of Limerick. This gentleman m. Domville, eldest dau. of Sir Robert Hartpole, Knt. of Shrute, and grand-dau. of Sir William Domville, King CHARLES the SECOND's attorney-general, by whom he had EDMUND BUTLER, Esq., capt. of dragons in the service of King GEORGE II., who conformed to the protestant faith in 1719. This gentleman served as high sheriff for the co. Kilkenny. He m. Miss Anne Skellerin, by whom he had several children, and was s. by his son,

PIERS BUTLER, Esq. (who but for the attainder would have succeeded at the decease of the 4th Viscount Galmoye, in 1769, owing to the illegitimacy of the person who assumed the dignity as 5th viscount). This gentleman m. Mary, only dau. of Theobald Mandeville, Esq., of Ballydine, and was s. by his only son,

EDMOND-THEOBALD-MANDEVILLE BUTLER, Esq., who m. Elizabeth, dau. of Garret Neville, Esq., and niece of Sir Robert-Adare Hodson, Bart., by whom he had four sons,

I. PIERS-THEOBALD, his heir.

II. GARRET, heir to his brother.

III. WILLIAM, m. Maria, 3rd dau. and co-heiress of the late Sir Joshua-Coles Meredyth, Bart., and d. in 1848, leaving issue, PIERS MANDEVILLE, d. unm., and under age, 9 February, 1857.

MARIA-ELIZABETH.

IV. THEOBALD, of E. T. M. Ville, co. Tipperary, m. 1840, Eliza, dau. of Robert Neville, Esq., of Marymount, co. Kilkenny, and has issue.

Mr. Butler d. in 1815, and was s. by his eldest son,

PIERS-THEOBALD BUTLER, Esq., at whose decease, unm., in 1824, the estates and representation of the family devolved upon his next brother,

GARRET BUTLER, Esq., who, upon the demise of the (illegitimate) 5th Viscount Piers, Louis Antoine, in 1826, petitioned the crown for the recognition of his right to the peerage; and upon a reference to the law officers of the crown in Ireland, the following report was made:—

"Upon the whole of this case we are humbly of opinion that the said Garret Butler, the claimant of said title of Viscount of Galmoye, has well proved his right to the same, in case said attainder were out of the way; and that his majesty may, if he shall be graciously pleased so to do, recommend the proper measures to be taken to reverse the attainder created by the said act of William III., in order that the said title, honour, or dignity of Viscount of Galmoye, of the kingdom of Ireland, may be revived in the person of the petitioner, the said Garret Butler; the more so as such attainder arose from the acts of Piers, the 3rd viscount, who was not the lineal ancestor of the said claimant, he having, as before stated, shown his right to the said title through the uncle of the said Piers.

"All which is humbly submitted to your excellency as the report of your excellency's obedient and very humble servants, (Signed) "H. JOY,
"JOHN DOHERTY."

CADOGAN—BARON CADOGAN, OF READING, BERKS, VISCOUNT CAVERSHAM, EARL CADOGAN.

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 21 June, 1716.
Earldom, &c., by Letters Patent, dated 8 May, 1718.

Lineage.

WILLIAM CADOGAN (eldest son of Henry Cadogan, barrister-at-law, by Bridget his wife, dau. of Sir Hardress Waller, Knt.), a general officer of great celebrity, the companion in arms of the Duke of Marlborough, and his grace's successor in the command of the army, was elevated to the peerage 21 June, 1716, as BARON CADOGAN, of Reading, Berks, and created, 8 May, 1718, Baron Cadogan, of Oakley, co. Bucks, with remainder, in default of male issue, to his brother, Charles Cadogan, Viscount CAVERSHAM, in the co. of Oxford, and EARL CADOGAN. His lordship m. Margareta-Cecilia, dau. of William Munter, councillor of the court of Holland, by whom he had two daus., his co-heirs, viz.,

I. SARAH, m. 4 December, 1719, to Charles, 2nd Duke of Richmond, K.G., and d. 1751, leaving issue, with five daus., two sons, viz.,

1. Charles, 3rd Duke of Richmond, K.G., who d. s. p. 1806.

2. Lord George Henry Lennox, father of Charles, 4th Duke of Richmond, K.G.

II. MARGARET, m. to the Hon. Charles-John, Count Bentinck, (2nd son of William, Earl of Portland) who d. 1779.

The earl d. 17 July, 1726, when the BARONY OF CADOGAN, of Reading, the VISCOUNTY OF CAVERSHAM, and the EARLDOM OF CADOGAN, became EXTINCT, while the Barony of Cadogan of Oakley devolved, according to the limitation, upon his lordship's brother, Charles Cadogan, and is now enjoyed by the present Earl Cadogan.

CAILLI—BARON CAILLI.

By Writ of Summons, dated 4 March, 1309.

Lineage.

Many of the names which have been of note and nobility in this country, says Camden, are derived from localities situate in Normandy; as instances of which he mentions D'Arcy, Devereux, Gournay, Cayley, D'Aubigny, &c. The place, Cailly (Caillefum), from which this family takes its name, is in the arrondissement of Rouen, a few miles to the north-east of that town, and in the "Ballivium Caleti," or bailiwick of Caux. Here there was a fortress called "Castellum Caillei," which was held by a baronial tenure, as the "Honour (or barony) de Cailly."

SIMON DE CAILLY, Lord of Massingham, Cranwich, Brodercross, Hiburgh, &c., in Norfolk (son of Humphrey de Cailly, temp. the CONQUEROR), m. Alice, and had two sons, ROGER, his heir.

Jordanus (Sir), who held a knight's fee in Norfolk under Hugh Bigod, Earl of Norfolk, and another fee in Warwickshire under Robert Marmion.

The eldest son,

ROGER DE CAILLY, temp. HENRY II., was one of the most wealthy and influential barons of the time. His name appears, temp. HENRY II., as witness to a deed, along with the archbishop of Canterbury, the constable de Humex, and other distinguished nobles of the same date. His son,

JOHN DE CAILLY, as appears by a trial, was Lord of Cranwich, temp. RICHARD I. He was also Lord of Massingham, Bradenham, Oxburgh, Denver, Hillington, Hecham, Hildeburgh, &c. His dau. Beatrix m. William de Butery. His son,

JOHN DE CAILLY, was lord of these manors, 4th JOHN (1202). He m. Margery, who, after his death, m. Michael de Poyninga. His son was,

ADAM DE CAILLY. In the 17th JOHN there is a mandate to Hervey Belet, "that he do not receive into the king's peace Hugh de Plaiz, Michael de Poyninga, William de Stuteville, William de Mortimer, Adam de Cayly, and Robert de Clere, until the king otherwise commands.—Witness the king at Stamford, 28 February." Adam de Cailly paid £5 to plead before the king, in the case of waste in Bradenham Forest, during the dower of Margerie, his mother, who was m. to Michael de Poyninga, she being to have only reasonable estovers of house-bote, hedge-bote, and wood to burn, by view of the forester of Adam de Kayly. By Mabel his wife, he had, besides other sons, OSBERT, his heir.

HUGO (Sir), of Owby, ancestor of the CATLEYS, of Brompton, co. York, Baronets, and the CATLEYS, of Wydale House, in the same co.

The eldest son,

SIR OSBERT DE CAILLI, m. Emma,* eldest dau. and co-heiress of Robert, Lord Tateshall, of Bokenham, and had by her Buckenham Castle and its large estates. This castle had been built by William, 1st Earl of Arundel, and was held by the service of being chief butler, or pin.erna, which William Albin had been at that time (HENRY I.). It came into the Tateshall family by Mabel, eldest dau. and co-heiress of William, 3rd Earl of Arundel, which Mabel m. Robert de Tateshall, grandfather of Emma. William, 1st Earl of Arundel, m. Queen ADELICIA, the widow of HENRY I., dau. of Godfrey, Count of Brabant and Lorraine, who was lineal descendant and repre-

representative of CHARLEMAGNE. Sir Osbert, temp. EDWARD I., claimed assize of bread and beer, view of frankpledge, &c., in the towns of Bradenham, Oxburgh, Cranwich, and Hilburgh, as having been possessed by his father from the time of the Conquest. Sir Osbert had a dau. Margerie, m. to Roger de Clifton, and two sons,

ADAM (Sir). In the list of knights-bannerets, in the early part of EDWARD II.'s reign, appears "Sire Adam de Cayll. Chekere de or e de goules a une bende ermine." In the 2nd year of EDWARD III. he was ransomed from captivity in Scotland. Sir Adam appears to have been by a former wife, and not by Emma de Tatchall, as his son, Edmund de Cailly, who inherited Denver and other manors anciently belonging to the family, did not succeed to Buckenham.

THOMAS (Sir), of Buckenham Castle.

The 2nd son,

SIR THOMAS DE CAILLI, of Buckenham Castle, lord of the Barony of Buckenham, to which he succeeded through his mother, Emma, was, in 1308, summoned to perform military service against the Scots' muster at Carlisle, 22 August. In 1309 he was summoned to parliament as Baron de Cailly, of Buckenham, to attend at Westminster, 27 April; again, in the same year, at Stamford; again (8 February, 1310), he was summoned at York; and at London in 1311. Thomas, Lord Cayley, d. s. p., and all his large estates went to his sister Margerie, who m. Roger de Clifton, esquire to her brother. Her son, Sir Adam de Clifton, was afterwards summoned to parliament as Baron Clifton, of Buckenham (see that title). There is an inquisition, 10th EDWARD II., apparently on the death of Thomas de Cailli, in which there is notice of his large possessions in Norfolk, and also of his having lands at Hunmanby and Fynehey, in Yorkshire. This is remarkable, as showing a very early connexion with Yorkshire.

CALVERT—BARON BALTIMORE, OF BALTIMORE.

By Letters Patent, dated 16 February, 1624.

Lineage.

LEONARD CALVERT, Esq., of Danbywiske, co. York, son of John Calvert, m. Alicia, dau. of John Crossland, Esq., of Crossland, in the same co., and left a son,

GEORGE CALVERT, Esq., b. 1578, who having served as secretary to Sir Robert Cecil, when secretary of state, and afterwards as clerk to the privy council, received the honour of knighthood in 1617, and was appointed, in the beginning of the ensuing year, secretary of state to the king, who employed him in the most important affairs, and settled, in 1620, a pension of £1,000 a-year upon him beyond his salary. Sir George changing his religion, however, and turning Roman catholic in 1624, voluntarily resigned his post. The king continued him, nevertheless, in the privy council, and having made him large grants of lands in Ireland, elevated him to the peerage of that kingdom 16 February, 1624, as BARON BALTIMORE, of Baltimore, co. Longford, Sir George being at the time representative in parliament for the university of Oxford. Whilst secretary of state his lordship obtained a grant of the province of Avalon, in Newfoundland, with the most extensive privileges, and expended £25,000 in the settlement thereof. This place he visited thrice in the reign of King JAMES I., but after contending with great spirit against the French encroachments, he was obliged to abandon it altogether; whereupon he obtained from King CHARLES I. a patent of Maryland to him and his heirs for ever, with the same title and royalties as in Avalon, to hold in common socage as of the manor of Windsor, paying yearly, as an acknowledgment to the crown, two Indian arrows at Windsor Castle, upon Easter Tuesday, and the fifth part of the gold and silver ore. His lordship did not live, however, to see the grant pass the great seal, and his son Cecil, the succeeding Lord Baltimore, had it made out in his own name, bearing date 20 June, 1632. The province of Maryland was so named by the king in the honour of his queen, HENRIETTA MARIA. His lordship m. Anne, dau. of George Mynne, Esq., of Hertingfordbury, co. Hertford, by whom he had a numerous family, of which

CECIL, s. to the title.

Leonard, was constituted by his brother, in 1633, the 1st governor of Maryland, jointly with Jeremy Hawley and Thomas Cornwallis, Esqrs.

Anne, m. William Peaseley, Esq.

Grace, m. Sir Robert Talbot, of Carton, co. Kildare.

The baron d. 15 April, 1632, and was s. by his eldest son,

CECIL, 2nd baron; who m. Anne, 3rd dau. of Thomas, Lord Arundel, of Wardour, and was s. by his son,

JOHN, 3rd baron. This nobleman was present in King JAMES's Irish parliament, in 1689, and dying soon afterwards, was s. by his son,

CHARLES, 4th baron, who was outlawed for high treason in Ireland, although he had never been in that kingdom, but King WILLIAM, upon his lordship's representation, caused the outlawry to be reversed, 25 January, 1691. He inherited the estates of Woodcote Park and Horton, under the will of Elizabeth Evelyn, a dau. of the house of Mynn, a relative of his great-grandmother. His lordship d. 21 February, 1714, and was s. by his son,

BENEDICT-LEONARD, 5th baron, who had conformed to the established church in 1713, and was afterwards returned to the British parliament for Harwich. His lordship m. 2 June, 1698, Lady Charlotte Lee, eldest dau. of Edward Henry, 1st Earl of Lichfield, by Lady Charlotte Fiteroy, natural dau. of King CHARLES II., and had issue,

CHARLES, his successor.

Benedict-Leonard, M.P. for Harwich, and governor of Maryland. Died in his passage home, 1 June, 1732.

Edward-Henry, commissary-general and president of the council of Maryland. His widow m. 15 October, 1741, James Fitzgerald, Esq.

Cecil, b. 1702.

Charlotte, m. to Thomas Breerwood, Esq., and d. December, 1744.

Jane, m. — Hyde, of Bucks, and d. July, 1778.

His lordship d. 16 April, 1715, and was s. by his eldest son,

CHARLES, b. 29 September 1699, 6th baron, who filled several high official employments between the years 1731 and 1745, and represented for some time the co. of Surrey in parliament. His lordship m. 20 July, 1730, Mary, youngest dau. of Sir Theodore Janssen, Bart., of Wimbledon, co. Surrey, and had issue,

FREDERICK, his heir.

CAROLINE, m. Sir Robert Eden, Bart., governor of Maryland (grandfather by her of the present Sir William Eden, Bart., of Auckland and Truir).

LOUISA, m. to John Browning, Esq., of Lincolnshire.

His lordship d. 24 April, 1751, and was s. by his only surviving son,

FREDERICK, 7th baron, b. 6 February, 1731-2, who m. in 1753, Lady Diana Egerton, dau. of Scrope, Duke of Bridgewater; but d. s. p. at Naples, 4 September, 1771, when the title became EXTINCT. (His lordship had sold his estates before going abroad to Mr. John Trotter, of Soho, London.)

CAMPBELL—EARL OF ATHOLL.

Upon the forfeiture of David de Strathbogie, 11th Earl of Atholl, his estates were granted to Sir Niel Campbell, and Mary his wife, sister to the king, and John, their son. This SIR JOHN CAMPBELL, of Moulin, 2nd son of Sir Niel Campbell, of Sochon, was created EARL OF ATHOLL, as appears from the charter of King DAVID II. to Robert, Lord Erskine, of the customs of Dundee, and third part of Pettarache, in Forfarshire, which sometime pertained to John Campbell, Earl of Atholl, and a charter granted by John Campbell, Earl of Atholl, to Roger de Mortimer, of the lands of Bellandre. He was killed in the battle of Halidon Hill, 19 July, 1333, without issue, whereby the title reverted to the crown.

CAMPBELL—EARL OF IRVINE.

By Letters Patent, dated 28 March, 1642.

JAMES CAMPBELL, only son of Archibald, 7th Earl of Argyll, by his 2nd wife, Anne, dau. of Sir William Cornwallis, was, when very young, created a peer by royal charter, dated 12 February, 1628, under the title of Baron of Kintyre, to himself and his heirs male and assigns. He had in some years afterwards (12 December, 1636) a charter of the Barony of Lundie, in Forfarshire; and entering the military service of Louis XIII. of France, in that monarch's wars with the Spaniards, obtained the command of a regiment, and distinguished himself so valiantly, that on his return to his native country he was advanced by King CHARLES I. to the dignity of EARL OF IRVINE and Lord of Lundie, by patent, dated at York, 28 March, 1642, in remainder to the heirs male of his body. The district of Kintyre was settled upon him by his father; he sold it to his brother, the Marquess of Argyll; and d. s. p. in France before the Restoration, when the titles of Lord of Lundie and EARL OF IRVINE became EXTINCT.

CAMVILLE—BARONS CAMVILLE, OF CLIFTON.

By Writ of Summons, dated 23 June, 1295.

Lineage.

In the 5th of King STEPHEN,

GERALD DE CAMVILLE, of Lilburne Castle, co. Northampton, granted two parts of the tithes of Charleton-Camville, in Somersetshire, to the monks of Bermondsey, in Surrey. To this Gerald s. his son,

RICHARD DE CAMVILLE, who was founder, in the time of King STEPHEN, of Combe Abbey, co. Warwick, and was one of the witnesses, in the 12th of the same reign, to the convention between that monarch and Henry, Duke of Normandy, regarding the succession of the latter to the crown of England. This feudal lord appears to be a person of great power during the whole of King HENRY's reign, and after the accession of RICHARD I. we find him one of the admirals in the expedition made by that monarch into the Holy Land. He was subsequently governor of Cyprus; whence he went without the king's permission to the siege of Acre and there died. His lordship left four sons and a dau., viz.,

I. GERALD, his heir, who purchased from King RICHARD the custody of Lincoln Castle and the province adjacent. This Gerald was a very powerful feudal lord in the reign of JOHN, to which monarch he stanchly adhered. He m. Nichola, eldest dau. and co-heiress of Richard de Haya, and left an only son and heir,

RICHARD, who m. Eustachia, dau. and heiress of Gilbert Basset, and widow of Thomas de Vernon, and left an only dau. and heiress, IDONEA, who m. William, son of William de Longespee, Earl of Salisbury.

II. Walter, left issue,

1 Roger, who had an only dau.,

Matilda, m. to Nigel de Mowbray, and d. s. p.

1 Patronilla, m. to Richard Curzon.

2 Matilda, m. to Thomas de Astley.

3 Alicia, m. to Robert de Easby.

III. Richard, left issue,

1 Richard, d. s. p.

1 Isabella, heiress of her brother, m. in the 4th of RICHARD I., Richard Harcourt, of Bosworth, co. Leicester.

IV. WILLIAM, with whom we shall proceed.

1. Matilda, m. to William de Roa.

WILLIAM DE CAMVILLE, the youngest son, m. Albreda, dau. and heiress of Geoffrey Marmion, and had issue,

I. GEOFFREY, his successor.

II. William, of Sekerton, co. Warwick, father of Thomas, whose grandson, Sir Gerard de Camville, of Arrow, co. Warwick, left a dau. and heiress, Elizabeth, m. to Robert Burdett, ancestor of the BURDETTS of Arrow, co. Warwick, and Foremark, co. Derby.

III. Thomas.

William de Camville was s. by his eldest son,

GEOFFREY DE CAMVILLE, who, in the 22nd EDWARD I. had summons to attend the king at Portsmouth, with horse and arms, to embark in the expedition then proceeding to Gascony; and was subsequently summoned to parliament as BARON CAMVILLE, of Clifton, co. Stafford, from 23 June, 1295, to 22 February, 1307. His lordship m. Maud, dau. and heir of Sir Guy de Bryan, by Eve, dau. and heir of Henry de Traci, and had an only child,

WILLIAM, his successor.

He d. in 1309, seized of the lordships of Freymington, Bovey-Traci, Nymet-Traci, Barnstaple, the fourth part of the manor of Toriton, and of the hamlet of Nymet St. George, as also of the lordship of Clifton Camville, co. Stafford, which he held by the service of three knights' fees; and which lordship and manors were holden by him (as tenant by the courtesy of England) in right of Maud his wife. His lordship was s. by his son,

WILLIAM DE CAMVILLE, 2nd baron, summoned to parliament 4 March, 1309, and 16 June, 1311, but never afterwards. Of the issue of this nobleman there are different statements. He d. however, without a son, when the BARONY OF CAMVILLE fell into ABEYANCE, as it probably so continues. One authority, Burton, in his "Leicestershire," gives his lordship two daus., his co-heiresses, viz.,

Maud, m. to Sir Richard Stafford, of Pipe, co. Stafford (2nd son of Baron Stafford), whose son, Richard, was summoned to parliament as Lord Stafford, of Clifton.

Margery, m. to Sir Richard Vernon, of Haddon, co. Derby.

Another, Erdswic, the historian of Staffordshire, says, he had but one dau.,

MAUD, who m. 1st, Richard Vernon, and 2ndly, Sir Richard Stafford.

While a third authority, Dr. Vernon, rector of Bloomsbury, in an interleaved copy of Erdswic, states that William de Camville, of Clifton-Camville, had issue five daus. and heirs, viz.,

Maud, m. to Sir William Vernon, Knt., of Haddon, co. Derby.

Isabella, m. 1st, to Sir Richard Stafford, and 2ndly, to Gilbert de Bermingham.

Eleanor.

Nichola, m. to John St. Clere.

Catherine, m. to Robert Griesly.

CANTILUPE—BARONS CANTILUPE.

By Writ of Summons, dated 29 December, 1299.

Lineage.

WILLIAM DE CANTILUPE, the first of this family upon record, served the office of sheriff for the cos. of Warwick and Leicester in the 3rd, 4th, and 5th years of King JOHN. In the next year he was made governor of the castles of Hereford and Wilton, and he was subsequently sheriff of Herefordshire. In the 11th of the same reign, being then the king's steward, he gave 40 marks for the wardship of Egidia, Lady of Kilpeck, widow of William Fitz-Warine, and in three years afterwards, when the king was excommunicated by Pope INNOCENT III., he remained so faithful as to become one of the monarch's chief counsellors. We find him, however, arrayed afterwards under the baronial banner, and joining in the invitation to Louis of France. But within the same year he returned to the king, when he obtained grants of all the forfeited estates of Richard de Engaine and Vitalis de Engaine, two leading barons in the insurrection; and was appointed governor of Kenilworth Castle, co. Warwick. In the reign of HENRY III. he continued attached to the cause of royalty, and acquired immense possessions in the shape of grants from the crown of forfeited lands. He d. in 1238, leaving five sons, viz.,

I. WILLIAM, his heir, also steward to the king, and a person of great power, m. Milicent, dau. of Hugh de Gournai, and widow of Almeric, Earl of Eureux, and d. 1250, having had issue,

1 WILLIAM, who m. Eva, dau. and co-heiress of William Broase, Lord of Brecknock and Abergavenny, and in her right became possessed of that honour. He d. in the flower of his youth, leaving issue,

George, who d. s. p.

Milicent, m. 1st, to John de Montalt, and 2ndly, to Eudo le Zouche, from which latter union descended the LORDS ZOUCHE, of Harringworth.

Joan, m. to Henry de Hastings, and had a son, John Hastings, Lord of Abergavenny, ancestor of the Hastings, Earls of Pembroke.

2 Thomas, bishop of Hereford, and in the 34th EDWARD I. canonized.

1 Julian, m. to Robert de Tregoz.

II. Walter, a priest, employed by King HENRY as his agent to the court of Rome, afterwards bishop of Worcester.

III. John, Lord of Snitterfield, co. Warwick, m. Margaret, dau. and heiress of William Cummin, of that place, and was s. by his son,

JOHN, who d. in the 17th EDWARD II. He m. Margaret, dau. of John, Lord Mohun, of Dunster, and had issue,

John, d. v. p., s. p.

ELEANOR CANTILUPE, who m. Sir Thomas West, Lord West, from which union lineally descend the Earls of DELAWARE and VISCOUNTS CANTILUPE.

IV. NICHOLAS, of whom presently.

V. Thomas, elected Lord Chancellor of England by the barons in the 49th HENRY III.

NICHOLAS DE CANTILUPE, of Ilkeston, co. Derby, the 4th son, m. Eustachia, sister, and eventual heiress, of Hugh FitzRalph, Lord of Greaseley, co. Nottingham, and was s. by his son,

WILLIAM DE CANTILUPE, who having distinguished himself in the French and Scottish wars of King EDWARD I., was summoned to parliament as BARON CANTILUPE, from 29 December, 1299, to 5 August, 1308. His lordship d. in the following year, and was s. by his elder son,

WILLIAM DE CANTILUPE, 2nd baron, but never summoned to parliament. This nobleman dying s. p. was s. by his brother,

SIR NICHOLAS DE CANTILUPE, 3rd baron. This nobleman served in the Flemish and Scottish wars of EDWARD III. and had summons to parliament from 23 April, 1337, to 13 March, 1354. His lordship d. in 1355, seised of the manor of Eselburgh, co. Buckingham; Ilkeston, co. Derby; Greaseley, co. Nottingham; and Livingston and others, co. Lincoln. He m. 1st, Typhania, and 2ndly, Joane, widow of William de Kyme: his grandson, NICHOLAS (son of his son William) was his heir; this last-named Nicholas d. s. p. 45th EDWARD III., and his brother Sir William d. s. p., circa 14th RICHARD II.

Arms.—Gu., three leopards' heads inverted, jessant three fleurs-de-lis, or.

CAPEL—BARON CAPEL, OF TEWKSBURY, CO. GLOUCESTER.

By Letters Patent, dated 11 April, 1692.

Lineage.

SIR HENRY CAPEL, K.B., 2nd son of Arthur, 1st Baron Capel, of Hadham, co. Hertford, and brother of Arthur, 1st Earl of Essex, having distinguished himself as a leading and eloquent member of the House of Commons, was elevated to the peerage 11 April, 1692, as BARON CAPEL, of Tewksbury. His lordship m. Dorothy, dau. of Richard Bennet, Esq., of Kew, in Surrey, and niece of Sir Richard Bennet, Bart., of Babraham, in Cambridgeshire, but had no issue. Lord Capel was one of the lords justices of Ireland, upon the recall of Lord Sydney, in 1693, and d. Lord-Lieutenant of that kingdom, at the castle of Dublin, 30 May, 1696. His lordship was buried at Hadham, where an inscription states that he was of the privy council to King CHARLES II., one of the lords of the treasury, and of the privy council to King WILLIAM. At his lordship's decease the BARONY OF CAPEL, of Tewksbury, became EXTINCT.

Arms.—Gu., a lion rampant, between three cross crosslets, fitchée, or, with due difference.

CAREW—BARON CAREW, OF CLOPTON, CO. WARWICK, EARL OF TOTNESS.

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 4 May, 1605.

Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 5 February, 1625.

Lineage.

Of this family, one of great antiquity in the western parts of England, and which derived its surname originally from Carew Castle, co. Pembroke, was

SIR NICHOLAS CAREW, Knt., m. Jane, dau. of Sir Hugh Courtenay, and had a son,

SIR THOMAS CAREW, who, by Joan his wife, dau. of John Carminow, was father of

SIR EDMUND CAREW, Knt., who, by Catherine his wife, dau. of Sir William Huddersfield, had a son,

GEORGE CAREW, who, being a churchman, was, first archdeacon of Totness, in Devon, next dean of Bristol and chief chanter in the cathedral of Salisbury, afterwards dean of the king's chapel and dean of Christ's Church, Oxford, lastly dean of Exeter and Windsor. This very reverend personage m. Anne, dau. of Sir Nicholas Harvey, Knt., and had with other issue,

GEORGE CAREW, who was in the expedition to Cadiz, in the 38th of ELIZABETH, and afterwards served with great reputation in Ireland. He was made president of Munster, when uniting his forces with those of the Earl of Thomond, he reduced several castles and other strong places, obtained many triumphs over the rebels, and brought the Earl of Desmond to trial. He was likewise a privy councillor in Ireland and master of the ordnance. Upon the accession of King JAMES I. he was constituted governor of the Isle of Guernsey, and having m. Joyce, only dau. and heiress of William Clopton, Esq., of Clopton, co. Warwick, he was elevated to the peerage 4 May, 1605, as BARON CAREW, of Clopton. After which he was made master of the ordnance for life, and sworn of the privy council; and, in the 1st year of King CHARLES I., created EARL OF TOTNESS. "Besides," says Dugdale, "these, his noble employments, 'tis not a little observable, that being a great lover of antiquities, he wrote an historical account of all those memorable passages which happened in Ireland during the term of those three years he continued there, intitled 'Hibernia Pacata,' printed at London in 1633, and that he made an ample collection of many chronological and choice observations, as also of divers exact maps, relating to sundry parts of that realm, some whereof are now in the public library at Oxford, but most of them in the hands of Sir Robert Shirley, Bart., of Stanton Harold, co. Leicester, bought of his executors." His lordship d. 27 March, 1629, at the Savoy in the Strand, "in the suburbs of London," leaving an only dau. and heiress, LADY ANNE CAREW, who m. 1st, — Wilford, Esq., of Kent, and 2ndly, Sir Allen Apsley, lieutenant of the Tower of London.

The earl dying thus, without legitimate male issue, all his honours became EXTINCT.

Arms.—Or, three lions passant, &c.

CAREY—BARONS HUNSDON, VISCOUNT ROCHFORD, EARLS OF DOVER.

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 13 January, 1559.

Viscounty, by Letters Patent, dated 6 June, 1621.

Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 8 May, 1628.

Lineage.

This family had their residence, anciently, at Cockington, co. Devon.

ADAM DE KARRY, Lord of Castle Karry, in Somersetshire, m. Anne, dau. of William Trevet, and was father of

JOHN KARRY, who, by Elizabeth, his wife, dau. of Sir Richard Stapleton, had a son and heir,

WILLIAM KARRY, who held the manor of West Polworth, co.

Devon, at his decease, 31st EDWARD I. He m. Alice, dau. of Sir William Beaumont, Knt., and was father of

SIR WILLIAM CAREY, who m. the dau. of Sir John Archdeacon, and had two sons, JOHN (Sir), his heir, and WILLIAM (Sir), M.P. for Devonshire, 36th and 42nd EDWARD III., living 11th RICHARD II., d. s. p. The elder son,

SIR JOHN CAREY, Knt., one of the barons of the exchequer, temp. RICHARD II., m. 1st, Agnes, dau. of Lord Stafford, and 2ndly, Margaret, dau. of William Holwell, of Holwell, in Devon, and widow of Sir Guy de Brian; by the latter he had issue, John, bishop of Exeter, anno. 1419, and an elder son, his heir,

SIR ROBERT CAREY, Knt., a person so valorous and so skilful in arms that few presumed to enter the lists with him. Amongst his other exploits is recorded his triumph over an Arragonian knight in Smithfield; upon which occasion he was knighted, and allowed to adopt the arms of his vanquished rival—namely, "Three roses on a bend." Sir Robert, m. twice; by Margaret his 1st wife, dau. of Sir Philip Courtenay, of Powderham, co. Devon, he left a son and heir,

PHILIP CAREY, Esq., of Cockington, who m. Christian, dau. and heir of William Orchard, Esq., and by her (who m. 2ndly, Walter Portman, Esq.) was father of

SIR WILLIAM CAREY, Knt., an eminent Lancastrian, who, upon the issue of the battle of Tewkesbury, 10th EDWARD IV., fled to a church for sanctuary, but was brought forth, under a promise of pardon, and beheaded. Sir William m. 1st, Anne, dau. of Sir William Paulet, Knt., and from that marriage descended the Carys, who continued at Cockington, and were ancestors of the Carys of Torr Abbey and Pollaton, co. Devon. He m. 2ndly, Alice, dau. of Sir Baldwin Fulford, Knt., and by her had a son,

THOMAS CAREY, Esq., of Chilton Foliot, who m. Margaret, 2nd dau. and co-heir of Sir Robert Spencer, by Eleanor his wife, dau. of Edmund Beaufort, Duke of Somerset, by whom he had two sons, viz.,

JOHN (Sir), who m. Joice, sister of Sir Anthony Denny, Knt., and left issue,

EDWARD (Sir), of Berkhamsted, who m. Catherine, dau. of Sir Henry Knevet, and widow of Henry, Lord Paget, by whom he had,

HENRY, created VISCOUNT FAULKLAND, in the peerage of Scotland, a dignity still extant.

WILLIAM, of whose line we treat.

The younger son,

WILLIAM CAREY, an esquire of the body to King HENRY VIII., and a favourite of that monarch, m. Lady Mary Boleyn, dau. of Thomas, EARL OF WILTSHIRE, and sister of the unfortunate Queen ANNE BOLEYN, and by her, who m. 2ndly, Sir William Stafford, Knt., had issue,

HENRY, his heir

Catherine, m. to Sir Francis Knollys, K.G.

He d. in 1528, being then of the bedchamber to the king, and was s. by his son,

HENRY CAREY, who, soon after the accession of his first cousin, Queen ELIZABETH, to the throne, received the honour of knighthood, and upon 13 January following (anno 1559) was elevated to the peerage, by letters patent, as BARON HUNSDON, with a grant of the mansion of Hunsdon, co. Hertford, and a pension of £4,000 a-year. In the 5th of ELIZABETH his lordship was sent with the order of the Garter to the King of France, then at Lyons; and in five years afterwards, being governor of Berwick, he drove the insurrectionary Earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland into Scotland; the former of whom he subsequently got into his hands, and had beheaded at York. In the 29th ELIZABETH, Lord Hunsdon was appointed general warden of the marches towards Scotland and lord chamberlain of the household. In 1588, the memorable year of the menaced Spanish invasion, his lordship had the protection of the queen's person, in the camp at Tilbury, and the command of the army for that purpose. He was likewise captain of the pensioners and a knight of the Garter. He m. Anne, dau. of Sir Thomas Morgan, Knt., of Arkestone, co. Hereford, by Anne his wife, dau. of Jean, Sire de Merode, and had issue,

I. GEORGE, his successor.

II. John.

III. Edmund, who was knighted for his valour by the Earl of Leicester, in 1587. Sir Edmund m. 1st, Mary, dau. and heiress of Christopher Crocker, Esq., of Croft, co. Lincoln; 2ndly, Elizabeth, dau. and co-heir of John, Lord Latimer, and widow of Sir John Danvers, Knt.; and 3rdly, Judith, dau. of Lawrence Humphrey, D.D., and had three sons and two daus., and was s. by his eldest son,

ROBERT (Sir), a captain of horse, under Horatio, Lord Vere of Tilbury, in the Netherlands, m. Alletta, dau. of Mynheer

Hogenhove, secretary to the States General, by whom he had three sons, HORATIO, Ernestus, and Ferdinand, and was s. by the eldest,

HORATIO, captain of horse in the service of King CHARLES I., m. Petronilla, dau. of Robert Conyers, Esq., and was father of

ROBERT, of whom hereafter, as 6th LORD HUNSDON.

IV. ROBERT, created EARL OF MONMOUTH (See that dignity).

I. Catherine, m. to Charles Howard, EARL OF NOTTINGHAM.

II. Philadelphia, m. to Thomas, Lord Scrope.

III. Margaret, m. to Sir Edward Hoby, Knt.

The illness which occasioned his death is said to have arisen from disappointed ambition, in never having been able to attain the dignity of EARL OF WILTSHIRE. Fuller, in his "Worthies of England," relates, that, "when he lay on his death-bed, the queen gave him a gracious visit, causing a patent for the said earldom to be drawn, his robes to be made, and both to be laid on his bed; but this lord (who could not dissemble, neither well nor sick,) replied, 'Madam, seeing you counted me not worthy of this honour while I was living, I count myself unworthy of it now I am dying!'" His lordship d. at Somerset House, 23 July, 1596, æt. seventy-two, and was s. by his eldest son,

GEORGE CAREY, 2nd Baron Hunsdon, who had been educated for the public service from his earliest youth, and obtained in the lifetime of his father the honour of knighthood, for his distinguished conduct in the expedition made into Scotland, in the 13th of ELIZABETH, under the Earl of Sussex. Sir George succeeded his father as captain of the band of pensioners, and was soon afterwards made lord chamberlain and a knight of the Garter. His lordship m. Elizabeth, dau. of Sir John Spencer, of Althorp, Knt., by whom (who m. 2ndly, Sir Thomas Chamberlain, and 3rdly, Ralph, Lord Eure) he had an only dau. and heiress, Elizabeth, who m. Sir Thomas Berkeley, Knt., son and heir of Henry, Lord Berkeley, and d. 23 April, 1635.

He d. 9 September, 1603, and leaving no male issue, the peerage devolved upon his brother,

SIR JOHN CAREY, Knt., warden of the east marches towards Scotland, as 3rd Baron Hunsdon. His lordship m. Mary, dau. of Leonard Hyde, Esq., of Throgkyn, Herts, and widow of Richard Peyton, and had issue,

HENRY, his successor.

Charles.

Anne, m. to Sir Francis Lovell, Knt., of East Harling, Norfolk.

Blanch, m. to Sir Thomas Wodehouse, Knt., of Kimberley, Norfolk.

He d. in April, 1617, and was s. by his eldest son,

HENRY CAREY, 4th Baron Hunsdon, who was advanced, 6 June, 1621, to the Viscounty of Rockfort, and created 8 May, 1627, EARL OF DOVER. His lordship m. 1st, Judith, dau. of Sir Thomas Pelham, Bart., of Loughton, Sussex, by whom he had issue,

JOHN, Viscount Rockfort, who was made a knight of the Bath at the coronation of King CHARLES I.

Henry, d. January, 1620-1.

George, d. s. p.

Mary, m. to Sir Thomas Wharton, K.B., brother of Lord Wharton.

Judith, d. unm.

Philadelphia, d. unm.

His lordship, who m. 2ndly, Mary, dau. of Richard Morris, d. in 1668, and was s. by his eldest son,

JOHN CAREY, 2nd EARL OF DOVER and 5th Baron Hunsdon. This nobleman m. 1st, Lady Dorothy St. John, dau. of Oliver, EARL OF BOLINGBROKE, by whom he had no issue. His lordship m. 2ndly, Abigail, dau. of Alderman Sir William Cokayne, Knt., of London, by whom he had an only dau.,

Mary, m. to William Heveningham, Esq., of Heveningham, Sussex, by whom she had,

Sir William Heveningham, Knt.

Abigail, m. to John, son and heir of Sir John Newton, Bart.

He d. in 1677, and leaving thus no male issue, the Viscounty of Rockfort and EARLDOM OF DOVER EXPIRED, while the BARONY OF HUNSDON reverted to his lordship's kinsman,

SIR ROBERT CAREY, Knt. (revert to the descendants of the Hon. Sir Edmund Carey, 3rd son of the 1st lord), as 6th Baron Hunsdon. His lordship m. Margaret, dau. of Sir Gervase Clifton, Bart., and widow of Sir John South, Knt., but dying s. p. in 1692, the title devolved upon (the son of his uncle Ernestus,) his cousin, CAREY—BARONS CAREY, OF LEPPINGTON, CO. YORK, EARLS OF MONMOUTH.

By Letters Patent, dated 5 February, 1626.

Lineage.

The Honourable

ROBERT CAREY, 4th son of Henry, 1st Lord Hunsdon, was elevated to the peerage by King JAMES I., by letters patent, dated 5 February, 1626, as Baron Carey, of Leppington, co. York, and EARL OF MONMOUTH. This eminent person, whose Memoirs, written by himself, were published by JOHN, EARL OF CORK AND ORBERRY, in 1759, was b. about 1560. At the age of seventeen he accompanied Sir Thomas Leighton in his embassy to the States General and to Don John of Austria; and he soon afterwards went with Secretary Walsingham into Scotland, where he appears to have insinuated himself into the good graces of JAMES, the future King of England. He was on board the fleet, in 1588, at the destruction of the Armada, and he states, "that he won a wager of £2,000 the next year by going on foot in twelve days to Berwick." "After this," goes on the memoir, "I married a gentlewoman, Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Hugh Trevanion, more for her worth than her wealth, for her estate was but £500 a-year jointure. She had between £500 and £600 in her purse. Neither did she marry me for any great wealth; for I had in all the world but £100 a-year out of the exchequer, as a pension, and that was but during pleasure; and I was near £1,000 in debt. Besides the queen was mightily displeased with me for marrying, and most of my best friends, only my father, was no ways offended at it, which gave me great content." The tide of fortune, which he took in the spring, was the opportunity afforded him by the familiar intercourse with which his kinswoman, Queen ELIZABETH, condescended to treat him, of being the first to announce her majesty's decease to her successor. Visiting her (he says) in her last illness, and praying that her health might amend, she took him by the hand, and wringing it hard, replied, "No, Robin, I am not well," and fetching at the same time no fewer than forty or fifty sighs, which he declares, except for the death of Mary of Scotland, he never in her whole life knew her to do before. By those sighs the wily politician judged her majesty was near her dissolution, and with great candour he proceeds, "I could not but think in what a wretched state I should be left, most of my livelihood depending on her life. And hereupon I bethought myself with what grace and favour I was ever received by the King of Scots whensoever I was sent to him." Upon the decease of the queen, Carey immediately proceeded to Scotland, and was the first person to announce to King JAMES his accession to the crown of England, producing and presenting to his majesty in proof of his veracity, a certain blue ring.* The king received him, of course, most graciously, and observed, "I know you have lost a near kinswoman, and a mistress, but take here my hand, I will be a good master to you, and will requite this service with honour and reward." Notwithstanding this royal pledge, however, full nineteen years elapsed before he attained the peerage, and in his Memoirs he observes, "I only relied on God and the king. The one never left me, the other, shortly after his coming to London, deceived my expectations, and adhered to those who sought my ruin. By the said lady, Elizabeth his wife, dau. of Sir Hugh Trevanion, Knt., of Correhelgh, his lordship had issue,

* Blue Ring.—The account of the blue ring which Lady Elizabeth Spelman (dau. of Martha, Countess of Middleton, who was dau. of the 2nd earl of Monmouth, and grand-dau. of the nobleman to whom the anecdote refers) gave to Lord Cork was this:—King JAMES kept a constant correspondence with several persons of the English court for many years prior to Queen ELIZABETH's decease; among others, with Lady Scroope (sister of this Robert Carey) to whom his majesty sent, by Sir James Fullerton, a sapphire ring, with positive orders to return it to him by a special messenger, as soon as the queen actually expired. Lady Scroope had no opportunity of delivering it to her brother Robert whilst he was in the palace of Richmond: but waiting at the window till she saw him at the outside of the gate, she threw it out to him, and he well knew to what purpose he received it.—Banks.

CARLETON—BARON AND VISCOUNT CARLETON.

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 1 November, 1789.

Viscounty, by Letters Patent, dated 7 November, 1797.

Lineage.

At Dugdale's visitation of Cumberland, in 1665, Sir William Carleton, of Carleton Hall, near Penrith, certified his descent, eighteen generations in all, from Baldwyn de Carleton, who flourished shortly after the Conquest, and "from that family (as Sanford says in his Cumberland MSS., deposited at the Chapter House, Carlisle) all the famous Carletons of England are descended." The representative of the above line is the present Lord Dorchester, whose ancestor Lancelot, of Brampton Foot, settled at Rosfad, in Ireland, temp. CHARLES I. From the same family also sprang Guy, bishop of Bristol, 1671, and of Chichester, 1678, whose line is represented by the Carletons of Guisones Farley, Sussex. A branch appears to have settled in Lincolnshire, where we find Adam de Carleton living temp. EDWARD I., and also in Nottinghamshire, where Thomas de Carleton held Whitehall, 10th EDWARD II., from John de Londham. Adam de Carleton was the ancestor of the celebrated statesman and ambassador, Baron Carleton, of Imbercourt, Viscount Dorchester (1628). Some other of his descendants settled in Surrey and Middlesex, and from them derived

FRANCIS CARLETON, Esq., who settled in Ireland, temp.

CHARLES I., and together with Thomas Hunt, Esq., had a grant of lands in Beladare, Skahanagh, and Moyclare, barony Garrycastle, and Lehenzie and Kilmucklin, barony Kilcourse, all in Kings Co., and another grant in Tewistowne, barony Kells, co. Kilkenny. He was s. by his son,

RICHARD CARLETON, of Knocknaming, alias Darlinghill, near Clonmel, Tipperary. He m. circa 1665, Elinor, youngest dau. of Capt. Francis Drew, of Kilwinny, co. Waterford, and dying 1682, was s. by his son,

COL. JOHN CARLETON, of Darlinghill, high-sheriff for Tipperary, 1717. He purchased Butler's land (now Clare) in 1705, from the Hollow-Sword Blade Company, and also obtained the forfeited estate, Bardshill, in Tipperary. He m. circa 1695, Jane, 5th dau. of Robert Stratford, Esq., of Baltinglass, and d. 1730, leaving issue,

I. ROBERT, living 1730.

II. Richard, b. 1698; d. 1742. He m. Isabella, dau. of Robert Connell, Esq., registrar of the diocese of Ossory (she m. 2ndly, John Jephson, Esq.), and by her he had issue,

1 JOHN, who sold Darlinghill to the Pennefathers, and d. 1769.

2 Hugh.

1 Jane, d. 1750.

III. JOHN.

IV. FRANCIS.

FRANCIS CARLETON (4th son of Col. Carleton) was b. 1713. He m. 1734, Rebecca, dau. of Hugh Lawton, Esq., of Lake Marsh, co. Cork, and by her (who d. February, 1797) he left at his decease, 1791,

I. Robert, d. young.

II. Francis, of Bostrevor, m. Dorcas, dau. of Roger Hall, Esq., of Narrow Water.

III. Hugh, of whom presently.

IV. John, b. 1742; m. 1776, Elizabeth, dau. and heir of Thomas Hodgson, Esq., of Dublin, brother of Lorenzo Hodgson, of Coolkenno, co. Wicklow, who m. Elizabeth Hutchinson, of Knocklofty, great-grandmother to the 1st Earl of Donoughmore; John Carleton d. 1781, and left issue a son and dau., Francis, now of Clare, and Dorothea, who m. Edward Reeves, Esq., of Ballyglassane, co. Cork, and had issue.

I. Mary, d. 1769.

II. Isabella, d. 1771.

III. Rebecca, d. young.

IV. Rebecca, m. Hugh Millerd, Esq., and d. July, 1804, s. p.

V. Anne.

VI. Sarah, d. 1766.

VII. Grace, m. Sampson Jervois, Esq., and d. s. p.

The 3rd son,

HUGH CARLETON, Esq., b. 11 September, 1739, being brought up to the bar, became solicitor-general of Ireland in 1779; in 1787 was appointed Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas in that kingdom; and raised to the peerage in two years after (7 November, 1789) as Baron Carleton, of Anner. In 1797 he was further advanced to be VISCOUNT CARLETON, of Clare, co. Tipperary. His lordship m. 1st, 2 August, 1766, Elizabeth, only dau. of Richard Mercer, Esq., which lady d. s. p. 27 May, 1794; and 2ndly, 15 July, 1795, Mary Buckley, 2nd dau. of Abednego Mathew, Esq., by whom, who d. 13 March, 1810, he had no issue. His lordship d. in 1825, when the title became EXTINCT, and his nephew, FRANCIS CARLETON, Esq., became his representative.

CARLTON—BARON CARLTON, OF IMBERCOURT, CO. SURREY, VISCOUNT DORCHESTER.

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 21 May, 1626.

Viscounty, by Letters Patent, dated 26 July, 1628.

Lineage.

SIR DUDLEY CARLTON, Knt., son of Anthony Carlton, Esq., of Baldwin Brightwell, co. Oxford, b. 10 March, 1573, having been employed, for a series of years, as ambassador to Venice Savoy, and the Low Countries, was elevated to the peerage 21 May, 1626, as BARON CARLTON, of Imbercourt, co. Surrey, and in two years afterwards created VISCOUNT DORCHESTER; in which year he was constituted one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state. His lordship m. 1st, Anne, dau. and co-heiress of George Gerard, Esq., 2nd son of Sir William Gerard, Knt., of Dorney, co. Bucks, by whom he had a son, Henry, who d. young. He m. 2ndly, Anne, dau. of Sir Henry Glen-ham, Knt., and widow of Paul, Viscount Bayning, which lady survived him, and gave birth to a posthumous child, Frances, who d. young. Lord Dorchester, whose negotiations have been published, had the reputation of being an able diplomatist, and a polished statesman. He was master of different languages, and a good ancient and modern historian. He composed some pieces, which are noticed by Walpole, and was esteemed a graceful and eloquent speaker. He d. 15 February, 1631, and his honours, in default of male issue, became EXTINCT. His estates, however, devolved on his nephew,

SIR JOHN CARLETON, of Brightwell, son and heir of George Carleton, Esq., of Brightwell, by Elizabeth his wife, dau. and co-heir of Sir John Brockett, of Brockett Hale, Herts; he m. 1627, Anne, eldest dau. of Sir R. CARLYLE—LORD CARLYLE.

Lineage.

SIR WILLIAM CARLYLE, 1st of Torthorwald, attended Margaret of Scotland into France, in 1436, on her marriage to Louis the Dauphin. He left issue, Sir JOHN, who succeeded him; Adam, the ancestor of the family of Bridekirk; James, rector of Kirkpatrick; and Margaret, who m. Sir William Douglas, of Drumlanrig, 3rd Marquess of Queensberry. The eldest son,

SIR JOHN CARLYLE, Knt., of Torthorwald, was mainly instrumental in suppressing the rebellion of the Earls of Douglas, in 1455. For this service he was rewarded with the half of the lands of Pettinain, upon the Clyde; and in 1470-1, he was raised by JAMES III. to the peerage, and his residence styled the town of Cairiell. Shortly after he appeared as chief justice of Scotland south of the Firth; and in 1477 he went on an embassy to France. By Janet his wife, he had issue,

JOHN, Master of Carlyle, d., leaving a son, WILLIAM, who s. as 2nd Lord Carlyle.

Robert, had a charter of the office of steward of Kirkcudbright, with the custody of the castle of Crief, 28 October, 1487.

Catherine, m. Simon Carruthers, of Menswald.

John, Lord Carlyle, m. 2ndly, Margaret Douglas, widow of Sir Edward Maxwell, of Monreith, and had two sons,

John.

George.

WILLIAM CARLYLE, 2nd Lord Carlyle, knighted 29 January 1487-8, m. Janet Maxwell, dau. of Robert Lord Maxwell, and had two sons,

JAMES, 3rd lord.

MICHAEL, 4th lord.

The eldest son,

JAMES CARLYLE, 3rd Lord Carlyle, having d. s. p. before 27 December, 1529, was s. by his younger brother,

MICHAEL CARLYLE, 4th Lord Carlyle, in 1529. Michael d. in 1579, in comparatively reduced circumstances. He had five sons, William, Michael, Edward, John, and Peter, and a dau., Estote. William, Master of Carlyle, predeceased his father in 1572, leaving an only child, Elizabeth, who although she could not carry off the title, which was a male fee, was styled Dame Elizabeth Carlel. Soon after the death of her grandfather, she m. Sir James Douglas, son of George Douglas, natural brother to James, Earl of Morton, regent of Scotland; and after a litigation of fourteen years with her uncle Michael, she conveyed the family estates to the house of Douglas, through her eldest son, Sir James, who was created Lord Torthorwald, in 1609.

Michael, the 2nd son of Michael, the last Lord Carlyle, after losing all but the small property of Locharthur, which he acquired through his wife Grizel, dau. of Lord John Maxwell, did not assume the title which still remained in him, but his male descendants were careful to preserve and assert their right. The last Michael d. in 1763. Of the other sons of Lord Michael, viz., Edward, of Limekilns, John, of Boytath, and Peter—no males but the issue of Edward survived. On the deaths of Adam Carlyle, last of Limekilns, and his six sons, the male representation of the family devolved upon the branch to which Professor Joseph-Dacre Carlyle, chancellor of Carlyle, belonged. On 6 February, 1798, he was served heir to Michael, last Lord Carlyle; but his only son d. in 1798; he himself followed in 1804; and John Carlyle, Esq., then of Jamaica, afterwards of Shawhill, in Ayrshire, succeeded to the claim, as belonging to a younger branch of the Limekilns family. By his death, s. p., in October, 1824, the claim to dormant peerage passed through a still younger branch, into the person of the then only surviving male representative, Thomas Carlyle, Esq., advocate, Edinburgh.

Arms.—Quarterly: 1st and 4th, arg. (the first Sir William bore the field or), a cross flory, gu., for Carlyle; 2nd and 3rd, or, a cross, gu., for Corsvie; and by way of surcoat, arg., a saltier, az., to show their connexion with the family of Bruce.

CARMICHAEL—EARL OF HYNDFORD.

By Letters Patent, dated 25 June, 1701.

Lineage.

This ancient family derived its name from the lands and barony of Carmichael, co. Lanark.

SIR JOHN CARMICHAEL, of Carmichael, whose ancestors had possessed that barony for many generations, was one of the noble Scottish warriors sent to assist CHARLES VI. of France against the English. He signalized his valour at the battle of Baugé in 1422. He d. in 1436. By his wife Mary Douglas, a dau. of the house of Angus, he had issue,

I. WILLIAM, his successor.

II. JOHN CARMICHAEL, of Meadowflat, captain of the castle of Crawford. This gentleman was twice married. By his 1st wife he had issue, with a dau., Margaret, wife of David, Earl of Crawford, Duke of Montrose, a son, JOHN CARMICHAEL, of Meadowflat, who d. in 1507. His son, JOHN CARMICHAEL, of Meadowflat, captain of Crawford Castle, d. in 1567, and was s. by his grandson, SIR JOHN CARMICHAEL, of Meadowflat, captain of Crawford Castle, who, by his 1st wife, Elizabeth Scott, a dau. of the house of Buccleuch, had issue a dau., GRIZZEL, wife of Walter Carmichael, of Hyndford. By his 2nd wife, Jane Wallace, he had issue a son, JOHN, whose son, SIR JOHN CARMICHAEL, of Meadowflat, captain of Crawford Castle, d. s. p. 1638. The 1st JOHN CARMICHAEL, of Meadowflat, captain of Crawford Castle, m. 2ndly, Isabella Sibbald, widow of George, 4th Earl of Angus, and was mother of "Earl Bell-the-cat," by whom he had a son, JAMES CARMICHAEL, founder of the house of Balmedie, in Fifeshire. His descendant in the 5th degree, SIR DAVID CARMICHAEL, of Balmedie, knighted in 1648. m. 1st, the Honourable Anne, dau. of James, 1st Lord Carmichael, and 2ndly, Cecilia, dau. of Fotheringham, of Powrie, by whom he had a son, DAVID CARMICHAEL, of Balmedie, who d. in 1676. His descendant in the 4th degree was SIR JAMES CARMICHAEL SMYTHE, major-general R.E., governor of British Guiana, created a baronet in 1821. His son, SIR JAMES ROBERT, the 2nd baronet, dropped the name of Smythe, and resumed his paternal name of Carmichael only, and on the extinction of the male line of Earls of Hyndford, appears to be the male head of the great house of Carmichael.

The eldest son of Sir John Carmichael, the hero of Baugé, was

WILLIAM CARMICHAEL, of Carmichael, who was alive in 1437. He had two sons, SIR JOHN, his heir, and George, promoted to the episcopal see of Glasgow in 1482. The elder son,

SIR JOHN CARMICHAEL, of Carmichael, d. 1495. His son,

WILLIAM CARMICHAEL, of Carmichael, d. 1530. He had three sons,

I. BARTHOLOMEW, who d. s. p. in 1510.

II. WILLIAM, his heir.

III. WALTER, of Park and Hyndford, of whom hereafter.

WILLIAM CARMICHAEL, of Carmichael, was alive in 1532. His son,

JOHN CARMICHAEL, of Carmichael, m. Elizabeth, dau. of Hugh, 5th Lord Somerville, and d. 1580. His son was

SIR JOHN CARMICHAEL, of Carmichael. He was warden of the middle marches. In 1588 he was one of the ambassadors sent to Denmark to negotiate the marriage of King JAMES VI. with the Princess Anne. In 1590 he was sent ambassador to Queen ELIZABETH. In 1598 he was warden of the west marches, in the exercise of which office he was murdered in 1600. By Margaret Douglas, sister of David, 7th Earl of Angus, and James, Earl of Morton, Regent of Scotland, he had, with other issue, a son,

SIR HUGH CARMICHAEL, of Carmichael, a privy councillor, master of the horse in 1593, and ambassador to Denmark. By Abigail, dau. of William Baillie, of Lamington, he had a son, JOHN, and a dau. Jean, wife of James Lockhart, of Cleghorn.

SIR JOHN CARMICHAEL, of Carmichael, m. Elizabeth, dau. of Sir Patrick Home, of Polwarth. He had a charter, dated 1619. He d. s. p. about the year 1640. His affairs were in very great disorder, and previous to his death his estates had been transferred to Sir James Carmichael, of Hyndford. The line of the house of Carmichael was then carried on by the said Sir James Carmichael, of Hyndford, who was a descendant of Walter Carmichael, of Hyndford and Park, great-great-grand-uncle to the last Sir John.

WALTER CARMICHAEL was father of

GAVIN CARMICHAEL, of Hyndford, of which he had a charter in 1547. His son,

JAMES CARMICHAEL, of Hyndford, m. Marian Campbell, dau. of Sir Hugh Campbell, of Loudon, by Lady Elizabeth Stewart, dau. of Matthew, Earl of Lennox, and great-grand-dau. of JAMES II., King of Scotland, and Queen Mary of Gueldres. By her he had, with other issue, a son,

WALTER CARMICHAEL, of Hyndford, who d. in 1616. By his wife Grizzel Carmichael, dau. of Sir John Carmichael, of Meadowflat, captain of Crawford Castle, he had a son JAMES, and six daus., of whom the eldest, Marian, was wife of James Stewart, of Allanton, and from her are descended STEWART, of Allanton, HAMILTON, of Barna, HAMILTON DUNDAS, of Duddingston, and GRAY, of Carntyne.

JAMES CARMICHAEL, of Hyndford, was distinguished by the favour of King JAMES VI., to whom he stood in the degree of 3rd cousin, and to whom he was cup-bearer, carver, and chamberlain. He was created a baronet 17 July, 1627. On the death of Sir John, between 1640 and 1650, he became head of the house of Carmichael. He was lord justice clerk in 1634, and lord of session in 1639. In 1641 he was made privy councillor for life, and 27 December, 1647 he was created, by King CHARLES, LORD CARMICHAEL, to him and his heirs-male whatsoever. He m. Agnes, sister of John Wilkie, of Foulden, by whom he had issue,

I. WILLIAM, Master of Carmichael, in his youth one of the gens d'armes of Louis XIII. of France, one of the committee of parliament in 1644-5; fought in 1646, at Philiphaugh, against Montrose; d. 1657. By Lady Grizzel Douglas his wife, 3rd dau. of William, 1st Marquess of Douglas, he had issue,

1 JOHN, who s. his grandfather as 2nd Lord Carmichael.

1 Mary, m. in 1665 to Sir Archibald Stewart, Bart., of Castlemilk.

2 Rachel, wife of James Weir, of Stonebyres.

II. David (Honourable Sir), d. s. p.

III. James (Honourable Sir), of Bonnytown. His son, SIR JOHN, s. him in 1691, and m. in 1684, Lady Harriet Johnstone, dau. of James, Earl of Annandale, by whom he had a son, SIR JAMES CARMICHAEL, Bart., of Bonnytown, who m. Margaret Baillie, heiress of Lamington, by whom he had a son, SIR WILLIAM, who d. s. p. 1738, and a dau. HENRIETTA, heiress of Lamington and Bonnytown, who m. ROBERT DUNDAS, of Arniston, lord president of the Court of Session, and d. 1755. Her eldest dau. ELIZABETH, m. Sir John Lockhart Ross, of Balnagown, and had issue.

I. Mary, wife, 1st, of Sir William Lockhart, of Carstairs, and 2ndly, of Sir William Weir of Stonebyres.

II. Agnes, wife of Sir John Wilkie, of Foulden.

III. Anne, wife of Sir David Carmichael, of Balmedie. Her only child, Anne, was, in 1670, wife of John Dundas, of Duddingston, and was ancestress of John Hamilton Dundas, late of Duddingston, and of the Rev. John Hamilton Gray, of Carntyne.

IV. Martha, wife of John Kennedy, of Kirkmichael.

James, 1st Lord Carmichael, d. 29 November, 1672, and was s. by his grandson,

JOHN, 2nd Lord Carmichael, b. 28 February, 1638, commissioner of the privy seal and privy councillor in 1689. He was high commissioner to the general assembly of the church of Scotland in 1690, and from 1694 to 1699; and secretary of state in 1696. He was created EARL OF HYNDFORD, Viscount of Inglisberry and Nemphar, and Lord Carmichael, of Carmichael, 25 June, 1701, to him and to his heirs male and of entail. He was a promoter of the union in 1705, and d. in 1710, aged seventy-three. He m. 9 October, 1669, the Honourable Beatrix Drummond, 2nd dau. of David, 3rd Lord Maderty, by whom he had issue,

I. JAMES, 2nd Earl of Hyndford,

II. William, of Skirling, who m. 1st, in 1709, Ellen, only child of Thomas Craig, of Biccarton, and had issue,

CARPENTER — BARONS CARPENTER, VISCOUNTS CARLINGFORD, AND EARLS OF TYRCONNEL.

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 29 May, 1719.

Viscounty and Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 1 May, 1761.

Lineage.

WILLIAM CARPENTER, Esq., of Holme, descended from a very ancient Herefordshire family, d. in the year 1520, and from him lineally descended

THOMAS CARPENTER, Esq., who bequeathed his estate to his 2nd cousin,

LIEUT.-GEN. THE RIGHT HON. GEORGE LORD CARPENTER. This nobleman, who was a younger son, commenced his career as page to the Earl of Montagu in his embassy to the court of France in 1671, and on returning in the next year, rode as a private gentleman in the 3rd troop of guards, from which station (then deemed an honourable introduction to a military life) Mr. Carpenter was appointed quartermaster to the Earl of Peterborough's regiment of horse, the lieut.-colonelcy of which he subsequently attained. In 1693, Colonel Carpenter m. Alice, dau. of William, 1st Viscount Charlemont, and widow of James Margetson, Esq., and purchased afterwards for 1,800 guineas, a part of his lady's dowry, the king's own regiment of dragoons, the command of which he retained until his decease; distinguished himself at its head in the battle of Almanza in 1707, the battle of Almenara in 1710, and upon other eminent services. In 1709 he had attained the rank of lieut.-general, and in 1715 he forced the rebels under Lord Derwentwater to surrender at discretion at Preston, thus securing the throne to the present reigning family. In 1716, Gen. Carpenter was appointed governor of Minorca, and subsequently commander-in-chief of all the forces in Scotland, when he was elevated to the peerage of Ireland, by patent dated 29 May, 1719, as BARON CARPENTER, of Killaghy, co. Kilkenny. His lordship d. 10 February, 1731, and was s. by his only son,

GEORGE, 2nd baron, lieut.-colonel of the 1st regiment of horse guards. His lordship m. in 1722, Elizabeth, only dau. of David Petty, Esq., of Wanstead, co. Essex, and dying 12 July, 1749, left (with a dau. Alicia-Maria, m. 1st, to Charles, 2nd Earl of Egremont, and 2ndly, to Count Bruhl) an only son,

GEORGE, 3rd baron, b. 26 August, 1723. This nobleman m. in March, 1747-8, Frances, only dau. and heiress of Sir Robert Clifton, Bart., of Clifton, co. Nottingham, and heiress of her mother, Lady Frances Coote, only dau. of Nantun, 2nd Earl of Bellamont, by whom he had issue,

I. GEORGE, his successor.

II. Charles, a naval officer of rank, b. 3 January, 1757; m. 19 May, 1785, Elizabeth, only dau. of Thomas Mackenzie, Esq., and dying 5 September, 1803, left issue by her (who d. 23 February, 1842),

1 GEORGE, who s. as 3rd earl.

2 JOHN-DELAVAL, 4th earl.

I. Almeria, d. 5 October, 1809.

II. Elizabeth.

III. Caroline, m. to Uvedale Price, Esq., of Foxley (afterwards created a baronet), and d. 16 July, 1826.

Lord Carpenter was advanced to the dignities of Viscount Carlingford and EARL OF TYRCONNEL 1 May, 1761, and dying the year after was s. by his elder surviving son,

GEORGE, 2nd earl, b. in 1750; m. 1st, in 1772, Frances Manners, eldest dau. of the celebrated military commander, Lieut.-General John, Marquess of Granby, and grand-dau. of John, 3rd Duke of Rutland, which marriage was dissolved by act of parliament in 1777, and the lady m. Philip Anstruther, Esq. His lordship m. 2ndly, in 1780, the Hon. Sarah Hussey Delaval, youngest dau. and co-heir of John, Lord Delaval, and left an only dau.,

SUSAN-HUSSEY, who m. in 1805, Henry, 2nd Marquess of Waterford, and d. 7 June, 1827.

The earl d. 15 April, 1805, when the honours devolved upon his nephew,

GEORGE, 3rd earl. This nobleman, who was b. in 1788, impelled by the love of military enterprise, entered into the Russian army as a volunteer, and d. at Wilna, 20 December, 1812, in that service, from his zeal and excessive fatigue in pursuit of the French forces under Bonaparte. His lordship was m. and the honours devolved at his decease upon his brother,

JOHN DELAVAL, 4th Earl of Tyrconnel, Viscount Carlingford, of Carlingford, and Baron Carpenter, of Killaghy, co. Kilkenny, G.C.H., b. 16 December, 1790. He m. 1 October, 1817, Sarah, only child of Robert Crowe, Esq., of Kiplin, co. York, by Anne his wife, dau. of Christopher Buckle, Esq., of Burgh, in Banstead, and had a dau., Elizabeth Anne, b. 19 February, 1847, and d. same day. His lordship d. 25 June, 1853, whereupon all his titles became EXTINCT.

CARR—VISCOUNT ROCHESTER, EARL OF SOMERSET.

Viscounty, by Letters Patent, dated 25 March, 1611

Earldom, &c., by Letters Patent, dated 3 November, 1613.

Lineage.

SIR ROBERT CARR, K.B., of the ancient House of Ker, of Fernhurst, in Scotland, and half brother of Andrew, 1st Lord

Jedburgh, having ingratiated himself into the favour of King JAMES I., was appointed, upon the decease of George, Lord Dunbar, treasurer of Scotland, and elevated to the peerage, as VISCOUNT ROCHESTER, 25 March, 1611. In the May following his lordship was installed a knight of the Garter, and created, 3 November, 1613, BARON CARR, of Branspeth, in the bishopric of Durham, and EARL OF SOMERSET, being also nominated lord chamberlain of the household, and sworn of the privy council. At this time the earl was esteemed the first favourite of the court. "But having," says Dugdale, "thus seen his rise, let us now behold his fall, which I shall briefly here relate, with the occasion and chief circumstances thereof, from the report of the most Rev. Dr. Spotswood, late archbishop of St. Andrew's in Scotland."

"This earl falling in love with the Lady Frances Howard, dau. of Thomas, Earl of Suffolk (wife to Robert, Earl of Essex, from whom she had procured a divorce), having formerly received into his intimate familiarity a knight of excellent parts, called Sir Thomas Overburie, was frequently by him dissuaded from her company, which being discerned by Overburie, and that, notwithstanding what had been said, he had a purpose to marry her; he so far presumed upon the friendly freedom which he had otherwise given him, to press him more earnestly to forbear her. And one night, dealing more plainly with him, said to this effect, 'My lord, I perceive you are proceeding in this match, from which I have often dissuaded you, as your true servant and friend: I now again advise you not to marry that woman, for if you do, you shall ruine your honour and yourself,' adding, 'that, if he went on in that business, he should do well to look to his standing.' Which free speech, this earl taking impatiently, because he had touched the lady in her honour, replied in passion, 'That his legs were strong enough to bear him up, and that he should make him repent those speeches.' But Overburie, interpreting this to be only a sudden passion, thought not that their long continued friendship would break off by this occasion, and therefore continued his wonted attendance; neither did this earl wholly abandon him. Howbeit, having discovered his words to the lady, she never ceased, but by all means sought his overthrow. It happening, therefore, about this time, that Overburie being designed for ambassador into Russia, this earl (whose counsel he asked) advised him to refuse the service, but to make some fair excuse. Which advice he followed, supposing that it did proceed of kindness; but for his refusal he was committed to the Tower. The lady thus having him where she wished, and resolving to dispatch him by poison, wrought so with Sir Gervase Elways, then lieutenant of the Tower, as that he admitted one Richard Weston, upon her recommendation, to be his keeper, by whom (the very evening after he was so committed) a yellow poison was ministered to him in a broth at supper. But neither this nor the other poisons, which were continually put into his meats, serving to dispatch him, Mistress Turner (the preparer of all,) procured an apothecary's boy to give him a poisoned clyster, which soon brought him to his end. Being thus dead, he was presently buried; a general rumour, however, prevailed that he had died by poison, but the greatness of the procurers kept all hidden for a time, till at length it pleased God to bring everything to light, after a miraculous manner. It happened that the Earl of Shrewsbury, in conference with a counsellor of state, recommended the lieutenant of the Tower to his favour, as a man of good parts, and one who desired to be known to him. The counsellor answered, that he took it as a favour from the lieutenant that he should desire his friendship, but added, that there lay upon him an heavy imputation for Overburie's death, whereof he wisht that the gentleman should clear himself. Which being related to the lieutenant, he was stricken with it, and said to his knowledge some attempts were made against Overburie, but that the same took no effect. Which being told to the king, he willed the counsellor to move the lieutenant to set down in writing what he knew of that matter, as he accordingly did. Whereupon certain of the council were appointed to examine and find out the truth. From Weston somewhat being found, he was made prisoner, Turner and Franklyn, the preparers of the poison, being examined, confessed everything; whereupon all breaking forth, this earl and his lady, as also the lieutenant, were committed. But Weston at his first arraignment stood mute, yet afterwards was induced to put himself on the trial of his country, and being found guilty suffered death at Tyburn. Mistress Turner and James Franklyn were in like sort executed. The lieutenant, who had winked at their doings, being judged accessory to the crime, and condemned, suffered death also, expressing great penitency. And in May following, this earl and his lady were both brought to their trial, though, by their friends, laboured earnestly to eschew it. But King JAMES would not be intreated for the love he had to maintain justice. Thomas, Lord Ellesmere, at that time Lord Chancellor of England, was, by commission, constituted high steward for that occasion, having for his assistants, Sir Edward Coke, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench, Sir Henry Hobert, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, and others. With the lady there was much ado; she, with many tears, confessing the fact, and desiring mercy. But this earl, being the next day presented, made some defence, which served no purpose; for the confessions of those who had suffered death already for the fact, and a letter which he himself had sent to the king, did so clearly convict him of being at least an accessory, that both himself and his lady had sentence of death passed upon them. Nevertheless, through his majesty's great clemency, their lives were spared." The event proved, however, miserable to both these guilty persons, ending in a total separation and hatred of each other. The abandoned countess d. 23 August, 1632. The earl, who was released from the Tower in 1621, but afterwards confined to the house of Viscount Wallingford, d. in July, 1645, leaving an only dau.,

ANNE, who m. William, 5th Earl of Bedford, and was mother of the illustrious patriot, William, LORD RUSSELL. The Countess of Bedford was as distinguished for purity as her unhappy mother had been for the reverse.

Upon his lordship's decease the Viscounty of Rochester and EARLDOM OF SOMERSET became EXTINCT.

CARTERET — BARONS CARTERET, OF HAWNES, CO. BEDFORD, VISCOUNTS CARTERET, EARLS GRANVILLE.

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 19 October, 1681.

Earldom, &c., by Letters Patent, dated 1 January, 1714.

Lineage.

All the English Carterets derive their origin and descent from the ancient and noble family of this name, of St. Ouen's manor, in the island of Jersey; the present lineal representative of which, maternally, is EDWARD CHARLES MALET DE CARTERET, Seigneur de St. Ouen.

In the charters of the cathedral of Coutances, and of the abbey of Fontenelle and Bec, in Normandy, great and honourable mention is made of the De Carterets, of whom the chief, in 1002, took on him sovereign authority in the barony of Carteret, situated on the coast of that duchy, opposite the eastern part of the island of Jersey. The ancient Norman historians, Louis de Coulis, in his "History of the Crusades," and Du Moulin, in his "History of Normandy," speak largely of this family, which, during upwards of seven centuries, has held the seigneurie of St. Ouen, which takes precedence of every other feudal tenure in Jersey, and bears the ancient title of "Le Grand Fief Haubert de St. Ouen," with two knights' fees and service, in addition to that of its lord or seigneur. Anciently this honour and lordship fell into the charge and keeping of the sovereign, during the minority of its heir; and the honourable and responsible post of keeper of the fortresses of the island was, of right, confided to the Seigneurs de St. Ouen, in the absence by death or otherwise of the governor.

Our limits do not permit us to make more than a very cursory mention of a few of the members of this race of insular heroes and statesmen who have sprung up in rapid succession from this house, whose sons, in one long and unbroken line, are recorded, from 1066 to 1859, in the College of Arms, London; and whose history, replete with events affording ample and singular proof of their energy of purpose and chivalrous bravery, is to be found in numerous and authenticated public and private sources in England, Normandy, and Jersey.

OMFRET and MAUGER DE CARTERET fought at Hastings in 1066, and as deserving knights are made mention of in the "Roman du Rou."

REGINALD DE CARTERET accompanied Robert, Duke of Normandy, and Godfroi de Bouillon, to the first great crusade in 1096, and his arms are recorded by Du Moulin.

PHILIP DE CARTERET, in fulfilment of a pious vow, made when in great danger of shipwreck off the coast of Guernsey, built in 1129, at his own cost, the church of Porteval, in that island.

SIR REGINALD DE CARTERET, Knt., who assumed the chief command of the insular forces when Drogo de Barentin, the governor, was killed, after performing prodigies of valour, succeeded in forcing the French, who had made several destructive forays and descents on the island, to abandon it; and afterwards joining the fleet commanded by Reynold de Cobham and Geoffrey d'Harcourt, was chiefly instrumental, by the reinforcement of his troops, in recovering the island of Guernsey, of which the French had obtained possession. And his grandson, the celebrated SIR REGINALD DE CARTERET, Knt., captain of the king's castles in Jersey, had the signal honour of compelling the illustrious Du Guesclin to raise the siege of Mount-Orgeuil Castle, which he had closely invested in 1374 with an army of 10,000 men, among whom were comprised the flower of the French chivalry and the Duke de Bourbon. For this glorious achievement the honour of knighthood was conferred, the same day, on Sir Reginald and his seven sons by EDWARD III.

SIR PHILIP DE CARTERET, Knt. (grandson of Sir Reginald), who m. Margaret, dau. of Sir William Newton, Knt., of Gloucester, also displayed, in an eminent degree, those great qualities which were peculiar to his race, preserved for the second time the island of Jersey from French possession, and succeeded in expelling Pierre de Brézé, Comte de Maulevrier, grand sénéchal of Normandy, who during five years, from 1461 to 1466, had retained under subjection the six eastern parishes of Jersey.

PHILIP DE CARTERET, Sir Philip's grandson, Lord of St. Ouen, who m. Margaret, only dau. of Sir Richard Harlston, governor of Jersey, nearly fell victim to a foul plot of accusation of treachery, based on a forged letter, purporting to offer to betray basely the island to France, produced against him by his enemy, Sir Matthew Baker, the governor, whose vexatious and unjust exactions exercised on the inhabitants had been withstood and severely commented upon by De Carteret: this letter was written by one Le Bouteiller, whom the Seigneur de St. Ouen had saved from capital punishment. By the connivance of the then bailli, Clement le Hardy, Sir Philip was imprisoned in Mount-Orgeuil Castle, and stinted of food in order to render unequal the trial by combat, which he was unjustly condemned to accept from this miscreant on the feast of St. Lawrence. That side of the lists from which he was to do battle was subsequently found to be studded with numerous pitfalls, artfully covered over to hasten his destruction; but his heroic wife, to obtain her husband's liberation, clandestinely left the island in an open boat with only one trusty servant, in the depth of winter, and four days only after her confinement; and obtaining an audience of the king, HENRY VII., who at that time held his court at Salisbury, returned to Jersey successful; the king having by writ under the great seal fully reinstated her injured husband. This Lady of St. Ouen was mother of twenty sons and one daughter, all presented to the king the same day. From this gallant personage we pass to his descendant,

SIR PHILIP CARTERET, who undertook, in the reign of ELIZABETH, to plant such a colony in the island of Sark as should keep out the French, and he accordingly enlarged the settlement, and thereby improved his own estate. He m. Rachel, dau. and heir of Sir George Paulet, son and heir of Lord Thomas Paulet, of Cossington, co. Somerset, 2nd son of William, Marquess of Winchester, and had, with other issue,

- I. PHILIP (Sir), his successor, Lord of St. Ouen, b. 1583, a gallant and devoted royalist, who held Elizabeth Castle, as his wife did that of Mount Orgueil, for the king. He m. Anne, dau. of Sir Francis Dowse, Knt., of Wallop, Hants, and had issue; one of his sons, Francis, became attorney-general of Jersey, and through him by female descent the seigneurie of St. Ouen has been held by the families of Le Maître and Mallet; the eldest son and heir of the cavalier, Sir Philip, was s. by his eldest son,

SIR PHILIP DE CARTERET, Lord of St. Ouen and royal bailli of Jersey, knighted by CHARLES II., when Prince of Wales, 29 April 1645. He m. Anne Dumasque, and dying in 1662, was s. by his son,

PHILIP, created a BARONET 4 June, 1670. He m. Elizabeth, dau. of Sir Edward Carteret, and dying in 1693, was s. by his only son,

CHARLES (Sir), 2nd baronet, who was one of the gentlemen of the privy chamber to Queen ANNE, and high bailiff of the island of Jersey. Sir Charles d. in 1715 (when the baronetcy EXPIRED), and was buried in Westminster Abbey. In him the older male line of the family EXPIRED.

II. HELIER, of whom presently.

I. Rachael, m. 1st, to — Beaver, Esq., of the island of Jersey, and 2ndly, to — de Vic, Esq.

II. Judith, m. to Sir Brian Johnson, of Buckinghamshire.

The 2nd son,

HELIER CARTERET, Esq., deputy-governor of Jersey, m. Elizabeth, dau. of — Dumasque, Esq., and had, with other children,

SIR GEORGE CARTERET, b. 1599, a naval officer of high reputation, who, through the influence of the Duke of Buckingham, was appointed in the 2nd of King CHARLES I. joint governor of Jersey, and at the breaking out of the civil war held the office of comptroller of the navy. Sir George was, however, so much esteemed by all parties, that when the parliament passed the ordinance for the Earl of Warwick to command the fleet, then fully and entirely at their disposal, they likewise resolved that Captain Carteret should be vice-admiral; but he declined the appointment at the express command of the king. Upon which Lord Clarendon observes, "his interest and reputation in the navy was so great, and his diligence and dexterity in command so eminent, that it was generally believed he would, against whatsoever the Earl of Warwick could have done, have preserved the major part of the fleet in their duty to the king."

Having thus retired from the navy, he withdrew with his family to Jersey; but subsequently returned to aid the projects of the royalists, when he was created by King CHARLES a baronet, 9 May, 1645. He again, however, went back to his government in Jersey, and there, in the ruin of the royal cause, afforded an asylum to the Prince of Wales (who appointed him his vice-chamberlain), Mr. Hyde, afterwards Lord Clarendon, and other refugees of distinction. After this he defended the island of Jersey in the most gallant manner against the parliamentarians, and ultimately only surrendered upon receiving the command of King CHARLES II. so to do. At the Restoration Sir George formed one of the immediate train of the restored monarch in his triumphant entry into London: and the next day he was sworn of the privy council and declared Vice Chamberlain. He was afterwards returned to parliament by the corporation of Portsmouth. Sir George m. Elizabeth, dau. of Sir Philip Carteret, Knt., of St. Ouen, and had issue,

- I. PHILIP (Sir), m. Jemima, dau. of Edward Montagu, 1st Earl of Sandwich, vice-admiral of England, and had issue,

1 George, who s. his grandfather.

2 Philip, captain of marines; lost at sea in 1693.

3 Edward, M.P., joint-postmaster-general, m. Bridget, dau. of Sir Thomas Exton, judge of the high court of admiralty, and d. in 1729, leaving issue.

Sir Philip Carteret being with his father-in-law, Lord Sandwich, in the great naval engagement off Solebay, 28 May, 1672, was blown up with that gallant officer in the "Royal James."

II. James, captain R.N., in the reign of King CHARLES II.

III. George, d. unm. in 1656.

I. Anne, m. to Sir Nicholas Slanning, Bart., K.B., of Maristow, co. Devon.

II. Caroline, m. to Sir Thomas Scot, of Scot's Hall, Kent.

III. Louisa-Margaretta, m. to Sir Robert Atkins, of Saperton, co. Gloucester.

Sir George d. 13 January, 1679, and was s. by his grandson,

SIR GEORGE CARTERET, 2nd baronet, who was elevated to the peerage 19 October, 1681, as BARON CARTERET, of Harmer, with remainder, in default of male issue, to his brothers, and their heirs male. This nobleman, when only eight years of age, was m. to Lady Grace Granville, youngest dau. of John, Earl of Bath, and co-heiress of her nephew, William-Henry, last Earl of Bath of that family; a marriage agreed upon by his grandfather, Sir George Carteret, and the Earl of Bath, to cement the friendship which had long subsisted between them. By this lady his lordship had issue, JOHN, his successor, with another son, Philip, and a dau., Jemima, who both d. unm. His lordship, who was a zealous supporter of the revolution, d. at the early age of twenty-six, in 1695. His widow, Lady Carteret, having succeeded as co-heiress to the great Bath estates, upon the decease of her nephew, William-Henry Granville, Earl of Bath, in 1711 (when that dignity became extinct), was created 1 January, 1714, Viscountess Carteret, and COUNTESS GRANVILLE, with remainder of the viscounty, in default of male issue in her son John, Lord Carteret, to the uncle of that nobleman, Edward Carteret, Esq., and his male heirs. Her ladyship d. in 1744, and was s. by her only surviving son,

JOHN CARTERET, 2nd Lord Carteret, as Earl Granville. His lordship was appointed one of the lords of the bedchamber at the accession of King GEORGE I., and constituted in 1716 lord-lieutenant and custos rotularum of the co. of Devon. In 1719

he was accredited ambassador extraordinary to the court of Sweden. In 1721 he was declared principal secretary of state, and in 1724 constituted Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, which high office he retained for the six following years. He was thrice one of the lords justices during the occasional absence of the king, and a knight of the Garter. His lordship m. 1st, 17 October, 1710, Frances, only dau. of Sir Robert Worsley, Bart., and grand-dau. maternally of Thomas Thynne, Viscount Weymouth, by whom he had surviving issue,

I. ROBERT, his successor.

1. Grace, m. 1729, Lionel, Earl of Dysart, and d. 23 July, 1755, leaving issue: the co-heirs of the line of this marriage are the EARL OF DYSAET and JOHN TOLLEMACHE, Esq., M.P., of Helmingham Hall, co. Suffolk, and Pickforton Castle, co. Chester.

II. Louisa, m. to Thomas Thynne, Viscount Weymouth, and had issue,

1 THOMAS, Viscount Weymouth, K.G., created Marquess of Bath, d. in 1784, and left

THOMAS, 2nd Marquess of Bath, K.G., and other issue,

2 HENRY-FREDERICK, having s. to the Carteret estates under the will of his grandfather, John, Earl of Granville, after the decease of his uncle, assumed the surname and arms of CARTERET, and was created 29 Jan. 1784 BARON CARTERET, of Hawnes, with remainder to the younger sons of his brother, the Marquess of Bath. His lordship d. in 1826, and the barony passed according to the limitation to his nephew, LORD GEORGE THYNNE, 2nd LORD CARTERET. (See THYNNE, BARONS CARTERET.)

III. Georgiana-Carolina, m. 1st, to the Hon John Spencer, and 2ndly, to William, Earl Cowper.

Lineage.

This noble family, and the existing ducal house of Devonshire, had a common progenitor in

The Right Honourable

SIR WILLIAM CAVENDISH, who, by his 3rd wife ("Bees of Hardwick"), Elizabeth, dau. of John Hardwick, Esq., of Hardwick, co. Derby, and eventually co-heiress of her brother, James Hardwick, had issue, Henry, of Tutbury Priory, co. Stafford, M.P. for Derbyshire, who d. s. p. 12 October, 1616.

SIR CHARLES CAVENDISH, Knt., of Welbeck Abbey, Notts, who m. 1st, Margaret, eldest dau. and co-heir of Sir Thomas Kitson, of Hengrave, Suffolk, by whom he had no issue; and 2ndly, Catherine, dau. of Cuthbert, 7th Baron Ogle, who becoming eventually his lordship's sole heiress, succeeded to the Barony of Ogle, which was confirmed to her ladyship by letters patent, dated 4 December, 1628: by this lady he left an only surviving son,

SIR WILLIAM CAVENDISH, K.B., who was elevated to the peerage, 3 November, 1620, as Baron Ogle, of Bothal, and VISCOUNT MANSFIELD, in the co. of Nottingham. This nobleman, afterwards so celebrated as a royalist general, filled originally the post of governor to the Prince of Wales, eldest son of King CHARLES I., and was advanced in the peerage by that monarch, on 7 March, 1628, in the dignities of Baron Cavendish, of Bolsover, in the co. of Notts, and EARL OF NEWCASTLE. When the proceedings of the Long Parliament ceased to be equivocal, his lordship hastened to rear the royal standard in the north, and planting it on the battlements of the Castle of Tynemouth, manned and fortified the town of Newcastle. He then levied forces, and, though in the midst of winter, placing himself at their head, routed the rebels in all directions in the county of York, and became master of their principal strong places there. In 1642 he received the queen, upon her majesty's arrival with arms and ammunition, and conducting her in safety to the king, at Oxford, was rewarded, by letters patent, dated 27 October, 1643, with the MARQUISATE OF NEWCASTLE. Subsequently, his lordship sustained, upon every occasion, his high reputation, but particularly in his gallant defence of the city of York against three powerful armies of English and Scotch. He retired to the continent however, after the fatal battle of Marston-Moor, owing to some misunderstanding between himself and PRINCE RUPERT, a misunderstanding which the royalists had eventually most deeply to deplore. Upon the restoration of the monarchy, the marquess was created, 16 March, 1664, Earl of Ogle and DUKE OF NEWCASTLE, as some compensation for the immense losses he had sustained, amounting in the aggregate, to nearly three parts of a million sterling! His grace m. 1st, Elizabeth, dau. and heiress of William Bassett, Esq., of Blore, co. Stafford, and widow of the Hon. Frances, m. to Oliver St. John, Earl of Bolingbroke.

The duke m. 2ndly, Margaret, sister of the Lord Lucas, but had no issue. Of his grace, Walpole, in his "Noble Authors," says, that "he was a man extremely known from the course of life into which he was forced, and who would soon have been forgotten in the walk of fame which he chose for himself: yet as an author he is familiar to those who scarce know any other, from his Book of Horsemanship. Though amorous in poetry and music, as Lord Clarendon says, he was fitter to break Pegasus for a menage, than to mount him on the steeps of Parnassus. Of all the riders of that steed, perhaps there have not been a more fantastic couple than his grace and his faithful duchess, who was never off her pillion."

His grace, who, amongst his other honours, was a knight of the Garter, d. in 1676, and a costly monument in Westminster Abbey records his virtues, dignities, and high public employments. He was s. by his only surviving son,

HENRY CAVENDISH, 2nd duke, who m. Frances, dau. of William, 2nd son of Robert Pierpoint, Earl of Kingston, by whom he had surviving issue,

1 HENRY, Earl of Ogle, who m. Lady Elizabeth Percy, only surviving child and heiress of Joceline, 11th and last Earl of Northumberland of the old Percys, upon which occasion his lordship assumed the surname of PERCY. He d. s. p. 1 November, 1680, and his widow m. in two years afterwards, Charles Seymour, DUKE OF SOMERSET, of which union the present DUKE OF ATHOL is heir-general.

1 Elizabeth, m. 1st, to Christopher Monk, Duke of Albe-marle, and 2ndly, to Ralph Montagu, Duke of Montagu, but d. s. p.

II. Frances, m. to John, 2nd Earl of Breadalbane, but d. s. p.
 III. Margaret, m. to John Holles, 4th Earl of Clare, who was created, 14 May, 1694, Marquess of Clare and Duke of Newcastle, by whom she had an only dau.,

Lady Henrietta-Cavendish Holles, who m. Edward, Lord Harley, son and heir of Robert, Earl of Oxford, to whom she carried a very great real and personal estate. Her only dau. and heiress, LADY MARGARET CAVENDISH HARLEY, m. 1734, William, 2nd Duke of Portland, and her heir-general, the Duke of Portland, is one of the co-heirs of the Barony of Ogle.

His grace (John Holles, Duke of Newcastle) dying thus without male issue, the honours ceased in the Holles family, but were revived in the descendants of his sister, Grace Holles, who m. Thomas Pelham, Lord Loughton, and had issue,

1 Thomas, created Earl and Marquess of Clare, and Duke of Newcastle, d. in 1768, s. p., when the husband of his niece inherited the dukedom.

2 Henry Pelham, m. to Catherine, dau. of John, Duke of Rutland, and left issue,

Catherine, m. to Henry Clinton, Earl of Lincoln, who s. his wife's uncle in the Dukedom of Newcastle, and from him descend the extant Dukes of Newcastle.

1 Grace, m. to George Naylor, Esq.

2 Frances, m. to Christopher Viscount Castlecomer.

3 Gertrude, m. to David Polhill, Esq.

4 Lucy, m. to Henry, 7th Earl of Lincoln.

5 Margaret, m. to Sir John Shelley, 4th bart., of Michelgrove.

IV. Catherine, m. to Thomas, 6th Earl of Thanet, and had five daus., co-heiresses, viz.,

1 Catherine, wife of Edward Viscount Soudes, and great-great-grandmother of Sophia, Baroness de Clifford, one of the co-heirs of the Barony of Ogle.

2 Anne, m. James, Earl of Salisbury, and the heir-general of this marriage, the MARQUESS OF SALISBURY, is one of the co-heirs of the Barony of Ogle.

3 Margaret, m. Thomas Coke, Earl of Leicester, and d. s. p.

4 Mary, m. 1st, to Anthony, Earl of Harold, and 2ndly, to John, Earl of Gower; the Duke of Sutherland is her heir-general, and one of the co-heirs to the Barony of Ogle.

5 Isabella, m. 1st, to Lord Nassau Paulet, and 2ndly, to Sir F. Blake Delaval, K.B.

V. Arabella, m. to Charles, Earl of Sunderland, and left an only dau.,

FRANCES, who m. in 1717, Henry, 4th Earl of Carlisle, and had surviving issue,

Arabella, m. to Jonathan Cope, Esq., of Orton Longueville, and the heir-general of this marriage is the MARQUESS OF HUNTLEY, one of the co-heirs of the Barony of Ogle.

Diana, m. to Thomas Duncombe, Esq., of Duncombe Park, co. York, and had an only dau. and heiress, ANNE, who m. 1774, Robert Shafto, Esq., of Whitworth, co. Durham, and was mother of ROBERT EDEN DUNCOMBE SHAFTO, Esq., of Whitworth, M.P., whose son and heir, ROBERT DUNCOMBE SHAFTO, Esq., M.P., is one of the co-heirs of the Barony of Ogle.

His grace d. in 1691, when, as he left no male issue, the dignities created in 1620, in 1628, in 1643, and in 1644 (see commencement of this article), became EXTINCT, while the old Barony of OGLE, which came into the family with Catherine, Lady Ogle, wife of Sir Charles Cavendish, of Welbeck Abbey, fell into ABEYANCE between his grace's five daus. and co-heiresses, and so continues amongst their descendants.

Arms—Sa., three bucks' heads, cabossed, arg., attired, or, a crescent for difference.

CECIL—BARON CECIL, OF PUTNEY, CO. SURREY, VISCOUNT WIMBLEDON.

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 9 November, 1625.

Viscounty, by Letters Patent, dated 25 July, 1626.

Lineage.

SIR WILLIAM CECIL, Baron Burghley, treasurer to Queen ELIZABETH, m. 1541, Mary, dau. of Peter Cheke, and sister of Sir John Cheke, tutor to King EDWARD VI., and was father of

SIR THOMAS CECIL, 1st Earl of Exeter, who m. Dorothy, dau. and co-heir of John Nevil, Lord Latimer, and had issue,

RICHARD, ancestor of the Earls of Exeter.

EDWARD (Sir).

The 3rd son,

The HONOURABLE SIR EDWARD CECIL, b. 1571, having adopted a military life, attained celebrity in the wars in the Netherlands, where he was engaged for a space of thirty-five years. He was marshal, lieutenant, and general of the forces sent by King JAMES and King CHARLES I. against the Spaniards and Imperialists, and was elevated to the peerage by King CHARLES II., 9 November, 1625, as Baron Cecil, of Putney, and created 25 July, 1626, Viscount WIMBLEDON. Walpole in his "Noble Authors," mentions that in the king's library are two manuscript tracts drawn up by this nobleman on the several subjects of war and the military defence of the nation; and he likewise states, that a manuscript was found by the Earl of Huntingdon in an old chest, purporting to be a warrant of King CHARLES I., directing, at the instance of Lord Wimbeldon, the revival of the old English march, so famous in all the honourable achievements and glorious wars of this kingdom in ancient times; but which, by neglect, had been nearly lost and forgotten. His lordship m. thrice; 1st Theodosia, dau. of Sir Andrew Noel, of Dalby, co. Leicester, Knt., by whom he had four daus., viz.,

Dorothy.

Albinia, m. to Sir Christopher Wray, Knt., of Barlings, co. Lincoln, and had a dau., Albinia, m. to Richard, son of Sir Richard Betenson, Bart., of Seabury, co. Kent.

Franca, m. to James, son and heir of William, Viscount Saye and Sele, and had a dau. Franca, m. to Andrew Ellis, of Alrey, co. Flint, and d. 1687.

The viscount m. 2ndly, Diana, dau. of Sir William Drury, of Halstede, co. Suffolk, Knt.; and 3rdly, Sophia, dau. of Sir Edward Zouche, of Woking, Surrey, by whom he had a son, Algernon, who d. in infancy.

His lordship d. at Wimbeldon, 16 November, 1638, where he was interred, and leaving no male issue, his honours became EXTINCT.

Arms—Barry of ten, arg. and az., on six escutcheons, sa., three, two, one, as many lions rampant of the first.

CHANDOS—BARON CHANDOS.

By Writ of Summons, dated 20 December, 1337.

Lineage.

The first of this family upon record,

ROBERT DE CHANDOS, came from Normandy with the CONQUEROR, and obtained by arms large possessions in Wales. He was subsequently a munificent benefactor to the church. To this Robert s. another

ROBERT DE CHANDOS, who, upon the assessment in aid of marrying the king's dau., in the 12th HENRY II., certified his knights' fees to be thirteen and a sixth part, for which he paid £8 15s. 6d. He d. in 1173, and was s. by his eldest son,

ROBERT DE CHANDOS. This feudal lord paid 40 marks for livery of the lands of his inheritance, in the 8th RICHARD I. He was s. by

ROBERT DE CHANDOS, who was s. by his son and heir,

ROGER DE CHANDOS, whose wardship was granted by the crown to William de Cantilupe. This Roger along with other barons-marchers had frequent summonses in the reign of HENRY III. to march against the Welsh. He was s. by his son,

ROBERT DE CHANDOS, who, in the 50th HENRY III., doing his homage, had livery of the lands of his inheritance, and in the 10th EDWARD I. was in the expedition then made into Wales. Upon his death, which happened in the 30th EDWARD I., it was found that he held the manor of Snodhull, with its appurtenances, by barony and the service of two knights' fees. He was s. by his son,

SIR ROGER DE CHANDOS. This feudal lord was in the Scottish wars temp. EDWARD II., and received the honour of knighthood with Prince Edward, and many others, by bathing, prior to going upon one of those expeditions. In the 15th EDWARD II. he was made sheriff of Herefordshire, and again in the 1st EDWARD III., when he was made governor of the castle of Hereford. "But of his successors," says Dugdale, "I am not able to continue a direct series." We come therefore to

ROGER DE CHANDOS, brother and heir of Thomas de Chandos, deceased. This Roger performing his fealty in the 7th EDWARD III., had livery of his lands, and the next year was constituted sheriff of Herefordshire and governor of the castle of Hereford. In the 19th of the same reign, being then a banneret, he received a military summons to attend the king into France, and was summoned to parliament as a BARON from 20 December, 1337, to 22 October, 1355. He m. 1st, Catherine, dau. of Richard, Lord Talbot; and 2ndly, Maud, dau. of Sir John Acton, and d. 1355, leaving by her a son,

SIR THOMAS DE CHANDOS, Knt., who does not appear by the existing enrolments to have been summoned to parliament. He was s. by his son,

SIR JOHN CHANDOS, Knt., who d. in 1430, leaving his sister, Margaret, his heir; which

MARGARET CHANDOS, m. Sir Thomas Berkeley, Knt., of Coberley, and left two daus., her co-heirs, viz.,

Margaret, m. to Nicholas Mattesden.

Alice, m. to Thomas Bruges, whence the DUKES OF CHANDOS.

Arms—Or, a pile, gu.

NOTE—There was a family of the same stock as the Barons Chandos, which gained considerable military reputation. It was seated at Radborne, co. Derby, an estate acquired by the marriage, temp. HENRY III., of SIR JOHN CHANDOS, Knt., with Margery, dau. and co-heir (with her sister Ermintrude, wife of Robert de Talbot, ancestor by her of the Talbots of Bishall, co. York) of Robert de Ferrara, Lord of Egginton and Radborne. Their son and heir was

SIR HENRY CHANDOS, Knt., of Radborne, who gave lands to find two lamps in the church of Radborne, A.D. 1290. By Eleanor his wife, he left a son and successor,

SIR JOHN CHANDOS, Knt., of Radborne, living 16th and 28th EDWARD I., who m. Elizabeth, dau. and co-heir of Sir Henry Braylesford, and was s. by his son,

SIR EDWARD CHANDOS, Knt., of Radborne, who m. Isabel, dau. of Sir John Twyford, Knt., and had issue,

I. JOHN (Sir), his heir.

II. Robert, d. unm.

I. Margaret, who m. Robert de Ireland, and had a dau., Isabella de Ireland, one of the co-heirs of Sir John Chandos. She m. Sir John de Annesley, Knt., but d. s. p.

II. Elizabeth, d. unm.

III. ALANORE, who m. Sir John Lawton, Knt., and had an only dau. and heir, ELIZABETH LAWTON, who m. Sir Peter de la Pole, and was ancestress of the POLES OF RADBORNE, co. Derby.

The elder son and successor,

SIR JOHN CHANDOS, of Radborne, a distinguished warrior, one of the original knights of the Garter at the foundation of that illustrious order, acted a brilliant part in the various military achievements of his time. On the memorable field of Cressy, he was entrusted by King EDWARD with the task of directing and defending the Prince of Wales; in the 30th EDWARD III., he fought at Poitiers; and in three years after, in consideration of his gallantry, obtained a grant from Prince Edward of two parts of the manor of Kirketon, in Lincolnshire, to hold for life. In the same year, being retained by King EDWARD to serve him in the office of vice-chamberlain, he received £100 per annum out of the exchequer, and shortly after, in recompense of "his great services in the wars and otherwise," had a grant to himself and his heirs for ever of the Barony of St. Saviour le Viscount, whereon he erected a castle. In 1364, the battle of Auray was fought against Charles of Blois, in which the famed Bertrand du Guesclin was made prisoner, and the victory there achieved is ascribed by all historians to the ability and prowess of Sir John Chandos, who had the chief command of the army of the Comte de Montfort. In the 41st EDWARD III., Sir John accompanied the expedition of the BLACK PRINCE into Spain on behalf of PETER, King of Castille, and held a high command at the battle of Nazar. He subsequently became constable of Aquitaine and seneschal of Poitiers. The career of this gallant soldier "the pride of English chivalry," soon after terminated, for in 1369, he was slain in the wars of Gascoigne in a skirmish at the bridge of Lusac, "to the great sorrow," adds Dugdale, "of both kingdoms, whereof the King of France himself was so apprehensive, that he passionately said, there was not any souldier living so able to make peace betwixt both crowns as he." "Sir John Chandos," says Froissart, "kept a noble and great establishment, and he had the means of doing it, for the King of England, who loved him much, wished it should be so. He was certainly worthy of it; for he was a sweet-tempered knight, courteous, benign, amiable, liberal, courageous, prudent, and loyal in all affairs, and bore himself valiantly on every occasion." He was buried at Mortemer, and his epitaph is recorded in "Les Annales d'Aquitaine par Bouchet." He left no issue.

CHAVENT—BARON CHAVENT.

By Writ of Summons, dated 29 December, 1299.

Lineage.

PETER DE CHAUMPVENT, OR CHAVENT, having been engaged in the wars of Gascony temp. EDWARD I., was summoned to parliament as a BARON, 29 December, 1299, and d. in 1302, leaving a son and heir, John de Chavent (Courthope's Historic Peerage), who did not, however, receive a summons to parliament.

Arms—Paly of six, arg. and az., a fesse, gu.

CHAWORTH—BARON CHAWORTH.

By Writ of Summons, dated 6 February, 1299.

Lineage.

About the latter end of King WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR's reign,

PATRICK DE CADURCIA, vulgarly called Chaworth, a native of Little Brittany, made a grant of certain mills in Gloucestershire to the monks of St. Peter's Abbey. To this Patrick s.

PATRICK DE CHAWORTH, who in the 33rd HENRY II., upon the collection of the scutage of Galway, accounted six pounds for the knight's fees belonging to the honour of Striguil. This feudal lord was s. by

PAIN DE CHAWORTH, who, in the 2nd HENRY III., being at that time one of the barons marchers, became surety for Isabel de Mortimer that she should come to the king's exchequer on the octaves of St. Michael to satisfy for such debts as she owed to the late King JOHN. Pain de Chaworth m. Gundred, dau. and heir of William de la Ferte (heir to Margaret de la Ferte, 2nd dau and co-heir of William de Briwere, a great feudal lord, who d. in 1226), and was s. at his decease by his son,

PATRICK DE CHAWORTH, who in the 23rd HENRY III., being then under age, compounded with the king for his own wardship and marriage, paying £500 for the same. In the 29th of the same reign he received a precept from the crown, whereby he was commanded to use all his power and diligence to annoy the Welsh then in hostility. He m. Hawyse, dau. and heir of Sir Thomas de Londres, Lord of Kidwilly, in Wales, and had issue,

PAIN, } all of whom, in 54th Henry III., joining the Hervey, } Crusade, attended Prince Edward to the Holy Patric, } Land.

with two daus., Eve, m. to Robert Tibetot, and Anne. This feudal lord d. in 1267, and was s. by his eldest son,

PAIN DE CHAWORTH, who, in the 5th EDWARD I., was constituted general of the king's army in West Wales: whereupon Roger de Mortimer had command to aid him with all his power, and to admit him into all his castles and garrisons; at which time he was so successful that the Welsh sued for peace, and did homage to the king. This gallant soldier d. s. p. in 1278, and was s. by his only surviving brother,

PATRIC DE CHAWORTH, who m. the Lady Isabel de Beauchamp, dau. of William, Earl of Warwick, and d. in 1382, leaving by her (who m. 2ndly, Hugh le Despenser), an only dau. and heiress, MAUD DE CHAWORTH, who m. Henry Plantagenot, Earl of Lancaster, nephew of King EDWARD I.

Thus terminated this great feudal branch of the family, but another branch had diverged from

WILLIAM DE CHAWORTH, son of Robert, brother of Patric, the first feudal lord. This William, in the 2nd year of King JOHN, paid £5 fine that he might not go beyond sea. He was s. by his son and heir,

ROBERT DE CHAWORTH, who in the 6th of JOHN, paid a fine of 100 marks, and one palfrey for his relief, and that he might have the king's charter for those lands he then held by military service, whereof he had no grant. He d. s. p., and was s. by his brother,

WILLIAM DE CHAWORTH, who m. Alice, dau. of Robert, and sister and co-heir (with her sister Joane, wife of Robert de Latham, of Lancashire) of Thomas de Alfreton, and was s. at his decease by his son,

THOMAS DE CHAWORTH, who was summoned to parliament as a BARON 6 February, 1299. But his lordship had no other summons, nor had any of his descendants, who long flourished in the co. of Derby and Nottingham. One of these descendants, THOMAS CHAWORTH, Esq., of Wyverton, Notts, m. Jane, dau. of Galfrid Luttrell, and was father of THOMAS CHAWORTH, who d. v. p., leaving by Joan-Margaret his wife, dau. of Sir Richard Pole, a son, WILLIAM CHAWORTH, whose wife was Alicia, dau. and heir of Sir John de Caltoft, and whose son and heir was SIR THOMAS CHAWORTH, who m. 1st, Nicola, dau. of Sir Reginald Braybrook, and by her had a dau. Elizabeth, m. to John, 5th Lord Scrope, of Masham. Sir Thomas m. 2ndly, Isabella, dau. and co-heir of Sir Thomas Aylesbury, and had with other issue,

WILLIAM (Sir), his heir, m. Elizabeth, dau. of Sir Nicholas Bowel, Knt., of Repinghall, and left issue,

THOMAS, m. Lady Margaret Talbot, and d. s. p. 22nd EDWARD IV.

JOAN, m. John Ormond, Esq., and left three daus., co-heirs, viz., JOAN, m. Thomas Dinham, Esq.; ELIZABETH, m. to Sir Anthony Babington, of Dethick; and ANNE, m. to William Mering.

George (3rd son), m. Alicia Annealey, and was father of Thomas, who m. Ankaret Serleby, and had a son, George, who d. 1521, leaving by Catherine Babington his wife, a son, Sir John, who m. Maria Paston, and had a son, Sir George Chaworth, who m. Anne Paston.

CHAWORTH—VISCOUNT CHAWORTH.

By Letters Patent, dated 4 March, 1627.

Lineage.

SIR GEORGE CHAWORTH, Knt., son of John Chaworth, Esq., of Crophill Butler, co. Nottingham (a descendant of the old feudal Lords Chaworth), by Jane his wife, dau. of David Vincent, Esq., of Stoke D'Abernon, in Surrey, was created a peer of Ireland, as BARON CHAWORTH, of Trim, co. Meath, and VISCOUNT CHAWORTH, of Armagh, 4 March, 1627. He m. Mary, dau. of Thomas Knyveton, Esq., of Myrcaston, co. Derby, and left at his decease a son and successor,

JOHN CHAWORTH, 2nd Viscount Chaworth, who m. Penelope, dau. of Edward Noel, Viscount Campden, and had issue, PATRICIUS, his heir.

Elizabeth, who m. William, 3rd Lord Byron, and was mother of William, 4th Lord Byron, great-grandfather of GEORGE GORDON, 6th Lord Byron, the Poet.

Mary, m. to Sir Michael Armine, Bart.

The son and successor,

PATRICIUS CHAWORTH, 3rd Viscount Chaworth, m. Grace, 2nd dau. of John, 8th Earl of Rutland, and by her (who m. 2ndly, Sir William Langhorn, Bart.) had a dau. and heiress, viz.,

JULIANA, who m. Chambre, 5th Earl of Meath, and had, with other issue, a son, EDWARD, 7th Earl of Meath, great-grandfather of WILLIAM, present EARL OF MEATH.

At his lordship's decease, 15 February, 1699, the title became extinct. A considerable portion of the estates of the Chaworth family eventually centered in MARY-ANNE CHAWORTH, of Annealey, co. Nottingham, only child of WILLIAM CHAWORTH, Esq.,

Of a time-honoured race—"

That lady, celebrated in the poems of Lord Byron, m. in 1805, John Musters, Esq., of Colwick Hall, Notts., and d. at Wyverton Hall, in February, 1832, in consequence of the alarm and danger to which she had been exposed during an attack on Colwick Hall by a party of rioters from Nottingham. Her grandson is the present JOHN CHAWORTH-MUSTERS, Esq., of Annealey, Colwick, and Wyverton, Notts.

CHERLTON—BARONS CHERLTON OF POWYS.

By Writ of Summons, dated 26 July, 1313,

Lineage.

The Barony of Cheriton, of Powys, was created by writ of summons to John de Cheriton, who acquired the feudal Barony of Pole (Welshpool), co. Montgomery, comprised in the ancient principality of Powys, in right of his wife Hawys, heiress of the Wenwynwyn branch of the sovereigns of Powys, derived from MERVYN, King of Powys, 3rd son of Rhodri Mawr, who by inheritance and marriage re-uniting the states of North Wales, South Wales, and Powys, became King of all Wales, A.D. 843, 5th in lineal succession to his memorable progenitor, St. Cadwalader Bendigellig (the Blessed), "as well saint as monarch," crowned King of the Britains, A.D. 676, whose standard displayed the "red dragon," transmitted as the distinctive cognizance of his royal race.

Sixth in descent from Mervyn ap Rhodri Mawr, was Meredith ap Bleddyn, Prince of Powys, who adopted the "black lion of Powys" (arg., a lion rampant, sa.) in substitution of his father's arms, "or, a lion rampant, gu." By his 2nd wife Efa, dau. of Bleddrys ap Ednowain Bendew, Lord of Tegeinglle (Flint), he was father of Jorwerth, alias Gervase Goch ap Meredith, Lord of Mochnant-is-Rhayadr, whose name occurs in deeds, 1157-1171, and who bore "the black lion of Powys." This noble, who acquired lands in the shief of Gerard de Tournay, in Shropshire, including Sutton, Brockton, and Ellardine, and received the manor of Rowton, near High Ercall, from HENRY II., m. Matilda, dau. of Sir Roger de Manly, of Manly, co. Chester, and had issue,

1. Madoc ap Gervase Goch, Lord of Sutton, who, about 1167, as son and heir, granted to Wombridge Priory the advowson of his church of Sutton, and willed that his body, wherever he might chance to die, might be buried at that monastery. He d. s. p. circa 1194.

2. Griffin ap Jorwerth, alias Gervase Goch, Lord of Sutton, who confirmed the charter which his brother had given to Wombridge Priory, and directed that he should be buried at Wombridge. In 1195 and 1196, he is named in the Salop Pipe Roll as fining for his lands; and by a return of the year 1211, it appears that he then held, among other lands, the manor of Sutton, [by the gift of King HENRY II., by the service of being latimarius (interpreter) between England and Wales. He m. before Michaelmas, 1196, Matilda, sister and co-heir of Ralph le Strange, Baron of Knockyn, Alveley and Weston, and appears, with the husbands of the other co-heiresses, as fining 200 marks for seizin of their lands. This lady, who d. 4 May, 1242, surviving her husband twenty-two years, brought him and his heirs the whole vill of Dovaneston (Dovanston) and Kineverdeston (Kynaston), for which she concurred with her husband in surrendering her third part of Knockyn to her cousin, John le Strange, of Ness. Kynaston became a seat of a branch of Griffins' and Matilda's descendants, and from it was derived the patronymic of their widespread line. Griffith ap Jorwerth, alias Gervase Goch, who d. circa January, 1221, had issue,

1. Madoc ap Griffin, Lord of Sutton, whose name occurs 1221-1262. Soon after his succession, "Madoc, son of Griffin, and Duce his wife," are found suing Imbert, prior of Wenlock; and the case was heard by the king himself, when, in August, 1226, he visited Shrewsbury. In Michaelmas Term, 1228, the prior of Wenlock was prosecuting a suit at Westminster against "Madoc, son of Griffin, and Cecilia" his wife, tenants of lands in Sutton, but the king had issued a mandate to his justices in banco that the case should be postponed till Madoc should be released from prison, he having been arrested by Llewelyn, Prince of North Wales. Madoc de Sutton was returned in 1253-4, as one of eleven persons in the cos. of Salop and Stafford, who, being of less than baronial degree, were yet possessed of lands to the extent of £20 annual value. He alienated the manor of Sutton-Madoc, as well as Rowton and Ellardine, to John le Strange, 3rd Baron of Ness and Cheswardine, who d. early in 1269. Madoc m. Duce, alias Cecilia, whose name occurs 1226-9, and had a dau.,

Isabel, who d. about January, 1302, m. between 1255 and 1274 to Henry de Morf, living 1274, whose name occurs also October, 1292, and 12 July, 1296. By him, who was dead in 1302, Isabel was mother of

1. William de Morf, whose name occurs 1303.

2. Henry de Morf, b. circa 1257, and living 1323.

3. Howel ap Griffin, whose name occurs circa 1245.

4. Griffin ap Griffin, whose name occurs circa 1231, father (by Agnes, dau. of Robert Bulkeley, Lord of Bulkeley, co. Chester) of

Griffith, of Cae Howel and Kynaston, who, by the name of "Griffith de Kynaston," witnessed, in 1313, a grant from Hugh Fitz-Philip to Haghmond Abbey, of lands near Oswestry, ancestor of the Kynastons of Kynaston; the Kynastons of Stocks, co. Salop; the Kynastons of Oteley, co. Salop; and the Kynastons of Hardwick, barts., of which last line John Kynaston, Esq., M.P. for Salop, claimed in 1731, and his grandson, John Kynaston, Esq., in 1800, the Barony of Cheriton of Powys.

5. Jorwerth ap Jorwerth, alias Gervase Goch, Baron of Main-yn-Meifod, progenitor of the Barons of Main-yn-Meifod; the Mathews of Tref; the Morris's of Bryngwallie; the Powys's, Lords Lilford; the Parrys of Main-yn-Meifod; and the Lloyds of Sharpley, in Llanarmon, Dyffryn Clwyd.

Meredith ap Bleddyn, whose demise took place in 1182, was father, by his 1st consort Hunydd, dau. of Eunydd ap Gwernwy, Lord of Dyffryn Clwyd, with other issue, of two sons,

1. Madoc ap Meredith, Prince of Lower Powys, from him called Powys Fadoc, who d. at Winchester in 1160, and was buried in Meifod Church, near Mathrafal, his castle-palace on the banks of the Vwmwy, where the carved stone lid of his coffin, with the cognizance of the dragon, is still to be seen. According to the Welch chronicle he was "one who feared God and relieved the poor." By the Princess Susanna his consort, dau. of GRIFFITH AP CYMAN, King of North Wales, this monarch had, with other issue,

1. Griffith Maelor ap Madoc, who s. as Lord of Maelor or Bromfield, and Mochnant ys Rhaladr, in Powys Fadoc, a man "wise and liberal, nor was he less brave, nor less a friend to his country. He was valiantly engaged at the head of his men of Bromfield at the battle of Crogen (Chirk Castle) where HENRY II. was repulsed." Griffith, who bore paley of eight, arg. and gu., over all a lion rampant, sable, d. in 1191, and was buried at Meifod, leaving, by his consort the Princess Angharad, dau. of Owen Gwynedd, Prince of North Wales, an only son,

Madoc ap Griffith, Lord of Bromfield, ancestor of Griffith Vychan, Lord of Glyndwrwy, paternal representative of the sovereigns of Powys, who m. the Lady Eleanor, elder dau. and co-heir of Thomas ap Llewelyn, Lord of South Wales, representative of the princes of South Wales, by his wife Eleanor Goch, dau. and heir of Philip ap Ivor, Lord of Cardigan, by the Princess Catherine, dau. and heir of Llewelyn, Prince of North Wales. By this illustrious alliance the Lord of Glyndwrwy was father of two sons,

1. Owen ap Griffith Vychan, Lord of Glyndwrwy, the chivalrous Owen Glyndwr, who, representing the royal lineage of North Wales, South Wales, and Powys, asserted his claim by arms to the sovereignty of his country.

2. Tudyr ap Griffith Vychan, Lord of Gwyddelwern in Edeirnion, upwards of twenty-four years old, 3 September, 10th RICHARD II., when, as "Tudor de Glyn-dore," he appeared as a witness in the Scrope and Grosvenor controversy. Terminating a gallant career at the battle fought between the English and the Welch forces, 15 March, 1405, at Mynydd-y-Pwll-Melyn, in Brecknockshire, he left, by Mawd his wife, dau. and heir of Juwan ap Howel, derived from Tudor Trevor, Lord of Hereford, a dau. and heir, LOWRY, Lady of Gwyddelwern and a Baroness of Edeirnion, representative, in her issue, of her uncle Owen Glyndwr. This lady m. Griffith ap Einion, of Corsygedol, co. Merioneth, living Michaelmas, 1400, and 2nd and 3rd HENRY V., ancestor by her of the Vaughans of Corsygedol, represented as heir-general by Edward Lloyd Mostyn, 2nd Lord Mostyn; Yales of Plas-yn-Yale, co. Denbigh, whose representation in the female line devolved on the Lloyds of Plymlog and Gwerclas; and the Wynnes of Bryntangor, represented as heir-general by the Hughes's of Gwerclas.

3. Owen Vychan ap Madoc, Lord of Mechain-Yscoed, living 1165, when he despoiled his uncle, Jorwerth, alias Gervase Goch, of Mochnant-ys-Rhayadr, and slain at Carrehwfa in 1186 by Gwenwynwyn ap Owen Cyfeiliog. By Eleanor his wife, dau. of Maelgwyn Vychan, grandson of Rhys ap Tudyr Mawr, King of South Wales, he had two sons,

Llewelyn ap Owen Vychan, presumed to have been dead in March, or the beginning of May, 1241, father of Llewelyn Vychan ap Llewelyn, who, in March, or the beginning of May, 1241, with his uncle, by the description of "Llewelinus Waghnam et Audoenus Waghnam avunculus suus," had fined £50, that they might have seizin of their lands in Maghemant. King HENRY, by a letter dated Newborough, 14 July, 1241, charges David ap Llewelyn, who had usurped the throne, with having unjustly deforced Owen Vaughan and his nephews of the lands which had been adjudged to them, and among the barons who did homage to HENRY at the commencement of 1245, is "Llewelinus filius Llewelini de Methaim." This noble was father of two sons,

1. Meredith ap Llewelyn Vychan, Lord of Mechain, living 1258.

2. Llewelyn Vychan ap Llewelyn Vychan.

Owen Vychan ap Owen Vychan, whose name occurs with that of his nephew, Llewelyn Vychan, 14 July 1241, and 1245, father of a dau. and heir, Angharad, who is stated to have m. Griffith ap Jorwerth Voel.

3 Ellis ap Madoc, who received from his father Crogen (Chirk Castle) and adjoining lands, but despoiled of his territory and the castle of Crogen, had assigned to him seven townships. He was living in 1202, and is supposed to have d. s. p.

4 Owen Brogyntyn ap Madoc, Lord of Edeirnion, Dinmael, and Abertanar, in Powys Fadoc, one of the most distinguished warriors of his age, took a conspicuous part in the most prominent incidents of a period peculiarly eventful in the annals of the Cymry. Accepting (it is supposed in succession to his father, who resided at Oswestry and Caereinion, which he built.) the Shropshire fee of Porkington (the "Burtone" of Doomsday Book), near Oswestry, he was designated by the Welch "Owen Brogyntyn," and by the English, "Owen de Porkington," a fee which he must have held immediately under King HENRY II., then palatine earl of Shropshire by escheat. Before 1161 the sheriff of Shropshire, by the king's order, had paid to "Oen de Porchinton" the livery of £30 10s. 6d., equivalent to £1,500 a-year modern currency. In 1162, "Oen de Porchinton" received £27 7s. 6d.; in 1163, £27 7s. 6d.; in 1165, £5 13s. 4d.; in 1166, £56; and in 1169, forty sol per breve regis (Rot. Pipe, 15th HENRY II., Salop). Notwithstanding the close alliance implied by these grants, the Lord of Edeirnion must have wavered in steady attachment to the English monarch. The Welch chronicle, in reference to the league against King HENRY and the events of the summer of 1166, states that "the sonnes of Madoc ap Meredith and the power of Powys were against the king," and local tradition records that, entering with his brother, Griffith Maelor, into alliance with Owen Gwynedd, Prince of North Wales, and RHYDAP Tudor, King of South Wales, to resist the renewed attempt of HENRY on Cambrian independence, Owen Brogyntyn, as one of the leaders of the allied forces, contributed essentially to the victory over the English monarch at the battle of Crogen, fought beneath Castell Crogen, the present Chirk Castle, where the battle-field is still called Adwyr Beddel, or the pass of the graves. This abandonment of HENRY by Owen Brogyntyn is confirmed by the total or partial suspension in 1164-5 of the payments previously made to him, but the subsequent charges on the Pipe Roll indicate his renewed adhesion to HENRY. "Owen de Brogyntyn" made a grant to Basingwerk Abbey of Bala Lake, witnessed by Rainer, bishop of St. Asaph, 1186-1224 (Sebright MSS., cited by Pennant). David ap Llewelyn, Prince of North Wales, by charter, dated 1240, on the day of St. James the Apostle, confirms to the monastery of Basingwerk all the donations of his father Llewelyn and other ancestors, "item ex dono Hoen de Porkingtona in totum Wennewen cum omnibus hominibus ejusdem villæ et cum pertinentiis" (Dugdale's Monast., new edit., vol. ii., p. 203). Owen Brogyntyn, whose arms were "the black lion of Powys," m. Marredd, dau. of Einion ap Seysmyllt, Lord of the Cantref of Merioneth, subsequently wife of Thomas, Lord of Rhiwllwyd ap Rhodri, Lord of Anglesey, ancestor by her of the house of Gwydyr. By this lady he had, with junior issue, three sons,

Griffith ap Owen Brogyntyn, Lord of Half Edeirnion, living 1200, and 6 January, 29th HENRY III., progenitor of the early Barons of Crogen and Branas in Edeirnion, Barons of Edeirnion, represented as heir-general by the house of Gwerclas, and the Lords of Hendwr in Edeirnion, Barons of Edeirnion.

Bleddyn ap Owen Brogyntyn, Lord of Dinmael, living 25 May, 2nd HENRY III., the date of a writ tested at Woodstock, whereby that monarch intimates to Llewelyn, Prince of Wales, that "B'edh Alius Oeni de Porkington" and others, "venerunt ad Adem et servicium nostrum" (Rhymer's "Fœdera," 1816, i., 151), ancestor of the Lords of Bug in Edeirnion, Barons of Edeirnion, represented as heir-general by Spencer Bulkeley Wynn, 2nd Lord Newborough, whose 2nd son, the Honourable Charles-Henry Wynn, s. to Rug, pursuant to the will of Sir Robert-Williams Vaughan, 3rd and last Baronet of Nanney (see BURKE's Landed Gentry, ed. 1864, Wynn of Rug), and the Macsmores of Maesmore, in Dinmael (see BURKE's Landed Gentry, ed. 1846, Supplement, Lloyd of Maesmore).

Jorwerth ap Owen Brogyntyn, Lord of Half Edeirnion, ancestor, by the Lady Efa, dau. and heir of Prince Madoc Goch, Lord of Mowddwy, younger son of Gwynwyn, Prince of Powys Cyfeiliog, of the Hughes's of Gwerclas, Lords of Kymmer-yn-Edeirnion, represented as heir-general by John Hughes Lloyd, Esq., commander R.N., 2nd son but eventual heir of the late Richard Hughes Lloyd, Esq., of Plymog, Gwerclas, and Bashall; and as heir-male by the Rev. William O'Farrell Hughes, grandson and heir of the late William Hughes, Esq., of Pen-y-Clawdd (see BURKE's Landed Gentry, ed. 1846, and ed. 1863, Hughes of Gwerclas).

II. GRIFFITH AP MEREDITH, of whose line we treat.

The 2nd son of King MEREDITH AP BLEDDYN, viz.,

GRIFFITH AP MEREDITH, Lord of Mowddwy, submitted with his father to HENRY I., and was, it is stated, summoned by that monarch to his baronial parliaments. Griffith, who bore

"or, a lion's gamb., erased, in bend, gu.," took an active part in the feuds and warfare of the period, and d. v. p. in 1128, leaving, by Gwerfyl his wife, dau. of Gwrgenas ap Howel, of Caer-a-Chydwyn, an only child,

OWEN CYFEILIOG AP GRIFFITH, Prince of Powys Cyfeiliog, or Higher Powys, to which he s. on the demise of his grandfather, Meredith ap Bleddyn. In 1176 he attended the summons of HENRY to a conference with him at Oxford on Welch affairs. Owen Cyfeiliog, "Lord of Mathrafal, the poet and the prince" (Southey), was a distinguished bard, and among other productions of his muse, which have been transmitted to us, is his Welch ode called "Hirias," or the "Blue Long Horn." In the year 1170 this prince founded the Cistercian abbey of Ystrad-Marchell (Strata Marcella), and d. in 1197, leaving, by the Princess Gwenllïan, his consort, dau. of Owen Gwynedd, Prince of North Wales, an only child,

GWENWYNWYN AP OWEN CYFEILIOG, Prince of Powys Cyfeiliog, from him called Powys Wenwynwyn. This prince, so finely portrayed in the "Betrothed" of Sir Walter Scott, recovered his castle from archbishop Hubert, who commanded the armies of RICHARD I. against the Welch. He next assisted Maelgwyn to surprise and imprison his brother Griffith, Lord of South Wales, and Griffith's person being delivered to Gwenwynwyn, he was given up to the English. Two years after, in 1198, ambitious of achieving the independence of his country, he raised a large army, and besieged William de Braose in his castle of Payn, in Radnor, but was defeated in a battle near the castle. By a grant dated 1199, the original of which, in perfect preservation, is now in the possession of Miss Conway Griffith, of Carreglwyd, Anglesey, "Wenunwen Alius Oeni" sold to the monks of Ystrad Marchell certain lands near the abbey. King JOHN of England granted 15 April, in the 1st year of his reign, to "Wenonwen," the manor of Esseford-i-Derebair. By the same monarch a safe conduct was granted to "Wenonwen," 3 August, 6th JOHN (1206). In 1208 he was in arms with Llewelyn, Prince of North Wales, and with other great men of Wales, and the two princes drove King JOHN from the country. Gwenwynwyn adhered but two years to Llewelyn, deserted again to JOHN, and a convention between the English king and "Wenon Alius Hoeni de Keneloc" being concluded at Shrewsbury, 10th JOHN (1210), Gwenwynwyn was pursued by Llewelyn and driven within the walls of Chester. In the 2nd of HENRY III. (1218) Gwenwynwyn appears to have been dead, his widow Margaret living, and his heirs under age. By Margaret his consort, dau. of Robert Corbet, feudal Baron of Caus, Gwenwynwyn, who resumed the arms of his line, subsequently borne by his descendants, viz., "or, a lion rampant, gu.," had issue two children,

1. GRIFFITH AP GWENWYNWYN, of whom presently.

II. Madoc Goch ap Gwenwynwyn, Lord of Mowddwy and Caereinion, ordered 15 July, 1223, to be sent to Bridgenorth, and certified to have arrived there on the 19th following. We find him designated "Maddoc Alius Wenunwen," a baron of North Wales, 6 January, 29th HENRY III. (1245). "Madant Alius Wenwynwyn" is party (with "Dominus Llewelinus, Alius Griffini principis Wallie" and others) to a treaty "inter Magnates Scotia et Wallie quod non facient pacem cum Rege Anglie sine mutuo consensu et assensu," 42nd HENRY III. (1268). This prince dying without male issue, his lordships of Mowddwy and Caereinion became the apanage of his nephew William, 4th son of Prince Griffith ap Wenwynwyn. Madoc Goch m. and was father of a dau. and heir,

The Lady Efa, who m. Jorwerth, Lord of Half Edeirnion, 3rd son of Owen Brogyntyn, Lord of Edeirnion, Dinmael, and Abertanar, and was mother by him of Griffith ap Jorwerth, living 20 and 22 July, 12th EDWARD I. (1284), on the former of which days he received a royal pardon (Rot. Wal., 2nd EDWARD I., memb. 5), and on the latter a grant of confirmation to hold his land "per baroniam" (ibid); ancestor of the Hughes's of Gwerclas in Edeirnion, co. Merioneth, lords of Kymmer-yn-Edeirnion and barons o. Edeirnion. The Lady Efa m. 2ndly, Owen ap Bleddyn, of the lineage of Tudor Trevor, Lord of Hereford, father by her of Jorwerth Gam ap Owen, ancestor of the distinguished house of Mostyn of Mostyn, whose heir-general is the present Edward Lloyd Mostyn, 2nd Lord Mostyn.

Gwynwynwyn was s. by his elder son,

GRIFFITH AP GWENWYNWYN, Prince of Powys-Wenwynwyn. On 16 July, 1223, Ranulph, Earl of Chester, was ordered to see that the constable of Brug (Bridgenorth), Shropshire, do send the sons of Gwynwynwyn to Gloucester; and on the 19th, the king being then at Gloucester, the earl certifies their arrival. As the penalty of disaffection to Llewelyn, Prince of North Wales, Griffith's country was taken by that monarch; but, temporising, he joined Llewelyn, and, as a test of his sincerity, took and demolished the castle of Mold, then a frontier town. He must still have changed, for it is a matter of complaint on the part of Llewelyn, that EDWARD I. of England had received and protected his rebel subject, Griffith ap Gwnwynwyn. In 1274 "Dominus Griffithus Alius Wenwynwin Powisia Dominus" proceeded to England, leaving his son Owen with Llewelyn in free custody. Griffith m. Hawys, dau. of John le Strange, feudal Lord of Knockyn and Cheswardine, and by her, who had a royal grant of the manor of Stretton-dale, and the wardship of the lands in capite of her grandson, Griffin de la Pole, had six sons and one dau.,

I. OWEN AP GRIFFITH, of whom presently.

II. Llewelyn ap Griffith, living after the Epiphany, 1257, and also 18th EDWARD I., who s. to Mochnant Ucha and Mechain Uwch Coed. "Llewelyn, the son of Griffin, the son of Wenwynwin," granted to his brother Owen, all his right in the lands and tenements which had been their father's in Wales, with certain exceptions to himself; and "Owen, the son of Griffith, the son of Wenwynwin," granted to his brother Llewelyn the lands of "Motnant Hatrhialadr" (Mochnant Llanrhialadr). By a deed of inspeximus of 20 July, 3rd HENRY V., Edward Cheriton, Lord of Powys, confirmed a charter "which that nobleman Llewelyn, son of Griffith, son of Wenwynwin our kinsman (consanguineanus), made to his burgesses of Llanfyllin in these words: 'Know that I, Llewelyn, son of Griffith, Lord of Mechain-uscheaet and Mochnant-unrhaid, have given, granted, and by this present charter confirmed, to my trustee and well-beloved burgesses of Llanfyllin, &c., &c.'" Llewelyn m. Margaret, dau. of Meredith Goch, Lord of Mochnant, grandson of Jorwerth, alias Gervase Goch, Lord of Mochnant-ys-Rhialadr, and was by her father of a dau.,

Efa, who m. Madoc ap David, Lord of Hendwr in Edeirinion, living 15th EDWARD II. (1321-2), and was by him mother of an eldest son David ap Madoc, Lord of Hendwr, living 2 November, 8th EDWARD III., who d. 20th RICHARD II., and a dau. Gwerfyl, mother, by her husband Grono ap Tudyr, of a son Sir Tudyr ap Grono, grandfather of Sir Owen Tudor, Knt., progenitor of the royal house of Tudor.

III. John ap Griffith, who had the third part of Caereinion, released at Westminster, 16 June, — to his brother Owen his right in their father's lands; and by an agreement acknowledged in the Chancery at Westminster, 17 May, 17th EDWARD I. (1289), his brother Owen granted to him five villis in Carregmaen. He d. s. p.

IV. William ap Griffith, alias Wilcox, surnamed "De la Pole," Lord of Mowddwy, which was granted to him by his brother Owen, to be held of himself. This noble, who was living 17th EDWARD I., and dead 9th EDWARD II. (1315), m. the Lady Eleanor, junior co-heir of the monarchs of South Wales and Powys, 3rd dau. of Thomas ap Llewelyn, Lord of Yscoed, twenty-eight years of age and upwards, Sunday next after the Feast of St. Michael, 2 October, 2nd EDWARD III. (1328), and sister and co-heir of Owen ap Thomas, Lord of Half Yscoed, Monday next after the Feast of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross, 18th EDWARD III. (20 September, 1334). By this lady he had,

1 Griffith ap William, son and heir, 12th EDWARD II., and as "Griffin, son of William de la Pole," Lord of Mowddwy, appointed high sheriff of Merionethshire, 4th EDWARD III.

2 John ap William, Lord of Mowddwy, under age at the death of his father, 12th EDWARD II., m. Catherine, only dau. and heir of Sir Foulk Corbet, Knt., of Watlesborough, and had with a son, Fowlk ap John, Lord of Mowddwy, who d. s. p., seized of the manor of Watlesborough, a dau., ELIZABETH, who as heiress of her brother, succeeded to Mowddwy. She m. Sir Hugh de Burgh, Knt., and with him had seizin of the manor of Watlesborough, 9th HENRY VI. (1438), and they held the fourth part of the Barony of Caus, co. Salop, viz., a moiety of the manor of Worthen, and the manors of Over Garthor and Banghalthre. Their son, SIR JOHN DE BURGH, Knt., son and heir, 9th HENRY VI., high sheriff for Shropshire in 1442, d. 9th EDWARD IV. He m. Johanna, dau. and heir of Sir William Clopton, Knt., of Clopton, co. Warwick, and Radbrooke, co. Gloucester; the latter of whom d. seized of Radbrooke, 7th HENRY IV. In 14th EDWARD IV., the manor of Watlesborough, with other extensive domains, was released and confirmed for life to this lady, as relict of Sir John Burgh, by Sir John Lingen, Knt., William Newton, John Leighton, Thomas Mytton, Esqrs., and others. By her Sir John de Burgh had four daus. and co-heirs,

1 Angharad, Lady of Watlesborough and Cardeston, who m. John Leighton of Stretton, co. Salop, jure uxoris Lord of Watlesborough and Cardeston, and by him, who was thrice high sheriff of Shropshire, was mother of Sir Thomas Leighton, knight-banneret and knight of the body to HENRY VII., M.P. for Shropshire in the reigns of HENRY VII. and HENRY VIII., ancestor of Sir Baldwin Leighton of Watlesborough, 7th baronet.

2 Isabel, dau. and co-heir, m. Sir John Lingen, Knt., of Lingen and Sutton, co. Hereford, high sheriff of Herefordshire, temp. EDWARD IV. and HENRY VII., and was by him mother of Sir John Lingen, Knt., from whom derived, 8th in descent, Robert Lingen, Esq., of Radbrooke, co. Gloucester, who assumed in 1748, by Act of Parliament, the surname and arms of BURTON, eldest son of Thomas Lingen, Esq., of Sutton Court, co. Hereford, by Anne his wife, sister and heir of Thomas Burton, Esq., of Longnor, co. Salop.

3 Elizabeth (the elder), dau. and co-heir, m. William Newport, Esq., ancestor of the NEWPORTS, Earls of Bradford, extinct, whose heiress, Anne, dau. of Richard Newport, 2nd Earl of Bradford, m. Sir Orlando Bridgeman, Bart., from which alliance derive the BRIDGEMANS, Earls of Bradford.

4 Elizabeth (the younger), dau. and co-heir, Lady of Mowddwy, m. Thomas Mytton, Esq., jure uxoris, Lord of Mowddwy, M.P. for Shrewsbury in 1472, high sheriff for Shropshire in 1483, who d. in 1504, by whom she was mother of William Mytton, Esq., Lord of Mowddwy, M.P. for Shrewsbury in 1491, ancestor of the Myttons of Halston, co. Salop, Lords of Mowddwy, represented by John Fox Mytton, Esq., son and heir of the late John Mytton, Esq., of Halston, co. Salop, last hereditary Lord of Mowddwy, M.P. for Shrewsbury: — Thornycroft, Esq., of Thornycroft, son of the Rev. Charles Mytton, rector of Eccleston, co. Chester, who assumed the name of Thornycroft, derived from Charles Mytton, Esq. of Chester, 4th son of Richard Mytton, Esq., of Halston, Lord of Mowddwy, and M.P. for Shrewsbury; the Myttons of Garth and Pontyscowryd, co. Montgomery, represented by Richard Herbert Mytton, Esq., of Garth and Pontyscowryd; of Sir Peter Mytton, of Llanerch Park, co. Denbigh, whose dau. and co-heir Anne m. Robert Davies, Esq., of Gwysaney, co. Flint, ancestor by her of the Davies's of Gwysaney, represented (1866) as heirs-general, by the COOKES of Owston and Gwystaney, and as heir male by Owen Davies, Esq., son of the late Thomas Davies, Esq., of Trefnant, co. Denbigh.

V. Griffith Vychan ap Griffith, who had Ddeuddwr, Merchel, and the tower tref or the towns on the border. An agreement was made at Westminster, 17 May, 17th EDWARD I., between "Owen, son of Griffith ap Wenwynwin and Griffith, his brother," granting to Griffith the land of Mechain Yscoed, with the appurtenances; by commission and writ, tested at Westminster, 18 June, 3rd EDWARD II. (1310), Griffin de la Pole and John de Cheriton were requested to allow 400 soldiers to be raised "de terra sua de Powys;" and by a writ tested at Westminster, 16 October, 7th EDWARD II., Griffith de la Pole obtains a pardon as an adherent of the Earl of Lancaster for his participation in the death of Gaveston, and the disturbance occasioned thereby. Griffith Vychan d. s. p.

VI. David ap Griffith succeeded to the fourth part of Caereinion; and by deed, dated at Westminster, 16 May, 17th EDWARD I., "David, the son of Griffin, the son of Wenwynwin," released to his eldest brother, Owen, all his right to his lands, as well in England as in Wales, for which Owen gave all the land of Mawddoc. David ap Griffith d. s. p.

1 Margaret, Verch Griffith ap Gwenwynwyn m. Foulk Fitzwarine, summoned to parliament as a BARON 23 June, 1295, and from that period to 12 October, 1314, and by him, who with her acquired the territory of Balleasley, was mother of Foulk Fitzwarine, 2nd baron, summoned to parliament from 6 October, 1315, to 22 January, 1336.

Griffith ap Gwenwynwyn was s. by his eldest son,

OWEN AP GRIFFITH, Prince of Powys-Wenwynwyn, designated "Lord de la Pole," Welchpool, Montgomeryshire, seated at Powys Castle, who succeeded to the comots of Cyfelliog, Arwstli, Llannerchydol, and the half of Caereinion. On him David, brother of Llewelyn ap Griffith, Prince of North Wales, conferred (concessit) his eldest dau., "in sponsor." He was with his father living Sunday next "post clausum pasche," 4th EDWARD I., and his inquisition post mortem as "Owen de la Pole," was taken 21st EDWARD I. (1292-3). It is stated that, summoned to a parliament held at Shrewsbury, Owen acknowledged his lands to be held under the crown of England in capite, under the tenure of free baronage, and resigned to the English monarch and his heirs the sovereignty of Powys-Wenwynwyn. This prince m. Johanna, only surviving child (by Katherine, dau. of Lord Strange of Knockyn) of Sir Robert Corbet, Knt., of Moreton Corbet, co. Salop, and sister of Thomas Corbet, who d. s. p. before his father; the Corbet estates passing to the issue of Sir Robert, by his 2nd marriage. By this lady, to whom, with other manors, that of Cyfelliog was assigned for her dower, Owen ap Griffith had issue a son and a dau., viz.,

GRIFFITH AP OWEN, surnamed "De la Pole," only son and heir, who d. unm., 2nd EDWARD II. (1309), and was s. by his sister and heir,

HAWYS GADARN (the Hardy), said to have been b. in 1291, set. nineteen years 4th EDWARD II., and living 9th EDWARD II. (1315), m. by the gift of King EDWARD II, JOHN DE CHERLTON, b., it is stated, in 1268 (younger son of Sir John de Cherlton, Knt., of Appley Castle, co. Salop), who obtained, 1st EDWARD II., a charter of free warren in all his demesne lands at Cherlton and Pontisbury, co. Salop; and the next year had a confirmation of the manor of Pontisbury, sometime belonging to Rhys ap Howel. In right of Hawys, John de Cherlton acquired the feudal Barony of Pole, held in capite of the Crown. The uncles of Hawys, with the exception of William ap Griffith, preferred a claim to her possessions, contending that she as a female, could not inherit her father's lands. They besieged Powys Castle, occupied at the time by her and her husband, whereupon the king directed his precept to Roger de Mortimer, then justice of Wales, to march thither for their relief and protection. Again, however, they were disturbed by the uncles, including Griffith Vychan, who had summons to appear before the king to answer for his proceedings; and to render Hawys and John de Cheriton more secure in their title, they had a royal charter, 7th EDWARD II., confirmatory of all their lands and castles in North Wales, South Wales, and Powys. In the same year, 26 July, 1313, John de Cheriton was summoned to parliament as Baron Cheriton de Powys, and from that period to 25 July, 1353. By writ, tested at York, 4 and 8 June, 12th EDWARD II. (1319), John de Cheriton was requested to raise 500 foot soldiers "de terris suis de Powys." His lordship was subsequently engaged in the wars of France. His armorial bearing was, "or, a lion rampant, gu.," the arms of the Prince of Powys, presumed to have been adopted consequent on his marriage. By Hawys Gadarn his wife (who d. before her husband, and was buried in the house of the Grey Friars at Shrewsbury, which she had founded), Lord Cheriton left, at his decease in 1353,

JOHN DE CHERLTON, 2nd baron, summoned to parliament from 15 March, 1354, to 20 November, 1360, as BARON CHERLTON, and from 14 August, 1362, to 4 October, 1373, as Lord Cheriton, of Powys. This nobleman being Lord Chamberlain to the king, was in the wars of Gascony, in attendance upon the BLACK PRINCE. His lordship m. Joan, dau. of Ralph, 1st Earl of Stafford, K.G., and dying in 1374, was s. by his son,

JOHN DE CHERLTON, 3rd baron, summoned to parliament as "Johanni de Cheriton de Powys," from 9 August, 1382, to 3 October, 1400. His lordship m. Maud, dau. of Roger de Mortimer, Earl of March; but d. s. p. anno 1400, and was s. by his brother,

EDWARD DE CHERLTON, 4th baron, summoned to parliament from 2 December, 1401, to 26 February, 1421. In the 9th of HENRY IV. this nobleman sustained great loss by the insurrection of the Welsh under Owen Glendower. In the next reign he had the thanks of parliament for his activity in apprehending the unfortunate Sir John Oldcastle, Lord Cobham, within the territory of Powys. His lordship m. Alianore, dau. of Thomas Holland, and sister and co-heir of Edmund Holland, both Earls of Kent, and widow of Roger Mortimer, Earl of March, by whom he had issue,

1. Joane, m. to Sir John Grey, K.G., Earl of Tankerville, in Normandy, whose grandson, John Grey, was summoned to parliament as "Johanni Grey de Powys," 15 November, 1482 (see that dignity).
- II. Joyce, m. to Sir John de Tiptoft, who was summoned to parliament, from 7 January, 1426, to 3 December, 1441. Dugdale says he bore the title of Lord Tiptoft and Powys, but he was never summoned by any other designation than "Johanni Tiptoft, ChEr," and had issue,

1 JOHN, created EARL OF WORCESTER, 1449, but attainted and beheaded in 1470, when his honours expired, but his son,

EDWARD DE TIPTOFT, was restored in blood, as EARL OF WORCESTER, dying, however, s. p. in 1485, his aunts became his co-heiresses to the BARONY OF TIPTOFT, and to his estates, while the EARLDOM EXPIRED.

- 1 Philippa, m. to Thomas, Lord de Ros.
- 2 Johanna, m. to Sir Edmund Inglethorpe.
- 3 Joyce, m. to Edmund Sutton, son and heir of John, Lord Dudley.

His lordship d. 1422, when the BARONY OF CHERLTON OF POWYS fell into ABEYANCE, between his daughters, and his estates devolved upon them as co-heirs. The lordship of Powys coming to the eldest dau., Joane, that lady's grandson, John Grey, had summons to parliament, in 1482, as LORD GREY, OF POWYS, but Sir Harris Nicolas, in his "Synopsis," considers that summons a new creation, and not a revival of the original dignity, and he is borne out in the opinion, he says, by a careful examination of the parliamentary rolls, wherein he finds the old lords denominated in almost all instances, LORDS CHERLTON, and he thence argues, that if it were meant to revive the suspended barony in the great-grandson of Edward, 4th and last Lord Cheriton, that personage would have been summoned as BARON CHERLTON, OF POWYS, and not as Lord Grey—a course which appears indisputable. The BARONY OF CHERLTON must therefore be deemed still in ABEYANCE.

Arms—Or, a lion rampant, gu.

NOTE.—A younger branch of this family, was ALAN DE CHERLTON, brother of the 1st baron, who in the 11th EDWARD II. had a charter for free warren in all his demesne lands at Appley, and other places in the co. of Salop, and was constituted in three years afterwards, governor of Montgomery

Castle; m. Elen, widow of Nicholas de St. Maur, and one of the daus. and co-heirs of Lord Zouch—from which union descended the family of Charlton, of Apley Castle, co. Salop.

CHEVERS—VISCOUNT MOUNT-LEINSTER.

By Patent dated 23 August, 1689.

Lineage.

The Anglo-Norman of Chevers claimed descent from the Lords of Chievres, a town of the Netherlands, in the county of Hainault.

SIR WILLIAM CHEVERE, one of the knights who accompanied Strongbow in the invasion of Ireland, received a knight's fee of land in the co. of Wexford. He is one of the witnesses to the foundation charter to Tintern Abbey in that county.

PATRICK CHEVERS held one knight's fee in Ballyhaly, co. Wexford, of the Earl of Pembroke, in 1307, and is witness to that nobleman's charter to the town of Wexford, dated 1317.

JOHN CHEVERS, Esq., of Ballyhaly, grand senechal of the co. in 1416, was father of

WILLIAM CHEVERS, Esq., who held four manors, and was appointed second justice of the Court of Common Pleas, 24 March, 13th HENRY VI. He had a son,

WALTER CHEVERS, Esq., of Ballyhaly, co. Wexford, and Macetown, co. Meath, a commissioner in the latter co., 3rd EDWARD IV. m. Ellen, dau. of Sir William Wells, Lord Chancellor of Ireland, and had with a dau., Margaret, wife of Bartholomew Aylmer, of Lyons, a son and successor,

SIR NICHOLAS CHEVERS, Knt., of Ballyhaly and of Macetown, who m. Alison, dau. of Robert Fitzsimons, Esq., and by her (who m. 2ndly Sir Nicholas St. Lawrence, Baron of Howth), he left with a dau., Joan, wife of William Hore, of Harperstown, co. Wexford, a son and successor,

SIR WALTER CHEVERS, of Macetown, Knt., who m. Elena, dau. of Nicholas, Lord Howth, and had with two younger sons, John and Thomas, an eldest son,

SIR CHRISTOPHER CHEVERS, Knt., of Ballyhaly, and of Ballycullen, co. Wexford, who acquired also the lordship of Tartaya, co. Meath. He was knighted in 1566, and appointed one of the commissioners for muster, in that county, in 1579. He m. Maud, dau. of Walter Kelly, alderman of Dublin, and had John, Patrick, Nicholas, and Walter Thomas, and three daus., the eldest m. to —Golding; the 2nd, Margaret, to Robert Kent; and the 3rd, Katherine, to Patrick Talbot, father of Richard Talbot, Esq., of Malahide. The eldest son,

EDWARD CHEEVERS, Esq., of Macetown, m. Anne, sister of the gallant Patrick Sarsfield, Earl of Lucan, and was created by JAMES II., by patent, dated 23 August, 1689, VISCOUNT MOUNT LEINSTER, co. Carlow, and Baron Bannow, co. Wexford. The creations of JAMES subsequent to his abdication, were not acknowledged by his successors; but as Dr. Burke observes in his Hibernia Dominicana, this title was more honourably extinguished by failure of male issue. Lord Mount Leinster joined his connexions in their strenuous support of JAMES II., entered the Irish army, and acted as aide-de-camp to that unfortunate monarch at the battle of the Boyne. Although specially included in the articles of Limerick, Lord Mount Leinster relinquished the benefits of the capitulation, and accompanied his sovereign into exile. The title became EXTINCT on his decease.* His uncle, of the half blood,

JEROME CHEEVERS, m. and had two sons, Christopher and Francis. Like the decayed gentlemen of those days, he resided amongst his more fortunate friends, some of whom resided at Drogheda, where his situation and misfortunes attracted the attention of Chief Justice Singleton, the friend and companion of Swift. Christopher Cheevers, the eldest son, d. unm., but FRANCIS CHEEVERS the younger, m. Jane Cosgrave, and had a son, William, who was killed in the revolutionary war of America; and five daus., the eldest of whom m. Colombo Brodigan, of Drogheda, and had a son, Francis Brodigan, of Drogheda, who d. 29 April, 1831, and was interred in the family burial place in the churchyard of Coppe. His eldest son is the present THOMAS BRODIGAN, Esq., of Piltown, near Drogheda.

Sir Hugh d. in the 43rd of ELIZABETH, and his lady (designated by King JAMES I. "the bold lady of Cheshire," in consequence of the spirit she displayed in carrying on a law suit with George Holford, Esq., of Newborough, for more than forty years, which finally terminated by compromise,) d. 16 August, 1626. Sir Hugh was s. by his eldest son, ROBERT CHOLMONDELEY, Esq., who was created a baronet on 29 June, 1611, and advanced to the peerage of Ireland, 2 July, 1628, as Viscount Cholmondeley, of Kella, co. Meath. His lordship afterwards, "in consideration of his special service in raising several companies of foot in Cheshire, in order to the quenching of those rebellious flames which began to appear anno 1642, and sending many other to the king (CHARLES I.) then at Shrewsbury (which stood him in high stead in that memorable battle of Kineton, happening soon after), as also raising other forces for defending the city of Chester, at the first siege thereof by his majesty's adversaries in that county, and courageous adventure in the fight of Tilton Heath, together with his great sufferings, by the plunder of his goods and firing his house," was created a peer of England, by letters patent, dated 1 September, 1645, in the dignity of BARON CHOLMONDELEY, of Wicke Malbank, otherwise Nantwich, co. Chester, and advanced 5 March, 1645-6, to the Irish EARLDOM OF LEINSTER. CLARE — LORDS OF CLARE, EARLS OF HERTFORD, EARLS OF GLOUCESTER.

The feudal Lordship of Clare, from the Conquest.

The Earldom of Hertford, temp. King STEPHEN.

The Earldom of Gloucester, by marriage with the heiress of Gloucester.

Lineage.

GROFFREY, natural son of RICHARD I., Duke of Normandy, had a son,

GISEBERT, surnamed Crispin, Earl of Brion, in Normandy, whose eldest son,

RICHARD FITZGILBERT, having accompanied the CONQUEROR into England, participated in the spoils of conquest, and obtained extensive possessions in the new and old dominions of his royal leader and kinsman. In 1073 (6th WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR,) we find him joined under the designation of Ricardus de Benefacta, with William de Warren, in the great office of Justiciary of England; with whom, in three years afterwards, he was in arms, against the rebellious lords, Robert de Britolio, Earl of Hereford, and Ralph Waher, or Guader, Earl of Norfolk and Suffolk, and behaved with great gallantry. But afterwards, at the time of the General Survey, which was towards the close of WILLIAM's reign, he is called Ricardus de Tonebruge, from his seat at Tonebruge (now Tunbridge), in Kent, which town and castle he obtained from the archbishop of Canterbury, in lieu of the castle of Brion; at which time he enjoyed thirty-eight lordships in Surrey, thirty-five in Essex, three in Cambridgeshire, with some others in Wilts and Devon, and ninety-five in Suffolk, amongst those was CLARE, whence he was occasionally styled RICHARD DE CLARE; and that place in a few years afterwards becoming the chief seat of the family, his descendants are said to have assumed thereupon the title of EARLS OF CLARE. This great feudal lord m. Robese, dau. of Walter Giffard, Earl of Buckingham, and had issue,

- I. GILBERT, his successor.
- II. Roger, an eminent soldier in the reign of HENRY I., d. s. p., when his estates devolved upon his elder brother's son, Gilbert.
- III. Walter, who having license from the king to enjoy all he could conquer in Wales, possessed all NETHER-WENT; he also d. s. p.
- IV. Richard, a monk of Bec, in Normandy, and last abbot of Ely.
- V. Robert, steward to King HENRY I., m. Maud, dau. of Simon St. Liz, EARL OF HUNTINGDON, and had Walter Fitz-Robert, whose son, Robert Fitz-Walter, was one of the most distinguished of the barons who rebelled against JOHN, and was styled, Marshal of the Army of God and Holy Church.
- I. A dau. m. to Ralph de Telgers.
- II. A dau. m. to Eudo Dapifer.

Richard de Tonebrugge, or de Clare, who is said to have fallen in a skirmish with the Welsh, was s. by his eldest son,

GILBERT DE TONEBRUGE, who resided at Tonebrugge, and inherited all his father's lands in England. This nobleman joined in the rebellion of Robert de Mowbray, Earl of Northumberland, but observing the King (William Rufus) upon the point of falling into an ambuscade, he relented, besought pardon, and saved his royal master. We find him subsequently, however, again in rebellion, in the same reign, and fortifying and losing his castle at Tunbridge. He m. in 1113, Adolisa, dau. of the Earl of Clermont, and had issue,

RICHARD, his successor.

Gilbert, created EARL OF PEMBROKE, anno 1138 (see that dignity.) This nobleman was father of RICHARD, surnamed Strongbow, so celebrated for his conquest of Ireland. Walter, founder of the abbey of Tintern, in Wales, d. s. p. Hervey, famous in the conquest of Ireland, by the name of Hervey de Monte Mariscoe, but d. a monk at Canterbury. Baldwin, who left three sons, William, Robert, and Richard, and a dau. Margaret, m. to Montfichet.

Gilbert de Tonebrugge, who was a munificent benefactor to the church, was s. by his eldest son,

RICHARD DE CLARE, who first bore the title of EARL OF HERTFORD; and being one of those, who by power of the sword entered Wales, there planted himself and became lord of vast territories, as also of divers castles in those parts, but requiring other matters of moment from the king, in which he was unsuccessful, he reared the standard of revolt, and soon after fell in an engagement with the Welsh. His lordship in 1124 removed the monks out of his castle at Clare into the church of St. Augustine, at Stoke, and bestowed upon them a little wood, called Stoke-Ho, with a doe every year out of his park at Hunedene. He m. Alice, sister of Ranulph, 2nd Earl of Chester, and had issue, GILBERT, his successor, with two other sons, and a dau. Alice, who m. Cadwalader-ap-Griffith, Prince of North Wales. His lordship d. 1139, and was s. by his eldest son,

GILBERT DE CLARE, 2nd Earl of Hertford, who is said by Dugdale to have also borne the title of Earl of Clare, but Hornby observes, that that meant only Earl at Clare; for his earldom was certainly at Hertford. This nobleman, in the 8th of King STEPHEN, anno 1145, was a hostage for his uncle Ranulph, Earl of Chester, and subsequently, being in rebellion against the power of STEPHEN, was taken prisoner, and held in captivity, until he surrendered all his strong places. He d. in 1151, and having no issue, was s. by his brother,

ROGER DE CLARE, 3rd Earl of Hertford, who is likewise said to have borne the title of Earl of Clare. In the 3rd HENRY II., this nobleman obtaining from the king all the lands in Wales which he could win, marched into Cardigan with a great army, and fortified divers castles thereabouts. In the 9th of the same reign, we find him summoned by the celebrated Thomas à Becket, archbishop of Canterbury, to Westminster, in order to do homage to the prelate for his castle of Tonebrugge; which at the command of the king he refused, alleging that holding it by military service it belonged rather to the crown than to the church. His lordship m. Maude, dau. of James de St. Hillary, by whom (who m. after his decease William d'Aubigny, Earl of Arundel) he had a son,

RICHARD, his successor.

This earl, who, from his munificence to the church, and his numerous acts of piety, was called the Good, d. in 1173, and was s. by his son,

RICHARD DE CLARE, 4th Earl of Hertford, who, in the 7th

RICHARD I., gave £1,000 to the king for livery of the lands of his mother's inheritance, with his proportion of those sometime belonging to Giffard, Earl of Buckingham. His lordship m. Amicia, 2nd dau. and co-heiress (with her sisters Mabel, wife of the Earl of Evereux, in Normandy, and Isabel, the divorced wife of King JOHN) of William, EARL OF GLOUCESTER, by whom he had issue, GILBERT, his successor.

Joane, m. to Rhys-Grig, Prince of South Wales.

This earl, who was one of the twenty-five barons appointed to enforce the observance of MAGNA CHARTA, d. in 1218, and was s. by his son,

GILBERT DE CLARE, 5th Earl of Hertford, who, after the decease of Geoffrey de Mandeville, Earl of Essex, the 2nd husband of Isabel, the divorced wife of King JOHN (one of the co-heiresses mentioned above of William, Earl of Gloucester), and in her right EARL OF GLOUCESTER, and her own decease, s. p., as also the decease of Almarick D'Evereux, son of the Earl of Evereux, by Mabel, the other co-heiress, who likewise succeeded to the Earldom of Gloucester, became EARL OF GLOUCESTER, in right of his mother Amicia, the other co-heiress. This nobleman was amongst the principal barons who took up arms against King JOHN, and was appointed one of the twenty-five chosen to enforce the observance of MAGNA CHARTA. In the ensuing reign, still opposing the arbitrary proceedings of the crown, he fought on the side of the barons at Lincoln, and was taken prisoner there by William Marshall, Earl of Pembroke; but he soon afterwards made his peace. His lordship m. Isabel, one of the daus., and eventually co-heiresses of William Mareschal, Earl of Pembroke, by whom (who m. after his decease, Richard, Earl of Cornwall, brother of King HENRY III.) he had issue,

RICHARD, his successor.

William.

Gilbert.

Amicia, m. to Baldwin de Redvers, 4th Earl of Devon.

Agnes.

Isabel, m. to Robert de Brus.

The earl d. in 1229, and was s. by his eldest son,

RICHARD DE CLARE, 6th Earl of Hertford, and 2nd Earl of Gloucester, then in minority. The wardship of this young nobleman was granted to the famous Hubert de Burgh, Earl of Kent, Justiciary of England, whose dau., Margaret, to the great displeasure of the king (HENRY III.), he afterwards (1243), clandestinely married, but from whom he was probably divorced, for we find the king marrying him the next year to Maude, dau. of John de Lacy, Earl of Lincoln, in consideration whereof the said John paid to the crown 5,000 marks, and remitted a debt of 2,000 more. His lordship, who appears to have been a very distinguished personage in the reign of HENRY III., was one of the chief nobles present in Westminster Hall (40th HENRY III.), when Boniface, archbishop of Canterbury, with divers other prelates, pronounced that solemn curse, with candles lighted, against all those who should thenceforth violate MAGNA CHARTA. In two years afterwards an attempt was made by Walter de Scotenay, his chief counsellor, to poison the earl and his brother William, which proved effective as to the latter, while his lordship narrowly escaped with the loss of his hair and nails. In the next year the earl was commissioned with others of the nobility, by the appointment of the king, and the whole baronage of England, to the parliament of France, to convey King HENRY III.'s resignation of Normandy, and to adjust all differences between the two crowns; and upon the return of the mission, his lordship reported proceedings to the king, in parliament. About this period he had license to fortify the Isle of Portland, and to embattle it as a fortress. It is reported of this nobleman, that being at Tewkesbury, in the 45th HENRY III., a Jew, who had fallen into a jakes upon the Saturday, refusing to be pulled out in reverence to the Jewish sabbath, his lordship prohibited any help to be afforded him on the next day, Sunday, the Christian sabbath, and thus suffered the unfortunate Israelite to perish. He d. himself in the July of the next year (1262), having been poisoned at the table of Peter de Savoy, the queen's uncle, along with Baldwin, Earl of Devon, and other persons of note. His lordship left issue,

I. GILBERT, his successor.

II. Thomas, who was governor of the city of London in the 1st EDWARD I., and d. in the 15th of the same reign, leaving by Amy his wife, dau. of Sir Morris Fitz-Morris,

1 Gilbert, who d. s. p.

2 Richard, d. v. p., leaving a son, Thomas, who d. s. p.

3 Thomas, whose daus. and eventual co-heiresses were Margaret, wife of Bartholomew, 1st Lord Badlesmere.

Maud, wife of Robert, Lord Clifford, of Appleby.

I. Rose, m. to Roger de Mowbray.

II. Margaret, m. to Edmund, Earl of Cornwall, and d. s. p.

The earl was s. by his elder son,

GILBERT DE CLARE, surnamed the Red, 7th Earl of Hertford, and 3rd Earl of Gloucester, who, by the king's procurement, m. in 1257, Alice, dau. of Guy, Earl of Angoulesme, and niece of the king of France, which monarch bestowed upon the lady a marriage portion of 5,000 marks. This nobleman, who, like his predecessors, was zealous in the cause of the barons, proceeded to London immediately after the defeat sustained by the insurrectionary lords at Northampton (48th HENRY III.), in order to rouse the citizens, which, having effected, he received the honour of knighthood, from Montford, EARL OF LEICESTER, at the head of the army at Lewes; of which army, his lordship, with John Fitz-John and William de Montchensi, commanded the second brigade, and having mainly contributed to the victory, in which the king and prince became prisoners, while the whole power of the realm fell into the hands of the victors, the earl procured a grant under the great seal of all the lands and possessions, lying in England, of John de Warren, Earl of Surrey, one of the most faithful adherents of the king, excepting the castles of Riegate and Lewes, to hold during the pleasure of the crown, and he soon after, with some of the principal barons, extorted from the captive monarch a commission authorizing Stephen, then bishop of Chichester, Simon Montford, EARL OF LEICESTER, and himself, to nominate nine persons of "the most faithful, prudent, and most studious of the public weal," as well prelates as others, to manage all things according to the laws and customs of the realm, until the consultations at Lewes should terminate. Becoming jealous, however, of the power of LEICESTER, the earl soon after abandoned the baronial cause, and having assisted in procuring the liberty of the king and prince, commanded the second brigade of the royal army at the battle of Evesham, which restored the kingly power to its former lustre. In reward of these eminent services he received a full pardon for himself and his brother Thomas, of all prior treasons, and the custody of the castle of Bergavenny, during the minority of Maud, wife of Humphrey de Bohun. His lordship veered again though in his allegiance, and he does not appear to have been sincerely reconciled to the royal cause, until 1270, in which year demanding from Prince Edward repayment of the expenses he had incurred at the battle of Evesham, with livery of all the castles and lands which his ancestors had possessed, and those demands having been complied with, he thenceforward became a good and loyal subject of the crown. Upon the death of King HENRY, the Earl of Hertford and Gloucester was one of the lords who met at the New Temple in London, to proclaim Prince Edward, then in the Holy Land, successor to the crown, and so soon as the new monarch returned to England, his lordship was the first to entertain him and his whole retinue, with great magnificence for several days at his castle of Tonebruge. In the 13th EDWARD I., his lordship divorced his wife Alice, the French princess, and in consideration of her illustrious birth, granted for her support during her life, six extensive manors and parks, and he m. in 1289, JOANE OF ACER, dau. of King EDWARD I., upon which occasion he gave up the inheritance of all his castles and manors, as well in England as in Wales, to his royal father-in-law, to dispose of as he might think proper; which manors, &c., were entailed by the king upon the earl's issue, by the said Joane, and in default, upon her heirs and assigns, should she survive his lordship. By this lady he had issue,

I. GILBERT, his successor.

1. Allanore, m. 1337, 1st, to Hugh le Despencer the younger, and 2ndly, to William, Lord Zouche, of Mortimer.

II. Margaret, m. 1st, to Piers Gaveston Earl of Cornwall, and 2ndly, to Hugh de Audley, who was eventually created Earl of Gloucester.

III. Elizabeth, m. 1st, to John de Burgh, son of Richard, Earl of Ulster, by whom she had issue,

William, EARL OF ULSTER, who m. Maud, sister of Henry Plantagenet, Duke of Lancaster, and left a dau. and heiress,

ELIZABETH DE BURGH, who m. Lionel Plantagenet, DUKE OF CLARENCE, K.G., and had an only dau. and heiress, PHILIPPA PLANTAGENET, who m. Edward Mortimer, EARL OF MARCH.

Elizabeth, widow of John de Burgh, m. 2ndly, Theobald de Verdon; and 3rdly, Roger d'Amory: by the last she had two daus, Elizabeth, m. to John, Lord Bardolph, and Eleanor, m. to John de Raleigh.

His lordship d. in 1295, and the Countess Joane, surviving, m. a "plain esquire," called Ralph de Monthermer, clandestinely, without the king, her father's knowledge; but to which alliance he was reconciled through the intercession of Anthony Beke, the celebrated bishop of Durham, and became eventually much attached to his new son-in-law,

RALPH DE MONTHERMER, who, during the lifetime of the Princess Joane his wife, enjoyed the Earldoms of HERTFORD AND GLOUCESTER, and was summoned to parliament in those digni-ties from 6 February, 1299, to 3 November, 1306, jure uxoris; but Joane dying in 1307, he never afterwards was so summoned but as a baron, under the designation of "Radulpho de Monthermer" (see MONTHERMER). We now return to

GILBERT DE CLARE, who s. his father, and at the decease of his mother, Joane, became EARL OF HERTFORD and EARL OF GLOUCESTER. His lordship m. Maud, dau. of Richard de Burgh, EARL OF ULSTER, but was slain at the battle of Bannockburn in 1313, leaving no issue, whereupon his large possessions devolved upon his three sisters as co-heiresses, and the EARLDOMS OF GLOUCESTER AND HERTFORD became extinct.

CLARE—EARLS OF PEMBROKE.

By Creation, anno 1138, 3rd of King STEPHEN.

Lineage.

GILBERT DE CLARE, 2nd son of Gilbert de Tonebruge, feudal Lord of Clare, and brother of Richard de Clare, 1st Earl of Hertford, having obtained from King HENRY I. a license to enjoy all the lands he should win in Wales, marched a large force into Cardiganshire, and brought the whole country under subjection: here he soon afterwards built two strong castles; and his power increasing, he was created by King STEPHEN, in 1138, EARL OF PEMBROKE. His lordship m. Elizabeth, sister of Walteran, Earl of Mellent, and dau. of Robert, Earl of Leicester, and had issue,

RICHARD, surnamed Strongbow, his successor.

Baldwin, who fell at the battle of Lincoln, fighting under the banner of King STEPHEN.

Basilia, m. to Raymond, son of William Fitz-Gerald of Ireland.

The earl d. in 1149, and was s. by his elder son,

RICHARD DE CLARE (the celebrated Strongbow), 2nd Earl of Pembroke. This nobleman was one of the witnesses to the solemn agreement, made in 1153, between King STEPHEN and Henry, Duke of Normandy, whereby the latter was to succeed to the English throne upon the decease of the former. But the leading part he subsequently had in the subjugation of Ireland procuring him a conspicuous place in history, we shall relate the particulars of that event in the words of the Monk of Jorvaulx—"The realm of Ireland," saith he, "being miserably oppress with warr by the many kings there who banded against each other, one of them sent his son into England to procure souldiers thence for his aid. Which souldiers for the hope of gain, giving him assistance, were so well recompenced, as that they rather chose to stay there than return into England. But after a short time the stoutest people of Ireland, being much offended with that king for getting aid from England, the English already fixed in Ireland sent for more from hence to strengthen their party, and because they had no chief they made choice of this EARL RICHARD (a stout and valiant man), to be their captain, who, yielding to their request, rigging a good fleet, prepared for the journey. Whereupon there were some who, in the king's behalf, endeavoured to restrain him. Howbeit, getting on shipboard, and landing safe, he assaulted Dublin, and took it; the tidings whereof so terrified those that lived afar off, that they were content to be at peace with him; and, to confirm what he had got, gave him in marriage, Eva, daughter of Dermot McMurrough, one of their kings, with whom he had in dower a great part of the realm. Whereat the King of England growing much displeased, as well for that he had not only, without his consent, but forbidden, made so great an attempt, seized upon all his patrimony here, prohibiting that he should have further aid; and threatening him otherwise very sore, compelled him so to such a compliance as that he got Dublin from him, and all the principal places he had won, requiring him to be content with the rest, and his patrimony in England; soon after raising a great army, the king sayled thither, himself." In the end the earl was constituted Justice of Ireland by King HENRY II., and having founded the priory of Kilmalnaham, in the province of Leinster, for knights hospitallers, "this eminent person," Dugdale concludes "died untimely upon the nones of April, anno 1176, and was buried in the Chapter house at Gloucester, as may be seen by this inscription on the wall there, 'Hic jacet RICARDUS STRONGBOW, Alms GILBERTI, Comitis de PEMBROKE,'" leaving issue, as some say, one son, scarce three years old, to be his heir, but by others it is reported that, being by treachery abused and wounded, he departed this life the 5th year after his acquisition of the province of Leinster, and that he was buried at Dublin, leaving issue one only dau. and heiress, ISABEL, who became in ward to King HENRY II. and remained under the royal guardianship for the space of fourteen years, when she was given in marriage to William Marshal, who thereupon became EARL OF PEMBROKE (see MARSHAL, Earl of Pembroke).

NOTE—Hacket, in his collection of Epitaphs, gives the following from the tomb of Strongbow, at Christ's Church, Dublin:—

"Nate ingratus, mihi pugnanti terga dedisti, Non mihi, sed genti, regno quoque terga dedisti."

"This alludes," says Banks, "to a story that Strongbow's only son, a youth about seventeen, frightened with the numbers and ululations of the Irish in a great battle, ran away, but being afterwards informed of his father's victory, he joyfully returned to congratulate him. But the severe general having first upbraided him with his cowardice, caused him to be immediately executed by cutting him off in the middle with a sword. Such, in former times was the detestation of dastardliness!!!"

CLARE—BARON CLARE.

By Writ of Summons, dated 26 October, 1309.

Lineage.

RICHARD DE CLARE was summoned to parliament as a BARON on 26 October, 1309, but never afterwards. Of this nobleman Dugdale makes no mention at all, but COURTHOPE (Historic Peerage) says that "there can be little doubt but that he was brother and heir of Gilbert de Clare, and 2nd. son of Thomas, 1st EDWARD II., and 2nd son of Thomas, son of Richard de Clare, Earl of Gloucester. The period of his death is not known, but he left issue Thomas, who d. s. p., and apparently a minor in the 14th EDWARD II., leaving his aunts (sisters of his father) Margaret, the wife of Bartholemew de Badlesmere, and Maud, then the wife of Robert de Welle (and 2ndly, before 1st EDWARD III., of Robert de Clifford), his heirs."

CLAVERING—BARONS CLAVERING.

By Writ of Summons, dated 2 November, 1295.

Lineage.

EUSTACE DE BURGH, Baron Tonsburgh, in Normandy, younger brother of HARLOWEN DE BURGH, the ancestor of the Lords Clanricarde, and the numerous families of DE BURGH, BURKE, and BOURKE, had two sons, SERLO, of whom presently.

JOHN, surnamed Monoculus, from having but one eye.

The elder son,

SERLO DE BURGH, erected the castle of Knaresborough, which passed at his decease, s. p., to his brother,

JOHN Monoculus, who had three sons,

PAGANUS, } These brothers were witnesses to the foundation
EUSTACE, } of the abbey of Cirencester, co. Gloucester,
William, } 1123.

The elder son, PAGANUS, dying s. p., was s. by his brother,

EUSTACE FITZ-JOHN (nephew and heir of SERLO DE BURGH, founder of Knaresborough Castle), one of the most powerful of the northern barons, and a great favourite with King HENRY I., m. 1st, Agnes, eldest dau. of William Fitz Nigel, Baron of Halton, constable of Chester, and Viscount Constantine. By this lady he acquired the Barony of Halton, and had an only son,

RICHARD FITZ-EUSTACE, of whom presently.

EUSTACE FITZ-JOHN m. 2ndly, Beatrice, only dau. and heiress of Yvo de Vesci, Lord of Alnwick, in Northumberland, and of Malton, in Yorkshire, by whom he had issue,

WILLIAM, progenitor of the great baronial house of De Vesci.

The eldest son,

RICHARD FITZ-EUSTACE, Baron of Halton, and constable of Chester, m. Albreda, dau. and heir of Robert de Lizurea, and half sister of Robert de Lacy, and had issue,

JOHN, who assumed the surname of Lacy, and s. his father as constable of Chester. He d. 25th HENRY II., leaving one son,

Henry de Lacy, whose only dau. m. the Earl of Lancaster.

Robert, the hospitaller, that is of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem in England.

ROGER.

The youngest son,

ROGER FITZ-RICHARD, who was feudal Baron of Warkworth, co. Northumberland, a lordship granted to him by King HENRY II., m. Alianor, dau. and co-heir of Henry of Essex, Baron of Raleigh, and was s. by his only son,

ROBERT FITZ-ROGER, who m. Margaret, only child and heiress of William de Cheney, by whom he acquired the Barony of HORSFORD, co. Norfolk, and had an only son, JOHN. This Robert obtained a confirmation, upon the accession of King JOHN, of the castle and manor of Warkworth, of the manor of Clavering, in Essex, and of the manor of Eure, in Buckinghamshire, to hold by the service of one knight's fee each. And in that monarch's reign he served the office of sheriff for Northumberland, Norfolk, and Suffolk; for each county thrice. In the conflict between JOHN and the barons, this powerful person, although indebted to the crown for immense territorial possessions, took part in the first instance with the latter, but under the apprehension of confiscation, and the other visitations of royal vengeance, he was very soon induced to return to his allegiance. He was s. by his son,

JOHN FITZ-ROBERT, to whom King JOHN, in the 14th year of his reign, ratified the grant of the castle and manor of Warkworth, made by King HENRY II. to his grandfather, Roger Fitz-Richard, as also of the manor of Clavering. In three years afterwards he was appointed joint governor with John Marshall, of the castles of Norwich and Oxford; but joining in the insurrection of the barons, and being chosen one of the twenty-five appointed to exercise the regal authority, his lands were seized by the king, and a part confiscated. Returning, however, to his allegiance in the next reign, his castles and estates were restored to him. In the 9th of HENRY III. he was constituted sheriff of Northumberland, and governor of the town of Newcastle-upon-Tyne; and in the 13th of the same monarch, he was one of the great northern barons appointed by special command of the king to wait upon ALEXANDER, King of Scotland, at Berwick-upon-Tweed, and to conduct that prince to York, there to meet the king of England, "to treat upon certain affairs of great importance." His lordship m. Ada, dau. and heir of Hugh de Baliol, and grand-aunt of BALIOL, King of Scotland, and had issue,

ROGER, his successor.

Hugh, surnamed "De Eure," from whom the Lords Eure descended.

Robert, ancestor of the Eures of Axholm, in Lincolnshire.

He d. in 1240, and was s. by his eldest son,

ROGER FITZ-JOHN, feudal Baron of Warkworth and Clavering, who d. in 1249, and was s. by his son,

ROBERT FITZ-ROGER, then in infancy, whose tuition was committed to William de Valence, the king's half-brother, although Ada de Baliol, the grandmother of the child, offered 2,200 marks for the wardship. This feudal lord became eventually so eminent in the Scottish wars of King EDWARD I., particularly in the battle of Falkirk, and other memorable conflicts, that he was summoned as "Robert Fitz-Roger" to parliament as a BARON, from 2 November, 1295, to 16 June (4th EDWARD II.), 1311, and subsequently assisted with his son JOHN, who assumed, by the king's appointment, the surname of Clavering, at the celebrated siege of Kaerlaverok. His lordship m. Margaret de la Zouche, and had issue, seven sons, viz.,

JOHN, his successor.

ALAN (Sib), m. Isabella, eldest dau. and co-heir of William Riddell; and from this union descended the CLAVERINGS OF CALLALY, in Northumberland (now represented by EDWARD JOHN CLAVERING, Esq., of Callaly Castle), the Baronets CLAVERING OF AXWELL, co. Durham, the Claverings of Learchild, the Claverings of Tilmouth, co. Durham, &c.

He d. about the year 1311, and was s. by his eldest son,

JOHN DE CLAVERING, 2nd baron, who had summons to parliament from 10 April, 1299, to 20 November, 1331. This nobleman had distinguished himself, in his father's lifetime, in the French and Scotch wars, and was taken prisoner at the battle of Strivelyn. His lordship m. Hawyse, dau. of Robert de Tibetot, and had an only dau.,

Eve, who m. 1st, Ralph de Ufford 2ndly, Thomas de Audley, and 3rdly, Robert Benhale.

Lord Clavering, long before his death, being doubtful of having male issue, made a feoffment to Stephen de Trafford whereby he vested the inheritance of his castle and manor of Warkworth in the said Stephen, with other manors, for the intent that he should reconvey them to his lordship for life, with remainder to the king and his heirs. In consideration whereof the king granted unto the baron and his heirs divers lands and hereditaments, then valued at £400 pe. annum. His lordship d. at his manor of Aynho, in Northamptonshire, in 1332, when those great estates falling to the crown, were divided thus—

Warkworth, and the manors in Northumberland, granted to Henry de Percy, are still part of the possessions of the ducal family of Northumberland.

Aynho and Horsford, in Northamptonshire and Norfolk, to Ralph de Neville, and his heirs.

Clavering, in Essex, to the deceased lord's brother Edmund, for life, and in remainder to the above Ralph Neville and his heirs.

In this very unjustifiable manner were the descendants of his lordship's youngest brother deprived of their fair inheritance.

II. Elizabeth, m. to Walter Fyson, Esq., and had two sons, William and Joseph.

III. Frances, Mrs. Westrop.

The 2nd son,

WILLIAM CLAYTON, m. Ann, dau. of John Huske, of Newmarket, and was father of WILLIAM CLAYTON, Esq., a clerk in the treasury, who was deputy auditor of the exchequer, 1716, and held also the important trust of being one of the managers of the Duke of Marlborough's estates during his grace's absence. Mr. Clayton represented at one time Westminster in parliament, and was elevated to the peerage of Ireland, as BARON SUNDON, of Ardagh, co. Longford, 2 June, 1735, being then described as "William Clayton, Esq., one of the commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury." His lordship m. Charlotte Dyves, sister of Lewis Dyves, Esq., an officer of the 2nd horse guards, a lady who became the favourite of Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough, and obtained great influence at court, becoming eventually mistress of the robes to CAROLINE, Queen of GEORGE II. Through that influence her husband acquired the Irish peerage, and several members of her own family were promoted; her nieces, Frances, Dorothy, and Charlotte Dyves, became attendants on the princesses, one in the capacity of maid of honour. He d. s. p. 29 April, 1752, aged about eighty, being at the time M.P. for St. Maws (his wife having predeceased him, 1 January, 1742), and with him the title EXPIRED.

CLIFFORD—EARLS OF CUMBERLAND AND BARONS CLIFFORD.

Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 18 June, 1525.

Barony, by Writ, dated 17 February, 1628.

Lineage.

The first of this ancient family of whom Dugdale takes notice, was called Ponce, who is represented as leaving three sons, Walter and Dru, considerable landed proprietors in the CONQUEROR'S survey, and

RICHARD FITEPONCE, a personage of rank in the time of RICHARD I., and a liberal benefactor to the church; this Richard left also three sons, of whom the 2nd, Walter, having obtained Clifford Castle, in Herefordshire, with his wife Margaret, dau. of Ralph de Toney, a descendant from William Fitzosborn, Earl of Hereford, by whom the castle was erected, assumed thence his surname, and became

WALTER DE CLIFFORD. This feudal lord, who was in influence in the reign of HENRY II., left at his decease, two sons and two daus., viz.,

WALTER, his heir.

Richard, from whom the CLIFFORDS of Frampton, in Gloucestershire, descended.

ROSAMOND, so well known as "Fair Rosamond," the celebrated mistress of HENRY II., by whom she was mother of William Longespee, Earl of Salisbury.

Lucia, m. 1st, to Hugh de Say, of Richard's Castle, and 2ndly, to Bartholomew de Mortimer.

Walter de Clifford was s. by his elder son,

WALTER DE CLIFFORD, who m. Agnes, only dau. and heiress of Roger de Cundi, lord of the manors of Covenby and Glenatham, co. Lincoln, by Alice his wife, Lady of Horncastle, dau. and heiress of William de Cheney, lord of those manors in the CONQUEROR'S time, by whom he had issue, WALTER, Roger, Giles, and Richard. He was sheriff of Herefordshire in the 1st, 8th, 9th, and 17th JOHN, and dying in the 7th of HENRY III., was s. by his eldest son,

WALTER DE CLIFFORD. This feudal lord held a very high place in the estimation of King HENRY III. until the rebellion of Richard Mareschal, Earl of Pembroke, when, taking part with that nobleman, his lands were confiscated, and himself outlawed. The royal displeasure did not, however, endure any length of time, for we find him soon afterwards restored to his castle of Clifford, and during the many subsequent years of the same reign, enjoying the full confidence of the crown. At the coronation of Queen Eleanor, consort of King HENRY, he claimed with the other barons-marchers, as jus marchæ, to carry the canopy which belonged to the barons of the Cinque Ports. This Walter de Clifford m. Margaret, dau. of Llewellyn, Prince of Wales, and widow of John de Braose, by whom he had an only dau. and heiress, Maud, who m. 1st, William de Longespee, Earl of Salisbury, and 2ndly, Sir John Gifford of Brimsfield.

Walter de Clifford d. in the 48th HENRY III., when the continuation of the male line of the family devolved upon his nephew,

ROGER DE CLIFFORD (son of Roger de Clifford, by Sibill, dau. and co-heiress of Robert de Ewyas, a great baron of Herefordshire, and widow of Robert, Lord de Tregoz), who, for his staunch adherence to HENRY III., was appointed, after the victory of Evesham, justice of all the king's forests south of Trent, and obtained a grant at the same time of the lordship of Kingsbury, co. Warwick, forfeited by Sir Ralph de Bracebrigge, Knt. He was afterwards frequently employed against the Welsh, and lost his eldest son, Roger, who had m. Isabel, dau. and co-heiress of Robert de Vipount, lord and hereditary sheriff of Westmoreland, in one of those conflicts. Roger de Clifford d. in 14th of EDWARD I., and was s. by (the son of his deceased son above-mentioned) his grandson,

ROBERT DE CLIFFORD, who was summoned to parliament as a BARON, from 29 December, 1299 (28th EDWARD I.), to 26 November, 1313 (7th EDWARD II.) This nobleman participated in the Scottish wars of King EDWARD I., and had a principal command in the English army. He fell in the following reign at the battle of Bannockburn. His lordship m. Maud, dau. and co-heiress of Thomas, 2nd son of Richard de Clare, 7th Earl of Gloucester, and had issue, besides an elder son, Roger, Lord of Westmoreland, who d. s. p. 1327. A 2nd son,

ROBERT DE CLIFFORD, b. 1305, who d. 20 May, 1344. He m. 1328, Isabel, dau. of Maurice, Lord Berkeley, and had issue four sons,

I. Robert, who m. Eufamia, dau. of Radolphus, Lord Nevill, of Middleham, and d. s. p.

II. ROGER, who s. his father.

III. John.

IV. Thomas, from whom descended Richard, Bishop of Worcester, afterwards a Cardinal.

The 2nd but eldest surviving son,

ROGER DE CLIFFORD, Lord of Westmoreland, m. Maud, dau. of Thomas Beauchamp, 3rd Earl of Warwick, and d. 13 July, 1390, having had, with four daus., three sons,

THOMAS, his heir.

William, m. Anne, eldest dau. and co-heir of Thomas, Lord Bardolph, and d. s. p. 6th HENRY V.

Lewis (Sir) K.G., ancestor of the Clifford's of Chudleigh.

The eldest son and heir,

THOMAS DE CLIFFORD, d. abroad, 15th RICHARD II., leaving by Elizabeth his wife, dau. of Thomas, Lord Ros of Hamlake, an only son and heir,

JOHN DE CLIFFORD, Lord Clifford and Westmoreland, who m.

Elizabeth, dau. of Henry, Lord Percy (surnamed HOTSPUR), son and heir of Henry, Earl of Northumberland, and by her, who m. 2ndly, Radulphus Nevill, 2nd Earl of Westmoreland, left at his decease, in 1422, a son and heir,

THOMAS, Lord Clifford and Westmoreland, b. 1415, who m. Johanna, dau. of Thomas, Lord Dacre, of Gillesland, and was s. at his decease, 22 May, 1455, by his son,

JOHN, Lord Clifford and Westmoreland, b. 1435, who m. Margaret, only dau. and heir of Henry Bromfielde, Baron de Vesel, and d. 1st EDWARD IV., having had issue,

HENRY, his heir.

Richard, slain in the Netherlands.

Thomas (Sir), m. Ellen, dau. and co-heir of John Swarby, of Brakenburgh, co. Lincoln.

Elizabeth, m. to Robert Aske, Esq.

The eldest son and heir,

HENRY, Lord Clifford and Westmoreland, b. 1453, m. 1st, Anne, dau. of John St. John, of Bletesho, and had besides five daus., all married, two sons, HENRY his heir, and Thomas, who m. Lucia, dau. of Anthony Brown. He m. 2ndly, Florence, dau. of Henry Pudsey, of Barfoot, co. York, by whom he had three sons who d. young, and one dau. He d. 23 April, 15th HENRY VIII., and was s. by his eldest son,

HENRY DE CLIFFORD, the 11th baron, b. 1493, who was created, by letters patent, dated 18 June, 1525, EARL OF CUMBERLAND, and dignified with the Garter in 1532. This nobleman obtained large grants out of the monastic spoiliations, and was entrusted with a principal command in the army which invaded Scotland in the 34th of HENRY VIII. His lordship m. 1st, Margaret, dau. of George Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury, by whom he had no issue; and 2ndly, Margaret, dau. of Henry Percy, 5th Earl of Northumberland, by whom he had

i. HENRY, Lord Clifford, his successor.

ii. Ingeram (Sir), who m. Anne, dau. and sole heiress of Sir Henry Ratcliff, but dying s. p., left his property to his nephew, George, Earl of Cumberland.

i. Catherine, m. 1st, to John, Lord Scroope, of Bolton; and 2ndly, to Sir Richard Cholmondeley, by the latter of whom she had

SIR HENRY CHOLMONDELEY, of Grandmount and Roxby, who had

RICHARD (Sir), sheriff of Yorkshire in the last year of King JAMES I., whose son,

HUGH, was created a baronet, 10 August, 1641, and was s. by his son,

SIR WILLIAM, 2nd baronet, who left daus. only, his co-heirs, the eldest of whom,

Elizabeth, m. Sir Edward Dering, of Surenden.

ii. Maud, m. to John, Lord Conyers, of Hornby, co. York.

iii. Elizabeth, m. to Sir Christopher Metcalf, of Nappa, co. York.

iv. Jane, m. to Sir John Huddleston, of Millum Castle, co. Cumberland.

By the last will and testament of this nobleman, he devised, amongst other bequests, 300 marks to be expended upon his funeral; to his dau. Elizabeth, £1,000 if she should marry an earl or an earl's son; if a baron, 1,000 marks; if a knight, 800 marks. His lordship, d. 22 April, 33rd HENRY VIII., and was s. by his elder son,

HENRY CLIFFORD, 2nd earl, b. 1517, who had been made a knight of the Bath at the coronation of Queen Anne Boleyn. This nobleman m. 1st, in 1537, Eleanor, dau. and co-heiress of Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, and niece of King HENRY VIII., by whom he had an only surviving child, Margaret, b. 1540, m. to Henry Stanley, then Lord Strange, and afterwards Earl of Derby.

His lordship m. 2ndly, Anne, dau. of William, Lord Dacre, of Gillesland, by whom he had surviving issue,

GEORGE, Lord Clifford.

FRANCIS, 4th earl.

FRANCES, m. to Philip, Lord Wharton.

The earl d. 8 January, 1569, and was s. by his elder son,

GEORGE CLIFFORD, 3rd earl, then in his eleventh year, who was placed by Queen ELIZABETH under the guardianship of Francis Russell, 2nd Earl of Bedford, whose 3rd dau., Lady Margaret Russell, he m. in 1577, and had an only surviving dau.,

ANNE, b. 30 January, 1578, who m. 1st, Richard Sackville, 2nd Earl of Dorset, by whom she had three sons, who d. young, and two daus., viz.,

MARGARET, m. to John Tufton, 2nd Earl of Thanet.

Isabel, m. to James, Earl of Northampton.

The Countess of Dorset, m. 2ndly, Philip Herbert, Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, K.G., and lord-chamberlain of the household; but had no issue. This lady claimed the Barony of Clifford in 1628, and the hearing of her petition was appointed for the next session: but no further proceedings ensued. Her ladyship d. in 1675. Her descendant, however, Thomas, 6th Earl of Thanet, preferred his claim to the barony, and had it acknowledged by the House of Lords in 1691; but the dignity fell into ABEYANCE at his decease, in 1729, between his daus. and co-heirs, and so remained until terminated by the crown, in 1734, in favour of the 3rd dau., Margaret, Countess of Leicester, at whose decease, in 1775, it again became suspended, until again revived in favour of EDWARD SOUTHWELL, Esq., who became Lord de Clifford (see BURKE's Extant Peerage).

Earl George was educated at the university of Cambridge, and attaching himself to the study of mathematics, imbibed so decided a passion for navigation, that he became soon afterwards eminent as a naval commander, having undertaken at his own expense several voyages for the public service; but that, and a passion for tournaments, horse-racing, and similar pursuits, made such inroads upon his fortune, that he was said to have wasted more of his estate than any one of his ancestors. His lordship was elected a knight of the Garter in 1592. His character is thus depicted in the MS. Memoirs of his celebrated dau., Anne, Countess of Dorset and Pembroke:—"He was endowed with many perfections of nature befitting so noble a personage, as an excellent quickness of wit and apprehension, an active and strong body, and an affable disposition and behaviour. But as good natures, through human frailty, are oftentimes misled, so he fell to love a lady of quality, which did, by degrees, draw and aliene his love and affections from his so virtuous and well-deserving wife; it being the cause of many discontents between them for many years together, so that at length, for two or three years before his death, they parted houses, to her extreme grief and sorrow, and also to his extreme sorrow at the time of his death; for he died a very penitent man. He d. in the duchy-house, called the Savoy, 30 October, 1605, aged forty-seven years, two months, and twenty-two days, being born at Brougham Castle, 8 August, 1558."

His lordship leaving no male issue, the barony remained for some years in abeyance, but eventually devolved upon the descendants of his daus., by one of whom it is at present inherited, while the earldom passed to his only brother,

FRANCIS CLIFFORD, 4th earl, who m. Grissel, dau. of Thomas Hughes, of Uxbridge, and widow of Edward Nevill, Lord Aber-gavenny, by whom he had surviving issue,

HENRY, Lord Clifford.

Margaret m. to Sir Thomas Wentworth, of Wentworth-Wood-house, co. York, afterwards Earl of Strafford.

FRANCES, m. to Sir Gervase Clifton, Bart., of Clifton, co. Nottingham (his 2nd wife).

Of this nobleman, the Countess of Dorset says, "He was an honourable gentleman, and of a good, noble, sweet, and courteous nature." His lordship d. in 1641, and was s. by his son,

HENRY CLIFFORD, 5th earl, who m. Frances, only dau. of Robert Cecil, Earl of Salisbury, and had an only surviving dau. and heiress, ELIZABETH, m. to Richard, 2nd Earl of Cork and 1st Earl of Burlington, who was created BARON CLIFFORD, of Lancashire, co. York, in 1644.

The earl d. 1643, when the Earldom of Cumberland became EXTINCT, but the BARONY OF CLIFFORD (which originated in the writ, addressed, 17 February, 1528, to this Henry Clifford, when son and heir-apparent of Francis, 4th Earl of Cumberland, under the erroneous supposition that the ancient Barony of Clifford was vested in his father) devolved on his dau., Elizabeth, Countess of Cork and Burlington, and is now in ABEYANCE between the EARLS OF CARLISLE and GRANVILLE, as co-heirs of William Spencer, late Duke of Devonshire, Baron Clifford, &c., grandson of the said Elizabeth, Countess of Cork and Burlington.

NOTE—"Beneath the altar in Skipton Church," says Whitaker, in his "History of the Deanery of Craven, in the county of York," "is the vault of the Cliffords, the place of their interment from the dissolution of Bolton Priory to the death of the last Earl of Cumberland, which, after having been closed many years. I obtained permission to examine, 29 March, 1803. The original vault, intended only for the 1st earl and his 2nd lady, had undergone two enlargements; and the bodies, having been deposited in chronological order, first, and immediately under his tomb, lay Henry, the 1st earl, whose lead coffin was much corroded, and exhibited the skeleton of a short and very stout man, with a long head of flaxen hair, gathered in a knot behind the skull. The coffin had been closely fitted to the body, and proved him to have been very corpulent as well as muscular. Next lay the remains of Margaret Percy his 2nd wife, whose coffin was still entire. She must have been a slender and diminutive woman. The third was 'the lady Ellinor's grave,' whose coffin was much decayed, and exhibited the skeleton (as might be expected in a dau. of Charles Brandon, and the sister of HENRY VIII.) of a tall and large-limbed female. At her right hand was Henry, the 2nd earl, a very tall and rather slender man, whose then envelope of lead really resembled a winding-sheet, and folded like a coarse drapery round the limbs. The head was beaten to the left side; something of the shape of the face might have been distinguished, and a long prominent nose was very conspicuous. Next lay Francis, Lord Clifford, a boy. At his right hand was his father, George, the 3rd earl, whose lead coffin precisely resembled the outer case of an Egyptian mummy, with a rude face, and something like a female mammas cast upon it, as were also the figures and letters 'G. C. 1605.' The body was closely wrapped in ten folds of coarse cere cloth, which, being removed, exhibited the face so entire (only turned to a copper colour,) as plainly to resemble his portraits. All his painters, however, had the complaisance to omit three large warts upon the left cheek. The coffin of Earl Francis, who lay next to his brother, was of the modern shape, and alone had an outer shell of wood, which was covered with leather. The soldering had decayed, and nothing appeared but the ordinary skeleton of a tall man. This earl had never been embalmed. Over him lay another coffin, much decayed, which I suspect had contained the Lady Anne Dacre, his mother. Last lay Henry, the 5th earl, in a coffin of the same form with that of his father. Lead not allowing of absorption, nor a narrow vault of much evaporation, a good deal of moisture remained in the coffin and some hair about the skull. Both these coffins had been cut open. Room might have been found for another slender body; but the Countess of Pembroke chose to be buried at Appleby, partly, perhaps, because her beloved mother was interred there, and partly that she might not mingle her ashes with rivals and enemies."

CLIFTON—BARONS CLIFTON.

By Writ of Summons, dated 1 December, 1376.

Lineage.

ROGER DE CLIFTON, esquire to Thomas, Lord Cailli, m. Margerie, the sister of that nobleman, and left issue,

ADAM DE CLIFTON, who, in his ninth year, inherited the great estates of his uncle, Lord Cailli, which included those of the family of Tathall, derived by that nobleman from his mother, Emma, one of the co-heirs of Robert de Tathall. This Adam m. Eleanor, dau. of Robert Mortimer, of Attilbergh, and had a son, CONSTANTINE, who predeceased him, and having m. Catherine, dau. of Sir William de la Pole, left a son, the said Adam's successor,

JOHN DE CLIFTON, who was summoned to parliament as a BARON from 1 December, 1376, to 28 July, 1388. His lordship d. in the latter year at Rhodes, possessed, amongst other lands, of the castle of Bokenham, and manor of Babingle, co. Norfolk; which castle he held by performing the office of butler at the king's coronation. He m. Elizabeth, dau. and heir of Sir Ralph Cromwell, and was s. by his son,

CONSTANTINE DE CLIFTON, 2nd baron, summoned to parliament from 13 November, 1393, to 20 of the same month in the next year. This nobleman m. Margaret, dau. of Sir John Howard, only surviving son of Sir Robert Howard, by Margery his wife, dau. of Robert, Lord Scales, and d. in 1395, leaving issue,

JOHN (Sir), his heir.

Elizabeth, m. to Sir John Knyvett, Knt., and had issue,

JOHN KNYVETT, who m. Alice, dau. and heir of William Lynnes, and was father of SIR WILLIAM KNYVETT, attainted 1st RICHARD III., but afterwards restored; he m. Alice, dau. of John Grey, brother of Reginald, Lord Grey de Ruthyn, and had a son and heir, SIR EDMUND KNYVETT, of Buckenham, drowned in a sea-fight, temp. HENRY VIII., leaving by Eleanor his wife, dau. of Sir William Tyrrell, Knt., with other issue, two sons, viz.,

1 THOMAS (Sir), of Buckenham, K.B., standard-bearer to King HENRY VIII., ancestor of KNYVETT of Buckenham, and KNYVETT, LORD KNYVETT, of Escrik (which see).

2 EDMUND, of Ashwellthorpe, co. Norfolk, ancestor of LORD BERNERS (see BURKE'S Peerage).

His lordship's son and heir,

SIR JOHN DE CLIFTON, 3rd baron, but who does not appear by the existing enrolments to have been summoned to parliament, m. Joane, dau. and co-heir of Sir Edward Thorpe, by whom he had a dau. and heiress, Margaret, who m. Sir Andrew Ogard, but d. s. p.

At his lordship's death, and the death s. p. of his only child, Lady Ogard, the BARONY OF CLIFTON became vested in JOHN KNYVETT, amongst whose descendants and representatives it is now in ABEYANCE.

CLINTON—BARON CLINTON, EARL OF HUNTINGDON.

Barony, by Writ of Summons, dated 6 September, 1330.

Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 16 March, 1337.

Lineage.

SIR WILLIAM DE CLINTON, Knt., younger son of John de Clinton, Baron Clinton, m. 1330, Julian, dau. and heiress of Sir Thomas de Leyburne, Knt., and widow of John, Lord Hastings, of Bergavenny, by which alliance it is presumed that his subsequent advancement in life was considerably promoted; he was, however, himself a very eminent person, and fully entitled by his own deeds to the high honours he attained. In the year ensuing his marriage, Sir William was made justice of Chester, and within less than two months afterwards constable of Dover Castle and warden of the Cinque Ports. Shortly after this being one of those who surprised the great Mortimer, at Nottingham Castle, he had summons to parliament as BARON CLINTON, 6 September, 1330, and from that period to 14 January, 1337. In three years subsequently his lordship was constituted Lord Admiral of the Seas, from the Thames westwards, and in that year he was engaged in the Scottish wars, as he was in the 9th and 10th of the same reign. In the 11th EDWARD III., then enjoying the highest favour of the king, his lordship was created, by letters patent, dated 16 March, 1337, EARL OF HUNTINGDON, having, at the same time, not only £20 per annum given him out of the issues of the county to be paid by the sheriff, but 1,000 marks per annum in land, to hold to himself and his male heirs for ever. He subsequently participated in his gallant sovereign's wars, both in Scotland and France, and was frequently employed in foreign embassies of the first importance. He was a second time constituted lord admiral, and a second time appointed constable of Dover Castle, and lord warden of the Cinque Ports. His lordship d. in 1354, leaving, according to Banks, an only dau.,

Elizabeth, who m. Sir John Fitzwilliam, of Sprotborough, ancestor of the present EARL FITZWILLIAM.

The earl having no male issue the dignity of EARL OF HUNTINGDON became EXTINCT, but the BARONY OF CLINTON, created by writ, should have devolved upon his dau., if legitimate, and if so, it is still extant in her descendants, the Earls Fitzwilliam. Of this, however, there must be strong doubt. Dugdale mentions no dau., but says that he left all his extensive possessions to his nephew, Sir John de Clinton, Knt. Nicolas, in his Synopsis, confirms Dugdale, by stating that the Earl of Huntingdon d. s. p., "when his honours became EXTINCT;" while Banks gives the particulars of the dau. as above. Collins and Jacob call the lady "Elizabeth, dau. of William, Lord Clinton." Had she been legitimate, she would, doubtless, have been his lordship's heiress, and BARONESS CLINTON.

COBHAM—BARONS COBHAM OF KENT.

By Writ of Summons, dated 8 January, 1313.

Lineage.

In the 12th of King JOHN, HENRY DE COBHAM gave to that monarch 1,000 marks for his royal favour. This Henry had three sons, viz.,

JOHN, of whom presently.

Reginald, justice itinerant in Essex, in the 32nd HENRY III., and the ensuing year in Middlesex and Wilts, when he was constituted sheriff of Kent, and he continued to execute the duties of that office for the nine following years. In the 39th of the same monarch he was made constable of Dover Castle and warden of the Cinque Ports, when he had command to attend the ambassadors from the King of Castile, who then landed at Dover, to afford them hospitable entertainment, and to conduct them to the new temple at London, where they were to be lodged. He d. in three years afterwards.

William, one of the justices itinerant in the cos. of Sussex, Southampton, and Wilts in the 39th HENRY III., and for Norfolk and Suffolk in the 41st of the same reign.

JOHN DE COBHAM, the eldest son, executed in the 26th HENRY III. the office of sheriff of Kent, on behalf of Peter de Savoy, brother of Queen Eleanor, for one-half of the year, and on behalf of Bertram de Criol, for the other half. He was also one of the justices of the Court of Common Pleas from the 28th to the 35th of the same reign. This eminent person m. 1st, —, dau. of Warine Fitz-Benedict, by whom he had issue,

JOHN, his successor.

Henry (Sir), of Rundell, governor of the Islands of Guernsey and Jersey, and constable of the castle of Dover and warden of the Cinque Ports, temp. EDWARD I. Sir Henry m. Joane, elder dau. and co-heiress of Stephen de Pencestre, and had issue,

STEPHEN (see COBHAM, BARON COBHAM OF RUNDRELL).

RALPH (see COBHAM OF NORFOLK).

He, m. 2ndly, Joane, dau. of Hugh de Nevill, and had a son,

REGINALD, from whom the COBHAMS of Sterborough sprang.

JOHN DE COBBHAM, the eldest son, s. his father, and was one of the justices of the courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas, and a baron of the exchequer, in the reigns of HENRY III. and EDWARD I. This learned person m. Joane de Septvaus, one of the co-heirs of Roese, the widow of Stephen de Pencestre, and had issue,

HENRY, his successor.

Reginald, m. Joane, dau. of William de Evere, and obtained a charter in the 32nd EDWARD I. for free warren in all his demesne lands at Pipard's Clive, co. Wilts.

The elder son,

HENRY DE COBHAM, s. his father, and doing homage in the 28th EDWARD I. had livery of his lands. In the 4th EDWARD II., being then styled Henry de Cobham, jun. (his uncle Henry, of Rundell, then living), he was in an expedition into Scotland; and, in four years afterwards, he was constituted constable of Dover Castle and warden of the Cinque Ports. In the 10th of the same reign he was again in the wars of Scotland, and in the 15th he was made governor of the castle of Tenebrugge. He had been summoned to parliament as a BARON on 8 January, 1313, and in continuation for the remainder of his life. His lordship m. Maud de Columbers; d. in 1339, and was s. by his eldest son,

JOHN DE COBHAM, 2nd Baron Cobham, summoned to parliament from 12 September, 1342, to 20 November, 1360. This nobleman, who had been made admiral of the king's fleet from the mouth of the Thames westward in the 9th EDWARD III., had the next year in remuneration of his services, whilst he was a justice of Oyer and Terminer, in Kent, a grant of 100 marks out of the 200 which the commons of that county gave to the king in furtherance of the Scottish war. In the 28th of the same monarch he was made a banneret. His son and heir (by Joan his wife, dau. of John Beauchamp),

JOHN DE COBHAM, was summoned to parliament from 24 February, 1368, to 9 February, 1406. In the beginning of RICHARD II.'s reign his lordship was appointed ambassador upon two occasions to negotiate a peace with the French, and joined in commission by the same monarch with John, Duke of Lancaster, and others, to treat with the Earl of Flanders and others of that country, for the appeasing of certain discords between them and the English. In the 10th RICHARD he was one of the thirteen lords then appointed to govern the kingdom, but being impeached in the 21st of the same king, he had judgment pronounced against him; his lordship received, however, a pardon, but was sent prisoner to the Isle of Jersey. Lord Cobham m. Margaret, dau. of Hugh Courtenay, Earl of Devon, and had issue,

Joane, who m. Sir John de la Pole, Knt., and dying v. p., left an only dau.,

JOANE, who m. 1st, Sir Robert Hemengdale, but had no surviving issue. Her ladyship m. 2ndly, Sir Reginald Braybroke, by whom she had one surviving dau.,

JOANE, m. to Sir Thomas Brooke, Knt. (see BROOKE, LORD COBHAM).

She m. 3rdly, Sir Nicholas Hawberke, but had no surviving issue; 4thly, Sir JOHN OLDCASTLE, Knt.; and 5thly, Sir John Harpenden.

His lordship d. 1409, leaving his above-mentioned grand-dau. Joane, then Lady Hawberke, his sole heiress, who marrying subsequently

SIR JOHN OLDCASTLE, Knt., that gentleman was summoned to parliament, jure uxoris, as BARON COBHAM, from 26 October 1409, to 22 March, 1413. Sir John Oldcastle is celebrated in history as leader of the Lollards, the first sect of reformers that arose in England, and eventually by laying down his life in maintenance of his principles. Of this celebrated person Dugdale gives the following account:—"In the 1st of HENRY V., being tainted in his religion by those pretended holy zealots, then called Lollards, he became one of the chief of that sect, which at that time gave no little disturbance to the peace of the church; for which he was cited to appear before the archbishop of Canterbury. Whereupon, betaking himself to his castle of Couling, he was shortly after apprehended, and brought before the archbishop and others, in the cathedral of St. Paul, and there, by reason of his obstinacy in those dangerous tenets, received the sentence of an heretick. Under the cloak of this sanctity it was that he and his party designed to murder the king upon Twelfth Night, then keeping his Christmas at Eltham, and to destroy the monasteries of Westminster and St. Albans, as also the cathedral of St. Paul in London, with all the houses of friars in that city: to which end about four score of his party were found, in arms, in the night-time, expecting no less than 25,000 the next day to appear with them in St. Giles Fields. Which pernicious purpose being seasonably prevented, divers of them suffered death at that time. But this Oldcastle escaping, lurked privily for a time in sundry places, and endeavoured to raise new commotions. Wherein failing of that success he expected, in anno 1417, 5th HENRY V. (the king being then in his wars of France), he incited the Scots to an invasion of this realm, which, through the vigilancy of John, Duke of Bedford (the king's brother, and his lieutenant here in his absence), was happily prevented, and, at length being taken in Wales, within the territory of the Lord Powys, was brought to his trial, where having judgment of death pronounced against him, viz., to be drawn, hanged, and burnt on the gallows; and accordingly brought to the place of execution, he desired Sir Thomas Erpingham, that in case he saw him rise again the third day after, that then he would be a means to procure favour for the rest of his sect." Walpole, in his "Catalogue of Royal and Noble Authors," gives, however, a more flattering and just character of this unfortunate, though highly gifted nobleman—"The first author, as well as the first martyr, among our nobility, was Sir John Oldcastle, called 'the good Lord Cobham,' a man whose virtues made him a reformer, whose valour made him a martyr, whose martyrdom made him an enthusiast. His ready wit and brave spirit appeared to great advantage on his trial." He wrote "Twelve Conclusions, addressed to the Parliament of England," and several other tracts. His lordship had an only dau., Joane, by the heiress of Cobham, who d. young, and the BARONY OF COBHAM appears to have remained DORMANT from the period of his execution, until revived in the person of JOHN BROOKE, great-grandson of the above-mentioned Joane de la Pole, in 1445.

COKE—BARON LOVEL, OF MINSTER
LOVEL, CO. OXFORD, VISCOUNT COKE,
OF HOLKHAM, CO. NORFOLK, EARL OF LEICESTER.

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 28 May, 1728.

Earldom, &c., by Letters Patent, dated 9 May, 1744.

Lineage.

The learned Camden, who set forth the pedigree of this ancient family, deduced its origin from

WILLIAM COKE, of Dodington, in Norfolk, mentioned in a deed anno 1206, who by his wife Felice, had issue,

JEFFREY COKE, of the same place, from whom descended

SIR EDWARD COKE, the celebrated lawyer. This eminent person, the son of Robert Coke, Esq., of Mileham, in Norfolk, and Winifred his wife, dau. and one of the heirs of William Knightley, of Morggrave-Knightley, in the same shire, was born at the seat of his father, and at ten years of age sent to the grammar-school at Norwich, whence he removed to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he studied for four years, and was in some years afterwards chosen high-steward of that university. From Cambridge he removed to Clifford's Inn, and the year after he was entered a student in the Inner Temple, whence he was called to the bar, and being chosen reader in Lyon's Inn, acquired so much celebrity that he very soon obtained considerable practice. About this period he m. Bridget, dau. and co-heir of John Paston, Esq., of Huntingfield Hall, in Suffolk, 3rd son of Sir William Paston, of Paston, with whom he acquired a fortune of £30,000. An alliance, too, that brought him honours and preferments as well as wealth. The cities of Coventry and Norwich soon after elected him their recorder. The county of Norfolk returned him to parliament, and the House of Commons placed him in the speaker's chair. In the 35th of ELIZABETH (1592), Mr. Coke was appointed solicitor, and the next year attorney-general. In 1603 he received the honour of knighthood from King JAMES I. at Greenwich, and in three years afterwards was elevated to the bench as chief of the Court of Common Pleas, from which he was advanced, in 1613, to the dignity of chief justice of England (being the last person who bore that title) and sworn of the privy council. His lordship incurred subsequently, however, the displeasure of the court; and while in disgrace, hearing that a noble lord had solicited from the crown a portion of the lands belonging to the church at Norwich, which he had recovered and settled thereon, he cautioned the peer to desist, or that he would resume his gown and cap, and come into Westminster Hall once again to plead the cause of the church. Between his paternal property, the great marriage portion he had with his wife, and his valuable offices and lucrative practice at the bar, Sir Edward Coke realized an estate so ample, that each of his sons possessed a fortune equal to that of an elder brother. Camden, in his "Britannia," says, "that he was a person of admirable parts, than whom, as none ever applied himself closer to the study of the law, so never did any one understand it better. Of which he fully convinced England by his excellent administration for many years together, whilst attorney-general, and by executing the office of lord chief justice of the Common Pleas with the greatest wisdom and prudence; nor did he give less proof of his abilities in his excellent 'Reports,' and Commentaries upon our Laws, whereby he has highly obliged both his own age and posterity." His lordship d. 3 September, 1633, at the advanced age of eighty-three. A noble monument was erected to his memory at Tittleshall Church, Norfolk, with his effigies habited in judge's robes lying at full length, under a canopy supported by two marble pillars, on the top of which are four large figures, and between the two pillars two marble tables, bearing Latin inscriptions. Sir Edward Coke's dau., by his 2nd wife Lady Elizabeth Cecil, dau. of Thomas, Earl of Exeter, were Elizabeth, who d. unm.

Theophila, m. to — Bullock, Esq.

Sir Edward was s. by his eldest son,

SIR ROBERT COKE, of Longford, 2nd baronet, M.P. for the co. of Derby, 1st JAMES II., who m. Sarah, 3rd dau. and co-heiress of — Barker, Esq., of Abrightlee, co. Salop, but dying s. p., 1617, the title and estates devolved upon his brother,

SIR EDWARD COKE, of Longford, 3rd baronet, at whose decease, unm., 25 August, 1727, the baronetcy EXPIRED, while the estates passed by the baronet's will to Edward Coke, Esq., brother of Thomas, 1st Lord Lovel.

I. Anne, m. to Ralph Sadler, Esq., son and heir of Sir Ralph Sadler, Knt.

II. Bridget, m. to William Skinner, Esq., son and heir of Sir Vincent Skinner.

So much for the lord chief justice's children, we now return to the grandson of his son HENRY.

ROBERT COKE, Esq., of Thurrington, who upon the decease of his cousin (the son of his great-uncle JOHN), John Coke, Esq., of Holkham, in Norfolk, unm., inherited that estate, and thus became possessed of the chief part of (Sir Edward Coke) his great-grandfather's property. Mr. Coke m. Lady Anne Osborne, dau. of Thomas, 1st Duke of Leeds, Lord Treasurer of England, by whom he had an only surviving son, his successor at his decease, 16 January, 1679,

EDWARD COKE, Esq., who m. Carey, dau. of Sir John Newtown, Bart., of Barrows Court, co. Gloucester, and had issue,

I. THOMAS, his successor.

II. Edward of Longford, co. Derby, who bequeathed at his decease, unm., in 1733, that estate to his younger brother.

III. Robert, vice-chamberlain to Queen ANNE, who m. June, 1733, Lady Jane Holt, widow of John Holt, Esq., of Redgrave, in Suffolk, and sister and co-heiress of Philip, Duke of Wharton, but d. s. p.

II. Anne, m. to Philip Roberts, a major in the 2nd troop of horse guards, and left a son,

WESMAN ROBERTS, of whom hereafter, as heir to the entire of the estates of his uncle, the EARL OF LEICESTER.

Mr. Coke d. 13 April, 1707, and was s. by his eldest son,

THOMAS COKE, Esq., who was elected a knight of the Bath, 27 May, 1725, and elevated to the peerage, 28 May, 1728, as BARON LOVEL, of Minster Lovel, co. Oxford. In 1733, his lordship was constituted joint postmaster-general, and created 9 May, 1744, Viscount Coke, of Holkham, and EARL OF LEICESTER; his lordship m. 2 July, 1718, Lady Mary Tufton, 4th dau. and co-heiress of Thomas, 6th Earl of Thanet (in which lady's favour the abeyance of the BARONY DE CLIFFORD was terminated by the crown in 1734), by whom he had an only son, EDWARD, Viscount Coke, who m. in 1747, Lady Mary Campbell, dau. and co-heiress of John, Duke of Argyll and Greenwich, but d. s. p. in the lifetime of his father, anno 1753.

The earl d. 20 April, 1759, and thus leaving no issue, the Barony of Lovel and EARLDOM OF LEICESTER, with the viscounty, became EXTINCT.

His lordship commenced the stately pile of building called Holkham Hall, in Norfolk, which was completed by the countess, who survived him many years: her ladyship d. in 1775. The whole of the extensive estates of the Earl of Leicester devolved upon his nephew (refer to Anne, youngest dau. of Edward Coke, Esq., and Carey, dau. of Sir John Newton Bart.), WENMAN ROBERTS, Esq., who thereupon assumed the surname of COKE only, and marrying Miss Elizabeth Chamberlayne, left, with two daus., and a younger son, EDWARD, an elder son, THOMAS WILLIAM COKE, of Holkham, M.P. for the co. of Norfolk, who was created (12 August, 1837) EARL OF LEICESTER, of Holkham.

COLLINGWOOD—BARON COLLINGWOOD, OF COLDBURNE AND HETHPOOL, CO. NORTHUMBERLAND.

By Letters Patent, dated 20 November, 1805.

Lineage.

CUTHBERT COLLINGWOOD, b. 1750, son of Cuthbert Collingwood, Esq., of Ditchburne, co. Northumberland, having adopted the naval profession, obtained the rank of lieutenant in 1775, was made post-captain in 1780, advanced to the rank of rear-admiral of the White in 1795, rear-admiral of the Red in 1801, vice-admiral of the Blue in 1804, in which commission he had the glory of being second in command at the memorable battle off Cape Trafalgar, 21 October, 1805, under the immortal Nelson; and for the services rendered upon that triumphant occasion, the vice-admiral obtained the professional promotion of vice-admiral of the Blue, and was advanced to the peerage 20 November, 1805, as BARON COLLINGWOOD, of Coldburne and Hethpool, co. Northumberland. His lordship m. Patience, dau. and co-heiress of Erasmus Blackett, Esq., alderman of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, by whom he had issue,

Sarah, m. 30 May, 1816, George Lewis Newnham Collingwood, Esq., F.R.S., and d. 25 November, 1851, leaving issue.

Mary-Patience, m. Anthony Denny, Esq., of Barhamwood Herts, and d. 18 September, 1823, leaving issue.

His lordship d. in 1810, when, leaving no male issue, the Barony of COLLINGWOOD became EXTINCT.

COLVILE—BARONS COLVILE.

By Writ of Summons, dated 14 December, 1264.

Lineage.

In the time of King STEPHEN, PHILIP DE COLVILE, being opposed to that monarch, built a castle in Yorkshire, and fortified it against him, but which STEPHEN invested, reduced, and demolished. In the ensuing reign we find this feudal lord one of the witnesses to the agreement between the King of England and the King of Scots, by which the latter obliging himself to be faithful to King HENRY, did homage to him at York. To this Philip :

WILLIAM DE COLVILLE, one of the barons who took up arms against JOHN, and was excommunicated by the Pope. This William, being taken prisoner at the battle of Lincoln, in the 1st HENRY III., his wife Maude had safe conduct to the king, to treat for his liberation, and having accomplished her object, obtained a royal precept to William, Earl of Albemarle, for the restoration of her husband's castle at Birham, co. Lincoln. William de Colville was s. by his son,

ROBERT DE COLVILLE, who had also taken up arms against JOHN, and in the 17th of that monarch's reign had letters of safe conduct, with Roger de Jarpeville, to the royal presence, to treat of peace on behalf of the barons. Continuing, however, in rebellion, he was taken prisoner by Falcass de Breant, in the 1st HENRY III. To this Robert :

WALTER DE COLVILLE, a person of no less turbulent disposition than his predecessors. Joining with Montfort, Earl of Leicester, he was taken prisoner by Prince Edward, at Kenilworth, in the 49th HENRY III., but under the decree, called the "Dictum of Kenilworth," was admitted to a composition for his lands which had been seized, and he appears to have been summoned to parliament as a BARON in the same year, 24 December, 1264. His lordship d. in 1276, and was s. by his son,

ROGER DE COLVILLE, 2nd baron, who was sheriff of Norfolk and Suffolk, in the 51st HENRY III., and paid £100 fine in the 14th EDWARD I. for permission to marry Ermentrude, widow of Stephen de Cressy, by whom he had issue,

1. EDMUND, his successor.
1. Elizabeth, m. to — Basset, of Sapcote, co. Lincoln, and had
 - SIMON, whose son and heir,
 - RALPH BASSET, of Sapcote, became eventually co-heir to the Colvilles.
11. Alice, m. Sir John Gernun, and had
 - John Gernun, who became eventually co-heir to the Colvilles.

His lordship d. in 1287, and was s. by his son,

EDMUND DE COLVILLE, 3rd baron, but who does not appear by the existing enrolments to have been summoned to parliament. This nobleman m. Margaret, dau. of Robert de Ufford, and dying in 1315, was s. by his son,

ROBERT DE COLVILLE, 4th baron, summoned to parliament from 25 February, 1342, to 20 January, 1360. His lordship d. in 1368, and was s. by his son,

WALTER DE COLVILLE, 5th baron, but who does not appear by the existing enrolments to have been summoned to parliament. His lordship m. Margaret, dau. and heiress of Giles de Bassingburne, and was s. by his grandson,

ROBERT DE COLVILLE, son of Walter de Colville, who d. s. p. Robert d. in early youth, leaving Ralph Basset, of Sapcote, and Sir John Gernun (above-mentioned) his heirs, between whose descendants and representatives it is presumed the BARONY OF COLVILLE is now in ADEYANCE.

COMPTON—BARON WILMINGTON, OF WILMINGTON, CO. SUSSEX, VISCOUNT PEVENSEY, AND EARL OF WILMINGTON.

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 11 January, 1728.
 Earldom, &c., by Letters Patent, dated 14 May, 1730.

Lineage.

The Right Honourable SIR SPENCER COMPTON, K.B., 3rd son of James, 3rd Earl of Northampton, having filled the Speaker's chair of the House of Commons in the parliaments of 1714 and 1722, and subsequently the offices of paymaster-general of his majesty's land forces, and treasurer of Chelsea Hospital, was elevated to the peerage 11 January, 1728, as Baron Wilmington. In 1730, his lordship was constituted lord privy seal, and advanced 14 May in that year to the dignities of Viscount Pevensey, and EARL OF WILMINGTON. In the December following he was declared lord president of the council, and installed, 22 August, 1733, a knight of the Garter. He was also one of the lords justices during the king's absence in Hanover, and one of the governors of the Charter House. This nobleman, who was esteemed a personage of great worth, abilities, and integrity, d. unm. in July, 1743, when all his honours became extinct; while his estates passed by his lordship's bequest to his brother George, 4th Earl of Northampton, and have since been carried by that nobleman's great-grand-dau. COMYN—EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

Conferred by WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, anno 1068.

Lineage.

In the 3rd year of King WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, that monarch conferred the Earldom of Northumberland, vacant by the death of Earl Copsi, upon

ROBERT COMYN, but the nomination accorded so little with the wishes of the inhabitants of the county that they at first resolved to abandon entirely their dwellings; being prevented doing so, however, by the inclemency of the season, it was then determined, at all hazards, to put the new earl to death. Of this evil design his lordship had intimation, through Egellvive, bishop of Durham, but, disregarding the intelligence, he repaired to Durham with 700 soldiers and commenced a course of plunder and bloodshed, which rousing the inhabitants of the neighbourhood, the town was assaulted and carried by a multitude of country people, and the earl and all his troops, to a man, put to death. This occurrence took place in 1069, in a few months after his lordship's appointment to the earldom.

CONINGSBY—BARON CONINGSBY, OF CONINGSBY, CO. LINCOLN, EARL OF CONINGSBY. BARONESS AND VIS-COUNTESS CONINGSBY, OF HAMPTON COURT, CO. HEREFORD.

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 18 June, 1715.
 Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 30 April, 1719.
 Baroness and Viscountess, by Letters Patent, dated 26 January, 1716.

Lineage.

The surname of this family was originally assumed from the town of Coningsby, co. Salop, and the Coningsbys are said to have been of ancient descent, but they do not appear to have attained much importance until the period of the revolution. A THOMAS DE CONINGSBY certainly distinguished himself in the martial reign of EDWARD III., and participated in the glory of Poitiers, and the family of which we are about to treat may have sprung from him, but of that there is no evidence.

SIR HUMPHREY CONINGSBY, Knt., was father of THOMAS, temp. HENRY VIII., who m. Cicely Salwey, dau. and co-heir of John Salwey, Esq., of Stanford, Worcestershire. Their son, HUMPHREY CONINGSBY, m. Ann, dau. of Sir Thomas Highfield, and had a son, SIR THOMAS CONINGSBY, who d. 1625, having m. Philippa Fitzwilliam, of Milton, Northamptonshire, by whom he had a son, Fitzwilliam, m. Lady Cicely Neville, dau. of the 7th Earl of Abergavenny. Their son Humphry m. Lettice, dau. of Arthur Loftus, Esq., of Bath-farnham, and was father of THOMAS FITZWILLIAM CONINGSBY, Esq., of Hampton Court, co. Hereford (whose will was proved 1 December, 1666), m. Cecilia, eldest dau. of Henry Neville, Lord Abergavenny, and had a son and a dau., viz.,

THOMAS, his heir.

Cecilia, who m. David Hyde, Esq., of Early Court, Berks, and had dau., co-heiresses, one of whom, Cecilia Hyde, m. 15 May, 1676, Richard Norbury, Esq., of Droitwich, and was great-grandmother of Coningsby Norbury, Esq., of Droitwich, whose dau. and heiress MARY-ANNE m. in 1827, Thomas Jones, Esq., J.P. and D.L., of Sherridge, co. Worcester, who has taken the name and arms of NORBURY.

The son and heir,

THOMAS CONINGSBY, Esq., having zealously promoted the revolution, attended King WILLIAM into Ireland, and was present at the battle of the Boyne, where, being close to his majesty when the king received a slight wound in the shoulder, he was the first to apply a handkerchief to the hurt. He was subsequently, upon WILLIAM's departure from Ireland, constituted lord justice with Lord Sydney, and elevated to the peerage of that kingdom as BARON CONINGSBY, of Clanbrassil, co. Armagh, on 17 April, 1693; in which year his lordship was sworn of the privy council in England, and again in the reign of Queen ANNE, when he was made vice-treasurer and paymaster of the forces in Ireland. Upon the accession of King GEORGE I. he was made a peer of Great Britain (18 June, 1715), in the dignity of BARON CONINGSBY, of Coningsby, co. Lincoln, and created EARL OF CONINGSBY, also in the peerage of Great Britain, on 30 April, 1719, both honours being in remainder to MARGARET, Viscountess Coningsby, his eldest dau. by his 2nd wife, and her heirs male. His lordship m. 1st, Miss Gorges, dau. of Ferdinando Gorges, Esq., of Eye, co. Hereford, by whom he had issue,

The 2nd son,

EDWARD CONWAY, Esq., one of the gentlemen ushers of the chamber to King HENRY VIII., who m. Anne, dau. and heiress of Richard Burdett, Esq., of Arrow, co. Warwick, and was s. by his son,

SIR JOHN CONWAY, Knt., who being in the great expedition made into Scotland in the 1st year of EDWARD VI., distinguished himself so highly as to be made a Banneret. Sir John m. Catherine, dau. of Sir Ralph Verney, Knt., and was s. at his decease, some time in the reign of EDWARD VI., by his son,

SIR JOHN CONWAY, who was made governor of Ostend, by Robert, Earl of Leicester, in the year 1586. He m. Elene, dau. of Sir Fulke Greville, of Beauchamps Court, co. Warwick, and dying in the 1st King JAMES I., was s. by his son,

SIR EDWARD CONWAY. This gallant person received the honour of knighthood from Robert, Earl of Essex, at the sacking of Cadiz, where he commanded a regiment in 1596. After which he served in the Netherlands, and was governor of the Brill. In the 20th JAMES I. he was constituted one of the principal secretaries of state, and elevated to the peerage on 22 March, 1624, as BARON CONWAY, of Ragley, co. Warwick, a manor acquired by purchase towards the close of Queen ELIZABETH's reign. His lordship was appointed captain of the Isle of Wight in the December following, and being again secretary of state in the 1st King CHARLES I., was advanced to the IRISH VISCOUNTY OF KILLULTAGH, co. Antrim, 15 March, 1626, in which year, on 6 June, he was created VISCOUNT CONWAY, of Conway Castle, co. Carnarvon. His lordship filled afterwards the high office of president of the council, and was accredited upon some occasion ambassador extraordinary to the court of Vienna. His lordship m. Dorothy, dau. of Sir John Tracy, Knt., of Todington, co. Gloucester, and widow of Edward Bray, Esq., by whom he had issue, EDWARD, his successor; Thomas (Sir), a lieutenant-colonel in the army in the wars in Germany; and Ralph, together with four daus., viz.,

COOTE—EARLS OF MOUNTRATH, BARON CASTLECOOTE.

Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 6 September, 1660.

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 20 July, 1800.

Lineage.

This noble family, of which the senior branch still exists in Sir Charles Coote, Bart., of the Queen's Co., derived its origin from

SIR JOHN COOTE, a native of France, who m. the dau. and heiress of the Lord Boys of that kingdom, and had issue

SIR JOHN COOTE, who settled in Devonshire, and marrying a dau. of Sir John Fortescue, of that co., left a son,

SIR WILLIAM COOTE, who m. a dau. of Thomas Mansel, and was father of Sir William Coote, who m. the dau. and heir of — Worthy, Esq., of Worthy, and had a son and heir,

SIR JOHN COOTE, who m. the dau. of — Sacheverell, and was father of

ROBERT COOTE, the father, by — Grantham his wife, of

THOMAS COOTE, Esq., who m. the dau. of — Darnell and left

SIR JOHN COOTE, who had two sons, JOHN his heir, and Robert, abbot of St. Albans, and rector of St. Edmundsbury, in Suffolk. The elder,

JOHN COOTE, had three sons, viz., Richard, who m. Margaret, dau. of Sir William Calthrope, of Norfolk, and had Christopher, who m. the dau. and co-heir of the family of Whittingham, by whom he was father of Richard, who, by Elizabeth, dau. and co-heir of — Felton, was ancestor of the Cootes, of the co. of Norfolk; JOHN, of whom presently; Robert, who m. the dau. of — Blaxton, of Blaxton, and had issue, John, who d. unm., and a dau. Anne, who became his heir: she m. Robert Waldgrave, Esq., and took with her into that family the lands in Devonshire.

The 2nd son,

JOHN COOTE, to whom his uncle Robert, the abbot, gave great possessions in Norfolk and Suffolk, m. Margaret, dau. of — Drury, Esq., and had a son,

FRANCIS COOTE, Esq., of Eaton, in Norfolk, a servant to Queen ELIZABETH, who, by Anne his wife, left a son,

SIR NICHOLAS COOTE, living in 1636. He had issue, CHARLES, his heir, and William, dean of Down. The elder son,

SIR CHARLES COOTE, removing to Ireland, served in the wars there against O'Neill, Earl of Tyrone, as captain of 100 foot. He was subsequently provost-marshal of the province of Connaught, collector and receiver of the king's composition money there, and finally vice-president. In 1620, he was sworn of the privy council, and created a baronet of Ireland, by patent, dated 2 April, 1621.

Upon the breaking out of the rebellion in 1641, Sir Charles Coote had a commission to raise 1,000 men to resist and suppress the rebels, and he was subsequently highly distinguished upon several occasions at the head of his regiment, but particularly by his gallant relief of Birr, in 1642, in which affair, heading 30 dismounted dragoons, he beat off the enemy with the loss of their captain and 40 men, relieved the castles of Birr, Burrass, and Knocknemease; and having continued forty-eight hours in the saddle, returned to the camp without the loss of a single soldier. This is the surprising passage through Monrath Woods which was perpetuated in the title of honour afterwards conferred upon his posterity. Sir Charles lost his life the ensuing year in a sally from the town of Trim; and parliament, in consideration of his services and sufferings, declared their intention, 16 May, 1642, of bestowing upon his children the estate in the Queen's Co., of Florence Fitzpatrick, a rebel, but which not having been effected, the Protector ordered, 27 July, 1654, that the deceased baronet's family should be put into possession thereof, until the intention of the legislature should be fulfilled.

Sir Charles Coote m. prior to the year 1617, Dorothea younger dau. and co-heir of Hugh Cuffe, Esq., of Cuffe's Wood, co. Cork, and had issue,

I. CHARLES, his successor.

II. Chidley, of Killester, co. Dublin, a military man like his father, who for his services and arrears under Cromwell had lands assigned him, after the Restoration, in co. Kerry. Colonel Coote represented the Queen's Co., and afterwards the co. of Galway, in parliament. He m. Alice, or Anne, only dau. of Sir Thomas Philips, of Newtown-Limavady, co. Derry, and had issue,

1 CHIDLEY, of Kilmallock, co. Limerick, attainted by King JAMES's parliament in 1689, by the name of Chidley-Coote Fitz-Chidley, Esq. He was a lieutenant-col. in the army, and lieutenant of the ordnance in the reigns of WILLIAM and MARY and Queen ANNE. He m. Catharine, dau. of Colonel Robert Sandys, son of Sir Edwin Sandys, of Northbourne, Kent, and had issue, Anne (m. to Bartholomew Purdon, Esq., of Ballyclogh; and Catherine, m. to Henry Boyle, Earl of Shannon), and an only son, his successor,

CHIDLEY COOTE, D.D., of Ash Hill, who m. 31 January, 1702, Jane Evans, sister of the 1st Lord Carbery, and had issue,

ROBERT, of Ash Hill, m. in 1730, Anne, dau. and heir of Bartholomew Purdon, Esq.; and d. in 1745, leaving issue,

CHIDLEY, of Ash Hill, co. Limerick, m. 31 August, 1790, Elizabeth-Anne, dau. of the Rev. Ralph Carr, of Bath; and d. 6 August, 1799, leaving issue,

CHARLES-HENRY (Sir), who s. to the Coote Baronetcy on the death of Lord Mountrath.

Robert-Carr, m. Miss Margaret Grier; and d. 5 November, 1834, leaving issue four sons and three daus.

John-Chidley, of Huntingdon, Queen's Co., J.P., b. 10 January, 1798; m. 8 May, 1827, Jane-Deborah, 2nd dau. of the Rev. Samuel Close, of Elm Park, and has, Chidley-Samuel, b. 21 December, 1829.

Maxwell-Henry, b. 4 May, 1832.

Jane-Elizabeth-Anna, m. 2 January, 1855, to the Rev. Charles-Lyndhurst Vaughan, son of the late Baron Vaughan and the Dowager Lady St. John. Harriet-Mary.

Ralph, in holy orders, m. 1825, Miss Harriet Close. Mary, m. to Charles-L. Sandys, Esq., of Indiaville, Queen's Co.; and d. 6 February, 1852.

Bartholomew, whose son, Robert-Eyre-Purdon Coote, was of Ballyclogh.

Charles, in holy orders.

Jane, m. to William Purdon, Esq.

Catherine, m. to the Rev. William Dobbin, D.D.

George d. unm.

Charles, dean of Kilfenora; m. 1st, in 1753, Grace, dau. of Thomas Tilson, Esq., and widow of Thomas Cuffe, Esq.; and 2ndly, in 1770, Catherine, dau. of Benjamin Bathurst, Esq., of Lydney, co. Gloucester; by the former of whom he had issue,

CHARLES-HENRY, LORD CASTLECOOTE.

Eyre (Sir), lieutenant-general in the army.

John.

Thomas, whose eldest son, Brigade-Major Thomas Coote, left one surviving son, Charles-Eyre Coote, of Farway House, Clifton.

2 Philips (Sir), m. 1st, Jane, dau. of Dr. Henry Jones, bishop of Meath, by whom he had an only dau.,

Alice, who d. in 1680.

Sir Philips m. 2ndly, Elizabeth, dau. and co-heir of William, Earl of Meath, by whom he had two daus. and a son,

Charles, who m. Katherine, dau. of Sir Robert Newcomen, Bart., and d. in 1761, leaving an only son, CHIDLEY, of Mount Coote, co. Limerick, who unsuccessfully claimed the BARONY OF ARDEE, as heir-general of William, Earl of Meath. He m. Jane, dau. of Sir Ralph Gore, Bart., and left at his decease, 24 February, 1764, a dau., Elizabeth, m. to James King, Esq., of Gola, and a son, CHARLES COOTE, Esq., of Mount Coote, who m. Elizabeth, dau. and co-heir of Philip Oliver, Esq., M.P., and was father of CHIDLEY COOTE, Esq., of Mount Coote, who m. Anne, dau. and co-heir of the Hon. W. W. Hewett, and d. 1843, leaving a son CHARLES CHIDLEY COOTE, Esq., of Mount Coote, and other issue. (See BURKE's Landed Gentry).

III. RICHARD, ancestor of the Earl of Bellamont.

IV. Thomas, of Coote Hill, in Cavan; lieutenant-col. of the Earl of Ossory's regiment of foot, m. Frances, dau. of Moyse Hill, Esq., and d. s. p. 27 November, 1671.

1. Letitia, m. to Sir Francis Hamilton, of Killeshandra.

Sir Charles Coote was s. by his eldest son,

SIR CHARLES COOTE, 2nd bart., who was also actively employed against the rebels. He succeeded his father as provost marshal of Connaught, of which province he was made lord president by patent in 1645, and he afterwards zealously defended it for the parliament. In November 1661, he joined Iretton, and took Clare; he next blockaded Galway, which surrendered in 1662, in which year he repossessed himself of Ballyshannon, with the castles of Donegal, Sligo, and Ballymote; and was appointed, 17 December, the first of the Commonwealth's commissioners for the affairs of Ireland in the province of Connaught. In January, 1660, he was made one of the commissioners of government. About this period Sir Charles entered into measures with Lord Broghill for the restoration of the king, and, according to Lord Clarendon, being president of Connaught, and having a good command and interest in the army, and being a man of courage and impatience to serve his majesty, he sent over, in February, Sir Arthur Forbes (a Scottish gentleman, of good affection to the king and good interest in the province of Ulster, where he was an officer of horse, and was afterwards created Earl of Granard) to Brussels, to the Marquess of Ormonde, "that he might assure his majesty of his affection and duty; and that, if his majesty would vouchsafe himself to come into Ireland, he was confident the whole kingdom would declare for him." This loyal declaration the king received with great satisfaction, offering, in return, to make Sir Charles an earl, to confer upon him such command as he pleased, and to take his whole family under his especial protection; and after the Restoration his majesty, in accordance with this pledge, confirmed Sir Charles in his post of president of Connaught, appointing him at the same time keeper of the castle of Athlone, and granted to him various other important immunities, while he was elevated to the peerage, by letters patent, dated 6 September, 1660, as EARL OF MOUNTBATH. His lordship m. 1st, Mary, 2nd dau. and co-heiress of Sir Francis Ruish, of Ruish Hall, in the Queen's Co., M.P. for the King's Co., and of the privy council in the reign of King JAMES I., by whom he had an only son, CHARLES, his successor. The earl m. 2ndly, Jane, dau. of Sir Robert Hannay, Bart., of Scotland, by whom he had,

1. RICHARD, who having lands assigned him, by the acts of settlement, in the cos. of Kilkenny, Kerry, Roscommon, and Limerick, became seated at Tullaghmine, in the first mentioned shire. He m. Penelope, dau. of Arthur, and sister of William Hill, Esq., of Hillsborough, co. Down, by whom he had surviving issue,

1 Rose, m. to Charles Boyle, Viscount Blesington.

2 Jane, m. to Sir William Evans, Bart., of Kilcreene, co. Kilkenny, by whom she had four daus., of whom

Catharine became eventually survivor, and then sole heiress of her father. She m. Francis Morris, Esq., of Castle Morris, co. Kilkenny, and her eldest son was advanced to the peerage as VISCOUNT MOUNTMORRIS.

II. Chidley, of Sherwood Park, co. Carlow.

1. Dorothy, m. to Rev. Moses Vireddet, and d. 8 February, 1677.

His lordship d. 18 December, 1661, and was s. by his eldest son,

CHARLES COOTE, 2nd earl; who m. in 1653, Alice, dau. of Sir Robert Meredyth, Knt., of Greenhills, co. Kildare, chancellor of the Exchequer, and had surviving issue,

CHARLES, his successor.

Anne, m. to Murrough Boyle, Viscount Blesington; and d. in 1725.

His lordship d. in 1672, and was s. by his son,

CHARLES COOTE, 3rd earl. This nobleman m. Arabella Dormer, 2nd dau. and co-heir of Charles, Earl of Carnarvon, by whom he had surviving issue, three sons. His lordship, who carried the banner of Ireland at the funeral of Queen MARY, 5 March, 1694, and was one of the lords justices in 1696, d. in May, 1709, and was s. by his eldest son,

CHARLES COOTE, 4th earl, member in the English parliament for Knarborough, and of the privy council of King GEORGE I. His lordship dying unm. in the thirtieth year of his age, 14 September, 1715, the honours devolved upon his brother,

HENRY COOTE, 5th earl; who was s. at his decease, unm., 27 March, 1720, by his brother,

ALGERNON COOTE, 6th earl, member for Castle Rising in the British parliament, anno 1723. His lordship m. in 1721, Lady Diana Newport, youngest dau. of Richard, Earl of Bradford; and dying in August, 1744, was s. by his only son,

CHARLES-HENRY COOTE, 7th earl. This nobleman having no heir to his hereditary honours, obtained a new peerage by letters patent, dated 20 July, 1800, creating him BARON CASTLECOOTE, with remainder to the Right Hon. Charles-Henry Coote, eldest son of the Very Rev. Charles Coote, dean of Kilfenora;—a creation which led to the great legal argument in the Fermoyle case before the Lords Committee for Privileges in 1856. The earl d. 1 March, 1802, when the EARLDOM OF MOUNTRATH EXPIRED, while the ancient baronetcy and estates devolved upon Charles Coote, Esq., of Ballyfin, in the Queen's

Co. (revert to descendants of Col. Chidley Cooté, of Killester, 2nd son of the 1st settler, Sir Charles Cooté), and the Barony of Castlecoote passed, under the limitation, to

THE RIGHT HON. CHARLES-HENRY COOTE, as 2nd lord. He m. Elizabeth-Anne, eldest dau. and co-heir of the Rev. Dr. Tilson; and d. 22 January, 1823, leaving an only son and successor.

ETHE COOTE, 3rd Lord Castlecoote; who m. in July, 1822, Barbara, 2nd dau. of Sir Joshua-Colles Meredyth, Bart.; but d. s. p. in 1827, when the peerage became EXTINCT. His lordship's widow m. 2ndly, in 1828, Joseph, present Earl of Milltown.

Richard, 1st Lord Cooté, of Coloony, d. 10 July, 1683, and was buried in Christ Church. His eldest surviving son,

RICHARD COOTE, 2nd baron, was member in the British parliament for Droitwich. This nobleman being one of the first to espouse the cause of the Prince of Orange, was attainted by King James's parliament in 1689. His lordship was rewarded, however, immediately after the Revolution, by being appointed treasurer and receiver-general to Queen Mary, and being created, by patent, dated 2 November, 1689, EARL OF BELLAMONT, in Ireland. He filled, until his decease, 5 March, 1700, the office of governor of New York. He m. Catharine, dau. and heiress of Bridges Nanfon, Esq., of Bridgemorton, co. COPSI—EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

Conferred by WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, anno 1068.

Lineage.

The earldom of the county of Northumberland was held at the time of the Conquest by

MORKAR, youngerson of Algar, Earl of the co. of Chester, and he was left undisturbed in the dignity until he rose in rebellion against the new monarch, when he forfeited the earldom, which was then conferred upon

Copsi (uncle of Tofti, a very distinguished Earl of Northumberland under the Saxon rule,) in consideration of the high character he had attained in council. The new earl immediately expelled from his territory Osulph, whom Morkar had placed there as his deputy, but that chief collecting a force, compelled Earl Copsi to seek shelter in the church of Newburne, which being fired, the Earl of Northumberland was seized by his opponent in an attempt to escape, and was decapitated at the door of the church, on the fourth idea of March, in the fifth week after he had the administration of those parts committed to him; but in the very next autumn Osulph himself was slain by a robber, with whom he came casually into conflict.

CORBET—BARONS CORBET.

By Writ of Summons, dated 23 June, 1296.

Lineage.

In the time of WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR the brothers ROGER and ROBERT, mentioned in Domesday Book as sons of CORBET, held of Roger de Montgomery divers lordships in the co. of Salop, and were munificent benefactors to the church.

WILLIAM CORBET, the eldest son of Roger, was seated at Wattleborough. His 2nd son,

SIR ROBERT CORBET, Knt., had for his inheritance the castle and estates of Caus, with a large portion of his father's domains. He was father of

ROBERT CORBET, also of Caus Castle, who accompanied RICHARD I. to the siege of Acre, and then bore for arms the two ravens, as now borne by all his descendants.

THOMAS CORBET, son of the last-named Robert, was sheriff of Shropshire in 1249; in 1270 he was a donor to the abbey of Shrewsbury, and in 1272 he founded the chapel of St. Margaret, in Caus. He m. Isabel, sister and co-heir of Reginald de Valletort, Baron of Trematon Castle, in Cornwall, and widow of Alan de Dunstanville, by whom he had issue,

* Sir John Copley was called to the bar in 1804, and made serjeant-at-law in 1813, and became chief-justice of Chester in 1819; he was solicitor-general from 1819 to 1823; attorney-general from 1823 to 1826; and master of the Rolls from 1826 to 1827.

PETER, his successor.

Alice, m. to Robert de Stafford, and had issue,

Nicholas de Stafford, whose son,

Edmund de Stafford, was father of

RALPH, LORD STAFFORD.

EMMA, m. to Sir Bryan de Brampton, and had

Walter de Brampton, father of Sir Bryan de Brampton, who left two daus., co-heiresses,

Margaret, m. to Robert Harley, Esq., ancestor of the Earls of Oxford.

Elizabeth, m. to Edmund de Cornwall.

His lordship d. in 1273, and was s. by his son,

PETER CORBET, who, it appears, was "a mighty hunter," for, in the 9th King EDWARD I, he obtained letters-patent from the sovereign authorizing him to take wolves in all the royal forests in various counties, a proof of the falsehood of the common belief that our island is indebted to the exertions of King EDGAR for the extirpation of that savage beast of prey. This Peter Corbet, of Caus, had summons to parliament as one of the barons of the realm, from the 22nd of EDWARD I., to his death in 1300. By Alice his wife, he had three sons, THOMAS, PETER, and JOHN. THOMAS CORBET, the eldest son, m. Joan, dau. of Alan Plukenet, and d. v. p., s. p. The 2nd son,

PETER CORBET, 2nd baron, succeeding his father in the estates of his family, joined with Harry de la Pomeroy in petitioning parliament for the domains of the Valletort family, to which estates they were now become the heirs; but, as King EDWARD II. had himself been found, by inquisition, to be heir to the Earl of Cornwall, the grantees of "Roger de Vauter," the last of the Valletorts who possessed the estates, the petitioners did not find favour in their suit. This Peter Corbet had also summons to parliament, as Baron Corbet, of Caus, until his death on 26 May, 1322. He d. s. p., and the line of the family was continued by the youngest of the three brothers,

JOHN CORBET, 3rd baron, at whose decease, s. p., the BARONY OF CORBET became EXTINCT, while (the descendants of the deceased lord's aunts) Ralph, Lord Stafford, and Sir Robert Harley became his heirs.

CORBET—VISCOUNTESS CORBET, OF LINCHDALE, CO. SALOP.

By Letters Patent, dated anno 1679. The dignity for life only.

Lineage.

DAME SARAH CORBET, widow of Sir Vincent Corbet, Bart., of Moreton Corbet, co. Salop (a descendant of the old Lords Corbet, of Caus Castle), and dau. and co-heir of Sir Robert Monson, of Carlton, co. Lincoln, was elevated to the peerage, by letters patent, dated in 1679, for life only, as VISCOUNTESS CORBET, of Linchdale. Her ladyship, who m. 2ndly, Sir Charles Lee, Knt., of Edmonton, was mother of Sir Vincent Corbet, 2nd baronet, who left a son, Sir Vincent Corbet, 3rd baronet, at whose decease, s. p., in 1688, the baronetcy became EXTINCT. The peerage EXPIRED, of course, with the viscountess, who d. in 1682.

NOTE.—Upon the demise of Sir Vincent Corbet, in 1688, the estates of the family reverted to that gentleman's great uncle, Richard Corbet, Esq., of Shrewsbury, whose lineal descendant, Andrew Corbet, Esq., was created a Baronet in 1808, and was grandfather of the present SIR VINCENT ROWLAND CORBET, Bart., of Moreton Corbet.

CORNWALL—BARON FANHOPE, IN THE CO. HEREFORD. BARON MILBROKE, IN THE CO. BEDFORD.

Barony of Fanhope, 17 July, 1433.

Barony of Milbroke, 30 January, 1442.

Lineage.

RICHARD, King of the Romans, and Earl of Cornwall and Poitou, 2nd son of JOHN, King of England, by his 3rd wife Isabel, sister and heir of Aymer, Earl of Angouleme, m. Sanchia, 3rd dau. of Raymond, Earl of Provence, sister of Queen

ELEANOR, wife of HENRY III., and by her had two sons, EDMUND, Earl of Cornwall, who m. Margaret, dau. of Richard de Clare, Earl of Gloucester, and d. s. p. in 1300, and RICHARD DE CORNWALL, who was slain at the siege of Berwick in 1296. Richard, Earl of Cornwall and Poitou, d. at Berkhamstead, in 1279. He had three natural children, viz., a dau., Isabella, m. to Maurice, Lord Berkeley, of Berkeley Castle; and two sons, RICHARD, ancestor of the family of which we treat; and Walter, to whom Edmund, Earl of Cornwall gave lands on his manor of Branell, 18th EDWARD I. The former,

RICHARD DE CORNWALL, had the manor of Thunnock, in Lincolnshire, from Edmund, Earl of Cornwall, 8th EDWARD I., anno 1290. He m. Joan, dau. of John, Lord St. Owen, and by her had issue,

I. GEOFFREY (Sir), of whom we treat.

II. Edmund (Sir), of Kinlet, who m. Elizabeth, dau. and co-heir of Sir Brien de Brampton, of Brampton Brian, co. Hereford, and had issue,

1 EDMOND (Sir), of Kentwell, co. Suffolk, who by Isabel his wife, had a son, John, who d. s. p.

2 BRIAN DE CORNWALL, who was seized of Outragorther Baughallor, Worthen, &c., m. Maude, dau. of the Lord Strange, of Blackmere, and had, with other issue, a son,

John (Sir), of Kinlet, who m. Elizabeth, dau. of Sir John Wastneys, of Tixhall, co. Stafford, and d. 2nd HENRY V., having had three daus., viz., ELIZABETH, who m. Roger Corbett, of Morton Corbett, co. Salop; MATILDA, who m. John Wode; and ELIZABETH, m. Sir William Lichfield, Knt.

3 Peter de Cornwall, m. a dau. of Roger Hanley, and d. 13 July, 10th RICHARD II., having had a son or grandson, Edmond, who left a son and heir, Thomas Cornewall.

The elder son,

SIR GEOFFREY DE CORNWALL had the manor of Ever in Bucks, from Edmund, Earl of Cornwall. He m. Margaret, dau. and co-heir of Hugh de Mortimer, BARON OF BURFORD, co. Salop, son of Mortimer, Lord of Wigmore; and d. 9th EDWARD III., having had issue,

I. GEOFFREY, who gave to his nephew, Sir Geoffrey de Cornwall, the manor of Kingsnewton, co. Devon, and lands in Northamptonshire.

II. RICHARD, from whom descended the CORNEWALLS, BARONS OF BURFORD, whose eventual heiress, ANNA MARIA CORNEWALL, only child of Francis Cornewall, Baron of Burford, m. GEORGE LEGH, Esq., of High Legh, co. Chester, ancestor by her of the present GEORGE-CORNWALL LEGH, Esq., of High Legh, M.P.; and also the CORNEWALLS of Delbury, Berrington, and Moccas (see BURKE'S Landed Gentry).

III. JOHN (Sir), of whom we treat.

The 3rd son,

SIR JOHN DE CORNEWALL, m. the niece of the Duke of Britaine, and was father of

SIR JOHN CORNWALL, K.G., who occurs in the 20th RICHARD II., when, being retained to serve the king during his life, he obtained a grant of 100 marks per annum. In the 2nd of HENRY IV., Sir John, having deported himself with great gallantry in justing against a Frenchman at York, in the presence of the king, won the heart of that monarch's sister, Elizabeth, widow of John Holland, Earl of Huntingdon, whose hand he soon afterwards obtained, and with her considerable grants from the crown to enjoy during the lady's life, with a rent-charge of 400 marks per annum for his own. In five years afterwards he was again distinguished at a tournament held in London, where he triumphed over a Scottish knight; and he was subsequently one of the companions in arms of the gallant HENRY V., at the battle of Agincourt. In the 5th of the same reign he was constituted one of the commissioners to treat with the captain of the castle of Caen for the surrender of that fortress, and upon the departure of his royal master from France he was left behind for the defence of those parts, for all which important services, and in consideration of his connection with the house of Plantagenet, Sir John Cornwall was advanced by King HENRY VI., in open parliament, to the dignity of a Baron of the realm, under the title of BARON FANHOPE, of Fanhope, co. of Hereford, on 17 July, 1433, and created 30 January, 1442, BARON MILBROKE, to bear that title as a free denizen of this realm, &c.; but he was always summoned to parliament as "Johanni Cornwayll, Chevalier." In the 12th of HENRY VI. his lordship was made governor of the town of St. Selerine, then won by assault; shortly after which he had a grant of the custody of Charles, Duke of Orleans, during the time of the restraint of that prince in England.

This gallant nobleman outlived his wife, the Princess Elizabeth, by whom he had no issue,* and d. in 1443, when the BARONIES OF FANHOPE AND MILBROKE became EXTINCT. His lordship left two illegitimate sons, JOHN and THOMAS, for whom he provided in his will.

CORNWALLIS — BARONS, EARLS, AND MARQUESSSES CORNWALLIS.

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 20 April, 1661.

Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 30 June, 1753.

Marquessate, by Letters Patent, dated 16 August, 1792.

Lineage.

Harvey, Clarendon king-of-arms, in his visitation of the co. of Suffolk, made in 1561, states that

THOMAS CORNWALLEYS, of London, merchant, the first of the family mentioned in the Visitation, was a younger brother, and born in Ireland, and that he bore the same arms which the house at the time of the Visitation used. This Thomas was sheriff of London in 1378, he d. in 1384, and was s. by his son,

JOHN CORNWALLIS, who added to his patrimony the lordships of Broome and Oakley, with other lands in Suffolk, by intermarrying with Philippe, dau. and one of the heirs of Robert Bucton. This John represented the co. of Suffolk in parliament in the reign of RICHARD II., he d. in 1446, and was s. by his son,

THOMAS CORNWALLIS, who m. Philippe, dau. and heir of Edward Tyrrel, Esq., of Downham in Essex, and dying in 1447, was s. by his son,

THOMAS CORNWALLIS, Esq., M.P. for the co. of Suffolk, in the 28th of HENRY VI. The three elder sons of this Thomas having successively inherited the estate of Broome, and all dying s. p., his youngest son eventually succeeded as

SIR WILLIAM CORNWALLIS, K.B., of Broome. This gentleman m. Elizabeth, dau. and co-heir of John Stanford, Esq., and dying in November, 1619, was s. by his eldest son,

SIR JOHN CORNWALLIS, steward of the household to Prince Edward, son of HENRY VIII. He d. in 1644, and was s. by his eldest son,

SIR THOMAS CORNWALLIS. This gentleman displayed great personal courage against the Norfolk rebels under Ket, the Tanner, in 1549, and he subsequently held the office of sheriff for Norfolk and Suffolk. He was also instrumental in the suppression of Wyatt's insurrection, and was commissioned with the Earl of Sussex and Sir Edward Hastings for the trial of Sir Thomas Wyatt, in 1554; at this time he was sworn of the privy council and constituted treasurer of Calais. In the 4th and 5th of PHILIP and MARY, Sir Thomas represented the co. of Suffolk in parliament. Upon the accession of Queen ELIZABETH, being a Roman Catholic, he was left out of the privy council, and removed from the comptrollership of the household, which he held under MARY. He then retired into the country and built Broome Hall. Sir Thomas Cornwallis m. Anne, dau. of Sir John Jerningham, and had issue,

I. WILLIAM, his successor.

II. Charles (Sir), ambassador to Spain, temp. JAMES I., and a person of great eminence; he m. 1st, Elizabeth, dau. of Thomas Farnham, Esq., of Fincham, and founded (through his eldest son, Sir William Cornwallis, a celebrated writer and essayist, whose works were published after his death) a branch of the family whose last representative was CAROLINE FRANCES CORNWALLIS, the distinguished author of a popular series

* "The case of Sir John Cornwall" (says COURTHOPE, "Historic Peerage," p. 184), "is remarkable in several respects. Both of his creations were in parliament and enrolled in parliament, but the former only was exemplified by patent; in the latter, creating him Baron of Milbroke, he is styled Sir John Cornwall only, without reference to his former creation as Baron of Fanhope, in neither case are there any words of inheritance, and although the absence of such words under ordinary circumstances would give only a life estate to the grantee, Lord Lyndhurst, in his argument on the Wensleydale Peerage, considered that his being created in parliament a baron, 'with all and singular rights, privileges and immunities in every place within the realm of England as fully, entirely, and in the same manner and form as other barons of the same realm before this time have used and enjoyed,' gave to him amongst those rights the privilege enjoyed by other barons of transmitting his title to his posterity."

The earl was appointed constable of the Tower in 1740. He d. 23 June, 1762, and was s. by his eldest son,

CHARLES CORNWALLIS, 2nd Earl Cornwallis, b. 31 December, 1738, who having distinguished himself as a great military commander in America and India, was created MARQUESS CORNWALLIS, 15 August, 1792. In 1799 his lordship was appointed lord-lieutenant of Ireland and commander of the forces there; in which high situation he acquired the reputation of having restored public tranquillity at that unhappy period by the firmness, moderation, and humanity which governed his councils. In 1801, he signed the peace of Amiens; in 1804 had the honour of being placed a second time at the head of the government of India, as governor-general, and died there on 5 October, in the following year. His lordship m. in July, 1768, Jemima, dau. of Col. James Jones, of the 3rd guards, and sister of Arnoldus Jones, Esq., of Benthwaite, Cumberland, who took the name of Skelton; and by her (who d. 14 February, 1779), his lordship had issue,

CHARLES, his successor.

Mary, m. 1785, to Mark Singleton, Esq., M.P., principal store-keeper to the ordnance, who d. 17 July, 1840.

The marquess, who was a knight of the Garter, was s. by his eldest son,

CHARLES CORNWALLIS, 3rd earl and 2nd marquess, b. 19 October, 1774; m. 17 April, 1797, Louisa, 4th dau. and eventually co-heiress of Alexander, 4th Duke of Gordon, K.T., and by her (who d. 5 December, 1850) had issue, JANE, m. 13 May, 1819, Richard, 3rd Lord Braybrooke, and d. 23 September, 1856, leaving issue.

LOUISA.

JEMIMA, m. 2 September, 1824, Edward-Granville, Earl of St. Germans, and d. 1 July, 1856, leaving issue.

MARY, m. 7 April, 1825, to Charles Ross, Esq., M.P., who d. 22 March, 1860.

ELIZABETH.

His lordship d. in 1823, when the MARQUESSATE OF CORNWALLIS EXPIRED; but the earldom and other honours reverted to his uncle,

JAMES CORNWALLIS, D.C.L., lord bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, as 4th earl. He m. Catherine, dau. of Galfridus Mann, Esq., of Egerton, and sister of Sir Horace Mann, Bart., by whom he left at his decease in 1824, an only son,

JAMES, 5th earl, b. 20 September, 1778; who m. 1st, 1804, Maria-Isabella, dau. of Francis Dickens, Esq., and by her (who d. 1823) had issue,

CHARLES-JAMES, Viscount Brome, d. unm., aged twenty-two, 27 December, 1835.

JEMIMA-ISABELLA, m. 12 April, 1828, Charles Wykeham-Martin, Esq., of Leeds Castle, Kent, and d. 17 December, 1836, leaving issue.

The earl m. 2ndly, 1829, Laura, dau. of William Hayes, Esq., which lady d. 1840; and 3rdly, in 1842, Julia, dau. of Thomas Bacon, Esq., of Redlands, by whom (who d. 1847) he had an only surviving child, JULIA, m. 27 August, 1862, to William-Archer, Viscount Holmesdale, eldest son of Earl Amherst.

The earl d. 21 May, 1852, when all his honours became EXTINCT

COSPATRICK—EARL OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

Conferred by WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, anno 1069.

Lineage.

Upon the death of Robert Comyn, Earl of Northumberland, COSPATRICK, son of Maldred, son of Crinan (which Maldred was progenitor to the second dynasty of the great family of Neville, still represented by the Earls of Abergavenny), obtained the earldom of the co. of Northumberland from the CONQUEROR for a large sum of money; but soon afterwards becoming dissatisfied with the sway of the new ruler, Cospatrick, with other northern chiefs, fled into Scotland, and was well received by King MALCOLM CANMORE.

From Scotland the earl made several hostile incursions into England, and was deprived of the earldom for those repeated treasons. He subsequently obtained Dunbar, with the adjacent lands in London, from the Scottish monarch for his subsistence, but d. soon afterwards, leaving issue, 1 DOLPHIN; 2 COSPATRICK, 2nd Earl of Dunbar; and 3 Waldene, of Cockermonth Castle. The 2nd son, COSPATRICK, 2nd Earl of Dunbar, who witnessed the foundation charter of the abbey of Scoon, 1115, and that of Holyrood, 1128, d. 16 August, 1139, leaving a son and heir, COSPATRICK, 3rd Earl of Dunbar, styled in some charters "Cospatricius Comes, filius Cospatricii," he d. 1147. COTTINGTON—BARON COTTINGTON, OF HANWORTH, CO. MIDDLESEX.

By Letters Patent, dated 10 July, 1631.

Lineage.

FRANCIS COTTINGTON, Esq., 4th son of Philip Cottington, Esq., of Godmanston, co. Somerset, having held the office of clerk of the council in the reign of King JAMES I., and being secretary to Charles, Prince of Wales, was created a Baronet by that monarch, 16 February, 1623. After the accession of King CHARLES I., Sir Francis Cottington was constituted chancellor and under treasurer of the Exchequer; and being accredited ambassador to the court of Madrid for the purpose of negotiating a peace, he was elevated to the peerage, 10 July, 1631, as LORD COTTINGTON, Baron of Hanworth, co. Middlesex. His lordship was next commissioned to exercise the important office of lord treasurer during the king's absence in Scotland, in the 9th CHARLES I., and was constituted master of the wards upon his Majesty's return. During the civil wars, Lord Cottington remained faithfully attached to his royal master, and eventually went into exile with King CHARLES II., from which he never returned. His lordship m. Anne, dau. of Sir William Meredith, Knt., and widow of Sir Robert Brett, by whom he had a son and four daus., all of whom predeceased him unm. He d. at Valladolid, in 1653, when the BARONY OF COTTINGTON became EXTINCT, and his estates passed to his nephew,

CHARLES COTTINGTON, Esq., who had his lordship's remains brought over to England, and interred in Westminster Abbey, where he erected a stately monument.

COUCI—EARL OF BEDFORD.

By Charter, dated in 1366.

Lineage.

INGELRAM, SIRE DE COUCY, Seigneur de Gynes, who d. in 1321, m. Christian, dau. and sole heir of William de Lindsay, of Lamberton, by Ada, his wife, sister and co-heir of JOHN BALIOL, King of Scotland, and dau. of John Baliol, Lord of Barnard Castle, by Dervorgil, his wife, one of the two daus. and co-heirs of Alan, Lord of Galloway (see p. 21). By this great alliance Ingelram left a son,

WILLIAM, SIRE DE COUCY, b. 1296, who m. Isabel de Chatillon St. Paul, and dying in 1335, left two sons, INGELRAM, his heir; and Raoul, Seigneur de Montmirail et de Bailleul. The elder son,

INGELRAM, SIRE DE COUCI, m. Catherine, dau. of the Duke of Austria, and d. 1344, leaving a son,

INGELRAM DE COUCI, who was so highly esteemed by King EDWARD III. that that monarch bestowed upon him his dau., Isabel, in marriage, and created him EARL OF BEDFORD, conferring upon him also the ribbon of the Garter. His lordship d. in 1397, leaving issue by the princess,

Mary, m. to Henry de Barr, Seigneur d'Oisy, and had a son, Robert, Count de Marie et de Soissons, who m. COURCY—EARL OF ULSTER.

(See ADDENDA.)

COURTENAY—BARONS COURTENAY, EARLS OF DEVON.

Barony by Writ of Summons, dated 6 February, 1299.
Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 22 February, 1335.

Lineage.

The Courtenays, of whom a distinguished line still exists, were one of the most illustrious races amongst the British nobility, and deduced their pedigree paternally from ATHON, who himself descended from PHARAMOND, founder, in 420, of the French monarchy, and common patriarch of all the Kings of France. This ATHON, having fortified, during the reign of ROBERT THE WISE, the town of COURTENAY, in the Isle of France, thence adopted his surname. But as the power of the Courtenays in England principally arose from the great alliances formed by the first members of the family who settled here, we shall pass at once to their maternal pedigree.

GODFREY, Earl of Ewe and Brion, natural son of RICHARD I., Duke of Normandy, was father of

GILBERT, Earl of Brion, who had two sons, Richard, ancestor of the house of Clare, and

BALDWIN DE BRIONIS, who for the distinguished part he had in the Conquest, obtained from King WILLIAM the Barony of Okehampton, the custody of the co. of Devon, and the government of the castle of Exeter in fee. He m. Albreda, dau. of Richard, surnamed Goz, Count of Avranch, and had, with other issue,

I. RICHARD, surnamed DE REDVERS.

II. Robert, governor of Brione.

I. Emma, m. 1st, to William Avenal, and 2ndly, to William de Abrincia, by the latter of whom she had issue,

ROBERT DE ABRINCIA, who upon the resignation of his uncle, Richard de Redvers, obtained a grant of the Barony of Okehampton, the office of hereditary sheriff of Devon, and the government of Exeter Castle. He m. a dau. of Godwyn Dole, and left an only dau. and heiress,

MAUD DE ABRINCIA, who m. 1st, — Deincourt, by whom she had a dau.,

HAWISE, m. to SIR REGINALD DE COURTENAY, of whom hereafter.

Maud m. 2ndly, Robert Fitz-Edith, natural son of King HENRY I., and had another dau.,

MATILDA, m. to William de Courtenay, brother of Sir Reginald.

RICHARD DE ABRINCIA, surnamed DE REDVERS, having s. to the honours and possessions of his father, resigned the Barony of Okehampton, the sheriffalty of Devon, and the custody of the castle of Exeter, in favour of his nephew, Robert de Abrincia, mentioned above, and was created by King HENRY I. EARL OF DEVON, with a grant of the Isle of Wight in fee. This nobleman (who from residing chiefly at Exeter, was generally called Earl of Exeter) m. Adeliza, dau. and co-heiress of William Fitz-Osborne, Earl of Hereford, and had issue,

I. BALDWIN DE REDVERS, his successor.

II. William de Redvers, surnamed DE VERNON.

III. Robert de Redvers.

I. Hadewise, m. to William de Romare, Earl of Lincoln.

Richard de Redvers, 1st Earl of Devon, d. in 1137, and was s. by his eldest son,

BALDWIN DE REDVERS, as 2nd Earl of Devon. This nobleman, upon the demise of King HENRY I., espousing the cause of the Empress MAUD, took up arms, and immediately fortified his castle of Exeter and the Isle of Wight; but being besieged by King STEPHEN, he was obliged to surrender the castle and all his other possessions, and to withdraw with his family from the kingdom. We find him, however, soon again returning, and in the enjoyment of the Earldom of Devon; but, like his father, generally styled Earl of Exeter, from residing in that city. His lordship m. Lucia, dau. of Dru de Balun, and had issue,

I. RICHARD, his successor.

II. WILLIAM, surnamed DE VERNON, of whom hereafter, as 6th Earl of Devon.

I. Maud, m. to Ralph Avenill.

He d. in June, 1155, and was s. by his son,

RICHARD DE REDVERS, 3rd Earl of Devon, who m. Dionysia, dau. of Reginald de Dunstanville (natural son of King HENRY I.), Earl of Cornwall, and had two sons, successive earls. His lordship d. in 1162, and was s. by the elder,

BALDWIN DE REDVERS, 4th Earl of Devon, at whose decease, s. p., the honours devolved upon his brother,

RICHARD DE REDVERS, 5th Earl of Devon, who also d. s. p., when the honours reverted to his uncle,

WILLIAM DE REDVERS, surnamed VERNON, as 6th Earl of Devon. This nobleman, upon the second coronation of King RICHARD I., was one of the four earls that carried the silken canopy, being then styled, "Earl of the Isle of Wight." His lordship appears to have adhered steadily to King JOHN, for we find that monarch, in the 18th of his reign, providing for the security of the earl's property against LOUIS of France, which, from his advanced age, he was unable to defend himself. He m. Mabel, dau. of Robert, Earl of Mellent, by whom he acquired a considerable accession to his landed possessions, and had issue,

I. Baldwin, who m. Margaret, dau. and heiress of Warine Fitzgerald, and d. s. p. 1 September, 1216, leaving an only son,

BALDWIN, of whom presently, as 7th EARL OF DEVON.

Margaret, the widow, was forced, according to Matthew Paris, by King JOHN, to marry "that impious, ignoble, and base conditioned man, Falk de Breant."

I. Joane, m. 1st, to William Brewere, and 2ndly, to Hubert de Burgh, chamberlain to the king, but had no issue.

II. Mary, m. ROBERT DE COURTENAY, feudal Baron of Okehampton, son and successor of Sir Reginald de Courtenay and Maude de Abrincia (refer to Emma, dau. of Baldwin de Abrincia, 1st Baron of Okehampton), and conveyed to her husband the head of the Barony of Devonshire, with the castle of Plimton. Of this marriage, were

SIR HUGH DE COURTENAY, successor to his father.

Sir William de Courtenay, surnamed de Musberrie, who m. Joane, dau. of Thomas Basset, but d. s. p.

Hauise, m. to John de Nevil.

Robert de Courtenay, Baron of Okehampton, was s. by his elder son,

SIR HUGH DE COURTENAY, as 3rd Baron of Okehampton. His lordship m. Alianora, dau. of Hugh le Despencer (father of Hugh, Earl of Winchester), by whom (who d. 11 October, 1328) he had issue,

HUGH (Sir), his successor, of whom hereafter, as successor to the estates of the Redvers, and the person in whom the EARLDOM OF DEVON was revived.

Philip (Sir), who fell at the battle of Shivelin, 24 June, 1314, and d. unm.

Isabel, m. to John St. John, Baron St. John, of Basing.

Aveline, m. to Sir John Gifford, Knt.

Egeline, m. to Robert Scales.

Margaret, m. to John de Moels.

His lordship d. 28 February, 1291.

William, 6th Earl of Devon, d. 14 September, 1216, and was s. by his grandson,

BALDWIN DE REDVERS, 7th Earl of Devon. In the 11th HENRY III., Gilbert de Clare, EARL OF GLOUCESTER AND HERTFORD, paid a fine of 2,000 marks to the king for permission to marry his eldest daughter to this young nobleman; whereupon all his demesne lands, which were then valued at £200 per annum, were placed under the guardianship of the Earl of Gloucester, until he should attain maturity. In the 24th of the same reign, the king keeping his Christmas at Winchester, at the instance of Richard, Earl of Cornwall, under whose tuition Baldwin then was, girded his lordship with the sword of knighthood; and investing him with the EARLDOM OF THE ISLE OF WIGHT, bestowed upon him Amicia, the dau. of the said Earl of Gloucester, in marriage. The Earl of Devon d. in five years afterwards, in the flower of his youth, anno 1246, leaving issue, BALDWIN, his successor.

Margaret, a nun at Lacock.

ISABEL, successor to her brother.

His lordship was s. by his son,

BALDWIN DE REDVERS, 8th Earl of Devon, who was committed to the tuition of Peter de Savoy, uncle of Queen ELEANOR, and a person of great note at that period. His lordship did homage, and had livery of his lands in the 41st HENRY III., in which year he espoused Avis, dau. of the Earl of Surrey, by whom he had an only son, John, who d. in infancy. The earl d. in 1262, having been poisoned, with the Earl of Gloucester, and others, at the table of Peter de Savoy. With his lordship the male line of the ancient and eminent house of REDVERS EXPIRED, but its honours devolved upon his sister,

ISABEL DE FORTIBUS, widow of William de Fortibus, Earl of Albemarle and Holderness, as COUNTESS OF DEVON. Her ladyship had three sons, all of whom d. in infancy, and two daus., viz.,

Anne, d. unm.

Aveline, m. 1st, to Ingram de Percy, and 2ndly, to Edmund Plantagenet, Earl of Lancaster, but d. s. p. in the lifetime of her mother, A.D. 1273.

The countess d. in 1293, and as she left no issue, the EARLDOM OF DEVON and the other honours of the house of REDVERS EXPIRED, but so much of its extensive possessions as did not pass to the crown, devolved upon the heir-at-law,

SIR HUGH COURTENAY, feudal Baron of Okehampton (the descendant of Lady Mary Redvers, dau. of William, 6th Earl of Devon, refer to that nobleman), who was summoned to parliament as BARON COURTENAY from 6 February, 1299, to 24 July, 1334, and created 22 February, 1335, EARL OF DEVON. The latter dignity was conferred upon his lordship in consequence of a representation made by him to the King (EDWARD III.), with whom he was in high estimation, to the purpose "that he was seised of a certain annuity of £18 6s. 7d. for the tertium denarium of the county of Devon, with divers lands by right of inheritance, from Isabel de Fortibus, Countess of Albemarle and Devon, which she in her lifetime did possess; and having accordingly received the same annuity at the hands of the sheriffs of that county, for which they had allowance upon their accounts in the exchequer, until Walter, bishop of Exeter, lord treasurer to King EDWARD II., upon the investigation of some persons who were inclined to disturb the business, did refuse to admit thereof, alleging, that this annuity was granted to the ancestors of the said Isabel, by the king's progenitors, under the name and title of EARLS; and therefore, that he, the said Hugh, being no EARL, ought not to receive the same: and, that upon the like pretence, the then sheriffs of Devon did decline to pay it any longer to him." The king immediately instituted an inquiry into the affair, and finding it as stated, removed the difficulty by creating his lordship an earl, as stated above, and despatching his royal precept to the then sheriff of Devon, commanded him to proclaim that all persons should forthwith style his lordship EARL OF DEVON. The earl m. when but seventeen years of age, Agnes, dau. of Sir John St. John, Knt., and sister of Lord St. John, of Basing, by whom he had issue,

- I. JOHN, abbot of Tavistock.
- II. HUGH, his heir.
- III. Robert, of Moreton, who d. in youth.
- IV. Thomas, of Southpole, m. Muriel, dau. and heiress of Sir John de Moels, Knt., by whom he had,

 - 1 Margaret, m. to Thomas Peverell.
 - 2 Muriel, m. to John Dynham.
- I. Eleanor, m. to John, Lord Grey, of Codnor.
- II. Elizabeth, m. to Lord Lisle.

His lordship d. in 1377, and was s. by his son,

HUGH COURTENAY, 2nd Earl of Devon. This nobleman distinguished himself in arms during the reign of EDWARD III., and was one of the first dignified with the Garter upon the institution of that noble order. His lordship m. Margaret, dau. of Humphrey de Bohun, Earl of Hereford and Essex, and grand-dau. of King EDWARD I., by whom he had, with other issue,

- I. HUGH (Sir), who was summoned to parliament as BARON COURTENAY, 8 January, 1371, and was one of the original knights of the Garter. His lordship being in the expedition made into France twenty-four years before (EDWARD III.), participated in the glory of Cressy, and being the next year in the tournament at Eltham, he had a hood of white cloth, embroidered with dancing men, and buttoned with large pearls, presented to him by the king. He m. Elizabeth, dau. of Guy Brian, Lord of Tor-Brian, in Devonshire, and sister of the famous Guy, Lord Brian, standard-bearer to the king at Cressy, and a knight of the Garter, by whom he left at his decease, in the lifetime of his father, an only son,

Hugh, who m. Matilda, dau. of Thomas Holland, Earl of Kent, and of Joane his wife, commonly called the "Fair Maid of Kent," dau. of Edmund, of Woodstock, son of King EDWARD I., which Joane was subsequently m. to EDWARD THE BLACK PRINCE, and by him was mother of King RICHARD II. Hugh Courtenay d. in 1377, a few years after his father, and before his grandfather, leaving no issue. His widow m. 2ndly, Waleran, Earl of St. Paul.

- II. Edward, of Godlington (who also d. v. p.), m. Emeline, dau. and heiress of Sir John D'Auney, Knt., and had issue,

- 1 EDWARD, of whom presently, as inheritor of the honours of the family.
- 2 Hugh (Sir), of Haccomb, m. 1st, Elizabeth, dau. of Sir William Cogan, and widow of Sir Fulk Fitzwarine, who d. s. p. He m. 2ndly, Philippa, dau. and co-heiress of Sir Warren Arcedekene (by Elizabeth, dau. and heiress of John Talbot, of Ricard's Castle), by whom he had an only dau.,

Joane, m. 1st, to Nicholas, Lord Carew, of Mohuns Ottery, and 2ndly, to Sir Robert Vere.

Sir Hugh Courtenay m. 3rdly, Maud, dau. of Sir John Beaumont, of Sherwell, Dorset, by whom he had a dau.,

Margaret, who m. Sir Theobald Grenvill, Knt.

and a son and heir,

HUGH (Sir), of Boconnock, in Cornwall, who fell at the battle of Tewkesbury, leaving issue, by his wife Margaret, dau. and co-heir of Thomas Carmine, Esq., of Devonshire,

EDWARD, who was created Baron Okehampton, and EARL OF DEVON, in 1485 (see those dignities).
 Elizabeth, m. to John Trethris, Esq.
 Maud, m. to John Arundel, Esq., of Talverne.
 Isabel, m. to William Mohun, Esq.
 Florence, m. to John Trelawny, Esq.

- III. William, chancellor of the university of Oxford, anno 1367; bishop of Hereford, 1369; bishop of London, 1375, and archbishop of Canterbury, 1381. His grace d. in 1396.

- IV. PHILIP (Sir), of Powderham Castle, lieutenant of Ireland in the reign of RICHARD II., ancestor of the existing noble house of COURTENAY, EARL OF DEVON.

- V. Piers (Sir), standard-bearer to King EDWARD III., constable of Windsor Castle, governor of Calais, chamberlain to King RICHARD II., and knight of the Garter. This eminent and gallant person, who was celebrated for deeds of arms, d. unm. in 1409.

- I. Margaret, m. to John, Lord Cobham.

- II. Elizabeth, m. 1st, to Sir John Vere, and 2ndly, to Sir Andrew Luttrell.

- III. Catherine, m. 1st, to John, Lord Harington, and 2ndly, to Sir Thomas Engaine.

- IV. Joane, m. to Sir John Cheverston.

Hugh, 2nd Earl of Devon, d. in 1377, and was s. by (the elder son of his son Edward) his grandson,

EDWARD COURTENAY, 3rd earl. This nobleman served in the beginning of the reign of RICHARD II. as a naval officer, under John of Gaunt and Thomas of Woodstock respectively, and was appointed in the 7th of the same monarch, admiral of all the king's fleet, from the mouth of the Thames westward. In the next year, being then Earl Marshal, his lordship was retained to serve the king in his Scottish wars; in two years afterwards he had the command of the fleet at sea to prevent invasion, and in the 13th of RICHARD was engaged in the French wars. His lordship m. Maud, dau. of Thomas, Baron Camois, and had issue, Edward (Sir), K.B., and admiral of the king's fleet, who m. Eleanor, dau. of Roger Mortimer, Earl of March, but d. s. p. in the lifetime of his father.

 James.

The earl d. 5 December, 1419, and was s. by his 2nd but eldest surviving son,

HUGH COURTENAY, 4th earl, K.B., who, in the 6th HENRY V. (his father then living), was appointed commander-in-chief of the king's fleet. His lordship m. Anne, dau. of Richard, Lord Talbot, and sister of the renowned John, Earl of Shrewsbury, by whom he had issue,

THOMAS, his successor.
 John, d. unm.

His lordship d. 16 June, 1422, and was s. by his elder son,

THOMAS COURTENAY, 5th earl. This nobleman commenced his military career at the age of sixteen, and was engaged for several years in the French wars of King HENRY VI., with which monarch he sided upon the breaking out of the unhappy conflict between the houses of York and Lancaster; and the Courtenays continued to adhere to the red rose with unshaken fidelity from that period until the termination of the contest. In 1448 a dispute regarding precedency arose between the Earls of Devon and Arundel, but it was decided by parliament in favour of the latter, in consequence of the feudal possession of Arundel Castle. The earl m. Margaret Beaufort, 2nd dau. of John, Marquess of Somerset (one of the legitimized children of John of Gaunt), and had issue,

THOMAS, his successor.

Henry, beheaded as a Lancastrian.

John, slain at Tewkesbury.

His lordship d. 3 February, 1458, in the abbey of Abingdon, upon his journey to London, with other lords, to mediate between the king and the Duke of York, and was s. by his eldest son,

THOMAS COURTENAY, 6th earl, then twenty-six years of age. This nobleman inheriting the political principles, as well as honours of his deceased father, was a strenuous upholder of the cause of Lancaster, and falling into the hands of the enemy at Towton Field, he was beheaded at York, by order of King EDWARD IV. in April, 1462. Under the attainder of this earl, the honours and possessions of the house of Courtenay fell; but his next brother,

HENRY COURTENAY, Esq. (as he was styled, but who should have been 7th earl), finding favour with the new king, had restoration of some part of the lands. Engaging, however, in the Lancastrian quarrel with the zeal of his predecessors, he was attainted of treason, 4 March, 1466, before the king and justices at Sarum, and beheaded with the Lord Hungerford on the same day. The greater part of the Courtenay estates having been conferred upon Humphrey Stafford, Baron Stafford, of Southwicke, his lordship was created EARL OF DEVON, 7 May, 1469, but being beheaded and attainted in the August following, that earldom became forfeited. Upon the demise of Henry Courtenay, his only surviving brother,

JOHN COURTENAY, assumed to be 8th Earl of Devon, and the Lancastrian interest prevailing in 1470, when King EDWARD was driven into Holland by the Earl of Warwick, his lordship was restored, by parliament, with King HENRY VI., to the honours and estates of his family. The defeat of the Earl of Warwick, however, after the return of King EDWARD by that prince, at the decisive battle of Barnet, 14 April, 1471, again placed the Earl of Devon in jeopardy; and attaching himself to Margaret of Anjou, his lordship fell, gallantly fighting at the head of the rear-guard of Margaret's army, at Tewkesbury, on 4 May following. Thus the three brothers sealed with their blood their bond of fidelity to the house of Lancaster, and with these brave soldiers expired the senior branch of the ancient and illustrious house of Courtenay. The last earl was buried at Tewkesbury, and being attainted, the honours and estates of Devon became again forfeited.

COURTENAY—MARQUESSSES OF EXETER.

Earldom by Letters Patent, dated 26 October, 1485.

Marquessate, by Letters Patent, dated 18 June, 1525.

Lineage.

SIR HUGH COURTENAY, Knt., of Boconock, co. Cornwall, only son of Sir Hugh Courtenay, of Haccomb, brother of EDWARD, 3rd EARL OF DEVON, of the Courtenay family (see descendants of Hugh, 2nd Earl of Devon—article COURTENAY, EARLS OF DEVON), m. Margaret, dau. and co-heiress of Thomas Carmino, Esq. (the last male heir of that ancient family), by whom he had issue,

I. EDWARD (Sir), his successor.

II. Walter (Sir), d. unm.

III. Elizabeth, m. to John Trethrift, Esq., and had a son,

THOMAS TRETHRIF, who m. — dau. of — Trevisa, and left two daus., viz.,

Elizabeth, m. to John Vivian, Esq.

Margaret, m. to Edward Courtenay, Esq., of Larrock.

IV. Maud, m. to John Arundel, Esq., of Talkern.

V. Isabel, m. to William Mohun, Esq.

VI. Florence, m. to John Trelawny, Esq.

Heiresses, eventually, of their grand-nephew, Edward, 2nd Marquess of Exeter.

Sir Hugh, faithful to the Lancastrian interest, fell with his noble kinsman, the Earl of Devon, at the battle of Tewkesbury, and his elder son,

SIR EDWARD COURTENAY, being implicated with his brother, in Henry Stafford, Duke of Buckingham's conspiracy, in favour of Henry, Earl of Richmond, was forced to fly into Brittany upon the failure of that plot and the decapitation of the duke; and was attainted with the Earl of Richmond and others, by parliament, in the beginning of 1484, but returning with the earl, and assisting at the battle of Bosworth, he was elevated to the peerage by King HENRY VII., 26 October, 1485, in the ancient dignity of the family, that of EARL OF DEVON, the new monarch making him grants at the same time of the greater part of the castles, manors, &c., which belonged to the late Thomas Courtenay, Earl of Devon. In the March following, the king made his lordship governor of Kesterwell, in Cornwall, and a knight of the Garter. The earl was in all the parliaments of HENRY VII. He was in the expedition to France in 1491, and in six years afterwards he defended the city of Exeter against Perkin Warbeck and his adherents. He m. Elizabeth, dau. of Sir Philip Courtenay, of Molland, by whom he had an only son,

WILLIAM, K.B., who m. Katherine, 7th and youngest dau. of King EDWARD IV. In the year 1502, this gentleman, with Lord William de la Pole, Sir James Tyrrel, and Sir John Windham, were arrested on the charge of holding a traitorous correspondence with Edmund de la Pole, Earl of Suffolk (son of John, Duke of Suffolk and Lady Elizabeth, elder sister of EDWARD IV.), who had fled to his aunt, Margaret, Duchess of Burgundy, and he (Sir William Courtenay) was attainted in consequence, in 1504; Tyrrel and Windham were beheaded on Tower Hill, while Sir William Courtenay was doomed to incarceration during the king's reign.

The earl d. 24 May, 1509, and King HENRY VIII. ascending the throne in the same year, his highness immediately liberated

SIR WILLIAM COURTENAY, and took him into his gracious favour; but Sir William d. in the 3rd year of that monarch's reign, before he had either letters patent or a formal restoration of the earldom; he was, however, buried "with the honours of an earl," at the especial command of the king. By the Lady Katherine Plantagenet, he left an only son,

HENRY COURTENAY, who being restored in blood and honours, became 2nd Earl of Devon. In 1522, his lordship obtained a grant of Caliland, in Cornwall, and of "a fair mansion," situate in the parish of St. Lawrence Poultry, in the city of London, forfeited by the attainder of Edward Stafford, Duke of Buckingham, on whose trial he was one of the twenty-six peers that sat in judgment; and he was advanced, by letters patent, dated 18 June, 1525, to the dignity of MARQUESS OF EXETER. In the year 1530, at the interview between King HENRY VIII. and the King of France, in the vale of Arden, when the two monarchs challenged all men at justs, the Marquess of Exeter ran a course with the French prince, when both their spears broke, and they maintained their seats. His lordship evinced his skill and valour in many other tournaments, and in the year 1532, on HENRY's going to Calais, he was nominated by the king, prior to his highness's departure, heir apparent to the throne. His lordship subscribed the articles against Cardinal Wolsey, and the letter sent to Pope CLEMENT VII., entreating his holiness to ratify the divorce between the king and Queen CATHERINE. In 1536, he sat in judgment upon ANNE BOLEYNE, and in the same year, he suppressed, in conjunction with the Duke of Norfolk and the Earls of Shrewsbury, Huntingdon, and Rutland, a rebellion in Yorkshire; but that very year he was committed to the Tower, with Henry Pole, LORD MONTACUTE, and Sir Edward Nevill, brother of Lord Abergavenny, accused by Sir Geoffrey Pole, brother of Lord Montacute, of high treason, and indicted for devising to maintain, promote, and advance one Reginald Pole, late dean of Exeter, enemy to the king beyond sea, and to deprive the king, &c. The Marquess of Exeter and Lord Montacute were tried on 1 and 2 December, 1539, at Westminster, and being found guilty were beheaded, with Sir Edward Nevill, on 9 January ensuing, on Tower Hill. Upon the attainder of the marquess, all his honours of course EXPIRED, and King HENRY annexed to the Duchy of Cornwall all his lands in that co., which came to the crown. The marquess had m. 1st, Elizabeth Grey, dau. and heiress of John, Viscount Lisle, by whom he had no issue, and 2ndly, Gertrude, dau. of William Blount, Lord Mountjoy, by whom he left an only son (the Marchioness of Exeter was attainted with the Countess of Salisbury, the year after her husband, but the latter only suffered),

EDWARD COURTENAY, who, although but twelve years of age when his father was beheaded, was committed prisoner to the Tower, and detained there during the remainder of King HENRY's reign and that of King EDWARD VI., but upon the accession of Queen MARY he was released, and restored to his father's honours, as MARQUESS OF EXETER, &c., and to the estates which remained in the possession of the crown, by a private bill, passed in the 1st year of her majesty's reign, while another private bill reversed the attainder of his mother. His lordship had some command in suppressing Wyatt's rebellion, and yet with the Princess Elizabeth was afterwards accused of being accessory thereto, and sent with her highness to the Tower. He was subsequently confined in Fotheringhay Castle, but released through the interposition of PHILIP of Spain, upon his marriage with the queen, as was also the Lady Elizabeth. His lordship after this obtained the queen's permission to go abroad, and d. at Padua, not without suspicion of poison, 4 October, 1556. This unfortunate nobleman seemed to be born to be a prisoner, for, from twelve years of age to the time of his death, he had scarcely enjoyed two entire years liberty. He d. unm., and was the last of the family who bore the titles of MARQUESS OF EXETER and BARON OF OAKHAMPTON, those dignities expiring with his lordship, while his estates were divided amongst the four sisters of EDWARD, the 1st earl, his lordship's grand-aunts (refer to children of Sir Hugh Courtenay). The marquess's remains were interred in St. Anthony's Church, in Padua, where a noble monument was erected to his memory. The EARLDOM OF DEVON WAS DORMANT from the time of the Marquess's death to the year 1831, when a resolution of the House of Lords declared that William, Viscount Courtenay, was entitled to it. That nobleman d. unm., 1835, and his kinsman and heir male is now EARL OF DEVON.

COVENTRY—BARONS COVENTRY, OF AYLESBOROUGH, CO. WORCESTER.

By Letters Patent, dated 10 April, 1628.

Lineage.

This family rose first into importance through

JOHN COVENTRY, an opulent mercer of the city of London, who filled the civic chair in 1425, and was one of the executors of the celebrated Sir Richard Whittington. From this worthy citizen descended

THOMAS COVENTRY, Esq., an eminent lawyer, temp. ELIZABETH and King JAMES I. In the 38th of the former reign he was chosen autumnal reader by the society of the Inner Temple, but was obliged to postpone the fulfilment of his task to the ensuing Lent, owing to the plague then raging in London. He was soon afterwards advanced to the dignity of the coif, and, in the 3rd of King JAMES, was appointed king's serjeant; before the close of which year, being constituted one of the judges of the Court of Common Pleas, he took his seat upon the bench, but survived his promotion a few months only. He m. Margaret, dau. and heiress of — Jeffreys, Esq., of Croome-d'Abitot and had issue,

THOMAS, his successor.

William, of Ridmarley, co. Worcester.

WALTER, from whom the present Earl of Coventry derives.

JOAN, m. to — Rogers, Esq., of Surrey.

Catherine, m. to William Child, Esq.

Anne, m. to George Frampton, Esq.

He was s. by his eldest son,

THOMAS COVENTRY, Esq., who, having adopted the learned profession of his father, attained the very highest honours of the bar. His advancement commenced with the recordership of London; he was then appointed solicitor-general and honoured with knighthood, and in the 18th of JAMES I. succeeded to the attorney-generalship. In the 1st of King CHARLES I. Sir Thomas was constituted lord keeper of the Great Seal, and elevated to the peerage on 10 April, 1628, as BARON COVENTRY, of Aylesborough, co. Worcester. His lordship m. 1st, Sarah, dau. of Edward Sebright, Esq., of Beaford, co. Worcester, and had issue,

1. THOMAS, his successor.

1. Elizabeth, m. to Sir John Hare, of Stow Bardolph, in Norfolk.

He m. 2ndly, Elizabeth, dau. of John Aldersey, Esq., of Spurstow, and widow of William Pitchford, Esq., by whom he had issue,

1. John, m. to Elizabeth, dau. and co-heir of John Coles, Esq., of Barton, co. Somerset, and widow of Herbert Doddington, Esq., and had

John (Sir, K. B.), member of the long parliament for Weymouth. The outrage upon this gentleman, and its provocation, which gave rise to the well-known Coventry Act, arose thus:—"Upon the occasion of a money grant being carried in the House of Commons, it was proposed by opposition that the supplies for it should be raised by a tax upon playhouses, which being resisted by the court party, upon the plea 'that players were the king's servants, and a part of his pleasure,' Sir John Coventry asked whether did the king's pleasure lie among the men or the women that acted?—an observation that excited so much indignation in the royal circle that it was determined to inflict summary punishment upon the utterer. The Duke of York told Burnet 'that he said everything to divert the king from the resolution he had taken, which was to send some guards to watch in the street where Sir John Coventry lodged, and to set a mark upon him.' The outrage, by bills of indictment, was found to have been committed by Sir Thomas Sandys, Knt., Charles O'Brien, Esq., Simon Parry, and Miles Reeves, who fled from justice, not daring to abide a legal trial. 'As Coventry was going home,' says Burnet, 'they drew about him: he stood up to the wall and snatched the flambeau out of his servant's hands, and with that in one hand, and his sword in the other, he defended himself so well that he got great credit by it. He wounded some of them; but was soon disarmed, and then they cut his nose to the bone, to teach him to remember what respect he owed to the king; and so they left him and went to the Duke of Monmouth's, where O'Brien's arm was dressed. The matter was executed by orders from the duke, for which he was severely censured, because he lived then upon terms of friendship with Coventry. Coventry had his nose so well needled up that the scar was scarcely to be discerned. This put the House of Commons in a furious uproar; they passed a bill of banishment against the actors of it, and put a clause in it, that it should not be in the king's power to pardon them, and that it should be death to maim any person." This Sir John Coventry, d. unm., and endowed an hospital at Wiveliscomb, co. Somerset.

II. Francis, m. thrice, but had issue only by his 3rd wife, Elizabeth, dau. and co-heiress of John Manning, Esq., of London, and widow of Robert Caesar, Esq., viz.,

1. Francis, who d. unm. in 1686.

1. Elizabeth, m. to Sir William Keyt, Bart., of Ebrington, co. Gloucester.

2. Ultra-Trajectina, m. to Sir Lacon-William Child, Knt.

III. Henry, one of the privy council of King CHARLES II., a diplomatist in the beginning of that monarch's reign, and subsequently one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state. He d. unm. 7 December, 1686.

IV. William (Sir), a privy councillor, secretary of the admiralty, temp. CHARLES II. "A man," says Burnet, "of great notions and eminent virtues; the best speaker in the House of Commons, and capable of bearing the chief ministry, as it was once thought he was very near it, and deserved it more than all the rest did." Sir William was, however, forbid the court for sending a challenge to the Duke of Buckingham; after which he resided in private until his decease in 1686, at Minster Lovel, near Whitney, in Oxfordshire. Sir William Coventry d. unm.

1. Anne, m. 1st, to Sir William Savile, Bart., of Thornhill, co. York, by whom she was mother of George, Marquess of Halifax; and 2ndly, to Thomas Chichele, Esq., of Wimpole, co. Cambridge.

II. Mary, m. to Henry-Frederick Thynne, Esq., of Longleat, co. Wilts.

III. Margaret, m. to Anthony, 1st Earl of Shaftesbury.

IV. Dorothy, m. to Sir John Pakington, Bart., of Westwood, co. Worcester, M.P., the gallant Cavalier. This lady, who was distinguished by her intelligence and piety, was esteemed the author of "The Whole Duty of Man."

Thomas, Lord Coventry, d. at Durham House, in the Strand, London, 14 January, 1640, and Lord Clarendon says that "he discharged all the offices he went through with great abilities and singular reputation of integrity; that he enjoyed his place of lord keeper with universal reputation (and, sure, justice was never better administered) for the space of about sixteen years, even to his death, some months before he was sixty years of age." His lordship was s. by his eldest son,

THOMAS COVENTRY, 2nd baron, who m. Mary, dau. of Sir William Craven, Knt., and sister of William, Earl Craven, by whom he had two sons GEORGE, 3rd baron, and THOMAS, 5th baron. His lordship d. 27 October, 1661, and was s. by the elder,

GEORGE COVENTRY, 3rd baron. This nobleman m. 18 July, 1653, Margaret, dau. of John, Earl of Thanet, by whom he had surviving issue,

JOHN, his successor.

Margaret, m. to Charles, Earl of Wiltshire, afterwards Duke of Bolton, and d. s. p. in 1683.

His lordship d. 15 December, 1680, and was s. by his son,

JOHN COVENTRY, 4th baron, at whose decease unm., 25 July, 1687, the title and estates reverted to his uncle.

THE HON. THOMAS COVENTRY, of Snitfield, co. Warwick, as 5th Baron Coventry. His lordship was advanced by letters patent, dated 26 April, 1697, to the dignities of Viscount Deerhurst and Earl of Coventry, the limitation extending to William, Thomas, and Henry Coventry, grandsons of Walter Coventry, brother of the Lord Keeper Coventry. He m. 1st, Winifrede, dau. of Pierce Edgcombe, Esq., of Mount Edgcombe, in Devon, and had two surviving sons, viz., THOMAS his successor, and GILBERT, 4th earl. His lordship m. 2ndly, Elizabeth, dau. of Richard Graham, Esq. (who m. after the earl's decease, Thomas Savage, Esq., of Elmley Castle, co. Worcester), by whom he had no issue. He d. on 15 July, 1699, and was s. by his elder son,

THOMAS COVENTRY, 2nd earl, who m. Anne, dau. of Henry, Duke of Beaufort, and dying in 1710, was s. by his only surviving son,

THOMAS COVENTRY, 3rd earl, at whose decease at Eaton College, 28 January, 1712, the honours and estates reverted to his uncle,

GILBERT COVENTRY, 4th earl, who m. 1st, Dorothy, dau. of Sir William Keyt, Bart., of Ebrington, co. Gloucester, and had an only dau.,

Anne, m. Sir William Carew, Bart., of Antony, in Cornwall, and had an only child, Sir Coventry Carew, Bart., who d. s. p. 24 March, 1748.

His lordship m. 2ndly, Anne, dau. of Sir Streynsham Master, but had no issue. He d. 27 October, 1719, when the EARLDOM and VISCOUNTY, with the bulk of his estates, passed to his relative, William Coventry, Esq., of the city of London, one of the clerks of the green cloth, according to the limitation of the patent of 1697 (from whom the extant Earl of Coventry inherits), while the BARONY OF COVENTRY OF AYLESBOROUGH became EXTINCT.

CRANFIELD — BARONS CRANFIELD, EARLS OF MIDDLESEX.

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 9 June, 1621.

Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 16 September, 1622.

Lineage.

LIONEL CRANFIELD, a merchant of London, and married to a kinswoman of Villiers, Duke of Buckingham, was introduced to the court of King JAMES I. by that celebrated favourite, when he received the honour of knighthood, and soon after attracting the attention of the king, by his habits of business, he was appointed master of the requests, next master of the king's great wardrobe, then master of the wards, after which he was sworn of the privy council, and elevated to the peerage, as BARON CRANFIELD, of Cranfield, co. Bedford, 9 July, 1621. In the October following, his lordship was constituted Lord Trea-suror of England, and created, 16 September, 1622, EARL OF MIDDLESEX (the first person, says Dugdale, to whom that county gave the title of earl). But this tide of prosperity flowed too rapidly to be permanent, and a short time only elapsed before its reflux became as remarkable. Within two short years, the Lord Treasurer found himself impeached by parliament, through the influence of the very nobleman who was the founder of his fortune, the favourite Buckingham, for bribery, extortion, oppression, and other heinous misdemeanours, for which he received judgment, viz.,

"That Lionel, Earl of Middlesex, now Lord Treasurer of England, shall lose all his offices which he holds in this kingdom, and shall be made for ever incapable of any office, place, or employment in the state and commonwealth.

"That he shall be imprisoned in the Tower of London during the king's pleasure.

"That he shall pay to our sovereign lord the king, the sum of £50,000.

"That he shall never more sit in parliament.

"That he shall never come within the verge of the court."

And a bill passed at the same time to make his estate liable to the king's fine, and other accounts, and to make restitution to all whom he had wronged, as should be allowed by the discretion of the house. His lordship m. 1st, Elizabeth, dau. of Richard Shepherd, a merchant in London, by whom he had three daus., viz.,

- i. Martha, m. to Henry Carey, Earl of Monmouth.
- ii. Elizabeth, m. to Edmund, Lord Sheffield, grandson and heir of Edmund, Earl of Mulgrave.
- iii. Mary, d. unm.

The earl m. 2ndly, Anne, dau. of James Brett, Esq., of Hoby, co. Leicester, by Anne Beaumont his wife (sister of Mary, Countess of Buckingham), and had issue,

- i. JAMES, } successive earls.
- ii. LIONEL, }
- iii. Edward, d. unm.
- iv. William, d. young.

- i. Frances, m. 1st, to Richard, Earl of Dorset, and 2ndly, to Henry Poole, Esq.

His lordship d. in 1645, and notwithstanding his disgrace, was buried in Westminster Abbey, where a monument was erected to his memory. He was s. by his eldest son,

JAMES CRANFIELD, 2nd earl, who m. Anne, 3rd dau. and co-heiress of Edward, Earl of Bath, by whom he had an only dau.,

Elizabeth, m. to John, Lord Brackley, eldest son of the Earl of Bridgewater.

His lordship d. in 1651, when his honours devolved upon his brother,

LIONEL CRANFIELD, 3rd earl, who m. Rachel, widow of Henry, Earl of Bath, and dau. of Francis, Earl of Westmoreland, but dying s. p. in 1674, the BARONY OF CRANFIELD and EARLDOM OF MIDDLESEX became extinct, while his lordship's estates devolved upon his sister, the Countess of Dorset, whose eldest son, CHARLES, was created BARON CRANFIELD and EARL OF MIDDLESEX in 1675, honours which have descended with the Dukedom of Dorset.

The eldest son,

WILLIAM CRAVEN, Esq., having distinguished himself in arms under GUSTAVUS ADOLPHUS of Sweden, and HENRY,

PRINCE OF ORANGE, was elevated to the peerage by King CHARLES I., 12 March, 1626, as BARON CRAVEN, of Hampsted-Marshall, with remainder, in default of male issue, to his brothers, John and Thomas; and having afterwards, during the civil wars, zealously and ably upheld the royal cause, his lordship was created, at the Restoration, 15 March, 1663, VISCOUNT CRAVEN, of Uffington, co. Berks, and EARL CRAVEN, in the co. of York; and his brothers being both at this period defunct. s. p., he was re-created BARON CRAVEN, of Hampsted-Marshall, with remainder to Sir William Craven, of Lenchwyke, and Sir Anthony Craven, his cousins; but his cousin, Sir William dying without male issue, the earl had a new patent, dated 11 December, 1665, renewing the original barony, with an extended limitation to Sir Thomas Craven (a younger brother of the above-mentioned Sir William and Sir Anthony), and his male issue. His lordship, who lived to the advanced age of eighty-eight, was particularly famous for assisting in extinguishing fires in the city of London, of which he had such early intimation, and was so prompt to mount his horse upon such calamitous occasions, that it was commonly said, "Lord Craven's horse smelt a fire so soon as it happened." He d. unm. 9 April, 1697, when the barony of 1626, and that of 1663, with the VISCOUNTY and EARLDOM OF CRAVEN became EXTINCT; while the barony of 1665 devolved upon WILLIAM CRAVEN, Esq., of Combe Abbey, grandson of the Sir Thomas Craven limited in the patent, from whom the present EARL OF CRAVEN descends, and derives the said dignity.

CRICHTON—EARL OF CAITHNESS.

By Charter, dated 1452.

Lineage.

SIR GEORGE DE CRICHTON, high-admiral of Scotland, designed son and heir of Stephen Crichton, of Cairns, was, in the year 1452, created Earl of Caithness, the honours being limited to the heirs male of his body by his 2nd wife Janet Borthwick. He d. in 1455, without legitimate issue of his 2nd marriage, and the title became extinct. The large estates of the Earl of Caithness, with the exception of Barntoun and Cairns, appear to have reverted to the crown.

CRICHTON—VISCOUNT OF FREN- DRAUGHT.

By Letters Patent, dated 29 August, 1642.

Lineage.

WILLIAM CRICHTON, high chancellor of Scotland (son of John Crichton, of Crichton, and grandson of William de Crichton, whose 2nd son, Stephen, of Cairns, was father of the Earl of Caithness), made a conspicuous figure in Scottish history in the reigns of King JAMES I. and II. His first public appearance was in 1423, when he went to England to wait upon King JAMES I., and conduct him home. According to Fordun, he was created Lord Crichton, 1445, and re-appointed high chancellor, 1447. The next year he passed on a solemn embassy to France to renew the alliance with that kingdom, and conclude the marriage of King JAMES II. with Mary, dau. of Arnold, Duke of Guelder, which he happily settled. On the chancellor's return home he founded the collegiate church of Crichton, 26 December, 1449, and continued prime minister of Scotland till his death in 1454. By Agnes his wife, he had issue,

JAMES, of whom presently.

Elizabeth, m. Alexander, 1st Earl of Huntly.

Agnes, m. 1st, Alexander, 4th Lord Glamis; 2ndly, Walter Ker, of Cessford.

The only son,

JAMES CRICHTON, 2nd Lord Crichton, knighted by King JAMES I., at the baptism of his eldest son, 1430, m. Lady Janet Dunbar, eldest dau. and co-heir of James, Earl of Moray, with whom he got the Barony of Frendraught. He was, under the designation of Sir James Crichton, of Frendraught, appointed great chamberlain of Scotland, 1440, and held that office till 1453. He d. about 1469, leaving issue,

WILLIAM, 3rd lord

Gavin, obtained a charter of the lands of Molyne, Rahillie, Monigep, and Cronseantoun, in the Barony of Kirkmichael, co. Dumfries, 24 January, 1477, from his brother, and was forfeited for treason by the parliament of Scotland, 24 February, 1483-4, for engaging in Albany's rebellion.

George, also forfeited 24 February, 1483-4, for the same offence.

The eldest son,

WILLIAM CRICHTON, 3rd Lord Crichton, who having joined the Duke of Albany in his rebellion against King JAMES III., garrisoned his castle of Crichton on behalf of the duke, for which he was forfeited by the parliament of Scotland, 24 February, 1483-4. He m. Margaret, 2nd dau. of King JAMES II., by whom he had (with a dau. Margaret, m. to George, 4th Earl of Rothes), a son,

SIR JAMES CRICHTON, who m. Catherine, eldest dau. of William, Lord Borthwick, by whom he had a son,

WILLIAM CRICHTON, of Frendraught, who, by Agnes Abernethy his wife, was father of

SIR JAMES CRICHTON, of Frendraught, who by Lady Johanna Keith his wife, 6th dau. of William, 4th Earl Marischal, left issue,

JAMES, of whom presently.

George, who had a charter of the Barony of Frendraught, Conveith, &c., in Banffshire, 29 April, 1699.

Agnes, who in a charter, 1572, is designed "dau. of Sir James Crichton, future spouse of William Leslie, of Tulliferry."

The eldest son,

JAMES CRICHTON, of Frendraught, by Janet his wife, dau. of Alexander Gordon, of Leamoir, had issue,

JAMES, his heir.
 Anne, m. to William Seaton, of Meldrum.
 Mary, m. to Patrick, Lord Oliphant.

The only son,

JAMES CRICHTON, of Frendraught, had the family estates made over to him by his father. He m. 25 February, 1619, Lady Elizabeth Gordon, eldest dau. of John, 12th Earl of Sutherland, by whom he had issue,

The eldest son,

JAMES CRICHTON, of Frendraught, who was, in the lifetime of his father, advanced to the peerage, in consideration of his father being heir male of Lord Chancellor Crichton, and created Viscount of Frendraught and Lord Crichton, to him and his heirs male and successors, by patent, dated at Nottingham, 29 August, 1642. His lordship accompanied the Marquess of Montrose in his last expedition, and was with him at Invercharron, when he was defeated by Strachan, in 1650. Montrose's horse being shot under him, he was generously remounted by the viscount, and thus escaped for a few days. "The Viscount of Frendraught," says Douglas, "being made prisoner, to prevent public vengeance, preferred a Roman death." His lordship m. 1st, Lady Margaret Lesly, 2nd dau. of Alexander, 1st Earl of Leven, by whom he had a dau.,

Janet, m. 24 August 1665, to Sir JAMES MARGILL, of Rankellour, and had issue. (See BURKE's Landed Gentry.)

CROFTS—BARON CROFTS, OF SAXHAM, CO. SUFFOLK.

By Letters Patent, dated 18 May, 1658.

Lineage.

WILLIAM CROFTS, Esq., lineal male heir of the family of Crofts, which had flourished for several ages at Saxham, co. Suffolk, and descended by females from the 1st Lord Wentworth, of Nettlested, as also from the Montacutes, Earls of Salisbury, and Nevils, Earls of Westmoreland, was elevated so the peerage on 18 May, 1658, as BARON CROFTS, of Saxham, co. Suffolk. His lordship having been brought up at court from his youth, became first, master of the horse to James, Duke of York, next captain of the guards to the queen-mother, and afterwards one of the gentlemen of the bed-chamber to King CHARLES II. He was subsequently employed as ambassador to Poland, and for his services on that occasion obtained the peerage. His lordship m. 1st, Dorothy, widow of Sir John Hele, Knt., dau. of Sir John Hobart, of Intwood, co. Norfolk, Bart. (son and heir of Lord Chief Justice Hobart, of the Common Pleas); and 2ndly, Elizabeth, dau. of William Lord Spencer, of Wormleighton; but having no issue, the BARONY OF CROFTS became, at his lordship's decease in 1677, EXTINCT.

CROMWELL — BARON CROMWELL, OF OKEHAM, CO. RUTLAND, EARL OF ESSEX.

Barony by Letters Patent, dated 9 July, 1536

Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 10 April, 1539

Lineage.

THOMAS CROMWELL (son of Walter Cromwell, a blacksmith at Putney), upon his return from foreign service under the Duke of Bourbon, obtained a situation in the suite of Cardinal Wolsey, and, after the fall of that celebrated prelate, was taken into the service of the king (at HENRY's special command, from his fidelity to his old master), in which he evinced so much zeal and ability, that the road to the highest honours of the state presented very soon an unimpeded course for his ambition. In a short time he filled successively the important situations of master of the jewel-office, clerk of the hanaper, principal secretary, justice of the forests, master of the Rolls, and lord privy-seal, and was elevated to the peerage, in the dignity of BARON CROMWELL, of Okeham, 9 July, 1536. He was afterwards constituted the king's vice-regent in spirituals, honoured with the Garter, and finally (10 April, 1539) created EARL OF ESSEX, when he was invested with the Lord High Chamberlainship of England. In the dissolution of the monastic institutions, and the establishment of the spiritual supremacy of his royal master, Cromwell, considering the powerful interests with which he had to contend, exhibited a boldness of character paralleled only by the profound political dexterity that accomplished those great and daring innovations. As a recompense, he shared largely in the spoil of the fallen church, and, amongst other grants, the sacerdotal revenues of St. Osyth, in Essex, and of the Gray Friars, at Yarmouth, flowed into his coffers. But his elevation was not more rapid than his decline, and his fall was hailed by all parties with satisfaction. So long as Essex ministered to the pleasures of HENRY, the royal shield protected him from the indignation of the people; but the moment that was removed, his fate was sealed. His instrumentality in allying the king with Anne of Cleves was the rock upon which his fortunes foundered. Unprepared for such a proceeding, the earl was arrested, under the king's especial order, by the Duke of Norfolk, at the control-board, 10 June, 1540, hurried off to the Tower, attainted unheard, and beheaded 24 July, notwithstanding archbishop Cranmer's powerful exertions in his behalf; and all the honours of the ex-minister were of course forfeited under the attainder; but his son, Gregory, who, in his lifetime, had been summoned to parliament as Lord Cromwell, had that dignity confirmed to him, by letters patent, in the December following the earl's execution. (See BARON CROMWELL.)

SIR RICHARD WILLIAMS, nephew of Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Essex, being eldest son of Morgan Williams, by his wife, a sister of the earl's, assumed, at the desire of King HENRY VIII., the surname of his uncle, CROMWELL, and shared in the success of that powerful nobleman. He was appointed a gentleman of the privy-chamber to King HENRY VIII., and constable of Berkeley Castle. Upon the dissolution of the monasteries, he obtained all the lands, in Huntingdonshire, belonging to any religious house in that county, and was s. by his son,

SIR HENRY CROMWELL, Knt., of Hinchinbroke, M.P. for Huntingdonshire, father, by Joan his wife, dau. of Sir Ralph Warren, of six sons and five daus. Of the latter, the 2nd, Elizabeth, m. to William Hampden, Esq., was mother of JOHN HAMPDEN, the patriot; and of the former, the eldest, Sir ROBERT CROMWELL, Knt., inherited Hinchinbroke, while the 2nd, ROBERT CROMWELL, of Huntingdon, who m. Elizabeth, dau. of William Stewart, Esq., was father of

OLIVER CROMWELL, the LORD PROTECTOR.

CROMWELL—BARONS CROMWELL AND EARLS OF ARDGLASS.

By Writ of Summons, dated 28 April, 1539.

By Letters Patent, dated 18 December, 1540.

Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 15 April, 1645.

Lineage.

The Honourable

GREGORY CROMWELL, summoned to parliament 28 April, 1539, as LORD CROMWELL (son of Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Essex, attainted and beheaded in July, 1540), a servant of King HENRY VIII., was created BARON CROMWELL, by letters patent, dated 18 December, 1540. His lordship m. Elizabeth, dau. of Sir John Seymour, sister of Edward, Duke of Somerset, and widow of Sir Anthony Oughtred, by whom he had three sons, HENRY, Edward, and Thomas, and two daus., Frances, m. to Edward Strode, Esq., of Devonshire; Catherine, m. to John Strode, Esq., co. Dorset. Lord Cromwell who had summons to parliament to the year 1548, d. in 1551, and was s. by his eldest son.

HENRY CROMWELL, 2nd baron, summoned to parliament from the 5th to the 31st ELIZABETH. His lordship m. Mary, dau. of John, Marquess of Winchester, and had issue, EDWARD, his successor, Sir Gregory Cromwell, Knt., and Catherine, m. to Sir Lionel Tollemache, Bart., of Helmingham, co. Suffolk, ancestor by her of the EARLS OF DYSART. He d. in 1592, and was s. by his elder son.

EDWARD CROMWELL, 3rd baron, summoned to parliament in the 36th ELIZABETH. This nobleman was with the Earl of Essex in his expedition at sea against the Spaniards in the 40th ELIZABETH, and joined in the insurrection three years afterwards, which cost the earl his head. Lord Cromwell received, however, an especial pardon on 9 July, 1601. His lordship m. 1st, —, dau. of — Umpton, Esq., and had an only dau. Elizabeth, m. 1st, to Sir John Shelton, of Shelton, in Norfolk, and afterwards to Thomas Fitzhughes, Esq., of Oxfordshire. The baron m. 2ndly, Frances, dau. of William Rugge, Esq., of Norfolk, by whom he had THOMAS, his successor, with two daus., viz., Frances, m. to Sir John Wingfield, of Tickencote, co. Rutland, and Anne, m. to Sir William Wingfield, of Poore's Court, in Ireland. Lord Cromwell having alienated his estates in England by sale, purchased the Barony of Lecale, in Ireland, from Mountjoy Blount, Earl of Devon, or, according to Noble, in his "History of Cornwall," made an exchange thereof. His lordship d. in Ireland in 1607, and was s. by his son.

THOMAS CROMWELL, 4th baron, who was created 22 November, 1624, Viscount Lecale, and 15 April, 1645, EARL ARDGLASS, in the peerage of Ireland. His lordship remained firmly attached to the interests of the king during the civil wars, notwithstanding his friendship with the Earl of Essex. He m. Elizabeth, dau. and heiress of Robert Meverell, Esq., of Throwleigh, co. Stafford, by whom he had surviving issue, WINGFIELD, his successor; VERA-ESSEX, who inherited after his nephew; Oliver; and Mary, who m. William Fitz-Herbert, Esq., of Tinsington, co. Derby. He d. in 1653, and was s. by his eldest son.

WINGFIELD CROMWELL, 5th Baron Cromwell and 2nd Earl of Ardglass. This nobleman m. Mary, dau. of Sir William Russell, of Strensham, co. Worcester, and was s. in 1663, by his only son.

THOMAS CROMWELL, 6th baron and 3rd earl, who m. Honora, dau. of Michael Boyle, archbishop of Armagh, and lord chancellor of Ireland, but d. s. p. 11 April, 1682, when his honours reverted to his uncle.

VERA-ESSEX CROMWELL, 7th baron and 4th earl. This nobleman m. Catherine, dau. of James Hamilton, Esq., M.P. for Bangor, co. Down, nephew of James, Viscount Clanboye; and by her (who m. 2ndly, Nicholas Price, Esq., of Hollymount, co. Down) had an only dau., ELIZABETH. His lordship d. at Booncastle, co. Down, 26 November, 1687, when the IRISH VISCOUNTY OF LECALÉ and EARLDOM OF ARDGLASS, and the English Barony of Cromwell, created by patent, EXPIRED, but the BARONY OF CROMWELL, originating in the writ of 28 April, 1539, devolved upon his dau.,

ELIZABETH CROMWELL, as Baroness Cromwell, in which rank her ladyship assisted at the funeral of Queen MARY and coronation of Queen ANNE. She m. Edward Southwell, Esq., principal secretary of state for Ireland, and had issue, two sons and a dau., who all d. s. p., and another, a son, EDWARD SOUTHWELL, who marrying Catherine, dau. of Edward Watson, Viscount Sondes, and sole heiress of her brother, Lewis and Thomas, Earls of Rockingham, left a son.

EDWARD SOUTHWELL, who, in right of his mother, s. to the Barony of de Clifford.

Her ladyship d. in 1709, and the BARONY OF CROMWELL is now supposed to be vested in the sisters and co-heirs of EDWARD, LORD DE CLIFFORD, son and successor of Edward, Lord de Clifford, mentioned above.

ARMS—Quarterly: per fesse, indented, or and az., four lions passant, counterchanged.

CROMWELL — BARONS CROMWELL, OF TATSHALL, CO. LINCOLN.

By Writ of Summons, dated 10 March, 1308.

Lineage.

The family of Cromwell was of importance so far back as the time of King JOHN, for we find in the 17th of that reign,

RALPH DE CROMWELL, paying a fine of 60 marks and a palfrey to make his peace for participating in the rebellion of the barons, and upon delivering up his eldest dau. in hostage, obtaining restitution of his lands. After which, in the 3rd HENRY III., he was constituted justice itinerant in the cos. of Lincoln, Nottingham, and Derby. To this Ralph s. another

RALPH DE CROMWELL, who m. Margaret, one of the sisters and co-heirs of Roger de Someri, Baron of Dudley, and was afterwards engaged in the French, Welsh, and Scottish wars of King EDWARD I. He was s. by his son,

SIR JOHN DE CROMWELL, who m. Idonea de Leyburne, younger dau. and co-heir of Robert de Vipont, hereditary sheriff of Westmoreland, and widow of Sir Roger de Leyburne, but by her had no issue. In the 33rd EDWARD I., Sir John Cromwell accused Sir Nicholas de Segrave of treason, and was answered by a defiance to battle, but the combat was not permitted. In the 1st EDWARD II. he had a grant for life from the crown of the castle of Hope, in Flintshire, and the same year was made governor of Strigull Castle, and constable of the Tower of London. He was likewise summoned to parliament as a BARON. His lordship was subsequently engaged in the French and Scotch wars of King EDWARD II., and having had summons to parliament until the 9th EDWARD III., d. in the latter year (anno 1335), and was s. by his son (by a 2nd wife), or by his nephew (the son of his brother, Sir Ralph),

SIR RALPH DE CROMWELL, 2nd baron, summoned to parliament from 28 December, 1375, to 19 August, 1399, inclusive. This nobleman m. Maud, dau. of John Bernack, and heiress of her brother William, in whose right he became lord of the manor of Tatshall, co. Lincoln, by lineal succession from the heirs female of Robert de Tatshall, sometime owner thereof, whereupon he fixed his chief residence there. In the 10th RICHARD II., Lord Cromwell being then a banneret, was retained to serve the king in defence of the realm against an invasion apprehended at that period. His lordship d. 27 August, 1398, and was s. by his son,

RALPH DE CROMWELL, 3rd baron, summoned to parliament from 9 September, 1400, to 3 September, 1417. His lordship d. in 1419, and was s. by his son,

SIR RALPH DE CROMWELL, 4th baron, who m. Margaret, dau. of John, Lord Deincourt, and Joane his wife, dau. and heiress of Robert, Lord Grey, of Rotherfield, and co-heiress of her brother, William, Lord Deincourt. In the 11th HENRY VI., this nobleman was constituted treasurer of the king's exchequer, and in three years afterwards had a grant of the office of master of the king's mews and falcons. In the 23rd of the same reign his lordship was appointed hereditary constable of Nottingham Castle, and warden of the forest of Sherwood. He d. s. p. in 1455, and his sister became his heir, viz.,

MAUD CROMWELL, who m. Sir Richard Stanhope (ancestor of the existing noble houses of Chesterfield, Harrington, and Stanhope), and had issue, two daus., co-heiresses, viz.,

I. MAUD STANHOPE, m. 1st, Robert, Lord Willoughby de Eresby, and had a dau.,

Joane, wife of Sir Richard Wells, Knt., afterwards Lord Wells, by whom she had issue,

Robert, Lord Willoughby and Wells, who d. s. p.

Jane, heir to her brother; m. Sir Richard Hastings, Lord Wells and Willoughby (in right of his wife), and had issue,

Anthony Hastings, who d. s. p., thus terminating the line.

Maud, Lady Willoughby, m. 2ndly, Sir Thomas Nevill, Knt., a younger son of Richard, Earl of Salisbury; and 3rdly, Sir Gervaise Clifton, Knt., but had issue by neither.

II. JANE STANHOPE, m. SIR HUMPHREY BOUCHIER, 3rd son of Henry, Earl of Essex, which

SIR HUMPHREY BOUCHIER was summoned to parliament in right of his said wife, as BARON CROMWELL, from 25 July, 1461, to 15 October, 1470. This nobleman fell gallantly fighting at the battle of Barnet Field, on the part of EDWARD IV., in 1471, and d. s. p. The BARONY OF CROMWELL, upon the decease of his lordship's widow, fell into ABEYANCE amongst the descendants of Ralph, the 4th baron's three aunts, Hawise, wife of Thomas, Lord Bardolph.

Maude, wife of Sir William Fitz-William, Knt., of Sprotbore.
Elizabeth, wife, 1st of Sir John Clifton, Knt., and afterwards of Sir Edward Bensted, Knt.

and it still so continues, save as to the line of Bardolph, which was attained.

CROSBIE—EARL OF GLANDORE VISCOUNT CROSBIE, OF ARDFERT, BARON BRANDON.

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 6 September, 1758.

Viscounty, by Letters Patent, dated 30 November, 1771.

Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 22 July, 1776.

Lineage.

The ancestor of the noble family of Crosbie, which has been long settled in Ireland, left two sons,

- I. PATRICK, his heir, who had a grant of the estates of the O'Moore's, in the Queen's Co., in which he was s. by his son,

PIERCE CROSBIE (Sir), a military man of distinction, who having incurred the resentment of the Earl of Strafford, was compelled to retire from Ireland until the overthrow of that nobleman, upon whose trial Sir Pierce appeared as a witness. He was a gentleman of the privy council. He
m. Elizabeth, dau. of Sir Andrew Noel, of Brooke, co. Rut land, and widow of George, 1st Earl of Castlehaven; but dying s. p. in 1646, bequeathed all his property to his cousins, Walter and David Crosbie.

- II. JOHN, of whom we treat.

JOHN CROSBIE, being bred to the church, was made bishop of Ardfert, 2 October, 1600. His lordship m. Winefred, dau. of O'Lalor, of the Queen's Co., and d. September, 1621, leaving (with four daus.) two sons, viz.,

WALTER, created a Baronet of Nova Scotia; and

DAVID CROSBIE, Esq., who with his brother Walter inherited the estates of his cousin, Sir Pierce Crosbie. This gentleman was a colonel in the army, and governor of the co. of Kerry in 1641, where he stood a siege in the castle of Ballingarry for more than twelve months with great resolution. He was afterwards governor of Kinsale for the king, which he surrendered upon articles of capitulation for the garrison and his estate, to Lord Broghill, who besieged it for the parliament of England. Colonel Crosbie m. a dau. of the Right Rev. John Steele, D.D., lord bishop of Ardfert, by whom he had issue,

- I. THOMAS, his successor.
- II. Patrick, of Tubrid, m. Agnes Freke, aunt of Sir Ralph Freke, Bart., by whom he had a large family.
- III. The eldest dau. m. Richard Shovel, Esq., a captain in Lord
Inchiquin's regiment of horse.
- IV. The 2nd dau. m. Richard Chute, Esq., of Tulligaron.
- V. The 3rd dau. m. Garrett Reeves, Esq.
- VI. The 4th dau. m. Captain William Reeves.

Col. Crosbie was s. at his decease by his elder son,

SIR THOMAS CROSBIE, who received the honour of knighthood from James, Duke of Ormonde, in consideration of the loyalty of his family during the civil wars. Sir Thomas was seated at Ardfert, and was member for the co. of Kerry in King JAMES's parliament, held at Dublin in 1688. He remained steady in his allegiance to that unfortunate prince, and refused to take the oaths to King WILLIAM. He m. 1st, Bridget, dau. of Robert Tynte, Esq., of the co. of Cork, and had, with two daus. (Sarah,

- III. Patrick, in holy orders, d. s. p.
- IV. Walter, of Trinity College, Dublin, d. s. p.

Sir Thomas m. 2ndly, Ellen, widow of Sir Ralph Wilson, and dau. of Garret Fitzgerald, of Ballynard, co. Limerick; and 3rdly, Elizabeth, eldest dau. and co-heir of William Hamilton,
Esq., by which latter lady he had issue,

- I. Thomas, of Ballyheige, co. Kerry, M.P. for that shire in 1709; m. in 1711, Lady Margaret Barry, dau. of Richard, 2nd
Earl of Barrymore, and left issue, Anne-Dorothy, m. to William Carrique, Esq., of Glandyne, co. Clare, and had an only son, and Harriet-Jane, m. to Col. Lancelot Crosbie, of Tubrid, co.
Kerry, and a son and heir, James, of Ballyheige, who m.
Mary, dau. of his uncle, Pierre Crosbie, of Rusheen, and dying in March, 1761, left issue: see BURKE's Landed Gentry, CROSBIE, of Ballyheige.

II. John, a major in the army, living in the co. of Wicklow in 1762, after being engaged for several years in active service upon the continent, where he lost an arm, and subsequently in Scotland. Amongst the most celebrated battles in which Major Crosbie participated were those of Dettingen and Culloden. He left at his decease a numerous family.

III. Pierce, barrister-at-law, of Rusheen, co. Kerry; m. Margaret, dau. of Sir Lancelot Sandes, of Carigfoyle; and dying in April, 1761, left an only son, Francis, and two daus.,

- 1 Mary, m. to James Crosbie, Esq., of Ballyheige.
- 2 Elizabeth.

CUFF—BARON TYRAWLEY.

By Letters Patent, dated 7 November, 1797.

Lineage.

THOMAS CUFF, 2nd son of Robert Cuff, Esq., of Crych, in Somersetshire, by Catharine Cutter his wife, and grandson of John Cuff, of Crych, by Joan his wife, dau. of Sir William Denny, who was son of John Cuff, of Ilchester, co. Somerset, subscribed, upon the first breaking out of the rebellion in 1641, a large sum of money, and went over to Ireland with two of his sons, JAMES and THOMAS. The younger had a considerable command in the parliamentary army, and d. in 1650.* The elder,

SIR JAMES CUFF, of Ballinrobe, devotedly attached to the royal cause, continued strenuously to promote the restoration of CHARLES II., by whom he was knighted, appointed master of the ordnance, and made a privy councillor. In 1661 he was elected M.P. for the co. of Mayo, and had a grant of the town and lands of Ballinrobe, and other extensive estates in the co. of Mayo and Galway. CUMYN—EARL OF BUCHAN.

Lineage.

WILLIAM CUMYN, son of Richard Cumyn, Justiciary of Scotland, and ancestor, by his 1st wife, of the Cumyns, Lords of Badenoch, became Earl of Buchan in the right of his 2nd wife, Marjory, Countess of Buchan, only child of FERDUS, Earl of Buchan, temp. WILLIAM THE LION, and by her had (with a dau., Elizabeth, wife of William, Earl of Marr) three sons; of whom the eldest,

ALEXANDER CUMYN, 2nd Earl of Buchan, s. his mother, and became Justiciary of Scotland. He m. Elizabeth, 2nd of the three daus. and co-heirs of Roger de Quinci, Earl of Winchester, by Helen, eldest dau. and co-heir of Alan, Lord of Galloway, constable of Scotland, and had a son and heir,

JOHN CUMYN, 3rd Earl of Buchan, constable of Scotland, who was infeoffed in the manor of Wightwicke, in Leicestershire, and doing his homage, had livery of his lands. A firm adherent of EDWARD I., his lordship raised a large force against King ROBERT BRUCE, but was defeated at Inverary, in 1308, when he retired to England. He m. Isabel, dau. of Duncan, Earl of Fife, a lady celebrated for having, in the absence of her brother, the Earl of Fife, placed the crown on ROBERT BRUCE at Scone, and for the consequent sufferings she underwent during her imprisonment in the castle of Berwick-upon-Tweed, where EDWARD I. caused her to be confined for many years in an iron cage.

ALEXANDER CUMYN, 4th Earl of Buchan, is stated to have s. his brother, on the authority of Robertson's "Index," where Margaret Cumyn, wife of John Ross, is called dau. to the Earl of Buchan; and Burton's "Leicestershire," p. 37, where Alice, wife of Henry de Beaumont, is styled dau. and heir of Alexander Comin, Earl of Buchan in Scotland. Still, however, there is room for doubt that Alexander predeceased his brother John, and of course was never Earl of Buchan, as John infeoffed his youngest brother William, in his manors in 1312-13, who gave them up to his nieces as the heirs. Alexander Cumyn de Boghan gave his oath to serve King EDWARD I.

against the French, along with his brother John, Earl of Buchan, 7 June, 1297. He had two sons, ALICE, m. about 1319-20, to Henry de Beaumont.

MARGARET, m. to Sir John the Ross, son to the Earl of Ross, who got with her in tocher, from King ROBERT BRUCE, the half of the Earl of Buchan's whole lands in Scotland.

The husband of the elder,

HENRY DE BEAUMONT, assumed the title of the Earl of Buchan in right of his wife, and is so designed in Rymer's "Foedera." With her he got the manor of Whitwiche, in Leicestershire, and divers other lands and possessions, of which he had livery, 6th EDWARD II. By the treaty of Northampton, 1328, it was agreed that he should be restored to his lands and estates; but this not being performed, he was one of the disinherites who accompanied Edward Baliol into Scotland, 1332, and had a share in the decisive victory over the Scots at Duplin, 12 August, 1332. He d. 14th EDWARD III., leaving a son John, Lord Beaumont, ancestor of the BEAUMONTS, Barons, of Cole Orton, co. Leicester.

CUNYNGHAME—LORD KILMAURS, AND EARL OF GLENCAIRN.

By Charter, dated 28 May, 1488.

Lineage.

VERNEBALD, the 1st of this family whose name appears in authentic record, was settled in the west of Scotland about the commencement of the 12th century. His son, ROBERT, designed "Robertus, filius Vernebaldi," made a donation of the patronage of the kirk of Kilmaurs, &c., to the abbey of Kelso about 1153. He m. Richenda, dau. and heiress of Sir Humphrey de Barclay, of Gairnully.

ROBERTUS, filius Roberti filii Vernebaldi, previous to 1189, confirmed the grants made by his father.

HERVEY DE CUNYNGHAME, great grandson of the last Robert, represented the family about 1264, in which year he had a charter from ALEXANDER III. He founded a collegiate church at Kilmaurs, and is renowned in tradition for his gallant conduct at the battle of Largs against the Danes, 1263. He m. the heiress of Riddell, of Glengarnock, and was s. by his son,

SIR WILLIAM DE CUNYNGHAME, of Kilmaurs, who d. in 1285, and was s. by his eldest son,

EDWARD DE CUNYNGHAME, of Kilmaurs, who was s. by his eldest son,

GILBERT DE CUNYNGHAME, of Kilmaurs, who was s. in 1292, by his son,

SIR ROBERT DE CUNYNGHAME, of Kilmaurs, who swore fealty to EDWARD I.; but declaring afterwards for ROBERT BRUCE, had a charter from that monarch of the superiority of the lands of Lambrachtoun and Grugere, in Cuninghame, to be holden of the king, as Alan la Suche and William de Fereres held the same. He d. in 1330, and was s. by his elder son,

SIR WILLIAM DE CUNYNGHAME, of Kilmaurs, on whom DAVID II. conferred the Earldom of Carrick, 1361, as husband of Eleanor Bruce, dau. of Alexander Bruce, Earl of Carrick, son of Edward Bruce, brother of ROBERT I. As appears from a charter of the lands of Kindevan, Sir William was m. 2ndly, to a lady named Margaret, but of what family is not known. Though generally stated otherwise it would seem by Eleanor Bruce, Sir William had five sons. Robert, the eldest d. young, the 2nd,

SIR WILLIAM CUNYNGHAME, s. his father. In 1400 he resigned his estates for new investment, and obtained a charter from ROBERT III. to Sir William and his heirs male, failing whom to his brothers, Thomas, Alexander, and John in succession, and their heirs male, failing whom to other near relatives of the name of Cuninghame, &c., of the lands and baronies, Kilmaurs, Lambrachtoun, Kilbride, Skelmorlie, and Polquharne, co. Ayr; lands and barony of Redhall, co. Edinburgh; lands of Nery, in Forfarshire; the barony of Haddingden, in Roxburghshire; and the lands of Ranfurley, in the barony of Renfrew. Sir William m. Margaret, elder dau. and co-heiress of Sir Robert de Danyelston, and with her obtained a large addition to the family property: the division between the co-heiresses, took place in 1404, and in Sir William's share were included the Baronies of Glencairn and Fynlayston.

SIR ROBERT CUNYNGHAME, son of the preceding, succeeded. He was one of the jury who tried and condemned Murdock, Duke of Albany, in the reign of JAMES I.; by his wife Anne, only dau. of Sir John de Montgomery, of Ardrossan, he had a successor,

ALEXANDER CUNYNGHAME, who about 1450 was created Lord Kilmaurs, and for the strenuous support given to his sovereign against the rebel nobles, headed by the prince, he was raised to the dignity of an earl, with the title of GLENCAIRN, 28 May, 1488. A few days after, a battle took place between the hostile parties near Stirling, where the royal army was defeated, and where the king and newly-created earl were both slain. The rebel party having thus come into power, the parliament was convoked, and an act passed, annulling all grants of peerages or lands conferred by JAMES III., during the late struggle: amongst these was included the title of Glencairn. His lordship m. Margaret, dau. of Adam Hepburn, Lord of Hales, and had four sons,

ROBERT, his heir.

William, ancestor of CUNYNGHAME OF CRAIGENDS, and of the Cunninghams of Robertland, Cairncuran, Baidland, Auchincharvie, and Ashinyards.*

Elizabeth, d. unm. at Coats, 6 August, 1804.

The earl, who attained the rank of major-gen. in the army, d. 9 September, 1775, and was s. by his son,

JAMES CUNNINGHAME, 14th Earl of Glencairn, b. in June, 1749, who disposed of his ancient family estate of Kilmaurs to the Marchioness of Titchfield, in 1786. His lordship was a nobleman of great generosity of disposition, and d. deeply lamented, 30 January, 1791, in the forty-second year of his age. His kindness to Robert Burns, and the beautiful lament of the poet on his lordship's decease, have added new lustre to the name of Glencairn. Burns put on mourning for his death, and called after the earl his next-born son, James-Glencairn Burns (afterwards major of the East India Company's service). Lord Glencairn never married, and was s. at his decease by his brother, JOHN CUNNINGHAME, 15th Earl of Glencairn, b. in May, 1750; who was an officer in the 14th regt. of dragoons, but afterwards took orders in the church of England. He m. in 1785, Lady Isabella Erskine, 2nd dau. of Henry-David, 10th Earl of Buchan, and relict of William Leslie Hamilton, Esq.; but d. s. p., 24 September, 1796, in the forty-seventh year of his age, when the honours became DORMANT.

CUNYNGHAME—EARL OF CARRICK.

Lineage.

SIR WILLIAM DE CUNYNGHAME, Knt., of Kilmaurs, who m. for his 2nd wife, Lady Eleanor Bruce, only dau. of Alexander Bruce, 8th Earl of Carrick, obtained in consequence a charter from DAVID II. of that earldom, which soon however reverted to the crown. The heirs-male of Edward Bruce having failed the Earldom of Carrick ought to have reverted to the crown, in terms of the charter; but exception seems to have been made in favour of his grand-dau., his only existing descendant; and according to the custom of the time, her husband became Earl of Carrick. The charter in his favour is on record, and singularly incomplete, as if there had been a doubt as to the propriety of the grant:—"David, D. O. Rex Scottorum, scilicet nos dedisse concessisse et hac presenti carta confirmasse dilecto consanguineo nostro Willielmo de Cuninghame militi totum comitatum de Carryk." Without date; the charters immediately preceding and following on the record are dated at Aberdeen, 12 September, 1361. No mention being made of heirs, it was clearly intended the earldom should revert to the elder branch of the Bruce family. Indeed, after Lady Eleanor's death, it was re-assumed by ROBERT II., and soon after conferred on his eldest son, JOHN, during Sir William's lifetime.

CUTTS—BARON CUTTS, OF GOWRAN.

By Letters Patent, dated 12 December, 1680.

DACRE—BARONS DACRE, OF GILLESLAND, OR THE NORTH.

By Writ of Summons, dated 15 November, 1482.

Lineage.

In the 20th year of King HENRY III.

WILLIAM DACRE, of Dacre, in Cumberland, served the office of sheriff for that shire, with John de Moore, and in the 32nd of the same reign, he was constituted sheriff of Yorkshire, and governor of the castles of Scarborough and Pickering. He d. in ten years afterwards, when again sheriff of Cumberland, and governor of the castle of Carlisle, and was s. by his son,

RANULPH DE DACRE, who had been in the lifetime of his father a staunch adherent of King HENRY III., in the conflicts between that monarch and the barons, and upon succeeding to his inheritance was appointed sheriff of Cumberland. In the 7th EDWARD I., he was constituted sheriff of Yorkshire, and continued in that trust, until the end of the 3rd quarter of the 8th succeeding year. This Ranulph m. Joane de Luci, and dying in the 14th EDWARD I., was s. by his son,

WILLIAM DE DACRE, b. 1265, who, in the 32nd EDWARD I., was in the expedition made that year into Scotland, and about the same period obtained a charter for free warren in all his demesne lands at Dacre, co. Cumberland, and at Halton, in Lancashire. In the 1st year of the next reign, he had license to encastellate his mansion at Dunwallogh, in Cumberland, on the marches of Scotland, and in three years afterwards was again engaged in the Scottish wars. His lordship m. Joane, dau. and heiress of Benedict Garnet, or according to some authorities, dau. of Sir William Bluet, and having been summoned to parliament as a Baron, from the 28th EDWARD I., to the 12th EDWARD II., departed this life in the latter year, and was s. by his son,

RANULPH DE DACRE, who had summons to parliament as BARON DACRE, from 15 May, 1321, to 15th November, 1338. His lordship was made sheriff of Cumberland and governor of Carlisle, in the 4th EDWARD III., and in the 8th of the same monarch, he obtained livery of all those castles and manors in Anandale, within the realm of Scotland, part of the possessions of Roger de Kirkpatrick and Humphrey de Bois, which had been given to him by EDWARD, King of Scotland. He was also, in the same year, joined in commission with Robert de Clifford, for the defence of the town and marches of Carlisle, and for arraying so many "men at arms, hoblars, and foot soldiers," as should be needful for the service. In the next year he had license to make a castle of his house at Naworth, co. Cumberland. His lordship m. Margaret, only dau. and heiress of Thomas de Multon, BARON MULTON, of Gillesland

(by writ of EDWARD II., dated 26 August, 1307), by whom he acquired considerable estates, and left at his decease, in 1339, three sons, viz.,

WILLIAM, who s. to the Barony of Dacre through his father, and to the Barony of MULTON, through his mother, but d. s. p. in 1361.

THOMAS.

RALPH, successor to his brother in the baronies, d. also s. p. in 1376.

And

HUGH DE DACRE, who s. his brother Ralph as Lord Dacre and Lord Multon, and had summons to parliament from 1 December, 1376, to 20 August, 1383. His lordship m. Ela, dau. of Alexander, Lord Maxwell, and dying in 1393, was s. by his son,

WILLIAM DE DACRE, b. 1357, summoned to parliament from 3 March, 1384, to 23 November, 1403. His lordship m. Joan, illegitimate dau. of James, Earl of Douglas, and dying about the year 1403, was s. by his son,

THOMAS DE DACRE, summoned to parliament from 1 December, 1412, to 26 May, 1455. This nobleman was constituted chief forester of Inglewood Forest, co. Cumberland, in the 8th HENRY V., and was appointed in the 2nd HENRY VI. one of the commissioners to treat for peace with JAMES I. of Scotland. His lordship m. Philippa, dau. of Ralph Nevil, Earl of Westmoreland, and d. 1458, having had issue,

Thomas, who m. Elizabeth, dau. of Richard Bowes, Esq., and dying in the lifetime of his father, left an only dau. and heiress, Joane, m. Sir Richard Fienes, Knt., who was declared BARON DACRE by King EDWARD IV., and from whom the BARONY has descended in regular succession to the present LORD DACRE.

Ranulph, a stout adherent of the house of Lancaster, had summons to parliament as a Baron in the 38th HENRY VI., but fell at Towtonfield, and was subsequently attainted when his title and estates became forfeited.

HUMPHREY, of whom presently.

John. Richard. George.

Joan, m. to Thomas, 8th Lord de Clifford.

Isabel, m. to Lord Scrope, of Upsal.

SIR HUMPHREY DACRE (the 3rd son), having deputed himself obsequiously to the then triumphant house of York, attended King EDWARD IV. at the sieges and surrender of the different Lancastrian castles in the north; for which good services, as well as his fidelity to the king's sister, Margaret, whom he escorted as chamberlain upon her journey into Flanders, on the occasion of her marriage with Charles, Duke of Burgundy, he was constituted master forester of Inglewood Forest for life, and continuing to enjoy the confidence of the king, he was summoned to parliament as a Baron on the 15 November, 1482, under the designation of "HUMFRIDO DACRES OF GILLESLAND, Chevalier." Sir Humphrey Dacre, who enjoyed Gillesland and other capital manors, by virtue of a fine levied by his father, had previously disputed the original BARONY OF DACRE, with his niece Joane, Lady Fienes, when the affair was referred to the arbitration of King EDWARD IV., who confirmed Sir Richard Fienes and his lady in the barony, with the precedence enjoyed by Lady Fienes's grandfather, and decreed to them divers castles and manors, but GILLESLAND, the ancient seat of the Vaux's, with several considerable estates, was adjudged to Sir Humphrey, who, at the same time, was created a Baron, with place next below Sir Richard Fienes, and for distinction was styled Lord Dacre, of Gillesland, or of the North; Sir Richard being entitled Lord Dacre, of the South. His lordship m. Maud, dau. of Sir Thomas Parr, Knt., of Kendal, and dying in 1509, was s. by his son,

SIR THOMAS DACRE, 2nd Lord Dacre, of Gillesland, summoned to parliament from 17 October, 1509, to 12 November, 1515. This nobleman, in the 9th HENRY VII., served under Thomas, Earl of Surrey, at the siege of Norham Castle, and his lordship obtained great celebrity in the command of a body of horse reserve, at the famous fight of Flodden, in the 4th HENRY VIII., under the same gallant leader. He was, subsequently, at different times, engaged in Scotland, and he filled the important office of warden of the West Marches from the 1st year of King HENRY VIII. He m. Elizabeth, grand-dau. and sole heiress of Ralph de Greystock, Baron Greystock, K.G., and had issue,

WILLIAM, his successor.

Humphrey.

Mary, m. to Francis, Earl of Shrewsbury.

Margaret, m. to Henry, Lord Scrope, of Bolton.

Jane.

His lordship d. in 1525, and was s. by his elder son,

SIR WILLIAM DACRE, as 3rd Lord Dacre, of Gillesland, summoned to parliament from 3 November, 1529, to 21 October,

1555, in the 1st writ as "Willielmo Dacre de Dacre and Greystok, Chl'r," afterwards as "de Gillesland," or of Greystok, or "de North." In the 26th HENRY VIII., this nobleman being accused of high treason by Sir Ralph Fenwyke, was brought to trial before his peers at Westminster in the July of that year, and acquitted, owing to the description of evidence by which the charge was sustained, namely, persons of mean degree from the Scottish border, who were either suborned, or brought forward by a vindictive feeling towards Lord Dacre, arising from the severity with which he had executed the duty of warden of the marches. In the reigns of EDWARD VI., MARY and ELIZABETH, his lordship was captain of the castle, and governor of Carlisle, and in the 2nd year of the last queen, he was joined in commission with the Earl of Northumberland to negotiate a peace with Scotland. His lordship m. Elizabeth, 8th dau. of George, 4th Earl of Shrewsbury, and had issue,

THOMAS, his successor.

Leonard, who being dissatisfied with the distribution of the family estates amongst his nieces, at the decease of his nephew, George, Lord Dacre, joined in the conspiracy of the Earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland, temp. ELIZABETH, for the rescue of MARY, Queen of Scots, and took possession of the Dacre castles of GREYSTOCK and NAWORTH, in the north, but was eventually obliged to fly into Scotland, when he was attainted with the lords above-mentioned; he d. abroad in great poverty, at Louvaine, in 1581. s. p.

Edward, attainted with his brother Leonard for the same treason, d. s. p. in 1579.

Francis, attainted with his brothers, and for the same treason. He lived, however, several years after, dying about the 8th CHARLES I. He m. Dorothy, dau. of John, Earl of Derwentwater, and left a son and dau.,

Randal (the last male heir of Humphrey, Lord Dacre, of Gillesland), who d. two years after his father, without issue. The parish register of Greystock for 1634, contains the following entry (Buried), "Randal Dacre, Esq., sonne and hyre to Francis Dacre, Esquire, deceased, being the youngest son of the last Lord William Dacre, deceased, being the last hyre male of that lyne; which said Randal dyed at London, and was brought downe at the charges of the Right Hon. Thomas, Earle of Arundell and Surreye, and earle marshall of England."

Mary, who lived to a very great age, and d. s. p.

Margaret, m. to Anthony Browne, Viscount Montacute.

Anne, m. to Henry Clifford, Earl of Cumberland.

Eleanor, m. to Henry Jerningham, Esq., of Costessy Hall, Norfolk, by whom she had, with other issue.

HENRY JERNINGHAM, who was created a Baronet, 16 October, 1621.

Mary, m. to Alexander Culpepper, Esq.

Dorothy, m. to Sir Thomas Windsor, Knt., son and heir of William, Lord Windsor.

Lord Dacre d. in 1563, and was s. by his eldest son,

THOMAS DACRE, 4th Baron Dacre, of Gillesland, but never summoned to parliament. This nobleman m. Elizabeth, dau. of Sir James Leburne, Knt. of Cunswick, in Westmoreland, and by her (who m. 2ndly, Thomas Howard, Duke of Norfolk), had issue,

GEORGE, his successor.

ANNE, m. Philip Howard, Earl of Arundel, and had issue: the heir male of this marriage is the DUKE of NORFOLK; and the heirs-general the LORDS PETER and STOURTON.

MARY, m. to Thomas, Lord Howard, of Walden, and d. s. p.

ELIZABETH, m. to Lord William Howard, and her great-grandson, Charles Howard, Esq., was elevated to the peerage, 20 April, 1661, by the titles of Baron Dacre, of Gillesland, Viscount Howard, of Morpeth, and EARL OF CARLISLE. (See BURKE's Extant Peerage).

His lordship d. in 1566, and was s. by his only son,

GEORGE DACRE, 5th Lord Dacre, of Gillesland, who d. in minority, anno 1569, of a fall from a wooden horse, upon which he practised to leap. At the decease of his lordship the "BARONY OF DACRE, OF GILLESLAND," fell into ABERANCE between his sisters as co-heirs, and it so continues with their descendants. Of his estates, Greystock fell to the Earl of Arundel, and is now in the possession of the Duke of Norfolk; while Naworth Castle devolved upon Lord William Howard, where he settled, and it now belongs to the Earl of Carlisle.

DAGWORTH—BARONS DAGWORTH.

By Writ of Summons, dated 13 November, 1347.

Lineage.

In the 10th of King EDWARD II., upon the death of Lora, widow of William Peyforer, which Lora died, seized of the third part of the office of Huisher (Usher), in the Exchequer Court, and crier in the King's Bench, her grandson,

JOHN DAGWORTH, being found her next heir, upon doing his homage, had livery of the lands of his inheritance. To this John, succeeded his son,

THOMAS DE DAGWORTH, a very eminent soldier in the reigns of EDWARD II., and EDWARD III. In the 20th of the latter, being then a knight and commander of the king's forces in Brittany, he is recorded as having defeated twice in one day Charles de Blois, who had usurped in right of his wife, the title of Duke of Brittany, notwithstanding the great inequality of forces, the duke having 1,500 horse, 8,000 balistars, and 30,000 foot, being treble the army of the English commander. In the next year following up his fortune, he marched to the relief of Rochedirian, invested by the same foe, and giving battle to the duke, obtained a decisive victory, making prisoners of 36 knights, slaying more than 500 men-at-arms, and conveying CHARLES himself a captive to the Tower of London; for which good services he was appointed lieutenant and captain-general to the king, in the dukedom of Brittany; and the next year reaping fresh laurels on the French soil, he was summoned to parliament, as BARON DAGWORTH, on the 13 November, 1347, as an additional reward for his gallantry. His lordship resided from that period in Brittany until 1359, when he is said to have been slain by the treachery of the French. He m. Lady Eleanor Bohun, widow of James, Earl of Ormonde, and was s. by his son.

SIR NICHOLAS DAGWORTH, 2nd Baron Dagworth, who does not appear from the existing enrolments to have been summoned to parliament. Like his father, this gallant person acquired the highest military renown. In the year 1366, Sir Nicholas obtained a great victory over the French in Anjou, when amongst his prisoners, were the Dukes of Orleans and Anjou. It is further reported of him, that with thirteen English horse, he encountered sixty French near Flaveny, and by the means of chariots, which he employed for his defence, utterly vanquished them. In the reign of RICHARD II., he was imprisoned by the great lords then opposed to the court, but having obtained his freedom, he was employed with Walter Skirlaw, bishop of Durham, to negotiate a peace with France—"from which period," says Dugdale, "I have not seen any more of him." Thomasine, dau. of this 2nd Lord Dagworth, m. William, 4th Lord Furnival.

1 SIR THOMAS WALMESLEY, of Dunkenhall, ancestor of the WALMESLEYS of Dunkenhall, represented by LORD PETRE, as heir-general.

1 Elizabeth, wife of Richard Sherborne, Esq., d. s. p.

2 Anne Walmesley, who m. 1st, William Middleton, Esq., of Stockeld, in the county of York; and 2ndly, Sir Edward Osborne, Bart.; by the latter she had issue,

Sir Thomas Osborne, Bart., who was created Viscount Latimer, Earl of Danby, Marquess of Carmarthen, and Duke of Leeds.

II. Dorothy, m. to Sir Peter Osborne, Knt., from which union the Baronets OSBORNE, of Chicksand Priory, Beds., derive.

The 2nd son,

SIR HENRY DANVERS, Knt., was elevated to the peerage, by letters patent, 27 July, 1603, as Baron Danvers, of Dantsey, co. Wilts, and in two years afterwards his lordship was restored in blood, by special act of parliament, as heir to his father, notwithstanding the attainder of Sir Charles Danvers, his elder brother. Upon the accession of King CHARLES I., Lord Danvers was created by letters patent, dated 5 February, 1628, EARL OF DANBY, and his lordship was soon afterwards chosen a knight of the Garter. This nobleman, who had adopted from his youth the profession of arms, distinguished himself both by sea and land, and was esteemed an able and gallant soldier.

His lordship was the founder of the famous Physic Garden at Oxford, which cost him little short of £5,000. He d. 20 January, 1643, when as he never married, the Barony of Danvers and EARLDOM OF DANBY, became EXTINCT. His remains were interred in the chancel of the parish church at Dantsey, under a noble monument of white marble, with the following inscription:—

"HENRY, EARL OF DANBY, second son to Sir John Danvers, Knt., and Dame ELIZABETH, dau. and co-heir of John Nevil, Lord Latimer; born at Dauntsey, co. Wilts, 28 June, ann. Dom. 1573, and baptised in this church, the 1st of July following, being Sunday. He departed this life on the 20th of January, ann. Dom. 1643, and lyeth here interred.

"He was partly bred up in the low country wars, under MAURICE, Earl of Nassau (afterwards Prince of Orange), and in many other military actions of those times, both by sea and land. He was made a CAPTAIN in the wars of France, and there knighted for his good service, under HENRY IV., then French King. He was employed as lieutenant-general of the horse, and serjeant-major of the whole army, in Ireland, under ROBERT, Earl of Essex, and Charles, Baron of Mountjoy, in the reign of Queen ELIZABETH.

"He was made Baron of DAUNTSEY, and peer of the realm, by King JAMES I.; and by him made Lord President of MUNSTER, and Governor of GARNEY.

"By King CHARLES I., he was created Earl of Danby; made of his privy council, and knight of the most noble order of the Garter; but declining more active employments in his later time (by reason of his imperfect health), full of honour, wounds and days, he died at his house at CORNBURY PARK, in the county of Oxford, in the 71st year of his age."

D'ARCY—BARONS D'ARCY.

By Writ of Summons, dated 29 December, 1299.

Lineage.

At the time of the General Survey,

NORMAN DE ARECI enjoyed no less than thirty-three lordships in the county of Lincoln, by the immediate gift of the CONQUEROR, of which Nocton was one, where he and his posterity had their chief seat for divers after ages. This Norman, in the 6th year of WILLIAM RUFUS, being with the king in his great council held at Gloucester (together with several bishops, abbots and others), was a witness to that confirmation there made to the monks of St. Mary's Abbey, in York, of numerous possessions which had formerly been bestowed upon them. To Norman de Areci s. his son and heir.

ROBERT D'ARCY, who founded a priory of Augustines at his lordship at Nocton, and otherwise contributed liberally to the church. This Robert was s. by his son and heir,

THOMAS D'ARCY, who, upon the assessment of the aid for marrying the king's daughter in the 12th HENRY II., certified that he then held twenty knights' fees de veteri feoffamento, with half a knight's fee, and a fourth part de novo, for which he paid £13 6s. 8d. This feudal lord m. Alice, dau. of Ralph D'Eincurt, by whom he had three sons and four daus. He d. on St. Swithin's Day, anno 1180, leaving Thomas his son and heir, then eighteen years of age. Upon the decease of his lordship, William Bassett, sheriff of Lincolnshire seized on his whole barony for the king, and committed it to the custody of Michael D'Arcy, but the baron's widow subsequently obtained the possession with the guardianship of her children, for which she paid £200. To Thomas D'Arcy s. his aforesaid son and heir,

THOMAS D'ARCY, who was with King RICHARD I. in the expedition which that monarch made into Normandy in the 6th year of his reign, and in the 5th JOHN was retained to serve that king with three knights for one whole year, in consideration of which King JOHN remitted to him a debt of 225 marks, which he then owed the Jews; but besides this retainer he was to perform the like service for his barony that other barons did. His lordship was s. at his decease by his son,

NORMAN D'ARCY, who in the 7th of King JOHN giving 500 marks, six palfreys, with one horse for the great saddle, and doing his homage, had livery of all the lands of his inheritance; but taking part with the barons, those lands were seized upon by the crown a few years afterwards, and held until the pacification in the beginning of HENRY III's reign, when they were restored. The baron d. soon after, and was s. by his son,

PHILIP D'ARCY, who had previously, for his adhesion to the king, in the turbulent times of JOHN, a grant of all the lands of Robert de Camberling. In the 34th HENRY III., this feudal lord is said to have been the accuser of Sir Henry de Bathe, an eminent judge of the period, for corruption in his judicial capacity. His lordship was afterwards engaged in the French wars, and involved himself so deeply in debt in the king's service, that he was obliged to obtain in the 39th HENRY III., certain letters hortatory, to all his tenants by military service, and other, earnestly moving them to yield unto him such reasonable aid as might extricate him from his pecuniary difficulties, and for which they should receive the especial thanks of the crown. He m. Isabel, sister and co-heir of Roger Bertram, of Mitford, and dying in 1263, was s. by his son,

NORMAN D'ARCY, then twenty-eight years of age, who doing his homage, and giving security for the payment of his relief as a baron, had livery of his lands, but the very next year, being one of the barons defeated at Evesham, those lands were all seized by the crown. His brother Roger, and his uncle Thomas, were likewise involved in the defeat, but all made their peace, under the memorable decree, denominated "Dictum de Kenilworth," John de Burgh, of Kent, Adam de Newmarch, of York, and Robert de Ufford, all barons, undertaking for their future loyalty and quiet demeanour. He was subsequently engaged in the Welsh wars, and in the 22nd EDWARD I. had summons to attend the king forthwith, and to give him his advice in those great and difficult affairs which then concerned his crown and kingdom. This feudal lord had issue,

PHILIP, his successor.

John, summoned to parliament as a baron 28th EDWARD I. (see another Lord D'Arcy).

Robert, of Staillinburgh, co. Lincoln, who left by Joan his wife, an only dau. and heiress.

Margaret, who m. John Argentine.

Norman D'Arcy d. 1296, and was s. by his eldest son,

PHILIP D'ARCY, who was summoned to parliament as BARON D'ARCY from 29 December, 1299, to 20 October, 1332. This nobleman was involved in the insurrection of Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, in the 15th EDWARD II., but made his peace, and had restitution of his lands. His lordship had issue,

NORMAN, his successor.

Robert, } d. s. p.

John, }

Julian, m. to Sir Peter de Limberry.

Agnes, m. to Sir Roger de Pedwardine.

Lord D'Arcy was s. at his decease by his only surviving son,

NORMAN D'ARCY, 2nd Baron D'Arcy, who was likewise implicated in Lancaster's rebellion, but had pardon for his treason and restitution of his lands. He d. in 1340, and was s. by his only child,

PHILIP D'ARCY, 3rd Baron D'Arcy, at whose decease without issue,

SIR PHILIP DE LIMBURY, KNT., son of Julian, the elder sister of Philip, 1st Lord D'Arcy; and

AGNES, wife of SIR ROGER DE PEDWARDINE, younger sister of Philip, 1st Lord D'Arcy, were found to be his next heirs, and between those the BARONY OF D'ARCY fell into ABEYANCE, as it is still supposed to continue amongst their representatives.

D'ARCY—BARONS D'ARCY.

By Writ of Summons, dated 27 January, 1332.

Lineage.

JOHN D'ARCY (next brother of Philip D'Arcy, who was summoned to parliament, as Baron D'Arcy, 29 December, 1299), being an active and distinguished person in the reigns of the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd EDWARDS, obtained some of the highest offices in the state, and attained eventually the peerage. In the latter years of EDWARD I., and the beginning of EDWARD II.'s reign, he was engaged in the wars in Scotland; and during the time of the last-mentioned monarch, he was governor of Norham Castle, sheriff of the counties of Nottingham, Derby, and Lancaster, and JUSTICE OF IRELAND. Upon the accession of EDWARD III., he was appointed sheriff of Yorkshire, and governor of the castle at York, and re-constituted JUSTICE OF IRELAND; to which latter post, with the government of the country, he was re-appointed the next year; and in the following year he had a grant from the king, for his good services, of the manor of Werk, in Tindale. In the 6th of EDWARD III., he was summoned to parliament, as BARON D'ARCY; and the next year, being then in his government of Ireland, his lordship marched with a great army into the province of Ulster, to avenge the death of William de Burgh, EARL OF ULSTER; but before he got thither, the people of the country having vindicated the murder, he transported himself and his army into Scotland, leaving Thomas Burke, his lieutenant, in Ireland, and joined the king, who was then pursuing the victorious course which placed EDWARD BALIOL upon the Scottish throne. In two years afterwards, Lord D'Arcy, at the head of the Irish nobles, made a second inroad upon Scotland with fifty-six ships, and wasted the Isles of Arran and Bute, for which good service the king granted to him and his heirs the manors of Rathwere and Kildalk, in Ireland. His lordship was subsequently constable of the Tower of London, and steward of the king's household; and he was accredited ambassador to the courts of France and Scotland in the 11th EDWARD III.; after which we find him acquiring fresh laurels on the French soil, until he finally shared in the glory of Cressy. His lordship obtained further great immunities from EDWARD III., and was appointed JUSTICE OF IRELAND and CONSTABLE OF THE TOWER for life. This eminent nobleman m. 1st, Emeline, dau. and co-heir of Walter Heron, of Hedleston, co. Northumberland, by whom he had issue,

JOHN, his successor.

Roger, from whom the D'Arcys of Essex derive.

Adomar.

His lordship m. 2ndly, 3 July, 1329, Joane, dau. of Richard de Burgh, Earl of Ulster, and widow of Thomas, Earl of Kildare, and had issue of this marriage,

William, of Plattyn, co. Meath, from whom the Darcys of Ireland derive; viz., the D'ARCYs of KILTULLAGH, and NEW FORREST, co. GALWAY, of Gorteen, co. Mayo, the D'ARCYs of PLATTEN and DUNMOW, co. MEATH, the D'ARCYs of HYDE PARK, co. WESTMEATH, &c., &c.

Elizabeth, m. to James, Earl of Ormonde.

Lord D'Arcy, who had summons to parliament from 1332 to 1342, d. 30 May, 1347, and was s. by his eldest son,

SIR JOHN D'ARCY, 2nd Baron D'Arcy, b. in 1317, summoned to parliament from 20 November, 1348, to 15 March, 1354. This nobleman had acquired high military fame in the life-time of his father, and was also amongst the heroes of Cressy. His lordship had custody of the king's liberty of HOLDERNESS, co. York, and was constable of the Tower of London. He m. Elizabeth, dau. and heiress of Nicholas Meinell, Lord Meinell, of Wherlton, and had issue,

JOHN, his successor.

PHILIP, successor to his brother.

Isabel.

His lordship d. in 1356, and was s. by his eldest son,

JOHN D'ARCY, 3rd Baron D'Arcy, at whose decease in minority (s. p.), 26 August, 1362, the barony devolved upon his brother,

PHILIP D'ARCY, 4th Baron D'Arcy, summoned to parliament from 4 August, 1377, to 5 November, 1397. This nobleman, in the 4th RICHARD II., was in the expedition made into France with Thomas of Woodstock, Earl of Buckingham; and arriving at Calais three days before Maudlin-tide, in July, rode with his banner displayed. He became subsequently so eminent in the French wars, that, in the 6th of RICHARD II., he was especially excused, in consequence, from repairing into Ireland, as all persons having lands there were compelled to by Act of Parliament passed three years before, for the defence of the realm against the insurgents then in arms; and in the next year he was again excused, by reason of the great charge he was at in supporting himself in those wars, and likewise "that he was then marching towards Scotland against the king's enemies there." In the 9th of RICHARD II., his lordship was constituted ADMIRAL of the king's fleet from the River Thames northward. Lord Darcy m. Elizabeth, dau. of Sir Thomas Grey, of Heton, and had issue,

JOHN, his successor.

Thomas, of Seamer.

Elizabeth.

Philip.

His lordship d. 25 April, 1398, and was s. by his eldest son,

JOHN D'ARCY, 5th Baron D'Arcy, b. in 1377, summoned to parliament from 19 August, 1399, to 21 September, 1411. This nobleman m. Margaret, dau. of Henry, Lord Grey de Wilton, and had issue,

PHILIP, his successor.

John, m. Joan, dau. of John, Lord Greystock; and his great-grandson, Thomas D'Arcy, was summoned to parliament as Lord D'Arcy of D'Arcy. (See that dignity.)

Elizabeth.

Maud.

His lordship d. in 1399 (leaving his widow, who m. 2ndly, Sir Thomas Swinford), and was s. by his elder son,

PHILIP D'ARCY, 6th Baron D'Arcy. This nobleman m. Eleanor, dau. of Henry, 3rd Lord Fitz-Hugh, and d. in 1418, before he had attained majority, leaving two daus., viz.,

I. ELIZABETH, m. to Sir James Strangeways, and had issue,

1 Richard Strangeways, who m. Lady Elizabeth Nevil, one of the daus. and co-heirs of William Nevil, Lord Fauconberg, and Earl of Kent, and had issue.

2 James, ancestor of the STRANGWAYS of Ormsby, Little Holtby, Weir and Aine, co. York.

3 Henry.

4 John.

5 Robert.

1 Eleanor, m. to Edmund Mauleverer, Esq.

II. MARGERY, m. to SIR JOHN CONYERS, Knt., and the heiress-general of this marriage, Francis-Godolphin-D'Arcy, 7th DUKE of LEDES, assumed the additional surname of D'Arcy. His grace d. s. p. 4 May, 1859, leaving his nephew, SACKVILLE-GEORGE LANE-FOX, now LORD CONYERS, his heir-general.

Upon the decease of his lordship, the BARONY OF D'ARCY fell into ABERYANCE between those ladies, and it so continues with their representatives.

DARCY—BARONS DARCY, OF CHICHE, ESSEX.

By Letters Patent, dated 5 April, 1551.

Lineage.

This is presumed to have been a branch of the great baronial house of D'Arcy, which flourished in the counties of Lincoln and York, but the exact line could never be traced. The first of the family of note,

ROBERT DARCI, was originally a lawyer's clerk, who laid the foundation of his fortune, by marrying Alice, the widow of John Ingoe, a rich merchant of Malden, in Essex, and dau. and co-heiress of Henry Fitz-Langley. She d. in the 26th HENRY VI., and was buried in the chapel of the Holy Trinity, within the church of All Hallows, in Malden, with this Robert Darcie, her husband, leaving issue by him,

I. SIR ROBERT DARCY, of Danbury.

II. John Darcy, of Tolleshunt, co. Essex.*

* D'ARCY OF TOLLESHUNT AND TIPTREE, ESSEX.

JOHN DARCY (by some called Thomas), brother of Sir Robert, of Danbury, was seated at Tolleshunt, which he acquired by his 2nd marriage with a dau. and co-heir of Bois, or Boys, of that place. His 1st wife was Anne, dau. of Sir Thomas Tyrell, of Heron, and by her, was father of

ANTHONY DARCY, who was sheriff of Essex in 1512. He m. Elizabeth, dau. of Christopher Wilson, Esq., and d. 18 October, 1540, having had issue,

Robert, who m. Joanes, dau. of John Bassel, Esq., and d. s. p. before his father, in 1535.

THOMAS, of whom presently.

D'ARCY — BARONS D'ARCY, OF D'ARCY, BARONS D'ARCY, OF ASTON.

By Writ of Summons, dated 17 October, 1609.

Restored as Baron D'Arcy, of Aston, to heirs male only, by Act of Parliament, 1548.

Lineage.

The Honourable

JOHN D'ARCY, 2nd son of John, Lord D'Arcy, and Margery, dau. of Henry, Lord Grey de Wilton, became male representative of the family upon the decease of his brother Philip, Lord D'Arcy, 1418 (the barony fell, however, into ABERNACE between the said Philip's two daus. as co-heirs, as it still continues with their descendants). Mr. D'Arcy, while a minor, living in ward to the king, m. without license, Joane, dau. of John, Lord Greystock, for which offence he paid a fine of 200 marks. Of this marriage were issue,

Richard, who d. v. p., leaving by his wife Eleanor, dau. of John, Lord Scrope, of Upsal, an only son,

WILLIAM, who s. his grandfather.

John. George. Thomas. Philip.

Jane, m. 1st, to John Beaumont, and 2ndly, to Giles Daubeney.

John D'Arcy d. in the 32nd HENRY VI., and was s. by his grandson,

SIR WILLIAM D'ARCY, then but four years of age. This gentleman m. Euphemia, dau. of Sir Thomas Langton, of Farnly, co. York, and dying in the 3rd HENRY VII., was s. by his son,

SIR THOMAS D'ARCY, a person who obtained high honours and distinction in the reign of HENRY VII., and was called to the peerage by the succeeding monarch. In the 12th HENRY VII., Thomas D'Arcy was one of the northern lords that marched with Thomas, Earl of Surrey, to the relief of Norham Castle, then besieged by the King of Scotland, and the next year being a knight of the king's body, he was made constable of Bamburgh Castle, in Northumberland; in two years, subsequently, he was constituted captain of the town and castle of Berwick, as also warden of the east and middle marches towards Scotland, and he had a special commission soon afterwards to exercise the office of constable and marshal of England against certain rebels, being appointed about the same time constable of Sheriff Hutton, co. York, and steward of that lordship. In the 17th of the same reign he was one of the commissioners appointed to receive the oath of JAMES, the 4th King of Scotland, upon a treaty of peace, and in four years afterwards being then of the privy council, he was made general warden of the marches towards Scotland. An office confirmed to him jointly with Sir Thomas D'Arcy, Knt., upon the accession of King HENRY VIII., when he was summoned to parliament, from 17 October, 1509, to 3 November, 1529, as BARON D'ARCY, OF D'ARCY, installed a knight of the Garter, and sworn of the privy council. From this period he enjoyed the confidence for several years of his sovereign, being amongst those who exhibited articles against Wolsey, and subscribed the celebrated letter to CLEMENT VII., until, at length, absentsing himself from parliament sooner than sanction the dissolution of the religious houses, and finally joining in Ask's rebellion, called "The Pilgrimage of Grace," he was convicted of high treason, on the charge of delivering up Pontefract Castle to the rebels, and beheaded on Tower Hill, 20 June, 1538, when the BARONY OF D'ARCY fell under the attainder. His lordship had m. 1st, Dowzabel, dau. and heiress of Sir Richard Tempest, Knt., of Riddlesdale, co. Northumberland, by whom he had issue,

- i. GEORGE, of whom presently, as the restored Lord D'Arcy.
- ii. Arthur, who m. Mary, dau. and co-heir of Sir Nicholas Carew, of Beddington, Surrey, K.G., and dying in 1561, left issue,

- 1 Henry, m. Catherine, dau. of Sir John Fermor, and widow of M. Pulteney, Esq., and left an only dau. and heiress, Catherine, who m. Gervase, Lord Clifton, and had a dau.,

Catherine, who laid claim to the Barony of Clifton in 1674, and had the same allowed in parliament.

- 2 Thomas, m. Elizabeth, co-heir of John, Lord Coniers, and had issue,

Sir Coniers D'Arcy (see D'ARCY, LORDS HOLDERNESS).

- 3 Edward, from whom the D'Arcys of Kent derive.

- 4 Arthur, ancestor of the D'Arcys of Aldington, co. Northampton.

- 5 Francis, m. to Catherine, dau. of Ed. Leigh, Esq., of Rushall, co. Stafford.

- 1 Elizabeth, m. to Lewis, Lord Mordaunt.

Lord D'Arcy m. 2ndly, Elizabeth, sister of William Sandys, 1st Lord Sandys, by whom he had an only dau.,

Elizabeth, m. to Sir Marmaduke Constable, of Spaldingmoor, co. York.

GEORGE D'ARCY, the eldest son, received the honour of knighthood from King HENRY VIII., at the siege of Tournay, and was restored in blood, with the dignity of BARON D'ARCY to himself, and his heirs male, by an act of parliament passed in the 2nd EDWARD VI., anno 1548. This nobleman m. Dorothy, dau. and heiress of Sir John Melton, of Aston, co. York, by whom he had issue,

The Honourable

SIR ARTHUR D'ARCY, 3rd son of the beheaded and attainted Lord D'Arcy, temp. HENRY VIII. m. Mary, dau., and co-heir of Sir Nicholas Carew, of Beddington, Surrey, and dying 1561, left, with several other children,

THOMAS D'ARCY, who, upon the decease of his elder brother Sir Henry D'Arcy, without male issue, became chief of the family. This gentleman m. Elizabeth, dau. and co-heir of John, Baron Conyers, and dying in 1605, was s. by his only child,

SIR CONYERS D'ARCY, who being the principal male branch then remaining of this ancient and noble family, set forth in a petition to King CHARLES I., in that parliament, begun at Westminster 3 November, 1640, that after the attainder of Thomas, Lord D'Arcy, his great-grandfather, in the 29th HENRY VIII., Sir George D'Arcy, Knt., eldest son of the said Thomas, being restored in blood by King EDWARD VI., obtained a grant of the title and dignity of LORD D'ARCY to himself and the heirs male of his body; and that by the death of John, Lord D'Arcy, lord of Aston, in Yorkshire, without issue male, in the 11th of his majesty's reign, the title and dignity of Lord D'Arcy was utterly extinct, did humbly desire, that being grandchild and heir male of Sir Arthur D'Arcy, Knt., and likewise son and heir of Elizabeth, dau. and co-heir of John, Lord Conyers, lineal heir to Margery, dau. and co-heir to Philip, Lord D'Arcy, son of John, Lord D'Arcy, one of the barons of this realm in the time of King HENRY IV., his majesty would be pleased to declare, restore and confirm to him, the said Sir Conyers D'Arcy, and to the heirs male of his body, the dignity of LORD D'ARCY with such precedence as the said John, Lord D'Arcy had, and by right from his ancestors then enjoyed. Whereupon his majesty graciously condescending, he did by letters patent, dated at Westminster, 10 August, 1641, restore and confirm to the said Sir Conyers D'Arcy, and the heirs male of his body, the dignity of BARON D'ARCY, as enjoyed by his aforesaid ancestor John, Lord D'Arcy, and he had summons to parliament accordingly.

His lordship was seated at Hornby Castle, and having m. Dorothy, dau. of Sir Henry Bellasay, Bart., had issue,

CONYERS, his successor.

William (Sir) m. Dorothy, dau. of Sir George Selby, Knt.

His lordship m. 4thly, Elizabeth, dau. and co-heir of John, Lord Frescheville, and widow of Philip Warwick, Esq., but had no issue by those ladies. He d. in 1692, and was s. by his grandson,

ROBERT D'ARCY, 3rd Earl of Holderness, first commissioner of trade, in 1718, and sworn of the privy council. His lordship m. Frederica, eldest surviving dau. and co-heir of Meinhardt Schomberg, Duke of Schomberg, and had issue, Meinhardt-Frederic, who d. young.

ROBERT, successor to the honours.

Louisa-Carolina, m. to William-Henry, Earl of Ancrum, afterwards (4th) Marquess of Lothian.

The earl d. 20 January, 1721-2, and was s. by his only surviving son,

ROBERT D'ARCY, 4th Earl of Holderness. His lordship was appointed, in 1740, lord-lieutenant of the North Riding of Yorkshire, and in the following year was admitted gentleman of his majesty's bed-chamber. In June, 1744, he was accredited ambassador to the republic of Venice; in 1749, minister-plenipotentiary to the States-General of the United Provinces—and in 1751, his lordship was constituted one of the principal secretaries of state, and sworn of the privy council. In 1762, he was appointed one of the lords justices during the king's absence at Hanover. He resigned the secretaryship of state, but was reappointed in 1754. He was subsequently admiral and warden of the Cinque Ports. In 1771 he sold the estate of Aston to Mr. Verelst, governor of Bengal. His lordship m. at the Hague, in November, 1742, Mary, dau. of Francis Doublet, member of the States of Holland, by whom he had issue,

Amongst the most distinguished companions in arms of the CONQUEROR, was

* This Henry D'Arcy left an only dau., Maria-Catharine, who m. in 1738, Sir Robert Hildyard, Bart., of Winestead, and was mother of SIR ROBERT D'ARCY HILDYARD, Bart., who d. s. p. 1814. Henry D'Arcy by his will, 18 December, 1750, devised Sedbury to Sir Conyers D'Arcy, Sir Robert Hildyard, and John Hutton, Esq., of Marske (which last had married Elizabeth, dau. of James Lord D'Arcy), and two others in trust, for her grandson, Sir Robert D'Arcy Hildyard, Bart., who d. 6 November, 1814, and his male heirs; failing which, to Matthew, 2nd son of John and Elizabeth Hutton, and his male heirs; failing which to James, 3rd son of John and Elizabeth Hutton. Matthew d. unm. 1782, and James D'Arcy Hutton s. to Sedbury at the decease of his father.

ROBERT DE TODENI, a nobleman of Normandy, upon whom the victorious monarch conferred, with numerous other grants, an estate in the county of Lincoln, upon the borders of Leicestershire. Here De Toden erected a stately castle, and from the fair view it commanded, gave it the designation of Belvoir Castle, and here he established his chief abode. At the time of the General Survey, this powerful personage possessed no less than eighty extensive lordships, viz., two in Yorkshire, one in Essex, four in Suffolk, one in Cambridge, two in Hertfordshire, three in Bucks, four in Gloucestershire, three in Bedfordshire, nine in Northamptonshire, two in Rutland, thirty-two in Lincolnshire, and seventeen in Leicestershire. "Of this Robert," saith Dugdale, "I have not seen any other memorial, than that the Coucher-Book of Belvoir recordeth: which is, that bearing a venerable esteem to our sometime much celebrated protomartyr, St. Alban, he founded, near to his castle, a priory for monks, and annexed it as a cell to that great abbey in Hertfordshire, formerly erected by the devout King Offa, in honour of that most holy man." Robert de Toden, Lord of Belvoir, d. in 1088, leaving issue by his wife Adela, viz.,

WILLIAM, who assumed, from what reason is unascertained, the surname of ALBINI, and was known as "William de Albin, Brito," in contradistinction to another great baron, "William de Albin, Pincerna," from whom the Earls of Arundel descended.

Beringer, who had divers lordships in the co. of York, as well as others in Lincoln, Oxford, and Nottinghamshires.

Geoffrey, who had three sons, Oliver, Iwan, and Geoffrey de Chauvent.

Robert.

Agnes, m. to Hubert de Rye, a person of note in Lincolnshire.

He was s. by his eldest son,

WILLIAM DE ALBINI, Brito, Lord of Belvoir, who, in the Chapter House of St. Albans, confirmed all the grants of his father and mother to the church of our lady at Belvoir, desiring that he might be admitted in the fraternity as those his parents had been. This feudal lord acquired great renown at the celebrated battle of Tenercheby, in Normandy, where, commanding the horse, he charged the enemy with so much spirit, that he determined at once the fate of the day. Of the exploit, Matthew Paris says, "In this encounter chiefly deserveth honour the most heroic William de Albin, the Briton, who, with his sword, broke through the enemy, and terminated the battle." He subsequently adhered to the Empress MAUD, and had his castle of Belvoir, with all his other lands, seized by King STEPHEN, and transferred to Ranulph, Earl of Chester. He m. Maud, dau. of Simon de St. Liz, 1st Earl of Huntingdon, widow of Robert, son of Richard de Tunbridge, and dying about the year 1155, left two sons, viz.,

1. WILLIAM, surnamed MESCHINES, and likewise BRITO, who had Belvoir Castle, and a considerable portion of his lands restored by King HENRY II. In the 14th of which monarch's reign he d. and was s. by his son, by his 1st wife, Adelsa,

WILLIAM DE ALBINI, feudal Lord of Belvoir, who, in the 6th of RICHARD I., was with that monarch in the army in Normandy. And the next year was sheriff of the counties of Warwick and Leicester, as he was subsequently of Rutlandshire. In the 2nd of King JOHN he had special license to make a park at Stoke, in Northampton, and liberty to hunt the fox and hare (it lying within the royal forest of Rockingham). Afterwards, however, he took up arms with the other barons, and leaving Belvoir well fortified, he assumed the governorship of Rochester Castle, which he held out for three months against the Royalists, and ultimately only surrendered when reduced to the last state of famine. Upon the surrender of Rochester William Albin was sent prisoner to Corfe Castle, and there detained until his freedom became one of the conditions upon which Belvoir capitulated, and until he paid a ransom of 6,000 marks. In the reign of HENRY III. we find him upon the other side, and a principal commander at the battle of Lincoln, anno 1217, where his former associates sustained so signal a defeat. This stout baron, who had been one of the celebrated Twenty-five, appointed to enforce the observance of MAGNA CHARTA—m. 1st, Margery, dau. of Odonel de Umframville, by whom he had issue,

WILLIAM.

Odonel (Sir).

Robert.

Nicholas, rector of Bottesford.

He m. 2ndly, Agatha, dau. and co-heir of William Trusbut, and dying in 1236, was s. by his eldest son,

WILLIAM DE ALBINI, feudal Lord of Belvoir, who, like his father, adhered firmly to King HENRY III. He m. 1st, Albreda, dau. of Henry Lord Biseth, and 2ndly, Isabel ———, and left issue by the former, an only dau. and heiress,

ISABEL DE ALBINI, who m. Robert de Ros, Lord Ros of Hamlake (see that dignity), and conveyed to him the feudal barony and castle of Belvoir, which eventually passed from the family of Ros to that of Manners, by which they are now enjoyed in the person of the DUKE OF RUTLAND.

II. Ralph.

The 2nd son of William de Albin, Brito.

RALPH DE ALBINI, obtained fifteen knights' fees from his brother William, in the 12th of HENRY II., and in the 28th of the same reign, he gave 200 marks for license to marry Sibella de Valoines, widow of Robert, Baron Ross, of Hamlake and Werke, and had two sons,

PHILIP, his heir.

Ralph, who, by Isabel his wife, had three sons,

PHILIP s. his uncle.

ELIAS s. his brother.

Owen.

Ralph de Albin, who founded some religious houses, d. at Acre, in the Holy Land, in 1190, and was s. by

PHILIP DE ALBINI, who, in the 8th of King JOHN, was governor of Ludlow Castle, in Shropshire, and in six years afterwards of the Isle of Jersey. He was subsequently governor of the castle of Bridgnorth, and he obtained some territorial grants from the crown; but notwithstanding those favours, he enrolled himself under the baronial banner, and participated in the triumph of Runnimeade. Again, however, he changed his colours, and adhered to King JOHN during the remainder of his reign. Upon the accession of HENRY III. he assisted at that monarch's coronation, and was one of his principal generals at the battle of Lincoln. Independently, however, of his military renown, he appears to have acquired the reputation of a man of learning, and Matthew Paris designates him "a most faithful teacher and instructor of the king." In this reign he was governor of Guernsey and Jersey, and governor of the castle of Devizes. Ultimately being signed with the cross, he repaired to the Holy Land, and dying there in 1235, was s. by his nephew,

PHILIP DE ALBINI, who had acted as lieutenant to his uncle in the government of Guernsey and Jersey, and in the 8th of HENRY III. had the hundred of Wighton granted to him for his better support in the king's service. He was s. at his decease in 1294 s. p., by his brother,

ELIAS DAUBENEY, who was summoned to parliament as a Baron, from 2 November, 1295, to 22 January, 1305. His lordship was s. at his decease, in 1305, by his son (by Hawise, his wife),

SIR RALPH DAUBENEY, 2nd baron, summoned to parliament 25 February, 1342. This nobleman was one of the knights of the Bath, solemnly created in the 20th EDWARD II., and had his robes as a banneret. In the 8th of EDWARD III. he was in the expedition then made into Scotland, and again in a similar expedition made in four years afterwards. His lordship m. 1st, Katherine, dau. of William de Thweng, Lord Thweng, and sister and co-heir of Thomas de Thweng, Lord Thweng, a priest, by whom he had an only dau.,

ELIZABETH, m. to Sir William Botreaux, Knt.

The baron m. 2ndly, Alice Montacute, dau. of Lord Montacute, and had a son,

SIR GILES DAUBENEY, Knt., 3rd baron, but never summoned to parliament. This nobleman m. Alianor, dau. of Henry de Wylington, and dying in 1396, had three sons,

I. GILES, of whom presently.

II. Thomas.

III. William.

The eldest son,

SIR GILES DAUBENEY, then aged fifteen, 4th baron, but never summoned to parliament. This Giles was sheriff of Bedfordshire and Bucks, in the 10th HENRY VI. He d. about the year 1402, leaving a son,

JOHN DAUBENEY, aged nine, who dying in his minority in 1410, was s. by his brother,

GILES DAUBENEY, sheriff of Beds and Bucks, who m. 1st, Joan, dau. of Philip, Lord Darcy, and had a son,

WILLIAM, of whom presently.

He m. 2ndly, Mary, one of the daus. and co-heirs of Simon Leake, of Cotham. The son and heir,

WILLIAM DAUBENEY, 5th baron, but never summoned to parliament, who, doing homage in the 24th HENRY VI., had livery of his lands: and in the following year obtained a royal charter for a fair at his lordship of South Petherton. He m. Alice, dau. and co-heir of John Stornton, of Preston, and was s. by his son,

GILES DAUBENEY, 6th baron, who in the 17th EDWARD IV., being one of the esquires of the body to the king, had, in consideration of his many services, a grant for life of the custody of the king's park at Petherton, near Bridgewater.

Upon the accession of RICHARD III., he appears to have been one of the first consulted by the friends of the Earl of Richmond, and to have cordially joined in the conspiracy to place that nobleman upon the throne. Which, being accomplished by the victory of Bosworth, he was made one of the new monarch, HENRY VII.'s chief counsellors—appointed constable of the castle of Bristol, master of the Mint, and created by letters patent, dated 12 March, 1486, * LORD DAUBENEY. In the 2nd of HENRY VII., his lordship was retained by indenture to serve the king in his fleet at sea; and in the next year he was constituted one of the chamberlains of the exchequer. He was afterwards joined with Richard Fox, bishop of Exeter, in an embassy to France, and subsequently made justice itinerant with Sir Reginald Bray, of all the king's forests on the south of Trent. Upon the fall of Sir William Stanley, in the 10th of HENRY VII., Lord Daubeney succeeded to the lord chamberlainship of the king's household. In the 12th of the same reign his lordship was about to march at the head of a large army into Scotland, but his course was diverted by the insurrection of Lord Audley and the Cornishmen: and he participated in the victory obtained over those rebels at Blackheath—as he did in that of Taunton, the next year, achieved over Perkin Warbeck and his partisans. In the 19th of HENRY VII. he was made constable of the castle Bridgewater, and he had previously been honoured with the Garter. His lordship m. Elizabeth, dau. of Sir John Arundel, of Lanherne, in Cornwall, by whom he had issue,

HENRY, his successor.

Cecily, m. to John Bouchier, Lord Fitz-Warine, afterwards Earl of Bath.

He d. 28 May, 1507, and was s. by his son,

HENRY DAUBENEY, 2nd baron under the new creation, but 7th of the old, who was created EARL OF BRIDGEWATER, 19 July, 1528. His lordship m. Lady Catherine Howard, dau. of Thomas, Duke of Norfolk, but had no issue. He d. in 1548, when the BARONY OF DAUBENEY, created in 1486, and the EARLDOM OF BRIDGEWATER, became EXTINCT—but the Barony created by the writ of EDWARD I., anno 1295, should have passed to his sister Cecily, Countess of Bath, and it is probably now vested in the descendants of that lady, if such exist; if not, it is in the heirs-general of Elina, the 1st BARON DAUBENEY.

DAVYS, VISCOUNT MOUNTCASHEL.

By Letters Patent, dated 21 Jan. 1705-6.

Lineage.

SIR PAUL DAVYS, of St. Catherine's, co. Dublin, and of Kill, co. Kildare (son of JOHN DAVYS, of Kill), general and principal clerk of the council, one of the commissioners appointed 1660, to settle the affairs of Ireland, a privy councillor, prime secretary of state for Ireland 1661, and M.P. for Enniskillen 1634, and for the co. Kildare, 1661. This gentleman, who had large grants of lands in the co. Donegal, m. 1st, Margaret, eldest dau.

* The original barony does not appear to have been assumed from the period of the demise of Sir Ralph Daubeney, who had summons in 1342. This patent was probably but a confirmation of the dignity already in the family.

of Arthur Usher, Esq. (eldest son of Sir William Usher, Knt.), of Donnybrook, co. Dublin, by Judith his wife, dau. of Sir Robert Newcomen, Bart., and by her (who d. 20 July, 1633) had a son, James, who was buried at St. Audeon's, Dublin, 22 July, 1639.

Sir Paul m. 2ndly, Anne, 6th dau. of Sir William Parsons, Bart., of Garradyce, co. Leitrim, surveyor-general of Ireland, M.P., and sister of Catherine, Lady Santry, and of Elizabeth, wife of Sir William Usher. By this lady he had issue, George, buried 11 March, 1660.

William (Sir), knighted 3 August, 1662. He was recorder of Dublin, 1660, attorney-general for Munster, 1660, prime secretary of state and clerk of the council, and lord chief justice of the King's Bench. He m. 1st, 27 July, 1664, Martha, 3rd dau. of Michael Boyle, archbishop of Armagh and lord chancellor of Ireland, and by her (who d. 14 May, 1680) left a dau., Mary, who was buried at St. Audeon's, 20 August, 1683. He m. 2ndly, Lady Elizabeth Fitzgerald, 2nd dau. of George, 16th Earl of Kildare, and widow of Callaghan McCarthy, Earl of Clancarty, but by her had no issue.

John, of whom presently.

Elizabeth, m. 1st, to Sir John Bramhall, Bart., of Rathmullen, M.P., and 2ndly, to Sir John Topham, Knt.

Sir Paul m. 3rdly, Mary, dau. of William Crofton, Esq., of Temple House, co. Sligo, by Mary his wife, eldest dau. of Sir William Usher, Knt., and had a dau., Ursula, who m. Sir Francis Blundel, Bart., M.P. for the King's Co., and was buried at St. Audeon's, 23 May, 1673. Sir Paul d. 7 September, 1672, and was s. by his son,

SIR JOHN DAVYS, of Thomastown, co. Dublin, Knt., b. 1646. This gentleman, was prime secretary of state and clerk of the privy council. Sir John, whose will bears date 1684, left by Anne his wife, two sons and one dau.,

PAUL, of whom presently.

Robert.

Anne.

The elder son,

SIR PAUL DAVYS, Knt., of St. Catherine's, near Dublin, high sheriff in 1700, was raised to the peerage of Ireland, as BARON and VISCOUNT MOUNTCASHEL, in the co. Tipperary, 21 January, 1705-6. His lordship m. Lady Catherine M'Carty, dau. of Callaghan, Earl of Clancarty, and had two sons, JAMES and EDWARD, and two daus., Elizabeth, wife of her 1st cousin, the Hon. Justin M'Carty, 2nd son of Donogh, Earl of Clancarty, and Margaret, m. 8 June, 1738, James Barry, 5th Earl of Barrymore. Lord Mountcashel d. 5 August, 1718, and was s. by his son,

JAMES DAVYS, 2nd Viscount Mountcashel, at whose decease, 10 March, 1718-19, aged nine years, the title devolved on his brother, EDWARD DAVYS, 3rd viscount, who d. unm. 30 July, 1726, whereupon the title became EXTINCT.

DE DREUX—EARLS OF RICHMOND.

Creation of WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR.
By Letters Patent, dated 6 July, 1268.

Lineage.

The 1st Earl of Richmond was

ALAN, surnamed Rufus or Fergant (from his red hair), son of Hoel or Eudo, Earl of Brittany, in France; which Alan coming over into England with the CONQUEROR, commanded the rear of his army in the memorable battle of Hastings, and for his services upon that occasion, and at the siege of York obtained the Earldom of Richmond, with all the northern part of co. York, vulgarly denominated Richmondshire, previously the honour and co. of Edwyne, the Saxon, Earl of Mercia. This nobleman was esteemed a personage of great courage and ability—and his benefactions to the church were munificent. He m. Constance, dau. of King WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, but by her (who d. 13 August, 1090,) had no issue. He m. 2ndly, in 1093, Ermengarde, the divorced wife of WILLIAM IXth, Duke of Aquitaine, and dying in 1119, was s. by his son,

CONAN LE GROS, who m. Matilda, natural dau. of HENRY I. King of England, and d. 17 September, 1148, leaving by her a son Hoel, who d. s. p. 1158, whom he refused to acknowledge, and a dau. and heir,

BERTHA, who m. about 1137, ALAN NIGER, (Earl of Richmond in her right,) son of Stephen, Count of Penthièvre, by an heiress of Guingamp.

ALAN NIGER, was an active partizan of King STEPHEN in his contest with the Empress MAUD. In 1142, he took the castle of Lincoln, with considerable treasure, from Ranulph, Earl of Chester, by scaling the walls at night. He also garrisoned the castle of Hotun, in Yorkshire, then part of the bishop of Durham's possessions, and made great spoil at Ripon, upon the demesnes and tenants of the archbishop of York. This Alan Niger, who is described as a most deceitful, wicked person, wrote himself Earl of Brittany, Cornwall, and Richmond: but notwithstanding that character, he appears, like his progenitors, to have been a munificent benefactor to the church. His lordship m. Bertha, dau. and heir of Conan le Gros, the 3rd Duke of Bretagne (and by this marriage acquired the title of Duke of Brittany) and had issue,

CONAN LE PETIT, his successor.

Brian, father of Alan, Lord of Bedale.

Guy, ancestor of the Barons Strange.

Reginald.

He d. in 1165, and was s. by his eldest son,

CONAN LE PETIT, Earl of Richmond, who bore also the title of Duke of Brittany. Little more is recorded of this nobleman, than his numerous grants to the church. He m. Margaret, dau. of Henry, Earl of Huntingdon, and sister of WILLIAM, King of Scotland, by whom he had an only dau.,

CONSTANCE, who m. 1st, Geoffrey Plantagenet, 4th son of King HENRY II., and had issue,

ARTHUR, said to be put to death by his uncle John, afterwards King JOHN.

Eleanor, d. s. p.

Geoffrey Plantagenet was accidentally slain in a tournament, at Paris, in the twenty-eighth year of his age. His widow, Constance, of Brittany, m. 2ndly, RALPH DE BLONDVILLE, Earl of Chester, but from him she was soon afterwards divorced, and she m. 3rdly, GUY, Viscount of Thouars, by whom she had two daus., viz.,

ALICE, m. in 1212 to PETER DE DREUX, son of Robert, Count of Dreux, of the blood royal of France.

Katherine, m. to Andrew de Vitre, in Brittany.

The three husbands of Constance are said to have been in her right, EARLS OF RICHMOND, but it is very questionable how far they were entitled to the dignity.

Conan, Earl of Richmond, d. 20 February, 1171. The husband of his grand-dau. Alice,

PETER DE DREUX (called Mauclerc), obtained a grant of the dignities of Earl of Richmond and Duke of Brittany, but he does not appear to have enjoyed the whole honour of Richmond, for in 1241, we find a grant from King HENRY III., to Peter de

Savoy,* of divers towns, castles, manors, lands, &c., belonging to the honour of Richmond. This nobleman had issue, by Alice, co-heir of Constance of Brittany,

JOHN, his successor.

Joland, m. to Hugh le Brun, Earl of Picardy.

His lordship d. about the year 1250, but previously his son,

JOHN DE DREUX, became Earl of Richmond and Duke of Brittany on the death of his mother 21 October, 1221, and was acknowledged as duke on attaining his twenty-sixth year in 1237. He had livery in the 50th of HENRY III., of the honour of Richmond, from Guisard de Charrun, a servant to Peter of Savoy, who had authority for granting the same. Having thus acquired Peter de Savoy's title, the king, by letters patent, dated 6 July, 1268, conferred upon him and his heirs, under the designation of JOHN, DUKE OF BRITANNY, the Earldom of Richmond, with the castle and honour of Richmond, &c., in fee. Soon after this, he obtained a grant from the king of the honour and rape of Hastings; and the next year, he attended Prince Edward to the Holy Land. His lordship m. Blanch, dau. of Theobald, King of Navarre, and dying in 1286 was s. by his son,

JOHN DE DREUX, Earl of Richmond, and Duke of Brittany. This nobleman was an eminent military leader in the reigns of EDWARD I. and EDWARD II. In 1293, he had the command of the forces then sent into Gascony, and the ensuing year, being the king's lieutenant in Brittany, he was joined in commission with the seneschal of Aquitaine, and others, to conclude a league of amity with the King of Castile. In 1300, he was with King EDWARD in the wars of Scotland; and in 1305, he was constituted the king's lieutenant in that kingdom, as he was again upon the accession of King EDWARD II. In the 18th of which latter monarch's reign, the Earl of Richmond was one of the ambassadors deputed to the King of France for securing the Duchy of Aquitaine from further spoil from the French. His lordship m. the Lady Beatrix Plantagenet, dau. of King HENRY III., and had surviving issue,

ARTHUR, who inherited the Dukedom of Brittany, who m. 1st, Maria de Limoges, and by her had two sons,

JOHN, s. his uncle in the Earldom of Richmond; and Guido who left a dau., Joan.

He m. 2ndly, Jolanta de Monteforte, and by her had a son, John, Earl of Montfort and Richmond, who d. 1345, leaving a son JOHN, Earl of Richmond, who m. 1st, Mary, dau. of King EDWARD III.; 2ndly, Joan, dau. of Thomas Holland, Earl of Kent; and 3rdly, Joan of Navarre.

JOHN, of whom presently, as inheritor of the Earldom of Richmond.

Blanch, m. to Philip, son of Robert, Earl of Artois.

Mary, m. to Guy de Chastillon, Count of St. Pol.

Alice, abbess of Fontevraud.

He d. in 1306, and was s. by his younger son,

* Peter de Savoy. This distinguished foreigner was uncle of Eleanor, Queen Consort of King HENRY III. Matthew Paris, taking notice of his coming into England, in 1241, saith, "That the king gave him comitatum Richmundie, the earldom of Richmond," which it seems he enjoyed for some time, "though it doth not appear," says Dugdale, "by any record I have seen, that he either used, or had the title attributed to him until 50th HENRY III. Upon his arrival here," continues Dugdale, "certain it is, that the king entertained him with much joy, and made him chief of his council: after which, ere long, he held a tournament at Northampton, against Roger Bigod, Earl of Norfolk, to the end that those aliens who came into England with him and others, might try masteries with the English. And the next ensuing year, fearing that his power and trust here might be displeasing to the English, prudently resigned the custody of those castles which had been committed to his charge, craving leave to return into his own country. But I do not discern that he went out of England accordingly; for before the end of that year, the king's subjects in Poitou being in no little fear of invasion from the French, and earnestly soliciting King HENRY for some aid, he sent over this Peter de Savoy, with Peter de Egueblanch, bishop of Hereford, to let them know that he was preparing to come speedily to them in person, with a very great power. In the 30th HENRY III., the king granted to Peter de Savoy, the inheritance of those houses in the street called the Strand, in the suburbs of London, and adjoining the river of Thames, formerly belonging to Brian de Lisle; paying yearly to the king's exchequer, three barbed arrows for all services; which houses, Queen Eleanor, in her widowhood, having obtained by purchase from the provost and chapter of the House of Mountjoy, granted to Edmund, her son, afterwards Earl of Lancaster." Here was erected the palace, called the Savoy.

Peter de Savoy, uncle of Queen Eleanor, is often included, (says the General Report of the Lords Committee on the dignity of a peer of the realm,) in the lists of Earls of Richmond, but it is evident that he only obtained a grant of the honour of Richmond, and never used the title.

JOHN DE DREUX, as Earl of Richmond, who was summoned to parliament as "Johanni de Britannia Juniori," in the 33rd EDWARD I., and the next year as Earl of Richmond. He d. s. p., however, in 1334, and was s. by his nephew,

JOHN DE DREUX, Duke of Brittany, who did his homage for the EARLDOM OF RICHMOND, and was summoned to parliament as "Johanni Duci Britannia, and Comiti Richmond," on 1 April, 1335, and 22 January, 1336. This nobleman m. 1st, Isabel, dau. of Charles, Earl of Valois; 2ndly, Blanch, dau. of the King of Castille; and 3rdly, Margaret, dau. of Edward, Earl of Savoy, but had no issue. He d. in 1341, when his niece, Joane,* dau. of his brother Guy, was constituted his heir, but the EARLDOM OF RICHMOND reverted to the crown—when King EDWARD III. created, on 20 September, 1342,

JOHN PLANTAGENET, surnamed of "Gaunt," his younger son, Earl of Richmond, but this prince resigned the dignity in 1372, when it was conferred upon

JOHN DE DREUX, surnamed De Breton, Earl of Montfort, half brother of the last John, Duke of Brittany and Richmond. This nobleman being deprived by the King of France of his Earldom of Montfort, for siding with King EDWARD III., had the Earldom of Richmond from the English monarch in its stead, with the castle, town, and honour of Richmond. His lordship was constantly engaged with King EDWARD in the wars of France, but ultimately falling into the hands of his great foe, Charles of Blois, he was sent to Paris, and there died in prison, about the year 1345, leaving issue, by Joane his wife, dau. of Lewis, Comte de Nevers, a dau., Joane, who m. Ralph, Lord Basset, of Drayton, and a son, his successor,

JOHN DE DREUX, (surnamed the Fallant), in the Earldom of Richmond. This nobleman in the 1st RICHARD II., was retained by indenture to serve the king, in his French wars, for one quarter of a year, with 200 men at arms (himself accounted), 12 knights, and 187 archers. And the next year, in consideration of the castle of Brest in Brittany, which he delivered up to King RICHARD, obtained a grant to himself, and Joane his wife (sister of the king), of the castle and manor of Rising, co. Norfolk. In the 3rd of the same reign, bearing the titles of Duke of Brittany, Earl of Montfort, and Earl of Richmond, he was in the wars of France, but shortly after this deserting the banner of England for that of France, all his lands in the former kingdom were seized, and he was deprived of the Earldom of Richmond by special act of parliament, 7th RICHARD II., November, 1383. He is said to have been afterwards restored to the dignity, but with the proviso, that if he d. s. p., the earldom and honour should revert to the king; in the 14th RICHARD II., it was however again adjudged to be forfeited, and thus terminated the family of DE DREUX, EARLS OF RICHMOND. The last earl m. 1st, the Lady Mary Plantagenet, dau. of King EDWARD III.; 2ndly, Joane, dau. of Thomas Holland, Earl of Kent; and 3rdly, Joane, dau. of CHARLES THE BAD, King of Navarre, and by the last named lady (who m. after the duke's death HENRY IV., King of England), his lordship had issue,

- I. JOHN, his successor.
- II. ARTHUR, s. his nephew Peter.
- III. Richard, Earl of Estampes, m. Margaret, of Orleans, and was father of FRANCIS, Duke of Brittany, in 1468, of whom presently.

The eldest son and successor,

JOHN, Duke of Brittany in 1399, m. Jane of Flanders, and had two sons, FRANCIS, his heir, and PETER, who s. his brother; the former,

FRANCIS, Duke of Brittany, m. in 1442, Isabel of Scotland, and had two daus., Mary, wife of John, Viscount Rohan, and Margaret, m. to her kinsman, Francis, Duke of Brittany. At Francis's death the dukedom passed to his brother,

PETER, Duke of Brittany in 1460, who m. Frances d'Amboise and d. s. p. He was s. by his uncle,

ARTHUR, styled Earl of Richmond and Duke of Brittany in 1457; he d. s. p., and was s. by his nephew,

FRANCIS, Duke of Brittany in 1458, who m. twice—by one wife, Margaret, his kinswoman, dau. of Francis, Duke of

* This lady m. Charles, 2nd son of Guy, Earl of Blois, who laid claim in her right to the Duchy of Brittany, which caused a procrastinated war, wherein England and France became involved—one espousing the claim of John de Breton, half-brother of the deceased Duke John; the other that of Charles, of Blois, which latter was certainly the more legitimate, the Lady Joan being the dau. of Guy, brother to the whole blood to the duke.

Britanny he had no issue, by the other wife, Margaret de Foix, he had one dau.,

ANNE, heiress of Brittany, who m. LEWIS XII., King of France and thus annexed the Duchy of Brittany to the crown of France.

D'EIVILL—BARON D'EIVILL.

By Writ of Summons, dated 14 December, 1264.

Lineage.

In the reign of HENRY I., NIGEL DE ALSINI, being enfeoffed of the manor of Egmonton, co. Nottingham, by the crown, conferred it upon

ROBERT D'EIVILL, from whom descended another

ROBERT D'EIVILL, who, in the 15th King JOHN, attended that monarch in his expedition into Poitou, and in the 26th HENRY III., had summons to fit himself with horse and arms, and to accompany the king into Gascony. To this Robert s.

JOHN D'EIVILL, who, in the 38th HENRY III., was forced to fly the country under an excommunication, but soon afterwards having made his peace, had permission to return, for in the third year following, we find him constituted justice of all the forests beyond Trent, and the next year the King of Scots, King HENRY's son-in-law, being in restraint by his own subjects, he, with other of the northern barons, received summons to fit himself with horse and arms, and to be ready on command, to march into Scotland for the captive monarch's rescue. In the 44th HENRY III., he was again constituted warden of all the forests north of Trent. So, likewise, in three years afterwards, when he was appointed governor of the castle at York, and the next year he obtained license to erect a castle at a place called Hode, in Yorkshire, in which year he was constituted governor of Scarborough Castle. After this we find him arrayed with the other discontented barons against the crown, and so actively engaged in the north, that the sheriff of Yorkshire could not exercise his office for the king's service, from Michaelmas in the 48th, till the battle of Evesham in the 49th of that reign, during which period HENRY was in the hands of the barons a prisoner, and this feudal lord was summoned to parliament, by the companions then ruling, as Baron D'Eivill. The subsequent triumph of the royal cause at Evesham terminated for that time, however, the baronial sway, but it did not bring back Lord D'Eivill to his allegiance, for joining Robert, Lord Ferrers, his lordship made head again at Chesterfield, co. Derby, where, after the capture of Ferrers, he was unhorned by Sir Gilbert Haunsard, but effected his escape to the Isle of Arholme, co. Lincoln. Under the decree, called the "Dictum of Kenilworth," he eventually, however, made his peace, and redeemed his lands by a pecuniary fine. His lordship m. Maude, widow of Sir James de Aldithley, without license, for which transgression he paid a fine of £200 to the king. Of this nobleman nothing further is known, and his posterity do not appear from the existing enrolments to have been ever after summoned to parliament.

DESPENCER—EARL OF WINCHESTER.

Creation of EDWARD II. 10 May, 1322.

Lineage.

In the 18th year of WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR,

ROBERT LE DESPENCER, so called from being steward to the king, was a witness to the royal charter for removing the secular canons out of the cathedral of Durham, and placing monks in their stead. This Robert was brother of Urso de Abbot, then sheriff of Worcestershire, and he appears, as well by his high official situation, as by the numerous lordships he possessed, to have been a person of great eminence; but it has not been ascertained whether he first came into England with his royal master, or whether he was of Saxon or Norman extraction; nor is it clearly known, whether he had ever been married or had issue. In the reign of HENRY I. there was a

WILLIAM LE DESPENCER, but whether he had the name from being son of Robert, or from succeeding to the post of steward, cannot be determined.

The next person we find holding this office, and in the same reign was

THURSTAN DESPENCER. Of this steward, Camden, in his Remains, relates the following story. "In the time of HENRY I. it was the custom of the court, that books, bills, and letters, should be drawn and signed by servitors in court, concerning their own matters, without fee. But at this time Thurstan, the king's steward, or Le Despencer, as they then called him (from whom the family of the Lord Spencer came), exhibited to the king a complaint against Adam of Yarmouth, clerk of the signet, for, that he refused to sign, without a fee, a bill passed for him. The king first heard Thurstan commending the old custom at large, and charging the clerk for exacting somewhat contrary thereunto, for passing his book. Then the clerk was heard, who briefly said, 'I received the book, and sent unto your steward, desiring only of him to bestow upon me two spice cakes made for your own mouth; who returned for answer, he would not, and thereupon I desired to seal his book.'"

The king greatly disliked the steward for returning this negative, and forthwith made Adam sit down upon the bench, with the seals and Thurstan's book before him, but compelled the steward to put off his cloak, to fetch two of his best spiced cakes for the king's own mouth, to bring them in a fair white napkin, and with low curtsie to present them to Adam, the clerk. Which being accordingly done, the king commanded Adam to seal and deliver him his book, and made them friends, adding this speech—"Officers of the court must gratify and show cast of their office, not only one to another, but also to strangers, whensoever need shall require."

This Thurstan was s. by his son,

ALMARIC DE SPENCER, who served the office of sheriff of Rutland in the 34th HENRY II., and again in the 1st RICHARD I. From the latter monarch, to whom he was also steward, he obtained a confirmation in fee of the lordships of Wurdle and Stanley, in the vale of Gloucester. The former of which King HENRY II. had given to Walter, the usher of his chamber, son of Thurstan, and uncle of this Almaric, for his homage and service, reserving a pair of gilt spurs, or twelve pence, to be yearly paid for the same into the exchequer. In the 6th of King JOHN this Almaric paid a fine of 120 marks and one palfrey to be exempted from attending upon the king in an expedition then proposed to be made beyond the sea. Almaric de Spencer m. Amabil, dau. of Walter de Chesnel, by whom he had two sons, Thurstan and Almaric, and was s. by the elder.

THURSTAN DE SPENCER, who appears, with his brother, to have taken arms with the other barons against King JOHN, for, in the 18th of that reign, the king committed the custody of Thurstan de Spencer to Rowland Bloet, and gave away the lands of Almaric de Spencer to Osbert Giffard, his own natural son. Thurstan seems however to have regained his rank in the next reign, and to have twice served the office of sheriff for Gloucestershire. He d. in 1248.

Contemporary with this Thurstan, and doubtless of the same family, was

HUGH DE SPENCER, whom King HENRY III., in the 8th year of his reign, constituted sheriff of the counties of Salop and

Stafford, and governor of the castles of Salop and Bruges (Bridgnorth). He was subsequently sheriff of Berkshire, and governor of Wallingford Castle. To this Hugh HENRY III. gave the manor of Rithal, co. Rutland, and in the 21st of that monarch's reign, upon the death of John Scot, Earl of Chester, he was deputed with Stephen de Segrave and Henry de Aldithley to take charge of the castles of Chester and Beeston. After this Hugh came his grandson, another

HUGH DESPENCER, who, taking part with the barons, was nominated under the baronial power in the 44th of HENRY III., justiciary of England. After the battle of Lewes he was one of those to whom the custody of the captive monarch was committed, and he was then entrusted with the castles of Orford, in Suffolk, of Devizes, in Wilt, and Barnard Castle, in the bishopric of Durham. He was summoned to parliament on 14 December, 1264, as "Hugh le Despencer, Justic' Anglia," and lost his life under the baronial banner at the battle of Evesham. His lordship w. Aliva, dau. of Philip Bassett of Wycombe, co. Bucks, and afterwards 1st wife of Roger Bigod, Earl of Norfolk, by whom he left at his decease, August, 1265, HUGH, of whom presently, and Alianore w. to Hugh de Courteney, father of Hugh, 1st Earl of Devonshire. After the forfeiture and decease of Lord Despencer his widow Aliva, for her father's sake, found such favour from the king, that she was enabled to retain a considerable proportion of the property, and at her death, in the 9th of EDWARD I., it devolved, on the payment of a fine of 500 marks, upon her son.

HUGH DESPENCER, senior, so called to distinguish him from his son, who bore the designation of HUGH DESPENCER, junior, both so well known in history, as the favourites of the unfortunate EDWARD II. Of HUGH, senior, we shall first treat, although as father and son ran almost the same course, at the same time, and shared a similar fate, it is not easy to sever their deeds.

HUGH DESPENCER paid a fine of 2,000 marks to the king, in the 15th of EDWARD I., for marrying, without license, Isabel, dau. of William de Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, and widow of Patrick Cheworth; by this lady he had an only son, the too celebrated

HUGH DESPENCER, JUN.

In the 22nd of the same reign, he was made governor of Oldham Castle, co. Southampton, and the same year had summons to attend the king at Portsmouth, prepared with horse and arms for an expedition into Gascony. In two years afterwards he was at the battle of Dunbar, in Scotland, where the English arms triumphed; and the next year he was one of the commissioners accredited to treat of peace between the English monarch and the kings of the Romans and of France. In the 26th and 28th years of EDWARD he was again engaged in the wars of Scotland, and was sent by his sovereign, with the Earl of Lincoln, to the papal court, to complain of the Scots, and to entreat that his holiness would no longer favour them, as they had abused his confidence by falsehoods. To the very close of King EDWARD I.'s reign his lordship seems to have enjoyed the favour of that great prince, and had summons to parliament from him from 23 June, 1295 to 14 March, 1322; but it was after the accession of EDWARD's unhappy son, the second of that name, that the Spencers attained that extraordinary eminence, from which, with their feeble-minded master, they were eventually hurled into the gulph of irretrievable ruin. In the first years of EDWARD II.'s reign, we find the father and son still engaged in the Scottish wars. In the 14th year the king, hearing of great animosities between the younger Spencer and Humphrey de Bohun, Earl of Hereford and Essex, and learning that they were collecting their followers in order to come to open combat, interfered, and strictly commanded Lord Hereford to forbear. About the same time, a dispute arising between the Earl of Hereford and John de Moubray regarding some lands in Wales, young Spencer seized possession of the estate, and kept it from both the litigants. This conduct, and similar proceedings on the part of the elder Spencer, exciting the indignation of the barons, they formed a league against the favourites, and placing the king's cousin, Thomas Plantagenet, Earl of Lancaster, at their head, marched, with banners flying, from Sherbourne to St. Alban's, whence they despatched the bishops of Salisbury, Hereford, and Chichester, to the king with a demand that the Spencers should be banished; to which mission the king, however, giving an imperious reply in the negative, the irritated nobles continued their route to London: when EDWARD, at the instance of the queen, acquiesced; whereupon the barons summoned a parliament, in which the Spencers were banished from England; and the sentence was proclaimed in Westminster Hall. To this decision, HUGH the elder submitted and retired; but Hugh the younger lurked in divers places; sometimes on land, and sometimes at sea, and was fortunate enough to capture, during his exile, two vessels near Sandwich, laden with merchandize to the value of £40,000; after which, being recalled by the king, an army was raised, which encountered and defeated the baronial forces at Boroughbridge, in Yorkshire. In this action, wherein numbers were slain, the Earl of Lancaster being taken prisoner, was carried to his own castle at Pontefract, and there, after a summary trial (the elder Spencer being one of his judges), beheaded. The Spencers now became more powerful than ever, and the elder was immediately created EARL OF WINCHESTER, the king loading him with grants of forfeited estates. He was about the same time constituted warden of the king's forests on the south of Trent. Young Spencer obtained, like his father, immense grants from the lands forfeited after the battle of Boroughbridge; but not satisfied with those, and they were incredibly numerous, he extorted by force whatsoever else he pleased. Amongst other acts of lawless oppression, it is related that he seized upon the person of Elizabeth Comyn, a great heiress, the wife of Richard Talbot, in her house at Kennington, in Surrey, and detained her for twelve months in prison, until he compelled her to assign to him the manor of Painswick, in Gloucestershire, and the castle and manor of Goderich, in the marches of Wales; but this ill-obtained and ill-exercised power was not formed for permanent endurance, and a brief space only was necessary to bring it to a termination. The queen and the young prince, who had fled to France, and had been proclaimed traitors through the influence of the Spencers, ascertaining the feelings of the people, ventured to return; and landed at Harwich, with the noblemen and persons of eminence who had been exiled after the defeat at Boroughbridge, raised the royal standard, and soon found themselves at the head of a considerable force; when, marching upon Bristol, where the king and his favourites then were, they were received in that city with acclamation, and the elder Spencer being seized (although in his ninetieth year), was brought in chains before the prince and the barons, and received judgment of death, which was accordingly executed, by hanging the culprit upon a gallows in the sight of the king and of his son, upon St. Dennis's day, in October, 1326. It is said by some writers that the body was hung up with two strong cords for four days, and then cut to pieces, and given to the dogs. Young Spencer, with the king, effected his escape; but they were both, soon afterwards, taken and delivered to the queen, when the unfortunate monarch was consigned to Berkeley Castle, where he was basely murdered in 1327. Hugh Spencer the younger, it appears, was impeached before parliament, and received sentence "to be drawn upon a hurdle, with trumps and trumpets, throughout all the city of Hereford," and there to be hanged and quartered, which sentence was executed on a gallows 50 feet high, upon St. Andrew's eve, anno 1326 (20 EDWARD II.) Thus terminated the career of two of the most celebrated royal favourites in the annals of England. The younger Hugh was a peer of the realm, as well as his father, having been summoned to parliament as a baron, from 29 July, 1314, to 10 October, 1325; but the two BARONIES OF SPENCER, and the EARLDOM OF WINCHESTER, expired under the attainders of the father and son. For the family of the younger Spencer, see Despencer, Earl of Gloucester.

DESPENCER—BARONS DESPENCER, EARL OF GLOUCESTER.

Barony, by Writ of Summons, dated 15th June, 1338.
Earldom, anno 1337.

Lineage.

HUGH DESPENCER, JUN. (one of the hapless favourites of King EDWARD I.), w. Eleanor, dau. and co-heir of Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Gloucester, and had issue,

- I. HUGH, of whom presently.
- II. Edward, w. Anne, sister of Henry, Lord Ferrers, of Groby, and dying in 1342, left an only son, EDWARD, who s. his uncle, HUGH.
- III. Gilbert, of Melton Mowbray.
- IV. Philip, w. Margaret Gousell, and d. 1313.
1. Elizabeth, w. to Maurice, Lord Berkeley.
- II. Isabel, w. to Richard, Earl of Arundel.

After the execution of Hugh Despencer, in November, 1326, Eleanor his widow, with her children and family, was confined in the Tower of London until the ensuing February, when she obtained her liberty, and m. subsequently William la Zouch, of Mortimer. She d. in July, 1337, possessed of several estates, in which she was s. by her elder son.

HUGH DESPENCER, who had already distinguished himself as a soldier in France and Scotland; and continuing actively and gallantly engaged in the same fields, he was summoned to parliament as a Baron by King EDWARD III., from 15 June, 1338, to 1 January, 1349. His lordship m. Elizabeth, widow of Giles de Baddlesmere, but d. s. p. in 1349, when the barony EXPIRED, but his lands devolved upon his nephew.

EDWARD DESPENCER, who, in the 30th EDWARD III., being then a knight, attended Edward the Black Prince into France, and shared in the glory of Poitiers. For several years afterwards Sir Edward continued in the French wars, and for his gallant conduct was summoned to parliament as BARON DE SPENCER, from 15 December, 1357, to 6 October, 1372, being also honoured with the Garter. His lordship m. Elizabeth, dau. and heiress of Bartholomew de Burghersh, Baron Burghersh, and had issue,

- i. THOMAS, his successor.
- ii. Hugh, d. 1424.
- i. Cicely, who d. young.
- ii. Elizabeth, m. 1st, to John Arundel, and 2ndly, to Hugh, Lord Zouch.
- iii. Anne, m. to Hugh Hastings, and afterwards to Thomas, Lord Morley.
- iv. Margaret, m. to Robert, Lord Ferrers of Chartley.

Lord Despencer d. 1375, and was s. by his son,

THOMAS DESPENCER, 2nd Baron De Spencer, summoned to parliament 30 November, 1396, and 18 July, 1397. This nobleman, who was known as Lord Despencer of Glamorgan, was in the expedition to Ireland, made in the 18th RICHARD II., and in the 21st of the same reign, having the sentence of banishment reversed, which had been passed by parliament in 15th EDWARD II., against his great grandfather, HUGH DESPENCER THE YOUNGER, was created EARL OF GLOUCESTER, 21st RICHARD II., anno. 1337, by reason of his descent through Eleanor, wife of the said Hugh, from the De Clares, Earls of Gloucester. In the petition which his lordship presented for the reversal of Hugh his ancestor's banishment, it was set forth, that the said Hugh, at the time possessed no less than fifty-nine lordships in different counties; 28,000 sheep; 1,000 oxen and steers; 1,200 kine, with their calves; 40 mares, with their colts of two years; 160 draught horses; 2,000 hogs; 3,000 bullocks; 40 tuns of wine; 600 bacon; four score carcasses of martinmas beef; 600 muttons in his larder; 10 tuns of cider; armour, plate, jewels, and ready money, better than £10,000; 36 sacks of wool, and a library of books. His lordship m. Constance, dau. of Edmund Plantagenet, surnamed De Langley, Duke of York, 5th son of King EDWARD III., and had issue,

- i. RICHARD, who m. Elizabeth, dau. of Ralph, Earl of Westmoreland, and d. issueless, in 1414.
- i. Isabel, m. to Richard Beauchamp, Lord Abergavenny and Earl of Worcester, by whom she had an only dau. and heiress.

ELIZABETH BEAUCHAMP, who m. Edward Nevil, a younger son of Ralph, Earl of Westmoreland, and brought into that family the Baronies of Burghersh and Despencer and Abergavenny.

- ii. Elizabeth, d. young.

Upon the marriage of the Earl of Gloucester, he obtained from King RICHARD II. a grant of diverse manors; but adhering to that unfortunate monarch, he was degraded from his earldom, and dispossessed of most of his lands by the first parliament of HENRY IV.; and before the same year elapsed, being taken prisoner, in an attempt to fly the kingdom, at Bristol, and being condemned by a vote of the House of Commons to die, he was carried into the market-place and there beheaded by the rabble, on the 3rd day after St. Hillary, in the year 1400; when the EARLDOM OF GLOUCESTER and BARONY OF DE SPENCER fell under the attainder. Richard, his eldest son, dying in fourteen years afterwards, still a minor, without issue, Isabel, his only dau., then became his heir. This lady, as stated above, m. Richard Beauchamp, Baron Abergavenny, and Earl of Worcester, by whom she had an only dau. and heiress, Lady Elizabeth Beauchamp. The attainder of Thomas, Lord Despencer and Earl of Gloucester, her grandfather, being reversed in the 1st year of EDWARD IV., the said Lady Elizabeth carried the Barony of Despencer (the Earldom of Gloucester could not of course be revived, having failed for want of a male heir), with the Baronies of Abergavenny and Burghersh, to her husband, the Hon. Edward Nevil, who was summoned to parliament as Lord Abergavenny, in 1450; and the dignity of Despencer continued in his descendants, the Lords Abergavenny, until the decease of Henry, 4th baron, in 1567, when his lordship's only dau. and heiress, Elizabeth, then the wife of Sir Thomas Fane, Knt., claimed the baronies; but, after a long investigation, the House of Lords decided, that the Barony of Abergavenny belonged to the heir male at law; when the crown, by letters patent, confirmed the Barony of Le Despencer to her ladyship and her heirs. From that period it was enjoyed by Lady Fane's immediate descendants, the first seven Earls of Westmoreland; at the decease of John, the 7th earl, in 1762, the Barony of Despencer fell into abeyance between the heirs of his lordship's sisters, and was terminated the next year in favour of his nephew, Sir Francis Dashwood, at whose decease, s. p. in 1781, it again fell into abeyance; and so continued, until again terminated in 1788 in favour of Sir Thomas Stapleton, Baronet, late Lord Le Despencer, the descendant of Lady Catherine Paul, John, 7th Earl of Westmoreland's younger sister.

Arms—Same as those of Despencer, Earl of Winchester.

D'EVEREUX—EARLS OF SALISBURY.

Creation of the Empress MAUD.

Lineage.

Amongst the principal Normans who accompanied the CONQUEROR in his expedition against England, and participated in the triumph and spoil of Hastings, was

WALTER DE EVEREUX, of Roemar, in Normandy, who obtained, with other considerable grants, the lordships of Salisbury and Ambresbury, which, having devised his Norman possessions and earldom to Walter, his eldest son, he bequeathed to his younger son,

EDWARD DE EVEREUX, who was thenceforward designated "of Salisbury." This Edward was subsequently sheriff of Wiltshire, and, at the time of the general survey, possessed lordships in the counties of Dorset, Somerset, Surrey, Hants, Middlesex, Hereford, Buckingham, and Wilts. When sheriff of the latter county, we are told that he received in rent, as belonging to his office, 130 hogs, 32 bacon, 2 bushels and 16 gallons of wheat, the same of barley, several bushels of oats, 32 gallons of honey or 16 shillings, 448 hens, 1,000 eggs, 100 cheeses, 52 lambs, 200 fleeces of wool; having likewise 162 acres of arable land, and, amongst the reves-land, to the value of £40 per annum. This Edward was standard-bearer at the battle of Brenneville, in Normandy, fought 20th HENRY I., King HENRY being present, and distinguished himself by his singular skill and valour. He left at his decease, a dau.,

Maude, wife of Humphrey de Bohun, and a son and heir,

WALTER DE EVEREUX, who m. Sibilla de Chaworth. This feudal lord founded the monastery of Bradenstoke, wherein, in his old age, he became a canon. He was s. by his son,

PATRICK DE EVEREUX, who, being steward of the household to the Empress MAUD, was advanced by that princess to the dignity of EARL OF SALISBURY, and was one of the subscribing witnesses, as such, to the agreement made between King STEPHEN and Henry, Duke of Normandy, in the 18th year of that monarch's reign. In the 10th HENRY II., his lordship was a witness to the recognition of the ancient laws and liberties of England, and in two years afterwards, upon the aid then assessed for marrying the king's dau., he certified his knights' fees at seventy-eight and two-fifths. The earl being the king's Lieutenant in Aquitaine, and captain general of his forces there, was slain in 1167, by Guy de Lusignan, upon his return from a pilgrimage to St. James of Compostella, and was s. by his son,

WILLIAM DE EVEREUX, 2nd Earl of Salisbury, who, at the coronation of King RICHARD I., bore the golden sceptre with the dove on the head of it; but the next year, when the king became a prisoner in Almaine, his lordship was one of those who adhered to John, Earl of Morton. In the 6th RICHARD I., the earl was with the king in the expedition then made into Normandy, and, upon his return to England, was one of his great council assembled at Nottingham. At the second coronation of RICHARD, in the same year, the Earl of Salisbury was one of the four earls who supported the canopy of state. His lordship m. Alianore de Vitrei, dau. of Tirrel de Mainors, and left, at his decease, an only dau. and heiress,

ELA, "of whom (writes Dugdale) it is thus reported: that being so great an inheretrix, one William Talbot, an Englishman, and an eminent soldier, took upon him the habit of a pilgrim, and went into Normandy, where, wandering up and down for the space of two months, at length he found her out. Likewise, that he then changed his habit, and having entered the court where she resided in the garb of a harper (being practised in mirth and jesting), he became well accepted. Moreover, that, growing acquainted with her, after some time he conducted her into England, and presented her to King Richard, who, receiving her very courteously, gave her in marriage to WILLIAM, surnamed Longespee (from the long sword which he usually wore), his brother, that is, a natural son of King HENRY II., by Fair Rosamond; and that thereupon King Richard rendered unto him the earldom of Rosmar, as her inheritance." Be this story true or false, it is certain, however, that the great heiress of the D'Evereux, Ela, espoused the above-named

WILLIAM LONGESPEE, who thereupon became in her right, EARL OF SALISBURY. In the beginning of King JOHN's reign this nobleman was sheriff of Wiltshire, he was afterwards warden of the marches of Wales, and then sheriff of the counties of Cambridge and Huntingdon. About this period (14th JOHN), the baronial contest commencing, William Longespee at once espoused the royal cause, and maintained it so stoutly, that he was included, by the barons, amongst the evil councillors of the crown. The next year he was again constituted sheriff of Wilts, and he held the office from that time during the remainder of his life. He had also a grant of the honour of Eye, in Suffolk, and was the same year a witness to the agreement made between King JOHN and the barons, as guarantee for the former. He was likewise a witness to the charter whereby JOHN resigned his kingdom to the Pope. After this we find him a principal leader in the royal army, until the very close of JOHN's reign, when he swerved in his loyalty, and joined for a short period the ranks of Lewis of France. Upon the accession, however, of HENRY III., he did homage to that monarch, particularly for the county of Somerset, which the king then gave him; and joining with William Marshall (governor of the king and kingdom), raised the siege of Lincoln: when he was constituted sheriff of Lincolnshire and governor of Lincoln Castle, being invested at the same time with sheriffalty of the co. of Somerset, and governorship of the castle of Shirburne. His lordship soon afterwards accompanied the Earl of Chester to the Holy Land, and was at the battle of Damietta, in which the crescent triumphed. He served subsequently in the Gascon wars, whence returning to England, Dugdale relates "there arose so great a tempest at sea, that, despairing of life, he threw his money and rich apparel overboard. But when all hopes were passed, they discerned a mighty taper of wax, burning bright at the prow of the ship, and a beautiful woman standing by it, who preserved it from wind and rain, so that it gave a clear and bright lustre. Upon sight of which heavenly vision both himself and the mariners concluded of their future security; but everyone there being ignorant what this vision might portend except the earl; he, however, attributed it to the benignity of the blessed virgin, by reason that upon the day when he was honoured with the girdle of knighthood he brought a taper to her altar, to be lighted every day at mass, when the canonical hours used to be sung, and to the intent, that for this terrestrial light, he might enjoy that which is eternal." A rumour, however, reached England of the earls having been lost, and Hubert de Burgh, with the concurrence of the king, provided a suitor for his supposed widow, but the lady, in the interim, having received letters from her husband, rejected the suit with indignation. The earl soon after came to the king at Marlborough, and being received with great joy, he preferred a strong complaint against Hubert de Burgh, adding, that unless the king would do him right therein, he should vindicate himself otherwise, to the disturbance of the public peace. Hubert, however, appeased his wrath with rich presents, and invited him to his table, where it is asserted that he was poisoned, for he retired to his castle of Salisbury in extreme illness, and died almost immediately after, anno 1226. His lordship left issue, four sons and five daus., viz.,

WILLIAM, his successor.

Richard, a canon of Salisbury.

Stephen, Justiciary of Ireland, m. Emmeline, widow of Hugh de Lacy, Earl of Ulster, and dau. and heir of Sir Walter de Ridelstord, Baron of Bray, and had two daus., Ela and Emmeline. The latter m. to Maurice Fitzgerald, Baron of Offaly.

Nicholas, bishop of Salisbury, d. in 1297.

Isabel, m. to William de Vesci, Lord Vesey.

Ela, m. 1st, to Thomas, Earl of Warwick, and 2ndly, to Philip Basset, of Hedendon.

Idonea, m. to William de Beauchamp, Baron of Bedford.

Lora, a nun at Lacock.

Ela, jun., m. to William de Odingsells.

His lordship's eldest son,

WILLIAM DE LONGESPEE, "commonly called," says Sir William Dugdale, "by Matthew Paris, and most of our other historians, EARL OF SALISBURY, but erroneously; for all records wherein mention is made of him, do not give him that title, but call him barely William Longespee. Nay, there is an old chronicle who saith expressly, that, in anno 1233 (17th HENRY III.), he was girt with the sword of knighthood, but not made Earl of Salisbury." This William made a pilgrimage to the Holy Land in 1240, and again in 1247, having assumed the cross for a second pilgrimage, proceeded to Rome, and thus preferred a suit to the sovereign pontiff. "Sir, you see that I am signed with the cross, and am on my journey with the King of France to fight in this pilgrimage. My name is great, and of note, viz., WILLIAM LONGESPEE; but my estate is slender; for the king of England, my kinsman and liege lord, hath bereft me of the title of earl, and of that estate; but this he did judiciously, and not in displeasure, and by the impulse of his will; therefore I do not blame him for it. Howbeit, I am necessitated to have recourse to your holiness for favour, desiring your assistance in this distress. We see here (quoth he,) that Earl Richard (of Cornwall), who, though he is not signed with the cross, yet, through the especial grace of your holiness, he hath got very much money from those who are signed, and therefore I, who am signed, and in want, do intreat the like favour." The pope taking into consideration the elegance of his manner, the efficacy of his reasoning, and the comeliness of his person, conceded in part what he desired: whereupon he received above 1,000 marks from those who had been so signed. In about two years after this, anno 1249, having received the blessing of his noble mother, Ela, then abbess of Lacock, he commenced his journey at the head of a company of 200 English horse, and being received with great respect by the king of France, joined that monarch's army. In Palestine he became subsequently pre-eminently distinguished, and fell, in 1250, in a great conflict with the Saracens, near Damietta, having previously killed above 100 of the enemy with his own hand. It was reported that, the night before the battle, his mother Ela, the abbess, saw in a vision the heavens open, and her son armed at all parts (whose shield she well knew), received with joy by the angels. Remembering the occurrence, when the news of his death reached her in six months after, she held up her hands, and with a cheerful countenance said, "I, thy handmaid, give thanks to thee, O Lord, that out of my sinful flesh thou hast caused such a champion against thine enemies to be born." It was also said, that in 1252, when messengers were sent to the Soldan of Babylon, for redemption of those who had been taken prisoners, he thus addressed them—"I marvel at you, Christians, who reverence the bones of the dead, why you inquire not for those of the renowned and right noble William Longespee, because there be many things reported of them (whether fabulous or not I cannot say), viz., that, in the dark of the night, there have been appearances at his tomb, and that to some, who called upon his God, many things were bestowed from Heaven. For which cause, and in regard of his great worth and nobility of birth, we have caused his body to be here intombed." Whereupon the messenger desiring it, the remains were delivered to them by the Soldan, and thence conveyed to Acre, where they were buried in the church of St. Cross. This eminent and heroic personage m. Idonea, dau. and heir of Richard de Camville, and had issue,

WILLIAM DE LONGESPEE, his son and heir, who m. Maud, dau. of Walter Clifford, and d. in the 41st HENRY III., in the flower of his age, leaving an only dau. and heiress,

MARGARET, commonly called Countess of Salisbury, who m. Henry de Lacy, Earl of Lincoln, and had issue, an only dau. and heiress,

ALICE, m. to Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, who being outlawed, King EDWARD II. seized upon the lands which she had made over to her husband; some of which, viz., Tenbrigge, Winterbourn, and Ambresbury, with other manors, King EDWARD III. gave to William de Montacute, to hold in as full and ample a manner, as ever the same had been holden by Margaret, Countess of Salisbury, or her predecessors.

Thus terminated the very eminent families of D'Evereux and De Longespee, EARLS OF SALISBURY.

DEVEREUX—BARONS DEVEREUX.

By Writ of Summons, dated 28 September, 1384.

Lineage.

Of this family, which derived its surname from the town of Eureux, in Normandy, and which came into England with the Conqueror, there were several generations, prior to that which attained the peerage. In the 7th King HENRY III.,

STEPHEN DEVEREUX, being in the king's army against the Welsh, had scutage of all his tenants in the counties of Gloucester and Hereford, who held of him by military service. To this Stephen s. his son,

WILLIAM DEVEREUX, who in the 42nd of HENRY III., had summons to attend the king at Chester, with horse and arms to restrain the incursions of the Welsh, and in two years afterwards, being then one of the barons marchers, received command, with the others, to repair to the marches without delay, for a similar purpose. He subsequently attended the king at the battles of Lewes, but there he forsook the royal standard, and afterwards fell fighting on the side of the barons at Evesham, in the 49th HENRY III., whereupon Maud, his widow, sister of Walter Giffard, bishop of Bath and Wells, applied to the king, for "certain jewels and harness," which had been deposited in the church of Hereford by the deceased baron, and obtained a precept to the treasurer of the cathedral, for their deliverance to her. But his lands being seized, continued with the crown, until the 51st HENRY III., when his son and heir,

WILLIAM DEVEREUX, making his composition at three years value, according to the decree called "Dictum de Kenilworth," had livery of those estates. In the 22nd EDWARD I., we find this William Devereux employed in the great expedition made by the king himself into Gascony. To this feudal lord succeeded,

SIR JOHN DEVEREUX, Knt., who in the 42nd EDWARD III., attended Edward the BLACK PRINCE, into Gascony, and the next year was seneschal and governor of Lymosin. Upon the accession of King RICHARD II., Sir John served in the fleet at sea, and was constituted governor of Leeds Castle, in Kent. In the 3rd of RICHARD, he was made captain of Calais, and in the 8th of the same monarch, being then a banneret, was summoned to parliament as a Baron. The following year his lordship was installed a knight of the Garter, and in the second year afterwards constituted constable of Dover Castle, and warden of the Cinque Ports, but the latter appointment was through the influence of the great lords then predominant. Upon the attainder of Sir Simon Burley, Knt., the castle and manor of Leonhales, co. Hereford, devolving to the crown, Lord Devereux obtained a special grant thereof, and being possessed of the lordship of Penhurst, he had a license in the 16th of RICHARD, to make a castle of his mansion house there. His lordship m. Margaret, dau. of Sir John Barre, Knt., and had issue,

JOHN, his successor.

Joane, m. to Walter Fitz-Walter, Lord Fitz-Walter.

He d. in 1394, and was s. by his son,

SIR JOHN DEVEREUX, Knt., 2nd Baron Devereux, who m. Philippa, one of the daus. of Guy de Brien, then deceased, and granddau. and co-heiress of Sir Guy de Brien, but d. in 1397, still in minority, and without issue; when his lordship's barony and estates devolved upon his sister Joane, Lady Fitz-Walter, and thenceforward became united with the Barony of Fitz-Walter.

A distinguished branch of the family of Devereux became seated in the co. Wexford, at Carrigmenan, Balmagir and Ballyrankin.

DEVEREUX—EARLS OF ESSEX.

By Letters Patent, dated 4 May, 1572.

Lineage.

WALTER DEVEREUX, 2nd Viscount Hereford, was created the 4 May, 1572, EARL OF ESSEX, in consideration of his descent from the family of BOURCHIER, which had previously held that earldom. His lordship being a military man of high reputation, was appointed in the 12th ELIZABETH, field-marshal of the forces sent to suppress the rebellion of the Earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland; and he was afterwards employed in the wars of Ireland, with the title of earl marshal of that kingdom; he was also a knight of the Garter. His lordship m. Lettice, dau. of Sir Francis Knolles, K.G., and had issue,

ROBERT, his successor.

Walter, killed before Roan.

Penelope, m. 1st, to Robert, Lord Rich, and 2ndly, to Charles Blount, Earl of Devon.

Dorothy, m. 1st, to Sir Thomas Perrot, Knt., and 2ndly, to Henry, Earl of Northumberland.

The earl d. at Dublin, 22 September, 1576, but not without suspicion of having been poisoned, through the instigation of the infamous Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester, who soon after repudiated his wife, Lady Douglas Howard, and m. the widow of his lordship. Lord Essex was s. by his elder son,

ROBERT DEVEREUX, 2nd Earl of Essex, the celebrated but unfortunate favourite of Queen ELIZABETH. His lordship was first brought to court, in 1585, by his step-father, the Earl of Leicester, and he subsequently attained the highest honours his sovereign could bestow. He was a privy councillor, a knight of the Garter, master of the horse, earl marshal of England, and lord deputy of Ireland: he was likewise chancellor of the University of Cambridge. His ultimate fate is so conspicuous an event in history, that it would be impertinent to dwell at any length upon it here. His lordship having conspired against his royal mistress, and made a fruitless effort at insurrection, was taken prisoner, committed to the Tower, and thence, after being convicted by his peers of high treason, led to the scaffold, 25 February, 1600. The earl left issue by his wife Frances, dau. and heir of Sir Francis Walsingham, and widow of Sir Philip Sidney, one son and two daus., viz.,

ROBERT.

Frances, m. to William Seymour, Duke of Somerset.

Dorothy m. 1st, to Sir Henry Shirley, Bart., of Stanton-Harold, and 2ndly, to William Stafford, Esq., of Blatherwick, in the co. of Northampton.

His lordship's honours expired under the attainder, but his children being restored in blood, in 1603, his son,

ROBERT DEVEREUX, succeeded to the earldom of Essex, and his late father's other dignities. This nobleman who was installed a knight of the Garter in 1638, attached himself to the royal cause until 1642, when he accepted a commission in the parliament army, and afterwards distinguished himself as a parliamentary general. He d. 14 September, 1646, and was interred with national obsequies in Westminster Abbey, the two houses of parliament attending the funeral. His lordship m. 1st, Lady Frances Howard, dau. of Thomas, Earl of Suffolk, from whom he was divorced, and that infamous woman m. afterwards, Sir Robert Carr, K.G., Earl of Somerset. The earl m. 2ndly, Elizabeth, dau. of Sir William Paulet, of Eddington, co. Wilts, one the natural sons of William, 3rd Marques of Winchester, and had a son, Robert, who d. in infancy. His lordship leaving no issue, the EARLDOM OF ESSEX, at his decease, became EXTINCT, while his other honours passed according to their respective limitations. (See Viscount Hereford, BURKE'S Peerage and Baronetage.)

D'EYNCOURT—BARONS D'EYNCOURT.

By Writ of Summons, dated 6 February, 1299.

By Writ of Summons, dated 27 January, 1332.

Lineage.

Camden, in his "Britannia" (vol. i. p. 559), after referring to this family, as having flourished in a continued succession from the coming in of the Normans to the time of HENRY VI., and then to have failed for want of an heir male of William, 13th Lord d'Eyncourt, adds, "I was the more willing to take notice of this family, that I might in some measure answer the desire of Edmund, Baron d'Eyncourt, who was so very earnest to preserve the memory of his name, that, having no issue male, he petitioned King EDWARD II. for liberty to make over his manors and arms to whomsoever he pleased; for he imagined that both his name and arms would go to the grave with him, and was very solicitous to have them survive and be remembered. Accordingly the king gave him a patent for that end. Yet this surname, for aught I can find, is now quite extinct, and would have been forgotten for ever, if the memory of it had not been preserved in books."

Camden does not quite correctly state the license. It is extant, and may be found, printed at length, in Ryley's "Plac. Parl." (p. 547.) It is dated 23 February, 7th EDWARD II., and enabled Edmund, Baron d'Eyncourt, as will be seen hereafter, to settle his lands upon his grandson William, 2nd son of his eldest son, John d'Eyncourt, in exclusion of Isabel, the female heir, she being the only child of Edmund, eldest son (then deceased) of the said John d'Eyncourt, which Isabel afterwards d. s. p.; and this leads us to trace the family of d'Eyncourt, who were formerly barons by tenure, until summoned to parliament by writ, 22nd EDWARD I.

WALTER DE AYN COURT, de Eyncourt, or d'Eyncourt, a noble Norman, one of the distinguished companions in arms of the CONQUEROR, was cousin to Remigius, bishop of Lincoln, who built the cathedral there, and obtained as his share of the spoil, sixty-seven lordships in several counties, of which many were in Lincolnshire, where Blankney was his chief seat, and the head of his feudal barony. By his wife Matilda, he had two sons, William and Ralph. WILLIAM, probably the eldest, while receiving his education in the Court of King WILLIAM RUFUS, d. there, as appears by an inscription on a plate of lead, found in the churchyard, near the west door of Lincoln Cathedral, before Dugdale published his baronage, which contains an engraving of the plate, still preserved in the library of that church. From this inscription it seems he was descended from the royal family, probably through his mother. The inscription runs as follows:—"Hic jacet Wilhelmus filius Walteri Aincuriensis, consanguinei Remigii Episcopi Lincolnensis, qui hanc ecclesiam fecit—Præfatus Wilhelmus, regis stirpe progenitus, dum in curia Wilhelmi filii magni Regis Wilhelmi qui Angliam conquistavit aletur III. Kalend. Novemb. obiit."

RALPH D'EYN COURT, 2nd baron, son of Walter, s. him. He founded Thurgarton Priory, co. Notts, and was s. by his son.

WALTER D'EYN COURT, 3rd baron, who, with his son Oliver, fought on the side of King STEPHEN in the battle of Lincoln, 1141, and he appears, upon his son's death, subsequently, to have given lands to Walter, a priest, who had saved his son from captivity and death in that battle, to pray for his soul. Walter was s. by his other son.

JOHN DEINCOURT, 4th baron, who, in the 22nd HENRY II., paid 20 marks in Nottinghamshire, for trespassing in the king's forests, and 10 marks in Northamptonshire, for a similar transgression. This John m. Ann, dau. of Ralph Murdac, and was s. by his son.

OLIVER, 5th baron, who, by his wife Annabella, had a son.

OLIVER, 6th baron, who m. Nicola, grand-dau. of Nicola de la Haye, a lady of large possessions in Lincolnshire, by her husband, William Fitzernest, and was s. by their son.

JOHN, 7th baron, who m. Agnes de Neville (whose 1st husband was Richard de Percy), and was s. by their son.

EDMUND, 8th baron, who obtained that remarkable license, above mentioned, from EDWARD II. He signed, 12 February, 1301, 29th EDWARD I., the celebrated letter sent by the barons, assembled in parliament at Lincoln, to Pope BONIFACE VIII., denying his jurisdiction in temporal affairs, and denying that Scotland was a fief of the Roman see. The duplicate of this letter exists amongst the public archives, and the seal of "Edmundus de Eyncourt" thereto appended, is in good preservation, and was engraved in 1729, in the 1st vol. of the "Vetusta Monumenta." Baron Edmund was also present, 33rd EDWARD I., when the king refused permission to the bishop of Durham to present a foreign bishop, on the Pope's recommendation, to the priory of Coldingham. He had two sons, John and William, who were with the feudal army at Carlisle, 29th EDWARD I., in the place of their father, and figure in the roll of Carlarock, where John, it is said, "molt bien fit son devoir." He d. v. p., and subsequently, William, a commander of distinguished valour, was killed 23 June, 1314, 7th EDWARD II., before the Castle of Stirling, on the eve of the battle of Bannockburn, an event referred to by Sir Walter Scott, in his "Lord of the Isles:"

"Back to the host the Douglas rode,
And soon glad tidings are abroad,
That D'Eyncourt by stout Randolph slain,
His followers fled with loosen'd rein."

Baron Edmund's eldest son, John, left three sons, Edmund, who also d. in the baron's lifetime; William (afterwards 9th baron), and John. Edmund, the grandson, left a dau., Isabel, and the object of the above-mentioned license was, to vest the estates in her uncle, William, next brother of her father, Edmund, in order to prevent the barony descending to her, and thus passing, in case of her marriage, to another name and family. The youngest brother, John, represented Lincolnshire in parliament, 11th EDWARD III., and Nottinghamshire, 14th EDWARD III. Baron Edmund d. 20th EDWARD II., at a very advanced age. He had immense possessions, with great weight and authority: he was prominent in the chief events of his time, and attended his sovereigns on all important occasions of war or council. On his decease, his son John, and his grandson Edmund, being dead, and his great-grandson Isabel, being also dead, without issue,

WILLIAM, 9th Lord d'Eyncourt, s. his grandfather, when twenty-six years of age, as heir by descent, as well as by virtue of the licensed entail. He was an eminent warrior and active servant of King EDWARD III., through the glorious period of his reign, participating in the immortal achievements of that era in France and Scotland, and on 17 October, 1346, he was one of the commanders in the famous battle of Neville's Cross, near Durham. He is particularly mentioned as an object of the king's gratitude, in his letter of thanks, dated 20 October, written on the occasion of that celebrated victory, when DAVID, King of Scotland, was taken prisoner. King EDWARD being then before Calais, his queen, PHILIPPA, is stated by some writers to have been present at the battle. At any rate it is clear she was in the field prior to its commencement, when she rode in front of the army on a white courser, and, in the words of the historian, "sweetly exhorted them." She was attended by Lord d'Eyncourt at the head of her guard, a post of honour and responsibility, which shows that he was deemed one of the first gentlemen of his day. This is further evidenced by the circumstance, that JOHN, King of France, taken prisoner at the battle of Poitiers—who, during his captivity in England, was treated with that respectful and generous courtesy which shed a lustre over those times—was consigned to Lord d'Eyncourt's custody, and so remained until the period when he passed out of Lincolnshire, under Lord d'Eyncourt's charge, to the metropolis, and thence to France, King EDWARD himself conducting him to the sea-side, and the BLACK PRINCE attending him to Calais, having felt his durance so little personally irksome, that he afterwards returned on a visit to King EDWARD, and died in England before it was completed. On 14 May, 1347, Lord d'Eyncourt was commanded to attend the king before Calais, and was present at all the interesting scenes there enacted, and at the final surrender of the place, followed by the heroic self-devotion of six of the inhabitants, who, with Eustace St. Pierre at their head, were saved by the gentle, but urgent intercession of Queen PHILIPPA, who, after the battle of Durham, had joined her husband at Calais. Lord d'Eyncourt d. 2 June, 1364, aged sixty-four. He m. Millicent, dau. of William, Lord Roos, of Hamlake. William, his eldest son, m. Margaret, dau. of Adam de Welle, and d. v. p., leaving an only son, who s. his grandfather as

WILLIAM, 10th Lord d'Eyncourt. He m. Alice, dau. of John, Lord Neville, of Raby and Brancepeth, co. Durham, by Maud, dau. of Henry, 2nd Lord Percy, which Alice was sister of Ralph Neville, 1st Earl of Westmoreland, who, having m. Joan, half-sister of King HENRY IV., and being, through their dau., Cecily, Duchess of York, grandfather of EDWARD IV. and RICHARD III., the d'Eyncourt family became intimately allied with both the lines of York and Lancaster, and the blood of those royal houses was afterwards brought to their posterity, as hereafter explained, by the marriage of Mr. Tennyson's ancestors, Catherine, co-heiress of Morley and Monteagle, with John Savage, Earl Rivers, and Francis, Lord D'Eyncourt, Earl of Scarisdale, with Anne Cary, of which marriage Mr. Tennyson was eldest co-heir. William, 10th baron, d. 5th RICHARD II., 1381, and was s. by his son.

RALPH, 11th Lord d'Eyncourt, who, dying an infant, s. p., was s. by his brother.

JOHN, 12th Lord d'Eyncourt, who m. Johanna, dau. and sole heiress of Robert de Grey, 5th Baron Grey, of Rotherfield, and d. 7th HENRY IV., leaving issue,

WILLIAM, 13th Lord d'Eyncourt, his son and heir, and two daus., ALICE and MARGARET. This nobleman, who was also in right of his mother, Baron Grey of Rotherfield, m. Elizabeth, sister of Viscount Beaumont, but d. s. p. in 1422, 1st HENRY VI., leaving Alice (Mr. Tennyson's ancestor), aged eighteen, and Margaret, aged seventeen, his sisters and co-heirs. Margaret m. Ralph, 4th Lord Cromwell, of Tattershall, co. Lincoln, and d. s. p. 15 September, 1455, 33rd HENRY VI., leaving her sister,

ALICE, Baroness d'Eyncourt and Grey, of Rotherfield, sole heiress of her father, mother, brother, and sister. She m. William, Baron Lovel (of Tichmarsh) and Holland, chief of the male line of the illustrious house of Yvery in Normandy, named Lupellus, afterwards Lovel. In the 24th HENRY VI., in consideration of his eminent services abroad to HENRY V. and HENRY VI., and his infirmity of body, he had exemption for life from attendance in parliament, and d. 13 June, 33rd

HENRY VI., leaving, by the said Alice D'Eyncourt, who survived him, JOHN, his successor, and WILLIAM, who ultimately became heir-male of his said father and mother, William, Lord Lovel, and Alice, Lady D'Eyncourt, and was the ancestor of the present family of Tennyson-D'Eyncourt, of Bayons Manor, co. Lincoln. Alice, Lady D'Eyncourt, afterwards m. Ralph, Lord Boteler of Sudeley, who d. 13th Edward IV., and by him had one son, who d. an infant, and she d. 15th Edward IV. Her eldest son, JOHN, became Lord Lovel and Holland, but d. before his mother, 4th Edward IV. By his wife Joane, only dau. and heiress of John, Lord Beaumont, he had a son FRANCIS, and two daus., Joane and Frideswide. The 1st m. Sir Bryan Stapleton, and her descendant has recently been summoned to parliament as Baron Beaumont, by descent from her; Frideswide m. Sir Edward Norria, and their unfortunate son was attainted and executed, with Queen Anne Boleyn, 28th HENRY VIII. On the death of John, Lord Lovel, he was s. by his only son,

FRANCIS, Lord Lovel and Holland, who, on the death of his grandmother, Alice, became also Lord d'Eyncourt (15th from the Conquest), and Lord Grey of Rotherfield. (See LOVELL.)

The late RIGHT HON. CHARLES TENNYSON, of Bayons Manor, co. Lincoln, superadded the name and arms of d'Eyncourt to those of Tennyson, by royal license, dated 27 July, 1835, in compliance with a condition attached to the enjoyment of certain manors and estates, by a codicil to the will of his father, George Tennyson, Esq., of Bayons Manor, "in order to commemorate his descent from the ancient and noble family of D'Eyncourt, Barons D'Eyncourt of Blankney, and his representation in blood, as co-heir of the Earls of Scarsdale, Barons D'Eyncourt of Sutton."

DIGBY—BARONS DIGBY OF SHERBORNE, CO. DORSET, EARLS OF BRISTOL.

Barony, by Letters Patent, 25 November, 1618.
Earldom, by Letters Patent, 15 September, 1622.

Lineage.

SIR JOHN DIGBY, Knt., younger brother of Sir Robert Digby, ancestor of the Lords Digby, and 2nd son of Sir George Digby of Colehill, by Abigail his wife, dau. of Sir Arthur Henningham, Knt., of Ketteringham, having filled some high situations in the court of JAMES I. and being twice accredited ambassador to the court of Spain, was elevated to the peerage, 25 November, 1618, as BARON DIGBY, of Sherborne, co. Dorset. His lordship was subsequently employed upon different embassies, but particularly to the court of Spain, in 1622, touching a marriage between Prince Charles and the Lady Maria, when he was created EARL OF BRISTOL. In 1624, his lordship had a difference with the Duke of Buckingham, and they mutually impeached each other. From that period he lived in retirement, until the breaking out of the civil war, in which he first sided with the parliament, but afterwards went over to the king, and eventually withdrew into France. The earl m. Beatrix, dau. of Charles Walcot, Esq., of Walcot, co. Salop, and had issue,

GEORGE, his successor.

John, who was a general of horse in Lord Hepton's army, and afterwards a secular priest, at Pontoise, in France, d. after the restoration.

Abigail, m. to George Freke, Esq., of Shroton, co. Dorset, and d. s. p.

Mary, m. to Arthur, Earl of Donegal, had no surviving issue.

His lordship d. in 1652, and was s. by his elder son,

GEORGE DIGBY, 2nd Earl of Bristol, K.G. This nobleman suffered considerably during the civil wars, having had his estates confiscated and himself banished. He lived however to be restored with the monarchy, to his country and fortune; but having become a Roman Catholic while abroad, he was thereby incapacitated from holding any place in the government. His lordship is noticed by Walpole as an author, and a person of singularity, whose life was one contradiction. "He wrote against popery, and embraced it. He was a zealous opposer of the court, and a sacrifice for it; was conscientiously converted in the midst of his prosecution of Lord Strafford, and was most unconscientiously a prosecutor of Lord Clarendon. With great parts, he always hurt himself and his friends. With romantic bravery, he was always an unsuccessful commander. He spoke for the Test Act, though a Roman Catholic; and addicted himself to astrology, on the birthday of true philosophy." His lordship m. Anne, dau. of Francis, 4th Earl of Bedford, by whom he had issue,

JOHN his successor.

Francis, slain in the sea-fight with the Dutch, 28 May, 1672, and d. s. p.

Diana, m. to the Baron Moll, in Flanders.

Anne, m. to Robert, Earl of Sunderland, from whom descend the Dukes of Marlborough, and the Earls of Spencer.

His lordship d. in 1676, and was s. by his only surviving son,

JOHN DIGBY, 3rd Earl of Bristol, who m. 1st, Alice, dau. and heiress of Robert Bourne, Esq., of Blackhall, co. Essex; and 2ndly, Rachel, dau. of Sir Hugh Windham, Knt., but having no issue, the BARONY OF DIGBY, and the EARLDOM OF BRISTOL, became, at his lordship's decease, in 1698, EXTINCT, while his large estates devolved upon his only surviving sister, Anne, Countess of Sunderland, whose son George, 3rd Earl of Sunderland, m. for his 2nd wife, Anne, 2nd dau. of John, 1st and celebrated DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH.

DIGBY—BARONESS OFFALEY.

Lineage.

THE HON. LETTICE FITZGERALD, dau. and sole heir of Gerald, Lord Offaley, and grand-dau. of Gerald, 11th Earl of Kildare, m. SIR ROBERT DIGBY, Knt., of Colehill, in Warwickshire, and had several sons, from whom descended the Earl Digby, the Digbys of Landenstown, the Rev. John Digby, of Osbertown, &c. Sir Robert Digby d. 24 May, 1618, and in two years after (1620) his widow was created BARONESS OFFALEY for life. Her ladyship d. in 1658, and of course the peerage EXPIRED with her.

Arms—Az., a fleur-de-lis, arg.

DILLON—EARL OF ROSCOMMON.

Lineage.

SIR HENRY LE DILLON, who, accompanying the Earl of Moreton (afterwards King JOHN), into Ireland, in 1185, obtained those extensive territorial grants in the cos. of Longford and Westmeath then denominated Dillon's Country, but altered by statute, 34th HENRY VIII., to the Barony of Kilkenny West. Sir Henry m. a dau. of John de Courcy, Earl of Ulster, and was afterwards styled "Premier Dillon, Lord Baron Dromrany." From this feudal lord lineally sprang

GERALD DILLON, Lord of Dromrany, who m. Lady Emily FitzGerald, dau. of the Earl of Desmond, and had issue,

I. SIR MAURICE, of Dromrany, ancestor of the DILLONS of Dromrany, the DILLONS of Kilcornan (now represented by COMTE AUGUSTE HENRI DILLON, resident at Mons, in Belgium), the DILLONS, VISCOUNTS DILLON, &c.

II. John

III. JAMES (Sir).

The 3rd son,

SIR JAMES DILLON, of Proudstown, was ancestor of

SIR ROBERT DILLON, of Newton, attorney-general for Ireland to HENRY VIII. in 1545, appointed, in 1553, by Queen MARY, 2nd Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, whence he was advanced, in the following reign, to the chief Justiceship of the Common Pleas; and was subsequently for sometime speaker of the House of Commons. He m. Jenet, youngest dau. of Edward Barnewall, Esq., of Crickstown, by Elizabeth his wife, dau. of Sir Thomas Plunket, of Dunsohly, Knt., lord chief Justice of the Common Pleas, and had issue,

I. LUCAS (Sir) of whom presently.

II. Roger, of Ballydromny, co. Cavan, m. Margaret, dau. and heir of Richard Dillon, Esq., of Ballydromny, and had a son,

His lordship d. 7 September, 1642, and was s. by his eldest son,

JAMES, 3rd earl. "This nobleman," says Anthony à Wood, "was reclaimed, when young, from the superstitions of the Romish church by primate Usher, and sent by him into England, as a jewel of price, to be committed to the care and trust of Doctor George Hakewell, who finding him to be a young man of pregnant parts, placed him in Exeter College in 1623, under the tuition of Lawrence Bodley, B.D., in which college continuing some years, he became an accomplished person." His lordship m. Elizabeth, youngest dau. of Sir William Wentworth, Bart., and sister of Thomas, Earl of Strafford, lord-lieutenant of Ireland, and was s. in 1649, by his son,

WENTWORTH, 4th earl, the celebrated poet, thus characterized by Dryden and Pope:—

"Roscommon, whom both court and camps commend,
True to his prince, and faithful to his friend;
Roscommon first in fields of honour known,
First in the peaceful triumphs of the gown."—Dryden.

"Roscommon, not more learned than good,
With manners gen'rous as his noble blood;
To him the wit of Greece and Rome was known,
And every author's merit but his own."—Pope.

His lordship m. 1st, Lady Frances Boyle, dau. of Richard, Earl of Burlington and Cork, and 2ndly, Isabella, dau. of Matthew Boynton, Esq., 2nd son of Sir Mathew Boynton, Bart., of Barneton, in Yorkshire, but dying s. p. 20 January, 1684, the honours reverted to his uncle, (see Robert, 2nd earl).

DINAN—BARON DINAN.

By Writ of Summons, dated 23 January, 1295.

Lineage.

The surname of DINAN appears to have been first adopted by Fouke, one of the knights of Roger de Montgomery, Earl of Shrewsbury, upon whom that nobleman conferred the castle which he had erected at Dinan (now called Ludlow), and he was thence designated Sir Fouke de Dinan.

GEFFREY DINAN had summons, with other persons of note, in 41st HENRY III., to repair to the king at Bristol, well fitted with horse and arms, in order to march against the Welsh. He d. in two years afterwards, seised of the manor of Hertland, co. Devon, which he held by service of two knights' fees, and was s. by his son,

OLIVER DINAN, who, upon doing homage in 48th HENRY III., had livery of his lands. This Oliver, having m. Isabel, dau. of Hugh, Earl of Oxford, and widow of John de Courtenay, without license, had to pay a fine of £100 to the crown in consequence. In the 14th EDWARD I. he procured the royal charter for free warren in all his demesne lands in the counties of Devon, Somerset, and Cornwall; and was summoned to parliament as a Baron, from 23 June, 1295, to 29 December, 1299, and dying in the following year, was s. by his son,

JOSEPH DINAN, 2nd Baron Dinan, who does not appear from the existing rolls to have been summoned to parliament; he d. soon after his father (29th EDWARD I.), leaving two sons, viz.,

JOHN, his successor.

Oliver, who d. in 20th EDWARD III. and left a son,

Oliver, who left, by his 1st wife, a son Oliver, who d. s. p.; and by his 2nd, Margaret, dau. of Richard de Hydon, three daus., viz.,

Margaret, m. to William de Asthorpe.

Isabel, }

The elder son,

JOHN DINAN, s. his father, and was s. himself by his son,

JOHN DINAN (Dynant, or Dynham, as the name was differently written), of Hertland, 4th baron. He was b. 1320; m. 1369, Joane, dau. of Sir Thomas Courtenay and Muriell his wife, dau. and co-heir of John, Lord Moells; which Joane was heiress of her brother, Sir Hugh Courtenay, Knt. To this nobleman, who d. 1382, s. his son,

JOHN DYNHAM, 5th baron. He m. Philippa, dau. of John, Lord Lovell; d. 1428, and was s. by his son,

SIR JOHN DYNHAM, 6th baron, who served in the wars of King HENRY VI., and d. in the 36th of that monarch, leaving by his wife Joane, dau. and heiress of Richard de Arches, the following issue,

JOHN, his successor.

Elizabeth, m. 1st, Fouke, Lord Fitz-Warren; and 2ndly, to Sir John Sapcoate, Knt.

Joane, m. to John, Lord Zouche, of Harringworth.

Margaret, m. to Sir John Carewe, Knt.

Catherine, m. to Sir Thomas Arundel, Knt.

Sir John Dynham was s. by his son,

SIR JOHN DYNHAM, Knt., who being in high favour with King EDWARD IV., was summoned to parliament as a Baron,* by that monarch, 28 February, 1460, and continuing one of the most zealous and gallant supporters of the House of York, his lordship obtained, in two years afterwards, the custody of the forest of Dartmore, with extensive territorial grants, amongst which were several manors, part of the possessions of Humphrey Stafford, Earl of Devon, then in the crown, by reason of the death of that earl, without issue, and the forfeiture of Thomas Courtenay, Earl of Devon. In the 15th EDWARD IV., Lord Dynham was sworn of the privy council, and had a grant of an annuity of 100 marks for his attendance on that service, to be received out of the petty customs in the port of London; in which office of privy councillor he was continued by King HENRY VII., and constituted by that monarch treasurer of the Exchequer. His lordship was also a knight of the Garter. He m. Elizabeth, dau. and heiress of Walter, Lord Fitz-Walter, and widow of Sir John Ratcliffe; but dying s. p. 30 January, 1500, his barony, supposing it a new creation, EXPIRED; but that created by the writ of EDWARD I. fell into ABEYANCE between his heirs at law, and so continues amongst their representatives. Those heirs were Elizabeth, his lordship's sister, m. 1st, Fouke, Lord Fitz-Warren, who d. 1478; and 2ndly, Sir John Sapcoate, Knt., and by him had a son,

Richard Sapcoate, who m. Alice Vaux, and was father of William Sapcoate, who m. Anne St. Ma^{rk}, of Thornhaugh, and had a son, Sir Guy Sapcoate, who m. Margaret, dau. and heir of Guy Wolston, and had a dau. and heir.

Ann, m. 1st, to Sir John Broughton, of Tuddington, and 2ndly, John, 1st Earl of Bedford.

Joane, his lordship's sister, widow of John, Lord Zouche, of Haryngworth.

Sir Edmund Carewe, of Mohun's Ottery, his lordship's nephew, son of his sister Margaret, Lady Carewe.

Sir John Arundel, K.B., of Lanherne, co. Cornwall, his lordship's nephew, son of his sister Catherine, Lady Arundel. This Sir John Arundel m. 1st, Eleanor, dau. of Thomas Grey, Marquess of Dorset, from which union the noble family of ARUNDEL OF WARDOUR derives.

DOCKWRA—BARON DOCKWRA, OF CULMORE.

By Letters Patent, dated 16 May, 1621.

Lineage.

SIR HENRY DOCKWRA, Knt., a distinguished soldier in the Irish wars of the reign of ELIZABETH, was created Baron Dockwra, of Culmore, co. Derry, by patent, dated at Westminster, 16 May, 1621. Lord Dockwra, who was treasurer at war, one of the privy council, and governor of Loughfoyle, received a grant of lands in the co. Wicklow, 4 August, 1628. He m. Anne, dau. of Francis Vaughan, of Sutton-upon-Derent, and by her (whose will bears date 20 July, 1648), he had issue,

I. THEODORE, 2nd baron.

II. Henry, d. 25 December, 1627, and was buried in Christ Church, Dublin.

I. Frances, d. unm. 26 June, 1624, and was buried in Christ Church, Dublin.

II. Anne, m. Capt. William Shore, and d. 22 December, 1657.

III. Elizabeth, m. Sir Henry Brooke, governor of Donegall, was buried in Christ Church, Dublin, leaving two sons, George and Henry.

Lord Dockwra (whose will bears date 10 March, 1630), d. 19 April, 1631, and was s. by his elder son,

SIR THEODORE DOCKWRA, Knt., 2nd baron, aged twenty-one, in 1631. He d. unm., whereupon the title became EXTINCT.

Arms—Quarterly: 1st sa., a chev. engrailed, arg., between three plates, each charged with a palet for DOCKWRA; 2nd arg., on a bend, gu., three martlets, or, for DANVERS; 3rd erm., a bend, gu., charged with two chevrons, or; 4th az., a fesse wavy, or, between three swans, arg., for SWAN.

DODINGTON—BARON MELCOMBE, OF MELCOMBE REGIS, CO. DORSET.

By Letters Patent, dated 6 April, 1761.

Lineage.

GEORGE BURN, Esq., b. in 1692, assumed by Act of Parliament, in pursuance of the testamentary injunction of his maternal uncle, George Dodington, Esq., of Eastbury, co.

* No writ of summons appears to have issued for several generations (from the reign of EDWARD I.), Sir John Dynham, although unquestionably a Baron by descent, is presumed to have been only raised to the dignity by this writ; and this has been deemed erroneously a new creation.

Dorset, the surname of Dodington; and under that designation was a very versatile and busy politician in the reigns of GEORGE I. and GEORGE II.; during which period, he was member of parliament for Winchelsea, Bridgewater, Weymouth, and Melcombe Regis, and held many posts of importance, being at one time envoy extraordinary at the Court of Spain; but his own curious and well-known "Diary," published after his decease, best shows the place he held in public life. He was elevated to the peerage 6 April, 1761, by the title of LORD MELCOMBE, of Melcombe Regis, co. Dorset; but d. 28 July in the following year, anno, at his villa of La Trappe, Hammersmith, when the dignity became EXTINCT. This nobleman, the patron of Thomson and Young, the poets, is so generally known, that it would be a work of supererogation to enter more into detail regarding him upon the present occasion. His mansion at Eastbury, when finished by his lordship, was esteemed a most superb and costly structure; it passed, at his decease, to the Duke of Buckingham, and was pulled down and sold piece-meal; but the bulk of his fortune he left to Thomas Wyndham, Esq.

DORMER—EARLS OF CARNARVON.

By Letters Patent, dated 2 August, 1628.

Lineage.

ROBERT DORMER (son of the Hon. William Dormer, and Alice, dau. of Sir Richard Molineux, of Sefton), s. as 2nd BARON DORMER, of Wenge, at the decease of his grandfather, Robert, 1st lord, in 1616, and was advanced 2 August, 1628, to the Viscounty of Ascot and EARLDOM OF CARNARVON. His lordship, who took up arms in the royal cause during the civil wars, was eminently distinguished as a military leader in those unhappy times. In the year 1643 he had the command of a regiment of horse, and went with Prince Rupert, the Marquess of Hertford, Prince Maurice, and Colonel Howard, into Dorsetshire, and charged as a volunteer in Sir John Byron's regiment, at the battle of Roundway-down, co. Wilts; after which he joined the king before Gloucester, being then a general of horse, but was slain at Newbury on 20 September following. Of this gallant person Lord Clarendon gives the following account:—"Before the war, though his education was adorned by travel, and an exact observation of the manners of more nations than our common travellers use to visit (for he had, after the view of Spain, France, and most parts of Italy, spent some time in Turkey, and those eastern countries), he seemed to be wholly delighted with those looser exercises of pleasure, hunting, hawking, and the like, in which the nobility of that time too much delighted to excel. After the troubles, however, began, having the command of the 1st or 2nd regiment of horse, that was raised for the king's service, he wholly gave himself up to the office and duty of a soldier, no man more diligently obeying, or more dexterously commanding; for he was not only of a very keen courage in the exposing of his person, but an excellent discerner and pursuer of advantage upon his enemy. He had a mind and understanding very present in the article of danger, which is a rare benefit in that profession. Those infirmities, and that license which he had formerly indulged to himself, he put off with severity, when others thought them excusable under the notion of a soldier. He was a great lover of justice, and practised it then most deliberately, when he had power to do wrong; and so strict in the observation of his word and promise as a commander, that he could not be persuaded to stay in the west, when he found it not in his power to perform the agreement which he had made with Dorchester and Weymouth. If he had lived he would have proved a great ornament to that profession, and an excellent soldier; and by his death the king found a sensible weakness in his army." His lordship m. Anna-Sophia, dau. of Philip Herbert, Earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, and was s. by his only son,

CHARLES DORMER, 3rd Baron Dormer, and 2nd Earl of Carnarvon. This nobleman m. Elizabeth, dau. of Arthur, Lord Capel, by whom he had surviving issue,

Elizabeth, m. to Philip Stanhope, Earl of Chesterfield.

Isabella, m. to Charles Coote, Earl of Mountrath.

Anna-Sophia, d. of the small-pox, anno, in the twenty-second year of her age, anno 1695.

His lordship m. 2ndly, Mary, dau. of Montagu Bertie, Earl of Lindsey, but had no issue. He d. 29 November, 1709, when the EARLDOM OF CARNARVON became EXTINCT, while the BARONY OF DORMER devolved upon his kinsman, Rowland Dormer, Esq., of Grove Park, co. Warwick, great-grandson of Robert, 1st lord, through his 2nd son, the Hon. Anthony Dormer; and is still extant.

DOUGLAS—EARL OF DOUGLAS.

Creation, 4 February, 1356-7.

Lineage.

If a long line of illustrious ancestors, distinguished by the highest titles of honour, and connected with the most august houses in Europe, can add importance to a name, there is not one in the empire more dignified than that of Douglas. The family has been connected with the first nobles of Scotland, England and France, and it has intermarried no less than eleven times with the royal houses of Scotland, and once with that of England. The traditional, but probably fabulous, account of the origin of the house is, that about the year 770, in the reign of SOLVATHIUS, King of the Scots, one Donald Bene, of the Western Isles, having invaded the Scottish territory and routed the royal army, a man of rank and figure came seasonably with his friends and followers to the king's assistance, who then renewed the conflict and obtained a complete victory over the invader. The king being desirous of seeing the person who accomplished for him so important a service, that individual was pointed out to the monarch, by his colour or complexion, in these words of the old Gaelic or Celtic language, Sholto du Glas—in English, "Behold the black or swarthy coloured man;" from which the story goes, that he was named Sholto the Douglas. The king rewarded this hero with grants of lands in the co. of Lanark, which were denominated Douglas; and hence the family surname. Sholto is said to have left two sons, Hugh, ancestor of the Douglases in Scotland; and William, progenitor of the Scoti Douglassii in Italy.

WILLIAM DOUGLAS, created EARL OF DOUGLAS, 4 February, 1356-7, was son of Archibald Douglas, regent of Scotland, and nephew of the good SIR JAMES DOUGLAS who commanded the centre of the Scottish army at Rannockburn; and is still more celebrated in history by the journey he undertook for the purpose of depositing BAUCE's heart in the sepulchre of our Lord at Jerusalem. The 1st Earl Douglas m. 1st, Lady Margaret Marr, dau. of Donald, 12th Earl of Marr, sister and heiress of Thomas, 13th of the old Earls of Marr, and thereupon assumed the designation of Earl of Douglas and Marr in 1377. Of this marriage there were two children,

JAMES, who s. to the honours.

Isabel, who became eventually Countess of Marr.

The countess survived him, and as his widow m. 2ndly, Sir John Swinton, of Swinton. Lord Douglas* d. 1384, and was s. by his son,

JAMES DOUGLAS, Earl of Douglas and Marr. This distinguished chieftain, making an incursion into England, in 1388, penetrated to the gates of York; whence returning spoil-laden, his lordship had many skirmishes with the English at Newcastle, in one of which he became possessed of the pennon of Henry Percy (Hotspur), and vaunting that he should erect it on the pinnacle of his own castle, Percy retorted with an oath—"Thou shalt never bear it out of Northumberland;" and to uphold by arms the declaration, himself and his brother, Ralph Percy, attacked Douglas in his camp, at Otterburn, on 19 August, 1388, when a furious conflict ensued, wherein Lord Douglas fell,—but the Percys eventually sustained a signal defeat. While Douglas lay wounded in the brunt of the battle, one of his knightly companions (Sinclair) inquired, "How goes it, cousin?" "But so so. Praise be to God" (replied the sinking soldier), "few of my ancestors have died in chambers or in beds. Avenge me, for I die. My heart faints too rapidly. Raise again my banner, and shout, 'DOUGLAS!' But tell not friend or foe how it fares with me, for my enemies would exult, and my friends be disconsolate." The earl m. Margaret, eldest dau. of King ROBERT II., but left no legitimate issue, whereupon his only sister, Isabel, succeeded as

* The earl had also a son whom he never acknowledged, George Douglas, born of Margaret, Countess of Angus and Mar, his sister-in-law, whom he could not marry. He became Earl of Angus, by King RICHARD II.'s sanction to his mother, with a view to prepare him to be his son-in-law.

Countess of Marr, while the Earldom of Douglas passed, apparently, in consequence of a special entail executed before the birth of George, Earl of Angus, to an illegitimate* son of the good Sir James Douglas,

ARCHIBALD DOUGLAS, Lord of Galloway, as 3rd Earl of Douglas, called "the Grim," the most powerful subject of his time, who m. Jean, or Johanna, dau. and heir of Thomas Moray, Lord of Bothwell, and had (with two daus., Marjory, m. to David, Duke of Rothsay, and Eleanor, wife of Sir Alexander Fraser, of Philorth) two sons,

ARCHIBALD, his heir.

JAMES, who s. as 7th earl.

The elder,

ARCHIBALD DOUGLAS, 4th Earl of Douglas, inheriting, with the brilliant coronet of his house, its martial and chivalrous spirit,—

"And Douglasses were heroes every age,"— commanded the Scots at the battle of Homildon, 14 September, 1402, where he was wounded in five places, lost an eye, and was taken prisoner by Henry Percy. In 1416, his lordship engaged himself, with 200 horse, and a like number of infantry, in the service of HENRY V.; but that monarch dying the next year, and CHARLES VII. of France being anxious to secure the personal aid of so renowned a warrior, Douglas arrived in France in the spring of 1424, and on 19 April following, had a gift of the Duchy of Touraine. He received, likewise, the appointment of lieutenant-general of the French forces; but held that high dignity for a brief period only, falling at the sanguinary battle of Verneuil, 17 August, 1424. His lordship m. Margaret, eldest dau. of ROBERT III., and left (with one dau., Elizabeth, m. 1st, to John, Earl of Buchan, Constable of France; 2ndly, to Thomas Stewart, styled Earl of Garioch, natural son of Alexander, Earl of Mar; and 3rdly, to William, 3rd Earl of Orkney) a son and successor,

ARCHIBALD DOUGLAS, 5th Earl of Douglas, and 2nd Duke of Touraine, who distinguished himself at the battle of Baugé. His lordship m. 1st, Lady Matilda Lindsay, eldest dau. of David, 1st Earl of Crawford; and 2ndly, Lady Euphemia Graham, eldest dau. of Sir Patrick Graham, by Euphemia his wife, Countess of Scrathern. By the latter (who m. 2ndly, in 1440, James, 1st Lord Hamilton) the earl had issue,

WILLIAM, his heir.

David, executed with his brother, in 1440.

Margaret, "the Fair Maid of Galloway," m. 1st, to William, 8th Earl of Douglas; 2ndly, to James, 9th Earl of Douglas; and 3rdly, to John, Earl of Atholl. She had issue by the latter, two daus., who carried her estates into the families of Gordon and Gray.

Lord Douglas d. 26 June, 1438, and was s. by his son,

WILLIAM DOUGLAS, 6th Earl of Douglas, 3rd Duke of Touraine, and 2nd Count of Longueville, in France, a young nobleman of an impetuous spirit and princely magnificence, whose power had risen to so formidable a height, that the Chancellor Crichton determined on its abasement. "By plausible invitations and flatteries, the Earl of Douglas, his brother David, and Malcolm Fleming, of Cumbernauld, a faithful adherent of the family, were inveigled into the castle of Edinburgh, and after an insidious entertainment, and a brief and desultory trial, were beheaded, 24 November, 1440. Upon this event, the Duchy of Touraine reverted to the King of France, while the Scottish earldom devolved on his grand-uncle,

JAMES DOUGLAS, 7th Earl of Douglas; who had been created, in 1437, EARL OF AVONDALE. Of this nobleman, called "James the Gross," the Chronicle of JAMES II. records that "he had in him four stane of taltch and mair." His lordship d. 24 March, 1443, leaving by Lady Beatrix Sinclair his wife (dau. of Henry, Earl of Orkney), six sons and four daus., viz.,

I. WILLIAM, his heir.

II. JAMES, 9th earl.

III. Archibald, Earl of Moray, } attainted 1445.

IV. Hugh, Earl of Ormond,

V. John (Sir, Knt.), Lord of Balveny, forfeited in 1455.

VI. Henry, in holy orders.

I. Margaret, m. to James, 3rd Lord Dalkeith.

II. Beatrix, m. to William, 1st Earl of Erroll, Constable of Scotland.

III. Janet, m. to Robert, Lord Fleming.

IV. Elizabeth, m. to William Wallace, of Craigie.

The eldest son,

WILLIAM DOUGLAS, 8th Earl of Douglas, lieutenant-general of the kingdom, restored the splendour and power of the house of Douglas, by his marriage with his cousin "the Fair Maid of Galloway." The fate of the earl whom JAMES II. stabbed in Stirling Castle with his own hand and while under the royal safeguard, is familiar to all who read Scottish history. He d. in 1451, leaving no issue, and was s. by his brother,

JAMES DOUGLAS, 9th Earl of Douglas, who got a dispensation to marry his cousin, the Fair Maid of Galloway, on the ground that the marriage with his brother had not been completed. He m., however, 4th EDWARD IV., Lady Anne Holland, dau. of John, 2nd Duke of Exeter, K.G., widow, 1st, of John, Lord Neville; and 2ndly, of Sir John Neville. His lordship, in revenge for the late earl's death, took up arms against King JAMES, and it cost him little more than the waving of his banner to collect an army of full 40,000 men, with which he encamped on the south side of the Carron, to await the attack of the royal army. Owing, however, to the desertion of Hamilton and other chieftains, the troops of Douglas dissolved like a snow-wreath on a sudden thaw; and on the fearful morning succeeding that on which the Earl Douglas led out his mighty host, his empty camp scarce contained 100 soldiers, save his own household troops. Douglas himself, in the spring of 1455, fled into England, with very few attendants. His three brothers, Moray, Ormond, and Balveny, remaining in Kewdale, maintained their followers by military license, and harassed the adjacent country, until completely routed at Arkinholm. Moray fell in the action; Ormond was made prisoner, condemned, and executed; and of the brethren of Douglas, Balveny alone effected his escape. In the June following, a parliament met in Edinburgh, and decreed the forfeiture of Douglas and his brothers. The title of Douglas accordingly ceased; and thus fell, and for ever, the formidable power of the house of Douglas, which had so lately measured itself against that of monarchy. "It can only," to quote a beautiful simile of Sir Walter Scott, "be compared to the gourd of the prophet, which, spreading in such miraculous luxuriance, was withered in a single night." The earl was received with favour by the ruling party in England. EDWARD IV. granted him a pension, admitted him to the privileges of an English subject, and invested him with the order of the Garter. In 1483, having raised 500 horse and a small body of infantry, the exiled lord advanced to Lochmaben; but the west-border men rose to repel the incursion, and the invaders were defeated. Struck from his horse, and surrounded by enemies, the aged Douglas surrendered himself to a son of Kirkpatrick, of Closeburn, and was conveyed to the royal presence; but, either from shame or scorn turned his back on the son of JAMES II., the destroyer of his house. A ray of pity illuminated the despotic mind of the king; he merely sentenced Douglas to the religious retirement of Lindores Abbey; while the earl's indifference muttered—"He who may no better be must be a monk." In this retreat he d. after four years' penance and peace, 15 April, 1488.

Arms—As Douglas, Duke of Douglas.

DOUGLAS—DUKE OF DOUGLAS.

By Letters Patent, dated 18 April, 1703.

Lineage.

GEORGE DOUGLAS, only son of William, 1st Earl of Douglas, by Margaret his 3rd wife, Countess of Angus, obtained, on his mother's resignation in parliament, 1389, a grant of the Earldom of Angus, to himself and the heirs of his body. He m. in 1397, Mary, 2nd dau. of King ROBERT III., and by her (who m. 2ndly, Sir James Kennedy, of Dunure; 3rdly, Sir William Graham, of Kincardine; and 4thly, Sir William Edmonstone, of Duntreath) had issue,

I. WILLIAM, 2nd Earl of Angus.

II. GEORGE, 4th Earl of Angus.

I. Mary, m. Alexander, 1st Lord Forbes.

The elder son,

WILLIAM DOUGLAS, 2nd Earl of Angus, warden of the Middle Marches, who routed Sir Robert Ogle at Piperdean, in 1435. He m. in 1425, Margaret, only dau. of Sir William Hay, of Yester; and dying in 1437, was s. by his son,

JAMES DOUGLAS, 3rd Earl of Angus; who m. Lady Johanna Stewart, 3rd dau. of King JAMES I., but by her (who m. 2ndly, James, Earl of Morton) he had no issue. He was alive in 1445. His uncle and successor,

GEORGE DOUGLAS, 4th Earl of Angus, a gallant warrior, m. Isabel, dau. of Sir Andrew Sibbald, of Balgony, in Fifeshire, and by her, who m. 2ndly, Robert Douglas, of Lochleven, left at his decease, 14 November, 1462,

* The illegitimacy of this ancestor of the Douglasses is established beyond all controversy by the Douglas entail of 1332.

- I. ARCHIBALD, 5th earl.
- II. Anne, m. to William, Lord Graham.
- III. John de Douglas, who appears to have d. s. p.
- IV. Isabel, m. to Sir Alexander Ramsay, of Dalhousie.
- V. Elizabeth, m. (contract dated 1476) to Sir Robert Graham, of Fintry.
- VI. Margaret, m. to Sir Duncan Campbell.
- VII. Elizabeth.
- VIII. Janet, m. George, Earl of Rothes.
- IX. Giles, or Egilia.
- X. Alison.

The only son,

ARCHIBALD DOUGLAS, 5th Earl of Angus, is known in history as "Archibald, Bell-the-Cat." His lordship accompanied JAMES IV. in his fatal expedition to England, and shortly before the conflict of Flodden, which laid low the flower of the Scottish chivalry, strongly remonstrated against the king's imprudence in accepting Surrey's challenge. "If you be afraid, Angus," said his majesty, coldly, in reply to the earl's arguments, "you may go home." Angus would not remain in the camp after the affront; he departed with tears of anger and sorrow, leaving his two sons and his followers, with a command to stand by their royal master to the last; in defence of whom they gallantly fought, and at length fell, with 200 gentlemen of their name. Angus retired to the priory of Whithorn, in Galloway, and there passed the brief residue of his life in acts of devotion and charity, until his death in 1514. He m. 1st, 4 March, 1468, Elizabeth, only dau. of Robert, Lord Boyd, and had issue,

- I. GEORGE, master of Angus, who fell at Flodden, leaving by Elizabeth his wife, 2nd dau. of John, 1st Lord Drummond,
 - 1 ARCHIBALD, successor to his grandfather.
 - 2 George (Sir), of Pittendreich, who fell at Pinkie in 1547, leaving by Elizabeth his wife, dau. and heir of David Douglas, two sons, DAVID, who s. as 7th Earl of Angus; and JAMES, created Earl of Morton; and two daus., Margaret, wife of Sir John Carmichael; and Mary, m. to Sir George Auchinleck, of Balmanno.
 - 3 William, prior of Coldingham.
 - 1 Elizabeth, m. about 1509, to John, 3rd Lord Yester.
 - 2 Jean, m. 1st, John, 8th Lord Glamis; 2ndly, Archibald Campbell, of Skipnish.
 - 3 Margaret, m. 1513, to Sir James Douglas, of Drumlanrig.
 - 4 Alison, m. 1st, 1510, to Robert Blackader, of Blackader, in Berwickshire; and 2ndly, to David Home, of Wedderburn.
 - 6 Isabel, m. to Robert Crawford, of Auchinames.
- II. William (Sir, Knt.), of Glenbervie, also fell at Flodden, father of Sir Archibald Douglas, of Glenbervie, whose son s. as 9th Earl of Angus.
- III. Gawen, bishop of Dunkeld, translator of Virgil's "Æneid."
 1. Mariot, m. to Cuthbert, Earl of Glencairn.
 2. Elizabeth, m. to Robert, 2nd Lord Lyle.
 - III. Janet, m. to Andrew, son and heir of Herbert, Lord Herries, of Terregles.

He m. 2ndly, Catherine, dau. of Sir William Stirling, of Keir, by whom he had a dau., Mary, wife of James, 1st Lord Ogilvy, of Airly; and a son, Archibald (Sir), of Kilspindie, high treasurer of Scotland, the King's "Grey stell," who d. in France, broken-hearted—a victim to royal ingratitude. The earl's grandson and successor,

ARCHIBALD DOUGLAS, 6th Earl of Angus, one of the council of regency, and afterwards high chancellor of Scotland, acted a conspicuous part in Scottish history. He held, for a considerable period, uncontrolled sway in the affairs of state, and, soldier as well as statesman, frequently distinguished himself in the military transactions of his time. At Ancrum Muir he behaved with great courage, and at Pinkie commanded the van of the Scottish army. He m. 1st, Lady Mary Hepburn, 2nd dau. of Patrick, 1st Earl of Bothwell, who d. s. p.; and 2ndly, 6 August, 1514, MARGARET, of England, queen dowager of JAMES IV., by whom (who m. 3rdly, Henry Stewart, Lord Methven) he had an only dau.,

MARGARET, b. 18 October, 1515, m. to Matthew, 4th Earl of Lennox; and d. in 1577. Her eldest son, HENRY, Lord Darnley, was husband of Queen MARY, and father of King JAMES VI.

His lordship m. 3rdly, 9 August, 1543, Margaret, only dau. of Robert, 5th Lord Maxwell, and by her (who m. 2ndly, Sir William Baillie, of Lamington) had a son, James, who d. v. p. The earl d. in 1556, and was s. by his cousin,

DAVID DOUGLAS, 7th Earl of Angus, who m. Margaret, dau. of Sir John Hamilton, of Clydesdale, and d. 1558, leaving (with two daus., Margaret, m. 1st, to Sir Walter Scott, of Buccleuch; and 2ndly, to Francis, Earl of Bothwell; and Elizabeth, m. 1st, to John, 7th Lord Maxwell, and 2ndly, to Sir Alexander Stuart, of Garlies) a son and successor,

ARCHIBALD DOUGLAS, 8th Earl of Angus, called "the Good Earl," who m. 1st, Lady Mary Erskine, only dau. of John, 6th Earl of Marr, regent of Scotland (divorced); 2ndly, Lady Margaret Lesley, 4th dau. of Andrew, 4th Earl of Rothes; and 3rdly, in 1586, Jean, eldest dau. of John, 10th Lord Glamis, and relict of Robert, Master of Morton. By the two first he had no issue, but by the last (who m. 3rdly, Alexander, Lord Spynie) had a son, who had separate guardians appointed for the Earldoms of Angus and Morton in 1588 9; a dau., Elizabeth, who d. young. His lordship d. in 1588. His kinsman and eventual male heir (the grandson of Sir William Douglas, 2nd son of Archibald, 5th Earl of Angus)

SIR WILLIAM DOUGLAS, Knt., of Glenbervie, succeeded as 9th Earl of Angus. His lordship obtained a charter from King JAMES V., in 1591, confirming all the ancient privileges of the family of Douglas—namely, The first vote in council or parliament; to be the king's hereditary lieutenant; to have the leading of the van of the army in the day of battle; and to carry the crown at coronations; to himself and his heirs male. All these were again confirmed by a charter under the great seal, in 1602. The earl m. Egilia, dau. of Sir Robert Graham, of Morphee; and dying in 1691, left issue,

I. WILLIAM, 10th earl.

II. Robert, of Glenbervie, whose eldest son, SIR WILLIAM, created a Bart. of Nova Scotia, 30 May, 1625, was grandfather of the gallant SIR ROBERT DOUGLAS, of Glenbervie. He m. 1st, Mary, dau. of Sir William Ruthven, of Douglass, he had a son, Sir William Douglas, who d. s. p. 27 July, 1764, et. seventy-five; and 2ndly, Janet, dau. of — Paterson, of Dunmure, in Fife, which lady d. 9 February, 1750.

III. Gavin, of Bridgeford.

IV. John, of Barras.

V. Archibald.

VI. Duncan.

I. Margaret, m. to William Forbes, of Monymusk.

II. Elizabeth, m. to Sir Alexander Gordon, of Cluny.

III. Jean, m. to James Wishart, of Pittarrow.

IV. Sarah, m. 1st, to Sir Alexander Strachan, of Thornton, Bart.; 2ndly, to Sir George Auchinleck, of Balmanno.

The eldest son,

WILLIAM DOUGLAS, 10th Earl of Angus, who m. Elizabeth, eldest dau. of Lawrence, 4th Lord Oliphant, and had issue,

WILLIAM, his heir.

James, created LORD MORDINGTON.

Francis (Sir), of Sandilands, m. a sister of the Earl of Wigton, and d. s. p.

Mary, m. to Alexander, 2nd Earl of Linlithgow.

Margaret, m. to Sir John Campbell, of Calder.

The earl d. 3 March, 1611, was buried at St. Germain de Prez, and was s. by his son,

WILLIAM DOUGLAS, 11th Earl of Angus, a devoted partisan of CHARLES I., by whom he was created MARQUESS OF DOUGLAS, 17 June, 1633. He m. 1st, the Hon. Margaret Hamilton, only dau. of Claude, Lord Paisley, and had by her (with three daus., Margaret, wife of William, Lord Alexander; Jean, m. to John, 1st Lord Bargeny; and Grisel, m. to William, Master of Carmichael) two sons,

ARCHIBALD, who was created, in the lifetime of his father, Earl of Ormond, Lord Bothwell and Hartside, with remainder to the heirs male of his 2nd marriage, 3 April, 1631. He m. 1st, Lady Anne Stuart, 2nd dau. of Esme, Duke of Lennox, by whom he had a son, JAMES, 2nd Marquess of Douglas. His lordship m. 2ndly, 22 April, 1649, Lady Jean Wemyss, by whom he had, with a dau., a son, ARCHIBALD, afterwards Earl of Forfar. He d. 15 January, 1665.

James, a distinguished general in the service of LOUIS XIV., slain at Douay in 1655.

He m. 2ndly, 15 September, 1632, Lady Mary Gordon, dau. of George, Marquess of Huntly, and had issue,

I. WILLIAM, Earl of Selkirk, afterwards DUKE OF HAMILTON.

II. George, created EARL OF DUMBARTON.

III. James, colonel in the army, d. s. p.

I. Henriot, m. to James, Earl of Annandale.

II. Catherine, m. to Sir William Ruthven, of Douglas.

III. Isabel, m. in 1657, to William, 1st Duke of Queensberry.

IV. Jean, m. 18 January, 1670, James, Earl of Perth, High Chancellor of Scotland.

V. Lucy, m. Robert, 4th Earl of Nithsdale.

VI. Mary, d. unm.

The marquess d. 19 February, 1660, and was s. by his grandson,

JAMES DOUGLAS, 2nd Marquess of Douglas, b. 1646, who m. 1st, 7 September, 1670, Lady Barbara Erskine, eldest dau. of John, 9th Earl of Marr, by whom he had a son, JAMES, killed at the battle of Steinkirk, et. 3 August, 1692; and 2ndly, 13 December, 1692, Lady Mary Ker, 3rd dau. of Robert, 1st Marquess of Lothian, by whom he had (with a dau., JANE, m. to Sir John Stewart, Bart., of Grandtully, co. Perth, and d. 23 November, 1753, aged fifty-six) two sons, William, Earl of Angus, b. 15 October, 1693, d. 20 May, 1694, buried at Douglas.

ARCHIBALD, 3rd marquess.

The 2nd son,

ARCHIBALD DOUGLAS, 3rd Marquess of Douglas, & his father in 1700. His lordship was created DUKE OF DOUGLAS, Marquess of Angus and Abernethy, Viscount of Jedburgh Forest, and Lord Douglas, of Bonkill, by patent, dated 18 April, 1703. He m. in 1758, Margaret, eldest dau. of James Douglas, of Mains; but d. s. p. in 1761, when the ducal honours became EXTINCT. The Marquessate of Douglas devolved on the Duke of Hamilton; and the Duke of Douglas's nephew, ARCHIBALD STEWART, was returned heir of line and provision to that nobleman; but the Duke of Hamilton, disputing the return, on the ground of Mr. Stewart's birth being surreptitious, and the Scotch courts determining in favour of Hamilton, an appeal was made to the House of Lords, which reversed the Scottish judgment, in February, 1769. This suit (known so well by the name of the "Douglas cause") made a noise all over Europe, and is one of the most extraordinary ever litigated. (See "Viciantules of Families," 3rd Series.) Mr. Stewart, becoming thus entitled to the estates, assumed the surname and arms of "DOUGLAS," and was elevated to the peerage, as BARON DOUGLAS, of Douglas Castle, 9th July, 1790.

Arms—Arg., a heart, gu., imperially crowned, or, on a chief, az., three mullets of the field.

NOTE.—At an armed conclave of nobles held in Lauder Church, in 1483, to adopt means of resisting the power and influence of the king's favourite, the base-born Cochrane, Earl of Marr, Lord Gray reminded the assembly of the fable in which the mice are said to have laid a project for preventing the future ravages of the cat by tying a bell around her neck. "An excellent proposal," said the orator, "which fell unexpectedly to the ground, because none of the mice had the courage to fasten the bell." "I will bell the cat," exclaimed Angus, and thus obtained the appellation by which he is so well known. Cochrane was seized immediately after, and, with the king's other favourites, hanged over the bridge of Lauder.

DOUGLAS—EARL OF ATHOLL.

SIR WILLIAM DOUGLAS, Lord of Liddisdale, designated "the flower of chivalrie," eldest son of Sir James Douglas de Loudonia, ancestor of the Earls of Morton, had the earldom conferred upon him not long after the death of John Campbell, Earl of Atholl, who fell at Halidon Hill, in 1333, but the precise date does not appear. William Douglas, Earl of Atholl, resigned his title, and gave a charter of the Earldom of Atholl to Robert Stewart, great steward of Scotland, at Aberdeen, 16 February, 1341. This dignity thereby became vested in the royal family on the Steward's accession to the throne of England.

DOUGLAS—EARL OF DUMBARTON.

By Letters Patent, dated 9 March, 1675.

Lineage.

LORD GEORGE DOUGLAS, 3rd son of William, 1st Marquess of Douglas, was, in his younger years, page to Louis XIV., King of France, and afterwards entering the French army, and participating in most of the battles and sieges between the French and the Confederates, attained the rank of major-gen. After the treaty of Nimeguen, in 1673, he was called over to Britain by King CHARLES II., who created him EARL OF DUMBARTON, by patent, dated 9 March, 1675; and upon the accession of King JAMES II., he was constituted commander-in-chief of the forces in Scotland, in which capacity he defeated the Earl of Argyll's invasion. He m. a sister of the Duchess of Northumberland, and had a son,

GEORGE DOUGLAS, 2nd Earl of Dumbarton, who had the commission of lieutenant-col. of Dubourgay's regt. of foot in the British service, 1715, and the appointment of ambassador to Russia, 1716. He d. s. p., and with him the title became EXTINCT.

DOUGLAS—EARL OF FORFAR.

By Patent, dated 3 April, 1651.

Lineage.

ARCHIBALD DOUGLAS, Earl of Angus (eldest son and heir apparent of William, 1st Marquess of Douglas), was, by patent, dated 3 April, 1651, created Earl of Ormond, Lord Bothwell and Hartside, with remainder to the heirs male of his 2nd marriage. He d. 15 January, 1655, and, in terms of the patent, was s. by the only son of his 2nd marriage with Lady Jean Wemyss, afterwards Countess of Sutherland.

ARCHIBALD DOUGLAS, 2nd Earl of Ormond, b. 1653, who obtained a new patent, dated 20 October, 1661, creating him EARL OF FORFAR, Lord Wandale and Hartside, with remainder to his heirs-male. He early espoused the Revolution, was sworn a privy councillor to King WILLIAM, and appointed one of the commissioners for executing the office of keeper of the privy seal. He was also of the privy council to Queen ANNE, and one of the commissioners of the Treasury, which he held till the dissolution of that court, in consequence of the treaty of Union. He m. Rabina, dau. of Sir William Lockhart, Knt., of Lee, in the co. of Lanark, ambassador extraordinary to the court of France, grandniece of Oliver Cromwell and by her (who d. at Bothwell Castle, 20 March, 1749, aged seventy-nine) left at his decease, 12 December, 1712, a son and successor,

ARCHIBALD DOUGLAS, 2nd Earl of Forfar, an officer in the army, who was appointed col. of the 3rd regt. of foot, or buffs, 13 April, 1713, and nominated envoy extraordinary to Prussia, in 1714. He served as a brigadier-gen. at the battle of Sheriffmuir, 13 November, 1715, when he received a shot on the knee, was made prisoner, and d. of his wounds, at Stirling, on 8 December following, unm., when his titles and estates devolved on the Duke of Douglas.

DOUGLAS—EARL OF MORAY.

(See RANDOLPH, Earl of Moray.)

DOUGLAS—EARL OF MORTON.

(See that title in BURKE's Extant Peerage.)

DOUGLAS—EARL OF ORMOND.

Lineage.

HUGH DOUGLAS, 4th son of James, 7th Earl of Douglas, was created EARL OF ORMOND in 1445; but engaging in the rebellion of the Douglasses, was attainted and executed in 1455. His son Hugh, dean of Brechin, d. s. p.

DOUGLAS—VISCOUNT OF BELHAVEN.

By Letters Patent, dated 24 June, 1633.

Lineage.

Arms—See DOUGLAS, Duke of Douglas.

DOUGLAS—LORD MORDINGTOUN.

By Letters Patent, dated 14 November, 1641.

Lineage.

SIR JAMES DOUGLAS, 2nd son of William, 10th Earl of Angus, m. Anne, only child of Laurence, 5th Lord Oliphant. A controversy arose between her and the male heir for the title of Lord Oliphant, which was determined in presence of CHARLES I., in the court of Session, 1633, when it was adjudged that Anne Oliphant had no right to the honours; but the king was pleased to create her husband a peer, by the title of LORD MORDINGTOUN, 14 November, 1641, with the precedence of Oliphant (1456). He d. 11 February, 1656, leaving a son and a dau., viz.,

WILLIAM, 2nd Lord Mordingtoun.
Anne, m. to Robert, 7th Lord Sempill.

The son and heir,

WILLIAM DOUGLAS, 2nd Lord Mordingtoun, m. Elizabeth, eldest dau. of Hugh, 5th Lord Sempill, and had two sons, JAMES, 3rd lord; Lewis, d. 1682. The elder,

JAMES DOUGLAS, 3rd Lord Mordingtoun, m. the Hon. Jean Seton, eldest dau. of Alexander, 1st Viscount of Kingston, and was father of

GEORGE DOUGLAS, 4th Lord Mordingtoun, who d. in Covent Garden, 10 June, 1741. He m. Catherine, dau. of Dr. Robert Lauder, rector of Shenty, in Hertfordshire, and by her had a son,

CHARLES DOUGLAS, 5th Lord Mordingtoun, who adopted the naval profession early in life, and did not return home till after his father's death, when, having no landed property, he did not assume the title. In 1745, he joined the young Pretender, was taken prisoner, and arraigned at Carlisle, 11 September, 1746, under the designation of Charles Douglas, Esq.; he pleaded, however, his peerage as Lord Mordingtoun, and proving his descent, his trial was put off, and he was remanded back prisoner to the castle of Carlisle. Dying s. p., his lordship was s. by his sister, MARY DOUGLAS, Baroness Mordingtoun, who assumed that title. Her ladyship m. William Weaver, Esq., an officer of the royal regiment of horse-guards, who was at the battle of Dettingen and Fontenoy, but by him (who d. 28 April, 1796) had no issue. She d. 22 July, 1791.

DOUGLAS—BARON CARLYLE.

By Letters Patent, dated 1609.

Lineage.

SIR JAMES DOUGLAS, eldest son of Sir James Douglas, of Parkhead, by Elizabeth his wife, only child of William Carlyle, master of Carlyle, had the title of CARLYLE conferred on him in 1609. His lordship m. 1st, Grisel, youngest dau. of Sir John Gordon, of Lochinvar; and 2ndly, Anne Saltonstall. By the latter he had a son, James, b. at Edinburgh, 2 January, 1621; and by the former, it is said, a son, William, who sold his estate, and d. abroad s. p. According to Crawford, James, Lord Carlyle, resigned his title, in 1638, to William, Earl of Queensbury.

Arms—As DOUGLAS, Duke of Douglas.

DOUGLAS—DUKES OF DOVER.

By Letters Patent, dated 26 May, 1706.

Lineage.

JAMES DOUGLAS, who s. his father in 1695, as 2nd DUKE OF QUEENSBURY, in the Scottish peerage, having taken a prominent part in the Revolution, was appointed in 1693 one of the lords of the treasury in Scotland, and the following year had a patent to sit and vote in the parliament of that kingdom as Lord High Treasurer. After his accession to the Dukedom of Queensbury, his grace was made by King WILLIAM, lord privy seal of Scotland, and one of the extraordinary lords of Session; and in 1700 appointed lord high commissioner to represent the king in the parliament of Scotland, where he held two sessions under two distinct patents. Upon his return to court, his grace was elected a knight of the most noble order of the Garter; and at Queen ANNE's accession to the crown, he was made secretary of state for Scotland. In 1703 he, for the fourth time, filled the office of lord high commissioner, and again in 1706, being the last session of the parliament of Scotland, in which, with the utmost efforts, his grace carried the measure of union between the two kingdoms. For all these eminent services the duke was rewarded with a pension of 3,000*l.* a-year out of the post-office, and the first peerage of Great Britain, under the titles of Baron Ripon, Marquess of Beverley, and DUKE OF DOVER, with remainder to his 2nd son, Charles, Earl of Solway. His grace m. 4 December, 1695, Mary, 2nd dau. of Charles, Lord Clifford, and grand-dau. of Richard Boyle, Earl of Burlington and Cork, and by her (who d. 2 October, 1709) had, with other issue,

James, an imbecile.

CHARLES, b. 24 November, 1698, created 17 June, 1706, Viscount Tibbera, and Earl of Solway.

George, b. 20 February, 1701; d. unm. at Paris, 1725.

Jane, m. 5 April, 1720, to Francis, Earl of Dalkeith, afterwards Duke of Buccleuch, and d. 31 August, 1729.

Anne, m. 25 January, 1733, to the Hon. William Finch, brother of Daniel, Earl of Winchelsea and Nottingham, d. s. p. 26 October, 1741.

The duke d. in 1711, and was s. by his eldest surviving son,

CHARLES DOUGLAS, Earl of Solway, as 2nd Duke of Dover. His grace m. 10 March, 1720, Lady Catherine Hyde, 2nd dau. of Henry, Earl of Clarendon and Rochester, and had two sons,

HENRY, Earl of Drumlanrig, b. 30 October, 1722; m. 24 July, 1754, Lady Elizabeth Hope, eldest dau. of John, 2nd Earl of Hopetoun, and was killed 19 October, 1754, by the accidental discharge of his own pistol. The countess d. s. p. 7 April, 1756.

Charles, Earl of Drumlanrig, b. 17 July, 1726, d. unm. 24 October, 1756.

The duke d. at the age of eighty, on 22 October, 1778, and leaving no issue, the DUKEDOM OF DOVER, and his other British honours became EXTINCT. The Scottish dignities devolved on different heirs, and are now enjoyed in part by the Duke of Buccleuch as heir of line, and in part by the Marquess of Queensbury, as heir male.

Arms—Quarterly, 1st and 4th, arg., a heart, gu., crowned with an imperial crown, or, on a chief, az., three mullets of the field, for DOUGLAS; 2nd and 3rd, a bend between six cross-crosslets, fitché, or, (for the EARLDOM OF MARR), the whole within a bordure, or, charged with a double treasure, fleury and counter-fleury of the 2nd, being an augmentation; as was also the heart in the 1st quarter, used in memory of the pilgrimage made by Sir James Douglas, ancestor of his grace, to the Holy Land, in the year 1330, with the heart of King ROBERT BRUCE, which was there interred according to that monarch's own desire. The double treasure was added by King CHARLES II., when he honoured the family with the Marquessate of Queensbury, the bordure previously being plain.

NOTE.—The officers of state in Scotland, prior to the Union, had seats in parliament ex officio and when an office was placed in commission the crown had the privilege to appoint any one person to represent the said office in parliament.

DOUGLAS—BARON DOUGLAS, OF AMBRESBURY.

By Letters Patent, dated 8 August, 1786.

Lineage.

WILLIAM DOUGLAS, 3rd Earl of March, who s. in 1778, as 4th Duke of Queensbury, in Scotland, was created a peer of Great Britain, 8 August, 1786, as BARON DOUGLAS, of Ambresbury, co. Wilts, but dying unm., 23 December, 1810, the barony became EXTINCT.

DOUGLAS—BARON DOUGLAS, OF DOUGLAS CASTLE.

By Letters Patent, dated 9 July, 1790.

Lineage.

SIR JOHN STEWART, Bart. of Grandtully (brother and successor of Sir George Stewart, of Balcaskie, who inherited the estate of Grandtully, and 2nd son of Sir Thomas Stewart of Balcaskie, created a Baronet of Nova Scotia, 2 January, 1683), m. for his 2nd wife,

THE LADY JANE DOUGLAS, only dau. of James, 2nd Marquess of Douglas, by whom he had two sons (twins), Sholto, the younger, who d. in infancy; and

ARCHIBALD STEWART, b. 10 July, 1748. This gentleman, upon the demise of his uncle, Archibald, Duke of Douglas, without issue, 21 July, 1761 (when the dukedom expired), was returned heir of line and provision to that nobleman; but the Duke of Hamilton, who had inherited his grace's Marquessate of Douglas, disputing his return, on the ground of Mr. Stewart's birth being surreptitious, and the Scotch court determining in favour of Hamilton, an appeal was made to the House of Lords, which reversed the Scottish judgment, 27 February, 1769.* Mr. Stewart becoming thus entitled to the estates, assumed the surname and arms of DOUGLAS, and was elevated to the peerage as BARON DOUGLAS, of Douglas Castle, 9 July, 1790. His lordship m. 1st, in June, 1771, Lucy, only dau. of William, 2nd Duke of Montrose, by whom (who d. 13 February, 1780), he had issue,

ARCHIBALD, 2nd baron.

CHARLES, late peer.

Jane-Margaret, m. 1804, to Henry-James, Lord Montague, of Boughton, who d. in 1848.

Lord Douglas m. 2ndly, 13 May, 1783, Frances, posthumous dau. of Francis, Earl of Dalkeith, and sister of Henry, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch, by whom he had,

Sholto-Scott, b. in 1785; d. in 1831.

JAMES, in holy orders, 4th lord

George, capt. R.N., b. 2 August, 1788; d. unm. in 1838.

Caroline-Lucy, m. 27 October, 1810, to Admiral Sir George Scott, K.C.B., who d. in 1841. She d. 20 April, 1857.

Frances-Elizabeth, m. 1826, William-Moray Stirling, Esq., of Abercairny and Ardoch, N.B., who d. 9 November, 1850. She d. 14 September, 1854.

Mary-Sidney, m. in 1821, to Robert Douglas, Esq., of Strathany, who d. in 1844.

His lordship d. 26 December, 1827, and was s. by his eldest son,

ARCHIBALD, 2nd baron, b. 25 March, 1773, who d. unm. in January, 1844, and was s. by his brother,

CHARLES, 3rd baron, who d. 10 September, 1848, and was s. by his brother,

JAMES DOUGLAS, 4th Baron of Douglas Castle, co. Lanark, in holy orders, hereditary sheriff of the co. Forfar, b. 9 July, 1787; m. 18 May, 1813, Wilhelmina, 2nd dau. of the late Gen. Hon. James Murray; d. s. p. 6 April, 1857, when the title became extinct, and the estates devolved on his lordship's half-sister, Lady Montagu.

Arms—Quarterly: 1st. az., a lion rampant, arg., crowned with an imperial crown, or, for the EARLDOM OF GALLOWAY; 2nd, or, a lion rampant, gu., surmounted of a bend, sa., for LORD ABERNETHY; 3rd, arg., three piles, gu., for WISHART of Brechin; 4th, or, a fesse, chequy, az. and arg., surmounted of a bend, gu., charged with three buckles of the 1st, for STEWART of Bonkle; over all, upon an escutcheon, arg., a man's heart, gu., ensigned with an imperial crown, ppr.; on a chief, az., three stars, of the 1st, the paternal coat of DOUGLAS.

* Sir John Stewart asserted that he had twin sons by the Lady Jane Douglas, born at the house of a Madame le Brun, 10 July, 1748, in the Faubourg St. Germain, at Paris, her ladyship being then in her 51st year. One of these children, Sholto, d. an infant, and against the other, ARCHIBALD STEWART, inheriting the estates of his maternal uncle, Archibald, Duke of Douglas, on that nobleman's decease, 21 July, 1761, to whom he was returned heir of line and provision, the guardians of James-George (the minor), Duke of Hamilton, instituted a suit-at-law, and the Scottish courts determined in favour of his grace. From the decision an appeal was made to the House of Lords, which eventually reversed it, and confirmed Sir Archibald in the possession of the Douglas estates. One of the guardians of the duke and institutors of the suit, Sir Andrew Stuart, subsequently published, in January 1773, some very strong letters, addressed to Lord Mansfield, arraigning the conduct of his lordship during the progress of this celebrated litigation, and maintaining the rectitude of the Scottish decision (See "Vicissitudes of Families."

DOUGLAS—BARON GLENBERVIE.

DRUMMOND—DUKE OF MELFORT.

By Letters Patent, dated 12 August, 1686.

Lineage.

The Hon. JOHN DRUMMOND, 2nd son of James, 3rd Earl of Perth, was appointed general of the ordnance, and deputy-governor of the castle of Edinburgh, 1680; treasurer-depute in 1682; and one of the principal secretaries of state in September, 1684. On the accession of King JAMES VII., 1686, he was continued in that office, and created VISCOUNT OF MELFORT, in Argyllshire (part of the forfeited estate of Argyll), and LORD DRUMMOND, of Gilestoun, 14 April, 1685; and for the better support of that honour, got a grant of the barony of Melfort, and estate of Duchal, which was dissolved from the crown by act of parliament. He was created EARL OF MELFORT, Viscount of Forth, Lord Drummond, of Riccartoun, Castlemains, and Gilston, 12 August, 1686, the patents of his honours being taken to him and the heirs-male of his body of his 2nd marriage; which failing, to the heirs-male whatever of his body, as he was disappointed by the family of Lundin, who were zealous Protestants, in his attempt to educate his two sons of the 1st marriage in the Catholic faith. When the Order of the Thistle was revived, in 1687, the Earl of Melfort was constituted one of the knights companions thereof, continued in the office of secretary till the Revolution, when he repaired to King JAMES in France; attended him to Ireland, in the year 1690, and was by him created DUKE OF Melfort and Marquess of Forth, and invested with the Order of the Garter. Not returning to Scotland within the time limited by law, he was outlawed by the court of justiciary, 23 July, 1694, and attainted, 2 July, 1694, by act of parliament. By a clause it was provided that his forfeiture should no ways affect or taint the blood of the children procreated betwixt him and Sophia Lundin his 1st wife. He had the chief administration at St. Germain for several years, and d. there in January, 1714. DUDLEY—VISCOUNTS L'ISLE, EARLS OF WARWICK, DUKE OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

Viscounty, by Letters Patent, dated 12 March, 1542.

Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 17 February, 1547.

Dukedom, by Letters Patent, dated 11 October, 1551.

Lineage.

SIR JOHN SUTTON, K.G., 4th Baron Dudley, of that family, m. Elizabeth, dau. and co-heir of Sir John Berkeley, Knt., of Beveston, and widow of Sir Edward Charlton, Lord Powis, and had, with other issue, John, his 2nd son, who assuming the name of Dudley, became

JOHN DUDLEY; this gentleman m. Elizabeth, one of the daus. and co-heirs of John Bramshot, Esq., of Bramshot, and was father of

EDMUND DUDLEY, so well known, with his colleague, Richard Empson, as the rapacious minister of King HENRY VII. Dudley was brought up to the bar, having studied at Gray's Inn, and before he entered the service of the king, he had attained considerable eminence in his profession. Upon the accession of HENRY, he was sworn of the privy council, and he subsequently filled the speaker's chair of the House of Commons; whilst in the latter office, they were about making him a serjeant-at-law, when he petitioned the king, for what reason does not appear, that he might be discharged from assuming that dignity. This occurred in the 19th of HENRY VII., and in three years afterwards, he obtained the stewardship of the rape of Hastings, in the county of Suffolk. "Whether (writes Dugdale), Dudley, with Richard Empson, another lawyer, son to a sieve-maker, discerning King HENRY to be of a frugal disposition, did first project the taking advantage against such as had transgressed the penal laws, by exacting from them the forfeitures according to those statutes, or whether the king perceiving so fair a gap open, to rake vast sums of money from his subjects, finding those persons to be fit instruments for his purpose, did put them upon such courses for filling his coffers, 'tis hard to say. But certain it is, that these were they, whom he constituted his judices faciales (Dudley being an eminent man, and one that could put hateful business into good language, as Lord Verulam saith)." The extortions of those men exciting universal clamour, HENRY VIII. commenced his reign by the popular acts of submitting their oppressive conduct to judicial investigation before a criminal court; Dudley was tried at Guildhall, in the city of London, and Empson at Northampton, and both being found guilty, were beheaded together on Tower Hill, on 28 August, in the 2nd year of HENRY VIII. Dudley, in the day of his power, having obtained the wardship of Elizabeth Grey, dau. of Edward, 1st Viscount L'Isle, by Elizabeth Talbot, dau. of John Talbot, Viscount L'Isle, and sister and co-heir of Thomas Talbot, 2nd and last Viscount L'Isle, of the Shrewsbury family, m. the said Elizabeth Grey, and left issue by her,

JOHN, of whom presently.

Andrew (Sir), involved in the conspiracy to elevate Lady Jane Grey to the throne, and received sentence of death in the 1st year of MARY.

Jerome.

Elizabeth, m. to William, 6th Lord Stourton.

Of these, JOHN, the eldest son, had scarcely attained his eighth year at the period of his father's execution, and being in ward to Edward Guilford, Esq., of the body of the king, that gentleman petitioned that the attainder of Edmund Dudley might be repealed, and obtained a special act of parliament (3rd HENRY VIII.), which restored the said

JOHN DUDLEY, in name, blood and degree, so that he might inherit all his deceased father's lands. From this period twelve years elapsed before John Dudley appeared in public, and the first we afterwards hear of him is his receiving the honour of knighthood from Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, general of the army sent into France against the Duke of Bourbon. In the 19th of HENRY VIII., Sir John Dudley was in the train of Cardinal Wolsey upon an embassy into France; and in eight years afterwards, "being the king's servant," he was made master of the armoury in the Tower of London for life, with the wages of twelve-pence per day for himself, and three-pence per day for his groom in the office. In the 31st of the same reign he was appointed master of the horse to Anne of Cleves; and the next year, in the jousts held at Westminster, Sir John was one of the principal challengers, his horse being accoutred with white velvet. In about two years after this he was elevated to the peerage, in the ancient dignity enjoyed by his mother's family, that of VISCOUNT L'ISLE, and made, the same year, lord admiral of England for life. In this capacity his lordship displayed great gallantry, and did good service against France and Scotland. "To say truth," remarks Sir John Howard, "he was the minion of that time; so as few things he attempted, but he achieved with honour, which made him the more proud and ambitious. Generally he always increased both in estimation with the king and authority amongst the nobility; but doubtful, whether by fatal destiny to the state, or whether by his virtues or appearance of virtues." His lordship was one of the executors to the will of his royal master; and upon the accession of EDWARD VI., he was created EARL OF WARWICK, with a grant of Warwick Castle. At this period he was made lieut.-gen. of the army, and acquired an accession of military fame under the Earl of Hertford, in Picardy and Scotland, as well as by his successful defence of Boulogne, of which he was governor. In the 3rd of EDWARD VI. he was again made admiral of England, Ireland, and Wales, and the next year constituted lord steward of the household. Henceforward his lordship's ambition appears to have known no bounds, and to have hurried him into acts of great baseness and atrocity. Through his intrigues the quarrel arose between the Protector Somerset and his brother, Lord Thomas Seymour, which terminated in the public execution of the latter; and he is at this period accused of acquiring considerable wealth by plunder of the church. In the 6th of the same reign he was advanced to the dignity of DUKE OF NORTHUMBERLAND, a peerage which, by the death of the last Earl of Northumberland, a. p., and the attainder and execution of his brother, Sir Thomas Percy, with the Percy estate, became vested in the crown. His grace had previously been constituted earl-marshal of England. Having now attained the highest honour in the peerage, and power the most unlimited, the duke proceeded, with scarcely the semblance of restraint, in his ambitious projects; and the Protector Somerset, one of his earliest and steadiest patrons, soon fell a victim to their advancement. That distinguished personage was arraigned, through the intrigue of Northumberland, before his peers, and though acquitted of high treason, was condemned for felony, and sentenced to be hanged. The eventual fate of this unhappy nobleman is well known, and, considering his own conduct to his brother, not deplored. He was executed by decapitation on Tower Hill. From the death of Somerset, the Duke of Northumberland became so unremitting in his attentions upon the king, and had so much influence over him, that he prevailed upon his majesty to sign and seal a patent conferring the succession upon Lady Jane Grey, the wife of his son, Lord Guilford Dudley. His subsequent efforts, after the decease of EDWARD VI., to establish this patent by force of arms, proving abortive, he was arrested, upon a charge of high treason, at Cambridge, and being condemned thereof, he was beheaded, on Tower Hill, upon the 22nd of August, 1553, when all his honours became forfeited under the attainder. His grace m. Jane, dau. of Sir Edward Guilford, Knt., and had issue,

DUDLEY—DUCHESS OF DUDLEY.

By Letters Patent, dated 23 May, 1644

Lineage.

ROBERT DUDLEY, Earl of Leicester, the notorious favourite of Queen ELIZABETH, m. for his 2nd wife, Douglas Howard, dau. of William, Lord Edlingham, and widow of John, Lord Sheffield, by whom he had an only son,

ROBERT.

The earl apprehending a diminution of his influence with his royal mistress, made an attempt to get rid of this wife, as he did of his 1st, the unhappy Amy Robsart, by poison, but ineffectually. He repudiated her, however, and denied his marriage—but he bequeathed, at his decease, the greater part of his property to their issue, calling him nevertheless his base son.

SIR ROBERT DUDLEY, who having in vain endeavoured to establish his legitimacy, retired in umbrage to Italy: whence, through the influence of his enemies, being summoned to return, and disobeying the mandate, his lands were seized under the statute of fugitives. Sir Robert m. Alice Leigh, dau. of Sir Thomas Leigh, Bart., and his wife, Catherine, dau. of Sir John Spencer, of Wormleighton, co. Warwick, and aunt of Thomas, 1st Lord Leigh, of Stoneleigh, by whom he had issue,

Alice, } d. unm.
Douglas, }

Catherine, m. to Sir Richard Leveson, K.B.

Frances, m. to Sir Gilbert Kniveton, of Bradley, co. Derby.

Anne, m. to Sir Richard Holbourne, solicitor-general to King CHARLES I.

Sir Robert Dudley took up his abode in the territories of the Grand Duke of Tuscany, with which prince he became a favourite, owing to his extraordinary accomplishments, being not only well skilled in all kinds of mathematical learning, in navigation, and architecture, but being a great chymist and skilful physician; and his fame reaching the imperial courts, the emperor FERDINAND II., by letters patent, dated 9 March, 1620, conferred upon him the dignity of DUKE, when he assumed the title of Duke of Northumberland. Sir Robert, like his father, deserted his lady, and took with him to the continent Miss Southwell, dau. of Sir Robert Southwell, of Wood Rising, co. Norfolk, and there married her, under the pretence that his marriage with Alice Leigh was, by the canon law, illegal, inasmuch as he had carnal knowledge of her during the lifetime of his 1st wife, Miss Cavendish, sister of Thomas Cavendish, the navigator. By Miss Southwell, Sir Robert Dudley had several children, of which Charles, the eldest son, bore, after his decease, the title of Duke of Northumberland. Notwithstanding the conduct of Sir Robert, his lady, who remained in England,

ALICE DUDLEY, was elevated to the peerage for life, by King CHARLES I., by letters patent, dated 23 May, 1644, as DUCHESS OF DUDLEY, and her surviving daus. were allowed the precedence of a duke's children.

The following is a copy of the grant, viz.:

"CHARLES, by the grace of God, &c.

"Whereas, in the reign of King JAMES, a suit was commenced in the Star Chamber Court against Sir Robert Dudley, for pretending himself lawful heir to the honours and lands of the earldoms of Warwick and Leicester, as son and heir of Robert, Earl of Leicester, by Douglas, wife to the said earl, and all proceedings stayed in the ecclesiastical courts, in which the said suit depended for proof of his legitimation; yet, nevertheless, did the said court vouchsafe liberty to the said Sir Robert to examine witnesses in the Star Chamber Court, to make good his legitimacy. Whereupon, by full testimony of the Lady Douglas herself, and other witnesses it was made appear. But a special order being made, that the depositions should be sealed up, and no copies taken, did cause the said Sir Robert, to leave the kingdom; whereof his adversaries taking advantage, occasioned his lands to be seized on, to the king, our father's use. And not long after, Prince Henry made overture to the said Sir Robert, to obtain his title by purchase of Kenilworth Castle, &c., valued at £50,000, but bought by the prince in consideration of £14,500, and promise of his princely favour to restore Sir Robert in honours and fortunes; but before payment thereof was made (if any at all), to the said Sir Robert's hands, the prince was dead. And it appearing that Alice, Lady Dudley, wife of Sir Robert had an estate of inheritance in the same, descendible unto her posterity, in the 19th of JAMES I., an act was passed to enable her to alien her estate from her children as a feme sole; which she accordingly did, in consideration of £4,000, and further payments yearly to be made out of the exchequer, &c.; which having not been accordingly paid for many years, are to the damage of the said Lady Alice and her children, to a very great value. And the said Sir Robert settling himself in Tuscany, within the territories of the great duke, (from whom he had extraordinary esteem,) had from the emperor, FERDINAND II., the title of a duke given him, to be used by himself and his heirs throughout the sacred empire.

"And whereas, our father not knowing the truth of the lawful birth of the said Sir Robert, (as we piously believe), granted away the titles of the said earldom to others, which we now hold not fit to call in question. And yet having a very deep sense of the injuries done to Sir Robert Dudley, and the Lady Alice, and their children, &c., and holding ourselves in honour and conscience obliged to make reparation; and also taking into consideration the said great estate which the Lady Alice had in Kenilworth, and sold at our desire to us at a very great undervalue, and yet not performed or satisfied to many thousand pounds damage. And we also, casting our princely eye upon the faithful services done by Sir Richard Leveson, who married the Lady Catherine, one of the daughters of the said duke, and also the great services which Robert Holbourne, Esq., hath done us by his learned pen, and otherwise, who married Anne, another of the daughters; we have conceived ourselves bound in honour and conscience to give the said Lady Alice and her children such honours and precedencies as is, or are due to them in marriage or blood. And therefore we do not only give and grant unto the said Lady Alice Dudley the title of Duchess of Dudley for life, in England, and other our realms, &c., with such precedencies as she might have had, if she had lived in the dominions of the sacred empire, &c.; but we do also further grant unto the said Lady Catherine and Lady Anne, her daughters, the places, titles, and precedencies of the said duke's daughters, as from the time of their father's creation during their respective lives, &c. Conceiving ourselves obliged to do much more for them, if it were in our power, in these unhappy times of distraction, &c., witness ourself, at Oxford, 23rd May, in the 20th year of our reign."

This honour was also confirmed to her grace by King CHARLES II.

The Duchess of Dudley d. 22 January, 1669-70, and was buried at Stoneleigh, co. Warwick, under a noble monument erected by herself, when her peerage, being for life only, EXPIRED.

DUDLEY—EARL OF WARWICK.

By Letters Patent, dated 26 September, 1561.

Lineage.

Through the especial favour of the Queen, in the 3rd and 4th of PHILIP and MARY,

LORD AMBROSE DUDLEY, then eldest surviving son of the attainted John Dudley, Duke of Northumberland, was restored in blood; and in the 1st year of ELIZABETH, he obtained a grant of the manor of Ribworth Beauchamp, co. Leicester, to be held by the service of pantler to the kings and queens of England at their coronations, which manor and office his father and other of his ancestors, Earls of Warwick, formerly enjoyed. In the next year he was made master of the ordinance for life, and two years afterwards, 25 December, 1561, advanced to the peerage as BARON L'ISLE, preparatory to his being created next day Earl of WARWICK, when he obtained a grant of Warwick Castle, and divers other lordships in the same co., which had come to the crown upon the attainder of his father. His lordship was afterwards elected a knight of the Garter. In the 12th ELIZABETH, upon the insurrection in the North of the Earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland the Earl of Sussex being first despatched against the rebels with 700 men, the Earl of Warwick, with the Lord Admiral Clinton, followed with 12,000 more, the earl being nominated lieutenant of the army. The next year his lordship was constituted chief butler of England, and soon afterwards sworn of her majesty's privy council; in which latter year, 15th ELIZABETH, he was one of the peers who sat in Westminster Hall on the trial and judgment of Thomas, Duke of Norfolk, as he did in fourteen years after at Fotheringay, on the trial of Mary of Scotland.

His lordship m. 1st, Anne, dau. and co-heir of William Whorwood, Esq., attorney-general to King HENRY VIII.; 2ndly, Elizabeth, dau. and heir of Gilbert Talboys, and sister and heir of George, Lord Talboys; and 3rdly, Anne, dau. of Francis, Earl of Bedford; but d. s. p. In 1589, when all his honours became EXTINCT, and the lordships and lands, which he had obtained by grant (part of the inheritance of the old Earls of Warwick), reverted to the crown. Of these the ancient park of Wedgenock was granted in 1601 by Queen ELIZABETH to Sir Fulke Greville, to whom, in four years afterwards, King JAMES likewise granted the castle of Warwick, with the gardens and dependencies. This Sir Fulke Greville was descended through his grandmother, Elizabeth, one of the daus. and co-heirs of Lord Beauchamp, of Powyk, from the old Beauchamps, Earls of Warwick; and from him have sprung the existing Earls of Brooke and Warwick.

DUDLEY—BARON DENBIGH, EARL OF LEICESTER.

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 28 September, 1563.

Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 29 September, 1563.

Lineage.

SIR ROBERT DUDLEY, a younger son of John, Duke of Northumberland, and brother of Lord Guilford Dudley, the unhappy husband of Lady Jane Grey, was appointed according to his biographer, Sir John Hayward, in the 5th of EDWARD VI., one of the six gentlemen in ordinary of the privy-chamber to that king; and Hayward adds, "that he was the true heir, both of his father's hate against persons of nobility, and cunning to dissemble the same; and afterwards for lust and cruelty, a monster of the court. And, as apt to hate, so a true executioner of his hate; yet rather by practice than by open dealing, as wanting rather courage than wit: and that, after his entertainment into a place of so near service the king enjoyed his health not long." Upon the accession of MARY, Dudley was sent to the Tower with his father, and attainted; but, escaping the fate of that ambitious nobleman, he was soon afterwards restored, and made master of the ordinance. By Queen ELIZABETH he was at once taken into favour, raised to high rank, and invested with wealth and power. In the 1st year of her majesty's reign, he was made master of the horse, with a fee of 100 marks per annum, and elected a knight of the most noble order of the Garter. He was soon afterwards constituted constable of Windsor Castle for life, and the queen subsequently proposed that he should become the husband of the beautiful but unfortunate MARY STUART, promising, in the event of the princess's assent, that she would, by authority of parliament, declare her heir to the crown of England, in case she died herself without issue. The alliance was marred, however, through the influence of France, although the favourite had been advanced the same year, that he might be deemed the more worthy of his royal bride, to the dignities of Baron Denbigh and Earl of Leicester. But this proceeding of ELIZABETH has been considered as a mere experiment to enable herself to espouse Dudley with less dishonour, if he had been accepted by the Queen of Scots. In 1572 his lordship was one of the peers who sat upon the trial of the Duke of Norfolk, and he was appointed some years afterwards captain-general of an expedition sent into the Low Countries for the service of the United Provinces against the Spaniards; but in this enterprise, incurring, by his insolence, incapacity, and caprice, the displeasure of the Dutch, he was recalled, and constrained upon his return to humble himself to the queen, and with tears to beg of her majesty, "that, having sent him thither with honour, she would not receive him back with disgrace; and that whom she had raised from the dust, she would not bury alive!" He intended afterwards to retire to his castle of Kenilworth, and commenced his journey thither, but died on the way at Cornbury Park, in Oxfordshire, 4 September, 1588. His lordship was a knight of the Garter, and a knight of St. Michael, a privy-councillor, master of the horse, steward of the queen's household, constable of Windsor Castle, chancellor of the university of Oxford, justice in eyre of all the forests south of Trent, and lieutenant and captain-general of the English forces in the Netherlands. "His death," says Rapin, "drew tears from the queen, who, nevertheless, ordered his goods to be sold at public sale for payment of the sums she had lent him. This infamous nobleman m. 1st, the beautiful AMY ROBERT, dau. of Sir John Robert, Knt.; and that unhappy lady he is accused but too justly of having murdered in the house of Forster, one of his tenants, at Cumnor, near Oxford. To this lone habitation she was removed, and there, after poison had proved inefficacious, she was strangled, and her corpse flung from a high staircase, that her death might appear to have been occasioned by the fall. He m. 2ndly, Douglas, dau. of William, Lord Howard, of Effingham, and widow of John, Lord Sheffield, by whom he had a son, ROBERT (Sir).

Fearing that this latter alliance would cause a diminution of his influence with the queen, he tried by every means to repudiate her ladyship, and he subsequently attempted her life by poison, but unsuccessfully. His child by her, Sir Robert Dudley, he terms, in his will, his base son, but leaves him the principal part of his fortune. His 3rd wife was Lettice, dau. of Sir Francis Knolles, and widow of Walter, Earl of Essex; but by her he had no surviving issue. In the year 1575, Queen ELIZABETH paid the earl a visit at Kenilworth, and was there magnificently entertained by his lordship for seventeen days, at the enormous expense of £60,000. About this period appeared a pamphlet, written with much force, entitled a Dialogue between a Scholar, a Gentleman, and a Lawyer, wherein the whole of Leicester's conduct was canvassed with great truth. The queen herself caused letters to be written from the privy-council, denying the charges, and vindicating the character of the favourite; but the book was not the less read nor credited.

Upon the decease of the earl, his honours became EXTINCT. His son, Sir Robert Dudley, failing to establish his legitimacy, retired to Italy in disgust, and lived there the remainder of his life. (See Dudley, Duchess of Dudley.) Of Dudley, Walpole, in his Royal and Noble Authors, thus speaks: "Robert Dudley, called the natural son, probably the legitimate son of the great Earl of Leicester, having been deprived of his birthright, and never acknowledged as a peer of England, could not with propriety be classed among that order; yet he was too great an honour to his country to be omitted; and it is the duty of the meanest historian, and his felicity to have it in his power, to do justice to the memory of the deserving, which falls not within the compass of particulars to procure to the living. The author of those curious Lives of the Dudleys in the Biographia has already retrieved the fame of this extraordinary person from oblivion; and therefore I shall touch very few particulars of his story. He was educated under Sir Thomas Chaloner, the accomplished governor of Prince HENRY, and distinguished his youth by martial achievements, and by useful discoveries in the West Indies: but it was the house of Medici, those patrons of learning and talent, who fostered this enterprising spirit, and who were amply rewarded for their munificence by his projecting the free port of Leghorn. He flourished in their court, and in that of the emperor, who declared him Duke of Northumberland, a dukedom remarkably confirmed to his widow, whom CHARLES I. created Duchess of Dudley. Anthony Wood says, 'the duke was a complete gentleman in all suitable employments, an exact seaman, an excellent architect, mathematician, physician, chymist, and what not. He was a handsome, personable man, tall of stature, red-haired, and of admirable comport, and, above all, noted for riding the great horse, for tilting, and for his being the first of all that taught a dog to sit in order to catch partridges.'"

DUFF—BARON FIFE.

By Letters Patent, dated 5 July, 1790.

By Letters Patent, dated 28 April, 1827.

Lineage.

JAMES DUFF, 2nd Earl of Fife, in the peerage of Ireland, was created a peer of Great Britain, in the dignity of BARON FIFE, 5 July, 1790. His lordship m. in 1766, Lady Dorothea Sinclair, sole heir of Alexander, 9th Earl of Caithness; but dying without male issue, 24 January, 1809, the British BARONY OF FIFE became EXTINCT, while his lordship's Irish honours devolved upon his brother, the Hon. ALEXANDER DUFF, as 3rd Earl of Fife, whose eldest son, JAMES, 4th Earl of Fife, was created a Baron of the United Kingdom, as BARON FIFE, 28 April, 1827, but d. s. p. 9 March, 1857, when that title became EXTINCT: his lordship's nephew is JAMES, present EARL OF FIFE.

Arms—Quarterly: 1st and 4th, or, a lion rampant, gu. for Mac DUFF; 2nd and 3rd, vert, a fesse, dancettée, erm. between a hart's head, cabossed, in chief, and two escallops in base, or, for DUFF.

DUNCOMBE—LORD FEVERSHAM, BARON OF DOWNTON, CO. WILTS.

By Letters Patent, dated 23 June, 1747.

Lineage.

The Duncombes, originally of Barley-End, co. Buckingham, spread in different branches into other counties during the reigns of King HENRY VIII. and his son EDWARD VI.

WILLIAM DUNCOMBE, of Ivinghoe (at the time of the Visitation in 1634), m. Mary, dau. of John Theod, gentleman, and had four sons, of whom the 2nd,

ANTHONY DUNCOMBE, Esq., of Drayton, Bucks, m. — dau. of Paulye, lord of the manor of Whitchurch, and had issue,

Charles (Sir), a banker in London, who served the office of sheriff for that city, anno 1700, and filled, in nine years afterwards, the civic chair. Sir Charles d. unm., possessed of immense wealth, acquired by himself, which he devised to his nephews, Anthony Duncombe, the son of his brother, and Thomas Brown, the son of his sister.

ANTHONY, of whom presently.

Mary, m. to Thomas Brown, Esq., of the city of London; by whom she had an only son, Thomas, whose grandson, Charles Duncombe, Esq., of Duncombe Park, co. York, was created Baron Feversham in 1826. (See BURKE's Extant Peerage).

ANTHONY DUNCOMBE, Esq. (the 2nd son) m. Jane, eldest dau. and co-heiress of the Hon. Frederick Cornwallis, 2nd son of Frederick, 1st Lord Cornwallis, and had an only son,

ANTHONY DUNCOMBE, Esq., who inherited, as stated above, a moiety of his uncle, Sir Charles Duncombe's large fortune, and was elevated to the peerage by letters patent, dated 23 June, 1747, as LORD FEVERSHAM, Baron of Downton, co. Wilts. His lordship m. 1st, the Hon. Margery Verney, dau. of George, Lord Willoughby de Broke; by whom he had three sons, Charles and Anthony, who both d. young, and George, who attained his nineteenth year, but d. in 1741; he had likewise a dau. that d. in infancy. Lord Feversham m. 2ndly, Frances, dau. of Peter Bathurst, Esq., of Clarendon Park, Wilts; this lady d. in childbed, 21 November, 1757; and he m. 3rdly, Anne, dau. of Sir Thomas Hales, Bart., by whom he had a dau.,

Anne, who m. Jacob, 2nd Earl of Radnor, by whom she was mother of William, 3rd Earl of Radnor, and other issue.

His lordship d. in 1763, and leaving no male issue, the BARONY OF FEVERSHAM, OF DOWNTON, became EXTINCT. His widow m. 22 July, 1765, William, 1st Earl of Radnor.

Arms—Per chev., engrailed, gu. and arg., three talbotts' heads erased, counterchanged.

NOTE.—Sir Saunders Duncombe (probably a member of this family), a gentleman pensioner to King JAMES I. and his son King CHARLES, was the introducer of s-dans or close chairs into this country in 1634, when he obtained a patent, vesting in himself and his heirs the sole right of carrying persons "up and down in them" for a certain sum. It is somewhat singular that the same year introduced hackney coaches into London; they were first brought into use by Captain Bayley.

DUNDAS—BARON AMESBURY.

By Letters Patent, dated 10 May, 1832.

Lineage.

ALEXANDER DUNDAS, of Fingask, son of James Dundas, of Dundas, by Christian his wife, dau. of John, Lord Innerneath and Lorn, was returned heir to his father in diverse lands, anno 1431. He m. Eupham, dau. of Sir Alexander Livingston, of Callendar, and d. in 1451, during his confinement in Dumbarton Castle, wherein he had been imprisoned through the hostility of William, Earl of Douglas: he was s. by his son,

ALEXANDER DUNDAS, of Fingask, who m. Isabel, dau. of Lawrence, Lord Oliphant, and had several sons, and one dau., the wife of Law, of Lawbridge. He fell at Flodden, in 1513, together with four of his sons, and was s. by his eldest son, ALEXANDER DUNDAS, of Fingask, who m. Elizabeth, dau. of Sir David Bruce, of Clackmannan, and had issue. He was slain at Pinkie, and s. by his eldest son,

ARCHIBALD DUNDAS, of Fingask, a man of much influence in the time of JAMES VI., who was s. at his decease by his son,

WILLIAM DUNDAS, of Fingask, who m. in 1582, Margaret, eldest dau. and heir of Sir David Carnegie, of Clouthie, but having no issue, was s. by his brother,

ARCHIBALD DUNDAS, of Fingask, who m. 1st, Jane, dau. of Sir David Carnegie, by Eupham, his 2nd wife, dau. of Sir David Wemyss, of Wemyss, and had a son, JOHN, his heir; and a dau. Nicholas, m. to Fairlie, of Braid. Archibald m. 2ndly, Giles, dau. of Lawrence Mercer, of Aldie, and had a son, Lawrence, professor of humanity at Edinburgh. The eldest son,

SIR JOHN DUNDAS, of Fingask, received the honour of knighthood from CHARLES I. at Dunfermline, in 1633. Enthusiastically attached to the unfortunate monarch, and nearly related by his mother to the great and gallant Marquess of Montrose, he devoted his energies and fortune to the royal cause, and ruined his estate—the transmitted inheritance of so long a line of ancestry. He m. 1st, Anne, dau. of Sir William Moncrief, of that ilk, but had no issue; and 2ndly, Margaret, dau. of George Dundas, of Dundas, by whom he had an only son, his successor in 1670.

JOHN DUNDAS, of Fingask, who m. Magdalen, dau. of Thomas Allardice, son of Allardice, of that ilk, and was s. in 1724, by his son,

THOMAS DUNDAS, of Fingask, who acquired a considerable estate in the co. of Stirling, and got a charter under the great seal, anno 1739, for erecting his lands into a barony, under the designation of the barony of Fingask. He m. Berthea, dau. of John Baillie, of Castlecary, and had two sons, namely, THOMAS, his heir; and LAURENCE, of Kerse, ancestor of the EARL OF ZETLAND. The elder son,

THOMAS DUNDAS, Esq., of Fingask, M.P. for the stewartry of Orkney and Shetland, m. 1st, Anne, dau. of James Graham, of Airth, judge of the High Court of Admiralty for Scotland, but had no issue; and 2ndly, 1744, Lady Janet Maitland, dau. of Charles, 6th Earl of Lauderdale, and had issue,

I. THOMAS, his heir, of Fingask and Carron Hall, co. Stirling, M.P., a general officer of distinction, m. 9 January, 1794, Lady Elizabeth-Eleanora Home, dau. of Alexander, 9th Earl of Home, and by her (who survived until 10 April, 1837) he had THOMAS and other issue. He d. in the public service at Guadaloupe, 3 June, 1794, and in the following year a monument was ordered by the House of Commons to be erected to his memory in St. Paul's Cathedral. His son and heir,

LIEUT.-COL. THOMAS DUNDAS, of Carron Hall, who m. Charlotte-Anne, dau. of Lieut.-Col. Joseph Moore Boulton, and left at his decease, 24 May, 1860, one surviving son, the present JOSEPH DUNDAS, Esq., of Carron Hall; and two daus., viz., Charlotte-Anne, m. 1st, to Col. Armine Mountain, who d. 1854; and 2ndly, 1860, to Col. Henry Lefroy, R.A.; and Clementina m. 1856, to Vincent Bartolucci.

II. CHARLES, of whom presently.

I. Margaret, m. to A. Gibson, Esq.

II. Bertha, m. to George Haldane, Esq.

III. Mary, m. to James Bruce, Esq., of Kinnaird.

IV. JANET, m. to JAMES DEANS, Esq., M.D.

Mr. Dundas d. in 1796. His 2nd son,

CHARLES DUNDAS, Esq., of Barton Court, co. Berks, for many years representative in Parliament for that shire, was elevated to the peerage 10 May, 1832, as BARON AMESBURY, of Kentbury Amesbury, but enjoyed the honour for two months only. He m. 1st, Anne, dau. and sole heiress of Ralph Whitley, Esq., of Aston Hall, in Flintshire (lineally descended from Richard Whitley and Margaret his wife, dau. and heir of William de Messam, of Aston, which William de Messam was great-grandson of Henry de Messam by his wife, the dau. and heir of Richard Aston, of Aston), and had by her an only dau.,

JANET, who m. 28 April, 1808, her cousin, the late VICED-ADMIRAL SIR JAMES WHITLEY DEANS-DUNDAS, G.C.B., of Barton Court, co. Berks, J.P., and D.L., and by him (who m. 2ndly, 3 August, 1847, Lady Emily Moreton, sister of the 1st Earl of Ducie, and d. 30 October, 1862), had issue,

1 Charles-James, of the coldstream-guards, b. 15 January, 1811, M.P. for the Flint district, 1838; m. 20 March, 1837, his cousin Janet-Lindsay, dau. of John Jardine, and grand-dau. of Bruce, the traveller, and had issue, Charles Amesbury, b. 30 November, 1845. He d. 11 April, 1856.

DUNGAN—EARL OF LIMERICK.

(See ADDENDA.)

DUNNING—BARON ASHBURTON, OF ASHBURTON, CO. DEVON.

By Letters Patent, dated 8 April, 1782.

Lineage.

JOHN DUNNING, 2nd son of John Dunning, of Gnatham, co. Devon, m. Agnes, dau. of Henry Judsham, of Old Port, in the same shire, and left at his decease, 1 December, 1780, an only surviving son,

JOHN DUNNING, b. at Ashburton, 18 October, 1731, who having applied himself to the study of the law, was called to the bar, and soon attained the first rank in his learned profession. In 1767, Mr. Dunning was appointed solicitor-general, an office which he resigned in 1770. He was elected to parliament by the borough of Calne, in 1768, and continued a member of the lower house until elevated to the peerage upon the accession of Lord Shelburne, his great patron, to power, by patent, dated 8 April, 1782, as BARON ASHBURTON, of Ashburton, co. Devon. On the 13th of the same month his lordship was appointed chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. He was also recorder of Bristol, and a member of the privy council. He m. 31 March, 1780, Elizabeth, dau. of John Baring, Esq., of Larkhear, co. Devon, and sister of Sir Francis Baring, Bart., by whom he had two sons, John, who d. at about seventeen months old in April, 1783, and RICHARD-BARRE, his successor. Of this eminent lawyer, Sir Egerton Brydges says, "He was a man whose talents were so peculiar, and had such a singular kind of brilliance, that they are not yet forgotten at the bar. They were more remarkable for acuteness and for wit, than for elegance and chasteness. The combination of his words were so singular, and the tones of his discordant voice so served in him to rivet the attention, that, as they always conveyed powers of thinking eminently sharp and forcible, he was constantly listened to with eagerness and admiration. His temper was generous, his spirits lively, and his passions violent. The popular side which he took in politics increased his fame; and he died generally lamented, just as he had attained the fond object of his ambition, aged fifty-two." His lordship d. 18 August, 1783, and was s. by his son,

RICHARD-BARRE DUNNING, 2nd baron, & 16 September, 1782. His lordship m. 17 September, 1805, Anne, dau. of the late William Cuninghame, Esq., of Lainshaw, but had no issue. He d. in 1823, when the BARONY OF ASHBURTON became EXTINCT.

Arms—Bendy sinister of eight, or and vert, a lion rampant, az.

DUNSTANVILL—EARL OF CORNWALL.

By creation, 1140.

Lineage.

REGINALD DE DUNSTANVILL 3rd of the fourteen illegitimate sons of King HENRY I., by the dau. of Robert Corbet, was made EARL OF CORNWALL, by King STEPHEN, anno 1140. Notwithstanding which, he subsequently espoused the cause of the Empress MAUD, and was in rebellion, until the fall of STEPHEN's power at the battle of Lincoln. From which period we find nothing remarkable of him until the 10th HENRY II., when he appears to have been an unsuccessful mediator between that monarch and the haughty prelate, Thomas à Becket. His lordship was afterwards in arms on the side of the king, against Robert, Earl of Leicester (who had reared the standard of revolt in favour of Prince Henry, the king's son), and joined Richard de Luci, justice of England, in the siege of Leicester; the town of which they carried, but not the castle. His lordship m. Beatrice, dau. of William Fitz-Richard, a potent man of Cornwall, and d. in 1175, when leaving no legitimate male issue, the EARLDOM OF CORNWALL reverted to the crown, and was retained by King HENRY II. for the use of JOHN, his younger son, excepting a small proportion which devolved upon the deceased lord's daus., viz.,

Hawyse, m. to Richard de Redvers.

Maud, m. to Robert, Earl of Mellent.

Ursula, m. to Walter de Dunstanvill.

Sarah, m. to the Viscount of Limoges.

Reginald de Dunstanvill d. 1175.

Arms—Gu., two lions passant guardant, or, a batune sinister, az.

NOTE.—Besides his legitimate daus. above-mentioned, the earl left by Beatrice de Vaus, lady of Torre and Karswell, two bastard sons, HENRY and William, whereof the elder.

HENRY, surnamed FITZ-COUNT, became a person of great celebrity. In the 4th King JOHN he had an assignation of £20 current money of Anjou, for his support in the king's service in Boan; and about that time gave 1,200 marks for the lands of William de Traci; which lands Hugh de Courtenay and Henry de Tracy afterwards enjoyed. In the 17th JOHN he had a grant from the king of the whole county of Cornwall, with the demesnes, and all other appurtenances, to farm, until the realm should be in peace, and the king clearly satisfied, whether he ought to hold it in right of inheritance, or as a part of the demesne of the crown; and being then made constable of the castle of Launceston, rendered up the government of the castle of Porvestre, which he had previously held. In the 4th of King HENRY III., it appears that he stood indebted to the king in £597 and one mark, which sum was due by him to King JOHN, and that the same year disobeying the king's commands, and departing the court without permission, the king discharged all his subjects, and in particular those of Cornwall from having anything to do with him. He made his peace, however, soon after, through the mediation of the bishops of Norwich, Winchester, and Exeter, and the friendship of Hubert de Burgh, then justice of England, upon surrendering to the crown the castle of Launceston, and the county of Cornwall, with all the homage and services thereto belonging as fully as King JOHN enjoyed them at the beginning of the war with the barons; saving the right which he, Henry Fitz-Count, preferred to the county, and in which the king promised to do him justice when he attained maturity. The claimant d. 6th HENRY III., and the matter was consequently never determined. By some it has been thought that this HENRY FITZ-COUNT s. his father in the Earldom of Cornwall, because he obtained a grant of the county from the crown. "But considering," says Dugdale, "that the title of earl was never attributed to him, I cannot conceive anything more passed by that grant, than the barony or revenue of the county."

DURAS—BARON DURAS, OF HOLDENBY, CO. NORTHAMPTON, EARL OF FEVERSHAM.

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 19 January, 1673.
Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 8 April, 1676.

Lineage.

LEWIS DE DURAS, Marquis de Blanquesfort, and brother of the Duc de Duras, in France, was naturalized by act of parliament, 17th King CHARLES II., being at that period captain of the guard to the Duke of York, whom he afterwards attended in the celebrated sea-fight with the Dutch, in June, 1666, and behaved very gallantly therein. He was subsequently elevated to the peerage by letters patent dated 19 January, 1673 (in consideration of this and other services), in the dignity of Baron Duras, of Holdenby. His lordship m. Mary, elder dau. and co-heiress of Sir George Sondes, of Lees Court, co. Kent, K.B., which Sir George was elevated to the peerage (See Sondes), as Baron Throwley, Viscount Sondes, and EARL OF FEVERSHAM, with remainder, in default of male issue, to his son-in-law, Lord Duras, by letters patent, dated 8 April, 1676. In the following year, the Earl died, and Lord Duras became Earl of Feversham. His lordship had a command at the battle of Sedgemoor, and was commander of the army of King JAMES (by whom he was made a knight of the Garter), when the Prince of Orange came to Whitehall. He survived the Revolution, and d. s. p. in 1709, when all his honours became EXTINCT.

Arms—Gu., a lion rampant, arg. (a label of three points).

EARDLEY—BARON EARDLEY.

By Patent, dated October, 1789.

Lineage.

SAMPSON GIDEON, Esq., of Spalding, co. Lincoln, a gentleman of large estate, paternal and personal, m. Jane, dau. of Charles Ermell, Esq., and by her he left at his decease, 17 October, 1762, a son and two daus.,

EDRINGTON—BARON EDRINGTON.

By Writ of Summons, dated 22 January, 1836.

Lineage.

The surname of this family was assumed from the lordship of Edrington, co. Warwick, bestowed by Gervase Paganell, Baron of Dudley, upon

HENRY DE EDRINGTON, whose grandson,

THOMAS DE EDRINGTON, was appointed, with Richard de Altacviva, in the 6th King JOHN, bailiff or substitute to Geoffrey Fitzpiers, then sheriff of the counties of Salop and Stafford. He was afterwards chamberlain to the king, and obtained some territorial grants from the crown. In the 15th of JOHN, when the baronial influence predominated, this Thomas de Edrington, and Ralph Fitz-Nicholas, are said to have been despatched secretly by the king to Admiralius Mummellus, king of Africa and Spain, to offer to the infidel the whole realm of England, as a tributary state; and that he, JOHN, would renounce the cross, and assume the crescent, if the Mahomedan monarch would afford him assistance against his powerful and rebellious subjects. Thomas de Edrington m. Roese de Cockfield, and dying in the latter end of JOHN's reign, was s. by his son,

GILES DE EDRINGTON, who, in the 35th HENRY III., was one of the justices itinerant for the city of London, and the next was constituted one of the justices of the court of Common Pleas: he was likewise one of the justices of assize for the co. Warwick, from the 34th to the 53rd of the same reign inclusive. This learned person was a munificent benefactor to the church. He was s. at his decease by his son,

HENRY DE EDRINGTON, who m. Maud, one of the daus., and eventually co-heiresses of Roger de Someri, Baron of Dudley; and also one of the co-heirs of Nicholas, dau. and co-heir of

Hugh Albini, Earl of Arundel, and dying in the 10th EDWARD I., was s. by his son,

HENRY DE EDRINGTON, who, in the 30th EDWARD I., upon the decease of his mother, had livery of her lands. In four years afterwards he was made a knight of the Bath, and he then attended Prince Edward in the expedition made into Scotland: wherein he attained so much celebrity that he was summoned to parliament as a BARON 22 January, 1336. His lordship m. Joane, dau. and co-heir of Sir Thomas de Wolvey, of Wolvey, co. Warwick, by whom he had an only son,

GILES, who, not appearing in the 19th EDWARD III., to receive the honour of knighthood, obtained pardon for that omission.

Lord Edrington had but one summons, and his descendants none. He was s. by his son,

GILES DE EDRINGTON, whose great grandson,

THOMAS EDRINGTON, who lived in the reign of HENRY VI., was the last of the family that enjoyed the lordship of Edrington, co. Warwick.

EGERTON — BARONS OF ELLESMERE, VISCOUNTS MARQUESSES OF BRACK- LEY, EARLS OF BRIDGEWATER, DUKES OF BRIDGEWATER.

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 17 July, 1603.

Viscounty, by Letters Patent, dated 7 November, 1616.

Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 27 May, 1617.

Marquessate and Dukedom, by Letters Patent, dated 18 June, 1720.

Lineage.

SIR THOMAS EGERTON, b. in 1540, the illegitimate son of Sir Ralph Egerton, of Ridley, by Alice Spark, having been brought up to the bar, attained the highest honours of his profession, and filled during the reign of ELIZABETH, successively the offices of solicitor and attorney-general, master of the Rolls, and lord keeper of the great seal. Upon the accession of JAMES I., Sir Thomas was appointed LORD HIGH CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND, and elevated to the peerage, 21 July, 1603, as BARON OF ELLESMERE, in co. Salop, and further advanced, 7 November, 1616, to the dignity of VISCOUNT BRACKLEY. His lordship m. three times, 1st, Elizabeth, dau. of Thomas Ravencroft, Esq., of Bretton, co. Sir Thomas Egerton, Knt., who d. v. p.

JOHN, his successor; and Mary, m. to Sir Francis Leigh, of Newnham Regis, co. Warwick, K.B., father of Francis, Earl of Chichester.

Sir Thomas m. 2ndly, Elizabeth, sister of Sir George More, of Losely Farm, co. Surrey, and widow of Sir John Wolley, of Pitford, chancellor of the Garter; and 3rdly, Alice, dau. of Sir John Spencer, of Althorp, co. Northampton. He d. 15 March, 1616-17, in the seventy-seventh year of his age having received an intimation, immediately before his decease, that it was his majesty's intention to confer upon him the dignity of an earl and an accompanying pension. This learned and distinguished nobleman was s. by his only surviving son,

JOHN EGERTON, 2nd viscount, K.B., who was created, 27 May, 1617, EARL OF BRIDGEWATER. His lordship was appointed lord president of Wales and the marches thereof, 12 May, 1633, and to this appointment the world is indebted for Milton's celebrated mask of Comus. Warton gives the following account of the circumstance which afforded the subject to the poet; "I have been informed from a manuscript of Oldys's that Lord Bridgewater, being appointed lord president of Wales, entered upon his official residence at Ludlow Castle with great solemnity. On this occasion he was attended by a large concourse of neighbouring nobility and gentry. Among the rest, came his children; in particular Lord Brackley, Mr. Thomas Egerton and Lady Alice,

— to attend their father's state
And new intrusted sceptre.

They had been on a visit at a house of the Egerton family, in Herefordshire; and, in passing through Staywood forest, were benighted, and the Lady Alice even lost for sometime. This accident which in the end was attended with no bad consequences, furnished the subject for a mask, for a Michaelmas festivity, and produced Comus." The earl m. Frances, 2nd dau. and one of the co-heiresses of Ferdinando Stanley, Earl of Derby, and dying in 1649, was s. by his only surviving son,

JOHN EGERTON, 2nd earl, who m. Elizabeth, 2nd dau. of William Cavendish (then earl, but subsequently), Duke of Newcastle, and dying 26 December, 1686, had issue,

I. JOHN, 3rd earl.

ELIOTT—BARONS HEATHFIELD, OF GIBRALTAR.

By Letters Patent, dated 6 July, 1787.

Lineage.

SIR GILBERT ELIOTT, of Stobbs, co. Roxburgh, a baronet of Nova Scotia, m. Eleanor, dau. of William Eliot, of Weld, or Wells, in the same shire, and had, with other issue.

JOHN, his successor in the baronetcy.

And

GEORGE-AUGUSTUS ELIOTT, 8th son, who was born at Stobbs, the paternal seat, 25 December, 1717, and received the rudiments of his education under a private tutor. At an early age was sent to the university of Leyden, where he made rapid progress in classical learning, and spoke with elegance and fluency the German and French languages. Being designed for a military life he was sent from thence to La Fere, in Picardy. This school was rendered the most celebrated in Europe, by means of the great Vauban, under whom it was conducted. It was afterwards placed under the management and care of the Count de Houroville; here it was that the foundation was laid of that knowledge of military science in all its branches, and particularly in the arts of engineering and fortification, which afterwards so greatly distinguished this renowned officer. He completed his course, by a tour upon the continent, for the purpose of witnessing the practical effect of what he had been studying theoretically. Mr. Elliott returned in his seventeenth year, to his native country of Scotland, and was introduced by his father, Sir Gilbert, in 1735, to Lieut.-Col. Peera, of the 23rd regiment, then lying in Edinburgh. Sir Gilbert presented him as a youth anxious to bear arms for his king and country; he was accordingly entered as a volunteer in that regiment, and continued as such for more than a year. From the 23rd he went into the engineer corps at Woolwich, and made great progress in that study, until his uncle, Col. Elliott, brought him in as adjutant of the 2nd troop of horse guards, with which he went on service to Germany, and was wounded at the battle of Dettingen. Of this regiment he eventually became lieutenant-col., and was soon afterwards appointed aide-de-camp to King GEORGE II. In the year 1759, he quitted the 2nd troop of horse grenadier guards, being selected to raise, form, and discipline the 15th regiment of light horse, called after him, "Elliott's light horse." As soon as this corps was fit for service, he was appointed to the command of the cavalry in the expedition on the coasts of France, with the rank of brigadier-general, thence he passed into Germany, and from that was appointed second in command in the memorable expedition against the Havannah. In 1775, General Elliott succeeded General A'Court, as commander-in-chief of the forces in Ireland. But he did not continue long on that station; not even long enough to unpack his trunks. He solicited his recal, which being complied with, he was appointed to the command of Gibraltar. The system of his life, as well as his education, peculiarly qualified him for this trust. He was perhaps the most abstemious man of the age. His food was vegetables, his drink water. He never slept more than four hours at a time, so that he was up later and earlier than most other men. He had so inured himself to habits of severity, that the things which to others are painful, were to him of daily practice, and rendered agreeable by use. It could not be easy to starve such a man into a surrender. It would be quite as difficult to surprise him. The example of the commander-in-chief in a besieged garrison, has a most persuasive efficacy in forming the manners of the soldiery. Like him, his gallant followers came to regulate their lives by the most strict rules of discipline, before there arose a necessity for so doing; and severe exercise, with short diet, became habitual to them by their own choice. Thus General Elliott maintained his station upon the rock for three years of uninterrupted investment (1779 to 1783) in which the whole resources of Spain and France were employed. All the eyes of Europe were on his garrison, and his conduct justly raised him to a most elevated place in the military annals of his country.

On his return to England General Eliot received the thanks of both Houses of Parliament, was made a knight of the Bath, and raised to the peerage by the title of LORD HEATHFIELD, BARON GIBRALTAR, by letters patent, dated 6 July, 1787, a permission being granted at the same time to his lordship to take the arms of the fortress he had so bravely defended, to perpetuate to posterity his heroic conduct. His lordship m. 10 June, 1748, Anne-Pollexfen Drake, dau. of Sir Francis Drake, Bart., of Buckland, co. Devon, and had surviving issue,

ELPHINSTON—LORD BALMERINOC.

By Charter, dated 20 February, 1603-4.

Lineage.

THE HON. SIR JAMES ELPHINSTON (3rd son* of Robert, 3rd Lord Elphinston), designed of Innernechtie, was under that designation appointed a lord of session, 4 March, 1586. In

* From John Elphinstone, of Baberton, 2nd son of Robert, 3rd Lord Elphinstone, and next brother of James, 1st Lord Balmerinoc, descended.

JOHN ELPHINSTON, captain in the British, and admiral in the Russian navy, who commanded the fleet of the czar at the 1855 he was constituted one of the eight commissioners of the Treasury; in 1698, secretary of state; and as he continued to rise in the king's favour, the lands belonging to the Cistercian Abbey of Balmerinloch, in Fife, were erected into a temporal lordship in favour of him, his heirs male, and heirs of tailzie and provision, by charter, under the great seal, dated 20 February, 1603-4; and he accordingly took his seat as a peer in parliament, by the title of Lord Balmerinloch. In 1605, he became president of the court of Session. His lordship m. 1st, Sarah, dau. of Sir John Monteith, of Carse, by whom he had one son,

JOHN, 2nd Lord Balmerinloch.

He m. 2ndly, Marjory, dau. of Hugh Maxwell, of Tealing, by whom he had another son and two daus.,

James, Lord Coupar.

Anne, m. to Andrew, 1st Lord Frazer.

Mary, m. to John Hamilton, of Blair.

Lord Balmerinloch was found guilty of the fabrication of a letter purporting to be from JAMES VI. to Pope CLEMENT VIII., and sentenced to death, but obtained a pardon. He d. in 1612, and was s. by his son,

JOHN ELPHINSTONE, 2nd Lord Balmerinloch, a staunch covenant, whose trial and conviction proved ruinous in its consequences to King CHARLES's interest in Scotland. He m. Anne, dau. of Sir Thomas Ker, of Fernyhirst, and had a son,

JOHN ELPHINSTONE, 3rd Lord Balmerinloch, b. 18 February, 1623; who d. 10 June, 1704, aged eighty-two, having m. at the abbey of Holyrood-house, 30 October, 1649, Lady Margaret Campbell, only dau. of John, Earl of Loudoun, lord high chancellor of Scotland, and by her (who d. in January, 1666, and was buried at Restalrig) had

JOHN ELPHINSTONE, 4th Lord Balmerinloch, b. 28 December, 1652; who m. 1st, 16 February, 1672, Lady Christian Montgomery, 3rd dau. of Hugh, 7th Earl of Eglintoun, by whom he had (with two daus., Margaret, wife of Sir John Preston, of Preston Hall; and Jean, m. to Francis, 8th Earl of Moray) two sons, Hugh, slain at the siege of Lisle in 1708, s. p.; and JOHN, who s. his father. His lordship m. 2ndly, 7 June, 1687, Anne, dau. of Arthur Ross, the last archbishop of St. Andrew's, and by her (who d. 10 November, 1712,) had two sons, ARTHUR, 6th Lord Balmerinloch; Alexander, who d. unm. 1733; and Anne, who d. unm. The eldest son,

JOHN ELPHINSTONE, 5th Lord Balmerinloch, b. 24 November, 1675; d. at Leith, 5 January, 1746, aged seventy-one; and leaving no issue by his wife, Lady Elizabeth Carnegie, dau. of David, 4th Earl of Northesk (who survived till 21 September, 1767), was s. by his half-brother, the ill-fated adherent of the exiled family of Stuart,

ARTHUR ELPHINSTONE, 6th Lord Balmerinloch, b. in 1688; who suffered decapitation, 18 August, 1746, for his participation in the rising of the previous year. His lordship m. Margaret, dau. of Capt. Chalmers, but d. s. p. The title became forfeited by his lordship's attainder.

ELPHINSTONE—LORD COUPAR.

By Charter, dated 20 December, 1607.

Lineage.

By royal charter, bearing date 20 December, 1607, King JAMES VI. united the lands and baronies which belonged to the dissolved Cistercian Abbey of Coupar in Angus into a temporal lordship, with a title of a lord of parliament, by the style of BARON COUPAR, in favour of

THE HON. JAMES ELPHINSTONE (only son of James, 1st Lord Balmerinloch, by his 2nd wife, Marjory, dau. of Hugh Maxwell, of Tealing) and the heirs male of his body; which failing, to his father and his heirs male and of entail. Lord Coupar was appointed one of the extraordinary lords of session, 7 June, 1649, in place of his brother, Lord Balmerinloch, deceased. His lordship m. 1st, Margaret, dau. of Sir James battle of Tchesme, and succeeded in destroying his infidel opponents. He m. Amelia, dau. of John Warburton, Esq., Somerset Herald; and d. in 1785, leaving, with other issue,

SAMUEL-WILLIAM, capt. Russian navy, whose son,

CAPT. ALEXANDER ELPHINSTONE, R.N., a noble in Livonia, claimed to be heir to the title of Balmerinloch.

HOWARD, who was created a Baronet in 1815. (See BURKE's Peerage and Baronetage.)

Halyburton, of Pitcur; and 2ndly, Lady Marion Ogilvy, eldest dau. of James, 2nd Earl of Airly, who afterwards became wife of John, 3rd Lord Lindores, but had no issue by either. He d. in 1669, and his title and estates devolved, in terms of the patent and entail, upon his nephew, JOHN, 3rd Lord Balmerinloch.

ENGAIN—BARONS ENGAIN.

By Writ of Summons, dated 6 February, 1299, which became extinct; but revived by Writ, dated 25 February, 1342.

Lineage.

The first of this family taken notice of by our public records, is,

RICHARD ENGAIN, chief engineer to King WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, from which office he derived his surname; to whom succeeded,

VITALIS ENGAIN; and after him came,

RICHARD ENGAIN, Lord of Blatherwick, co. Northampton, temp. HENRY II., who m. Sara, dau. of the Earl of Oxford, and d. 10th King JOHN, having had two sons,

RICHARD, his successor.

Vitalis.

He was s. by the elder,

RICHARD ENGAIN, one of the insurrectionary barons, in the reign of King JOHN, whose lands were in consequence seized by the crown. He d. in 1216, and was s. by his brother,

VITALIS ENGAIN, who had likewise espoused the baronial cause, and had not, therefore, possession of the estates of the family until the accession of King HENRY III. In the 26th of this reign, this feudal lord made partition with William de Cantelupe, of Bergavenny, of the manor of Badmunsfields, in Suffolk, as heirs to William de Courtenal. He m. 1st, Clemence, dau. of Aubrey, Earl of Oxford, widow of Sir Jordan de Sackville; and 2ndly, Roese, one of the three sisters and co-heirs of the honour of Montgomery, in Wales, and was s. at his decease in 1249, by his son,

HENRY ENGAIN, who in the 42nd HENRY III. had a military summons to march against the Welsh: but afterwards taking part with the barons, he was involved in the defeat at Evesham, and had his lands sequestered. They were soon restored, however, under the Dictum of Kenilworth. This feudal lord never married, and dying in 1271, was s. by his brother,

JOHN ENGAIN, who m. Joane, dau. and heir of Henry Gray, and dying in 1296, was s. by his son,

JOHN DE ENGAIN. This feudal lord having distinguished himself in the wars of Scotland, temp. EDWARD I., was summoned to parliament as a BARON by that monarch, from 6 February, 1299, to 15 May, 1321. His lordship d. however, the next year, when the BARONY became extinct, but his landed property devolved upon his nephew as heir at law, namely—

JOHN DE ENGAIN (son of Nicholas de Engaine, by Amicia, dau. of Walter Fauconberg), who making proof of his age had livery of his estates. This John, in the 19th EDWARD III., then residing in Huntingdonshire, had a military summons to attend the king into France, and was summoned to parliament as a BARON, from 25 February, 1342, to 20 November, 1360. His lordship had previously the high military rank of knight banneret. He m. Joane, dau. of Sir Robert Peverell, and had issue,

THOMAS, his successor.

Joyce, m. to John de Goldington.

Elizabeth, m. to Sir Lawrence Padenham.

Mary, m. to Sir William Bernak.

His lordship d. at his seat at Dillington, co. Huntingdon, seized of the manors of Houghton, co. Leicester; Noteley, in Essex; Handson, in Herts; Saundey, in Bedfordshire; Gideling and Dillington, in Huntingdonshire; and Laxton, co. Northampton, in which he was s. by his son, THOMAS DE ENGAIN, 2nd baron, but never summoned to parliament. His lordship m. the Lady Katherine Courtenay, dau. of Hugh, Earl of Devonshire, and widow of Lord Harington, but dying s. p. in 1367, his great landed possessions devolved upon his sisters as co-heirs, while the BARONY OF ENGAIN fell into ABEYANCE amongst them, as it still continues with their representatives.

ESMONDE—BARON ESMONDE.

By Patent, dated 20 May, 1622.

Lineage.

This family is of very ancient establishment in the co. of Wexford, where we find John Esmond was consecrated bishop of Ferns, about the middle of the 14th century.

The immediate ancestor of the present house,

JOHN ESMONDE, Esq., of Johnstown, co. Wexford, m. Isabel, dau. of Thomas Rosseter, Esq., of Rathmacknee Castle, and left a son,

LAURENCE ESMONDE, Esq., of Johnstown. This gentleman m. Eleanor, dau. of Walter Walsh, of The Mountains, by whom he had two sons, and was s. by the elder,

WILLIAM ESMONDE, Esq., who m. Margaret, dau. of Michael Furlong, Esq., of Horetown, and had, with seven daus., four sons, viz.,

ROBERT, living in 1618, who continued the line of Johnstown, which became extinct a few years since in the male line.

LAURENCE, of whom presently.
James. Patrick.

The 2nd son,

SIR LAURENCE ESMONDE, abandoning the religious creed of his ancestors, declared himself a partisan of ELIZABETH, and a convert to Protestantism. In 1601-2, he commanded a troop of 150 foot and horse in her Majesty's service, was knighted by Sir Henry Sydney the viceroy, and served in Connaught in the same corps d'armée, on the expeditions of the Irish chieftains, Morough-ni-doe O'Flaherty, Dynast of West Connaught, and Sir Theobald Bourke, 1st Viscount Mayo, who, to preserve their estates, had made their submission a short time previously to the lord-deputy, and accepted commands in the queen's service. Sir Laurence Esmonde's zeal and activity in his military operations procured for him, in an especial degree, the favour of the court; and his ambition increasing with his fortune, he was raised to the peerage 20 May, 1622 (being at the time major-general of all the king's forces in Ireland, and governor of Duncannon Fort), as LORD ESMONDE, Baron of Limerick, co. Wexford. During one of his campaigns in Connaught, having fallen in love with the beautiful sister of O'Flaherty, he m. her, and had one son, THOMAS. It happened, however, that Lady Esmonde, a devout Roman Catholic, fearing that her child might be brought up a Protestant, formed the resolution of carrying off the infant by stealth, and returning to her family in Connaught. This act of maternal devotion appears to have been not at all disagreeable to Sir Laurence, as affording him a pretext for casting suspicion on the legality of his union, that of a Protestant with a Catholic; yet, without resorting to legal measures to annul the marriage in due form, he sometime after m. Elizabeth, 2nd dau. of the Hon. Walter Butler, 4th son of James, 9th Earl of Ormonde, but by her had no issue. His lordship d. 26 March, 1646, bequeathing all his extensive estates to his only son, SIR THOMAS ESMONDE, 1st baronet. The severity and singularity of his case created considerable interest; and there is scarce a doubt that, but for the melancholy state of civil war, usurpation, and destruction of property, at that period, upon legal investigation into the matter and the accompanying circumstances, the conduct of Lord Esmonde towards his lady, and the legality of his second marriage (his first undivorced wife still living), Sir Thomas Esmonde's right of succession to his father's peerage could not fail to have been acknowledged. Before, however, that could have taken place, Sir Thomas died; and his successor had to occupy himself with entering into possession of his grandfather's property. Sir Thomas Esmonde, as already noticed, was reared and educated with his maternal relations; and upon his uncle being raised in the peerage to the dignity of Viscount Bourke, of Mayo, by privy-seal, dated at Westminster, 8 February, 1626, and by patent, 21 June, 1627, Sir Thomas, who was subsequently knighted for his eminent services in the cause of royalty, as general of horse in the armies of CHARLES I. was created, through Lord Mayo's influence, a few months later (28 January, 1628), a BARONET OF IRELAND. Sir Thomas m. Ellis, widow of Thomas Butler, 4th Lord Cahir, and dau. of Sir John Fitzgerald, of Dromana, co. Waterford of the line of Desmond, and was ancestor of the ESMONDES, now of Ballynastra, co. Wexford, BARONETS of Ireland.

EURE, OR EVRE — BARONS EURE, OR EVRE, OF WILTON, CO. DURHAM.

By Letters Patent, dated 24 February, 1544.

Lineage.

The surname of this family was derived from the lordship of EVRE, co. Buckingham, where HUGH, a younger son of the Bacons of Werkworth, in Northumberland (which Bacons were afterwards known under the name of Clavering), took up his abode, in the reign of HENRY III., and thus became,

HUGH DE EVRE. He was s. by his son and heir,

SIR JOHN EVRE, who in the 35th EDWARD I., obtained a charter for free-warren, in all his desmesne lands, at Esby, in Cleveland, co. York; and in the 8th EDWARD II., was in the expedition then made into Scotland. In two years afterwards, Sir John Evre, was constituted one of the commissioners to negotiate a truce with the Scots; and in the 12th of the same reign, we find him again in the Scottish wars. From Sir John Evre descended,

SIR RALPH EURE, who m. Katharine, one of the daus. and co-heirs of Sir William Aton, 2nd Lord Aton, and in the 13th RICHARD II., made partition with the other co-heirs, of those lands which were of their inheritance; Sir Ralph being at that time sheriff of Northumberland, and governor of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. He was afterwards sheriff of Yorkshire, and constable of the Castle of York, and again sheriff of Northumberland. Sir Ralph Eure was s. by his son,

RALPH EURE, whose son and successor,

SIR WILLIAM EURE, m. Maud, dau. of Henry, Lord Fitz-Hugh, and had issue,

SIR RALPH EURE, who fell at Towton-field, in the 1st EDWARD IV., and from him descended,

SIR WILLIAM EURE, who, in the 30th HENRY VIII., was made captain of the Town and Castle of Berwick-upon-Tweed, and afterwards, being warden of the west marches towards Scotland, was elevated to the peerage, by letters patent, dated 24 February, 1544, as BARON EURE, of Wilton, co. Durham; his lordship m. Elizabeth, sister of William, Lord Willoughby de Eresby, and had issue,

RALPH (Sir), who being constable of Scarborough Castle, in the 28th HENRY VIII., held that fortress so gallantly against the insurgents, calling themselves the "Pilgrimage of Grace," that he was made commander-in-chief of all the king's forces appointed for guarding the marches towards Scotland. A post which he defended for several years with great reputation. Sir Ralph Eure after distinguishing himself by many valiant inroads upon Scotland, fell at last, in 1544, at the battle of Halydon Hill. He m. Margaret, dau. of Ralph Bowes, Esq., of Streatham Castle, co. Durham, and left issue,

WILLIAM, who s. his grandfather.

Ralph.

Thomas.

Frances, m. to Robert Lambton, Esq., of Lambton, co. Durham, from which marriage the present EARL OF DURHAM descends.

Anne, m. to Lancelot Merfeld, Esq.

Henry.

Anne, m. to Anthony Thorp, Esq., of Conyl Thorp, co. York.

Muriel, m. 1st, to George Bowes, Esq., and 2ndly, to William Wicliff, Esq., of Wicliff.

Margaret, m. to William Buckton, Esq.

Lord Eure, who was one of the commissioners appointed in 5th EDWARD VI., to convey the Garter to the King of France, d. 1548, and was s. by his grandson,

WILLIAM EURE, 2nd baron. This nobleman was constituted one of the commissioners in the 29th of ELIZABETH, to negotiate a league with Scotland. His lordship m. Margaret, dau. of Sir Edward Dymoke, of Scrivelsby, co. Lincoln, and had issue,

RALPH, his successor.

Francis (Sir), m. 1st, Elizabeth, dau. of John Leonard, Esq., and had issue,

HORACE, who m. Debora, dau. and co-heir of John Bret, Esq., and had, with other issue,

GEORGE, } who inherited as 7th and 8th lords.

RALPH, }

Elizabeth, m. to William Kay, Esq.

Deborah, m. to John Pickering, Esq.

Sir Francis Eure m. 2ndly, Ellen, heiress of Clenenny, co. Carnarvon, widow of John Owen, Esq., secretary to Lord Walsingham, 4th son of Owen ap Robert, of Rodsilin, co. Anglesey, and elder dau. and co-heir of William Morris, Esq., of Clenenny, son (by Margaret, dau. and heir of John Lacon, Esq., of Sir William Morris, Knt., of Clenenny, living 1598, great-grandson of Morris ap John, of Bhiwaedog Park, co. Merioneth, and Clenenny, derived, with the Wynnes, of Gwyder, from Owen Gwynedd, Prince of North Wales. Of this marriage there was an only son.

COMPTON EURE, in whom, if he survived his nephew, Ralph Eure, 8th baron, and in his male issue, if any, vested the barony.

William. Charles.

Anne, m. to John Malory, Esq.

Muriel, m. to Richard Goodricke, Esq., of Ribstone, and her grandson.

SIR JOHN GOODRICKE, Knt., of Ribstone Hall, co. York, was created a BARONET 14 August, 1641.

Martha, m. to William Ayrmin, Esq.

William, Lord Eure, d. in 1594, and was s. by his eldest son,

RALPH EURE, 3rd baron, who was constituted, in the 5th of JAMES I., the king's lieutenant within the principality of Wales. His lordship m. 1st, Mary, only dau. of Sir John Danney, of Cessay, co. York, and had an only son,

WILLIAM, his successor.

He m. 2ndly, Lady Hunsdon, widow of George, 2nd Lord Hunsdon, but had no issue. He was s. at his decease, in 1618, by his son,

WILLIAM EURE, 4th baron. This nobleman m. Lucia, dau. of Sir Andrew Noel, Knt., of Dalby, co. Leicester, and had issue,

RALPH, who d. in the lifetime of his father, leaving by his wife, Catherine, dau. of Thomas, Lord Arundel, of Wardour, an only child,

WILLIAM, who inherited as 5th lord.

WILLIAM, who s. as 6th lord.

Mary, m. to Sir William Howard, Knt., of Naworth Castle, co. Cumberland, and had, with other issue,

CHARLES HOWARD, who was elevated to the peerage, 20 April, 1661, as Baron Dacre, of Gillingham, Viscount Hereford, of Morpeth, and EARL OF CARLISLE (see BURKE'S Extant Peerage).

His lordship was s. by his grandson,

WILLIAM EURE, 5th baron. This nobleman dying unm., the BARONY reverted to his uncle,

WILLIAM EURE, 6th baron. This nobleman, who was a colonel in the army of King CHARLES I., fell at Marston Moor in 1646. His lordship m. the dau. of Sir Thomas Denton, Knt., of Helsden, co. Bucks, and left two daus., viz.,

Margaret, m. to Thomas Dunby, Esq., of Thorpe, co. York, 1st mayor of Leeds.

Mary, m. to William Palmer, Esq., of Lindley, co. York.

Lord Eure dying thus without male issue, the Barony of Eure passed to his kinsman (revert to issue of Sir Francis Eure, 2nd son of William, 2nd lord),

GEORGE EURE, as 7th baron. This nobleman dying unm. in 1672, was s. by his brother,

RALPH EURE, 8th baron, at whose decease, in 1698, s. p., the BARONY OF EURE is presumed to have become EXTINCT.

EUSTACE—VISCOUNT BALTINGLASS.

By Letters Patent, dated 29 June, 1541.

Lineage.

JOHN FITZ-EUSTACE, a Norman lord, accompanied STRONGBOW to Ireland, and founded in that country the historic family of FITZ-EUSTACE or EUSTACE, a great but unfortunate race, whose history, replete with spirit-stirring incident, romance, and vicissitude, records at one time vast power and influence, and at another, unmerited suffering and ruin. The 3rd Viscount of Baltinglass, the ally and friend of the Earl of Desmond, forfeited all but life for what he conceived to be his duty; and died an exile in Spain. The Eustaces were attainted almost by hundreds, their broad lands seized on and their Chiefs destroyed. The descendant, however, of one of the branches of the family, more fortunate than the rest, was the famous Lord Chancellor SIR MAURICE EUSTACE, whose classical and poetical quotations in his address to Strafford on the opening of parliament are highly significant of the literary taste of the day. King CHARLES II. thought he could never do enough for this staunch supporter of his father and himself; he lavished on him the confiscated estates of his attainted kinsmen, and made a parliamentary borough of his pleasure grounds at Harristown, which continued to return two members to the Irish House of Commons up to the time of the Union.

The Viscounty of Baltinglass is one of the few peerages supposed to be under attainder, which has not been restored: so far back as 1839, the late male heir of the 3rd lord, the Rev.

CHARLES EUSTACE, presented a petition to the crown that his right to the title might be acknowledged: the petition was referred by the Queen to the Attorney-General for Ireland, who having investigated the case, made an elaborate report thereon, concluding in these words—

"I am of opinion that the petitioner has shown sufficient evidence of his right to the dignity of Viscount of Baltinglass, in case the attainder of James, the 3rd viscount, created by the Act of Queen ELIZABETH, were reversed.—MAZIERE BRADY."

Subsequent reference was made by the crown to the Attorney-General for England, who gave in a report fully confirming that of the Attorney-General of Ireland.

Despite, however, of the recommendations of the law officers, this historic title has been allowed to remain obscured by the forfeiture of Queen ELIZABETH's time, and the male heir, Captain Charles S. Eustace's right still remains affected by that attainder—a harsh measure it would seem when we consider that Her Majesty's Attorney-General acknowledged and confirmed his descent in 1839, and that Capt. Eustace descends from a brother of the attainted lord who was not included in the forfeiture.

The Act passed in the time of Queen ELIZABETH, was presumed to have attained the title; but recent researches seem to show that the legality of the attainder cannot be sustained, and that consequently the dignity is at this moment unobscured by any penal enactment. The claimant rests his case on the following grounds:

- I. The previous sanction of the English privy council had not been obtained before the introduction of the act into the Irish parliament. This initiatory proceeding, under Poyning's Law, then in full force, was indispensable.
- II. James, 3rd Viscount Baltinglass, against whom the act was specially directed, had died three years previously.
- III. There is no record of the attainder to be found in the archives of the privy council, London.
- IV. The pardon and promise of indemnity granted by the parliament of JAMES I., to all who had opposed the government of ELIZABETH destroyed the attainder, even if such attainder were effectual.
- V. The title was borne and recognized by two viscounts long subsequent to the passing of the statute.

SIR ROWLAND FITZ-EUSTACE, Knt., lord of Kilcullen, lord deputy to the Duke of Clarence, and lord high treasurer of Ireland, which latter high post he held for thirty-eight years, was created by patent, 5 March, 1462, for his many services, LORD BARON PORTLESTER. This Sir Rowland who was son and heir of Edward Fitz-Eustace (Rot. Pat. 1 EDWARD IV., Can. Dub.), m. Margaret, dau. and heir of Jenico Dartas (Mem. Rot. 22nd HENRY VII., m. 12 Ch. R. Off.), and widow of John, son of Sir John Dowdall, and had, with other issue, a dau. and co-heir,

ALISON, who m. Gerald, the 8th EARL OF KILDARE, surnamed "the Great," and by him was mother of Gerald, 9th Earl of Kildare, ancestor of the ducal house of LEINSTER. Alison Eustace, Countess of Kildare, d. in 1480, and was buried in the new chapel of Kilcullen.

Sir Rowland, Lord Portlester, d. 14 December, 1496, and was buried in the convent of Minors Friars, at Kilcullen (New abbey), which he and his wife Margaret, had founded and built. In the churchyard of Ballycultane (now Cotlandstown), co. Kildare, there is a curious stone about a foot square and four feet long, apparently the shaft of some ancient cross: on one side is "Eustace, Lord of Portlester, 1496," and on the other the "saltire" and baron's coronet. At Lord Portlester's decease, the male heir of the great house of Eustace was

SIR THOMAS EUSTACE, Knt., created Baron of Kilcullen, co. Kildare, in 1541, and Viscount of Baltinglass, co. Wicklow, in 1542. His lordship made a settlement of all his estates upon the marriage of his son, SIR ROWLAND EUSTACE, 2nd viscount, with Joan, dau. of James, Lord Dunboyne. The 1st Viscount Baltinglass m. Margaret, dau. of Sir Peter Talbot, of Malahide Castle, co. Dublin, by Lady Catherine his wife, dau. of Gerald, Earl of Kildare, and had issue,

- I. ROWLAND, of whom presently.
- II. Richard.
- I. Anne, m. O'Toole, of Magnelle.
- II. Janet, m. to Bryan McCahir Cavanagh.
- III. Margaret, m. to George Burnell.

The eldest son,

SIR ROWLAND EUSTACE, Knt., 2nd Viscount Baltinglass, Baron Kilcullen, aged thirty-five in 1540, had livery of his estates 16 November, 1549. He m. Joan, dau. of James Butler, Lord Dunboyne, by the Lady Joan Butler, his wife, dau. of Peter, 8th Earl of Ormonde, and had issue,

- I. JAMES, of whom presently.
- II. Edmund, of Tubber, who fled from Ireland, being attainted in 1585. He m. Frances, dau. of Robert Phipps.
- III. WILLIAM, of Naas, of whom hereafter, as ancestor of the present representative of the family.
- IV. Thomas.
- V. Walter, executed in Dublin, 1553.
- VI. Richard fled from Ireland.

The eldest son,

JAMES EUSTACE, 3rd Viscount Baltinglass, acted a conspicuous part in the political drama of his time; having, with other Lords of the Pale complained in 1576 to Queen ELIZABETH that their liberties and privileges had been annulled by the cess, and that no tax ought to be levied upon them but by Act of Parliament, he was, with the Lords Delvin, Howth, and Trimblestown, by order of her Majesty, committed prisoner to the castle of Dublin. "And in like manner their lawyers, whom they had sent with their complaints to her Majesty, were committed prisoners to the Tower of London. In consequence of which, and for the sake of his religion, he being a Catholic, and the Protestant religion having been (as Spenser says) forced upon the Irish people with great terrors and sharp penalties, he did join the Earl of Desmond in arms, in the hope of placing Queen MARY of Scotland upon the throne of those kingdoms." But, despite of all his exertions and gallantry, the attempt proved abortive, and Baltinglass had to escape to Spain in 1583, where he soon after died of grief. The Viscount Baltinglass (says Holinshed, Chronicles), "being advertised of the death of the Earl of Desmond, which was no small grief unto him, and he also very wearie of his troling and wandering on foot amongst bogs, woods, and desert places (being altogether distressed and in great misery, and now destitute of all his friends and acquaintances, and not able to hold head any longer against her Majesties force), did imbarke himself for Spain in hope to have some relief and succour and to procure some aid from the king of Spain, and by that meanes to be of some abilitie to renew his force and rebellion. But he found in the end very small comfort. And therefore of a very melancholy grief and sorrow of mind as it is thought, he died, being in very extreme poverty and need." In two years after the death of Lord Baltinglass, in 1585, an act of parliament was passed against the family, called the Statute of Baltinglass, which not only made estates tail forfeitable for treason, but did also (as Spenser says) cut off and frustrate all such family settlements, as had been made for the twelve years prior to the rebellion, but the difficulty with which that Act had been obtained was so great that was it to have been passed again, he was very sure it never could. By these post facto laws the family of Eustace was deprived of their estates and titles.

The 3rd viscount m. Mary, dau. and co-heir of Sir Henry Travers of Monkstown Castle, co. Dublin, by Genet Preston his wife, but d. s. p. His brother and eventual heir,

THE HON. WILLIAM EUSTACE (who had not been engaged in the rebellion), on the departure of Lord Baltinglass for Spain, retired with his family to England, and, in consequence of the edict of pardon and oblivion, published by King JAMES on his accession, together with the confirmatory acts of parliament of that and the subsequent reign, is recorded in the Heralds' College, London, as living as Viscount Baltinglass, in 1610. He m. Margaret, dau. of Ashe, of Great Forenass, co. Kildare, and had (with a dau., Jane, wife of Captain Archbold) an only son,

ROWLAND EUSTACE, m. Elizabeth Bigland, a Yorkshire lady, dau. of Mary Strickland, of Sizergh, one of the "Maries" residing with Mary Stuart at the time of her execution. In memory of this alliance, a drinking cup has been handed down in the Eustace family, and is still in the possession of the present Capt. Charles Stannard Eustace; it bears this inscription:—"This was MARY Queen of Scott's drinking cup: ye day she was beheaded, she gave it to her goddaughter, Mary Strickland, to be kept for her sake. Jon. Eustace, great great-grandson to the said Mary Strickland had it mounted in this silver in the year 1754." By her he had two sons, of whom the elder, James, an officer in the army, died in early youth, of the plague. The younger,

RICHARD EUSTACE, became representative of the family. He served as sovereign of Naas, and inherited the property of Ashe's Castle there, derived from his grandmother, Margaret Ashe. By Mary his wife, dau. of Sir William Forster, he had issue,

- I. John, d. unm. at a very advanced age.
- II. CHARLES, of whom presently.
- III. William d. very old and unm.
- I. Elizabeth.
- II. Avis, m. 1688, to Alexander Graydon, Esq.
- III. Mary.

Richard Eustace's will was dated 21 August, 1702, and proved 10 September in the same year. His 2nd son,

EVERINGHAM—BARONS EVERINGHAM.

By Writ of Summons, dated 4 March, 1309.

Lineage.

In the 14th HENRY III.

ROBERT DE EVERINGHAM m. Isabel, dau. of John de Birkin, and sister and sole heiress of Thomas de Birkin, (feudal lords who flourished to nearly the middle of the 13th century,) and paid a fine of 200 marks to the crown for livery of her lands, and likewise forlivery of the Bailiwick of the forest of Sherwood, that being also part of her inheritance. This Robert held then five knights' fees and a half in the county of Nottingham, and one in Lexington. He had issue,

ADAM, his successor.

John, to whom his mother gave the manor of Birkin.

Robert, a clergyman, rector of the church of Birkin.

He d. in the 30th HENRY III., and was s. by his eldest son,

ADAM DE EVERINGHAM, who in six years after, at the decease of his mother, had livery of her lands, upon doing homage, and giving security for the payment of £50 for his relief. In the 42nd HENRY III. this feudal lord was in the expedition made then into Wales, but he afterwards took up arms with Montfort, Earl of Leicester, and the other discontented barons of that period, and was at the battle of Evesham. He d. 9th EDWARD I., being at the time seised of a moiety of the barony of Schelford, in Nottinghamshire, into which moiety twelve knights' fees and a half in several counties appertained, whereof ten were for the Bailiwick of Sherwood. He likewise possessed the manors of Everingham and Farburne, co. York, and Westbury, co. Lincoln. He was s. by his son,

ROBERT DE EVERINGHAM, who m. Lucia, dau. and heiress of Robert de Thwenge, a great feudal lord, temp. EDWARD I., (the lady had been previously the wife of Sir William Latimer, and divorced,) and dying in the 15th EDWARD I., was s. by his son,

ADAM DE EVERINGHAM, who, in the 31st of EDWARD I., was in the wars of Scotland, and in three years afterwards was created a knight of the Bath with Prince Edward, and other persons of rank, when he attended the prince upon the expedition then made into Scotland. After which, in the 2nd of EDWARD II., he was summoned to parliament as a BARON; and from that period to the 9th inclusive; during those years he was constantly engaged in the wars of Scotland; but afterwards taking up arms with Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, he was made prisoner at the battle of Boroughbridge, and forced to pay a fine of 400 marks to the king to save his life. In the 11th EDWARD III., his lordship entailed his manor of Lexington, in Notts, where he principally resided, upon ADAM, his eldest son, and so successively in default of male issue upon Robert, Edmund, Alexander, and Nicholas, his younger sons. This manor was holden of the archbishop of York, by the service of performing the office of butler in the prelate's house, upon the day of his enthronization. Lord Everingham d. in 1341, and was s. by his eldest son,

ADAM DE EVERINGHAM, 2nd baron, summoned to parliament, as "Adam de Everingham de Laxton," 8 January, 1371. This nobleman, who was several years actively engaged in the French wars, shared in the glory of Cressy. His lordship m. Joan, dau. of John Deyville and d. 8 February, 2nd RICHARD II., having had issue,

WILLIAM, who m. Alice, dau. of John, Lord Grey, of Codnor, and dying v. p. 43rd EDWARD III., left issue,

ROBERT, who s. his grandfather.

Joan, m. to Sir William Elys, Knt.

Catherine, m. to John Elton, Esq.

Reginald, who inherited the manor of Westburgh, co. York, m. 1st, Agnes, dau. of John Longvillers, and 2ndly, Joan, dau. of —, and d. 1st HENRY VI., leaving a son,

Edmund, who d. s. p.; and several daus.

The baron d. in 1371, and was s. by his grandson,

ROBERT DE EVERINGHAM, 3rd baron. This nobleman d. in minority a few months after he inherited the title, leaving his two sisters his heirs, and the BARONY OF EVERINGHAM fell into ABEYANCE, between those ladies, as it has continued since with their representatives.

FELTON—BARONS FELTON.

By Writ of Summons, dated 8 January, 1313.

Lineage.

In the 25th EDWARD I.

ROBERT DE FELTON obtained a charter from the crown for a weekly market at his manor of Luchin, co. Norfolk, and likewise for free-warren there. In the 34th of the same reign he was in the expedition then made into Scotland, and in 4th EDWARD II., he had a military summons for a similar service. The next year he was constituted governor of Scarborough Castle, and was summoned to parliament as a BARON, 8 January, 22 May, 26 July, and 26 November, 1313. His lordship d. in 1314, and was s. by his son,

JOHN DE FELTON, 2nd baron, who (according to Dugdale) had summons* to parliament in the 16th EDWARD III., but not afterwards. This nobleman was governor of Alnwick Castle in the 8th EDWARD II., and for some years afterwards, he was engaged in the Scottish wars. In the 18th of the same reign he was in the expedition then made into Gascony, being at that time one of the admirals of the fleet sent out to annoy the French and their commercial adventurers. Of his lordship nothing further appears known, except that he was an ancestor of the Feltons of Playford, co. Suffolk, one of whom was created BARONET in 1620, an honour now extinct. Contemporary with this John, Baron Felton, was

WILLIAM DE FELTON, governor of Bamburgh Castle, co. Northumberland, temp. EDWARD II., and governor of Roxburgh Castle, in Scotland, in the 11th EDWARD III. This personage, who appears to have taken a distinguished part in the wars of Scotland and France, was summoned to parliament as a BARON, 25 February, 1342, but not afterwards. In the 39th EDWARD III. he attended Prince Edward into Gascony, and being then seneschal of Limosin, he vanquished a considerable party of the Britains there; but in two years subsequently, being in Spain with the Duke of Lancaster, and wishing to prove his charger, he made a descent upon a body of the enemy, with his spear in his rest, and piercing it through a knight, he was immediately surrounded and slain, 19 March, 1367, leaving a son and heir,

SIR JOHN DE FELTON, who d. 31 March, 1396, having m. twice; by his 1st wife, Joan, dau. of Sir John Fitz-William, he had two daus., Elizabeth, aged fifteen at her father's death, who m. Sir Edward Hastings, and Joan, aged thirteen at her father's death, who m. Walter Falconberg, and was mother of John Falconberg. By his 2nd wife, he had a son,

SIR JOHN FELTON, who d. s. p. in 1402, when John, the son of Walter Falconberg, by Joan his wife, was found sole heir of the whole blood; and Elizabeth, his half-sister, wife of Sir Edward Hastings, was found to be heir of the half blood. She left issue, Sir John Hastings, father of Sir Edmund, father of Sir Roger, et. twenty-six in 1489, amongst whose descendants this barony is in ABEYANCE.

FERRERS—EARLS OF DERBY.

Creation of King STEPHEN, anno 1133.

Lineage.

The first of this eminent family that settled in England was HENRY DE FERRERS (son of Walcheline de Ferrers, a Norman), who obtained from WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, a grant of

* His name does not appear in the list of summonses for that year—NICOLAS.

Tutbury Castle, co. Stafford, with extensive possessions in other shires, of which 114 manors were in Derbyshire. This person must have been of considerable rank, not only from these enormous grants, but from the circumstance of his being one of the commissioners appointed by the CONQUEROR to make the great survey of the kingdom. He was the founder of the priory of Tutbury, which he liberally endowed. By Berta his wife, he had issue, Egenulph, d. v. p.; William, d. v. p.; ROBERT, his successor; Gundred; and Emmeline. His only surviving son and heir,

ROBERT DE FERRERS, having contributed, at the head of the Derbyshire men, to King STEPHEN's victory over King DAVID, of Scotland, at Northallerton (commonly called the battle of the Standard), was created by that monarch EARL OF DERBY. By Hawise his wife, he had William, who d. s. p.; ROBERT, his successor; Walcheline, of Okeham; Isolda, m. to Stephen de Beauchamp; and Maud, m. to Bertram de Verdon. The earl d. in 1139, and was s. by his son,

ROBERT DE FERRERS, as 2nd Earl of Derby, living 1141. This nobleman was distinguished by his munificence to the church. His lordship was buried at the abbey of Meervale, co. Warwick, one of the religious houses which he had founded, wrapped in an ox's hide, according to his own desire. He had (with a dau., Petronilla, m. to Henry de Stafford) a son,

WILLIAM DE FERRERS, 3rd Earl of Derby, who, in the 12th HENRY II., upon levying the aid for marrying the king's daughter, certified the knights' fees then in his possession to be in number seventy-nine, for which he paid the sum of 68 marks. This nobleman was also a liberal benefactor to the church. His lordship m. Margaret, dau. and heiress of William Peverel, of Nottingham, by whom he had issue,

ROBERT, of whom presently.

Walcheline de Ferrers, Lord of Eggington, co. Derby, father, by Goda his wife, dau. of Robert de Toni, of

Robert de Ferrers, Lord of Eggington and of Radbourne, who left at his decease, 9th HENRY III., two daus. and co-heirs,

1 Ermentrude, who m. Robert de Talbot, Lord of Gainsburg, in Lincolnshire, living 18th King JOHN, and was grandmother of

THOMAS TALBOT DE BASHALL, co. York, ancestor of the knightly house of Bashall, represented by the late Richard Hughes Lloyd, Esq., of Plymlog, Gwerclas, and Bashall, father of the present

JOHN-HUGHES LLOYD, Esq., commander R.N. (See BURKE's Landed Gentry.)

2 Margery, who m. Sir John Chandos, Knt., and from this marriage lineally derives the family of CHANDOS POLE, of Radborne Hall, co. Derby. (See that name, BURKE's Landed Gentry.)

The earl was s. by his elder son,

ROBERT DE FERRERS, 4th Earl of Derby. This nobleman rebelled against HENRY II., and marching at the head of the Leicestershire men (19th HENRY II.), upon Nottingham, then kept for the king by Reginald de Luci, got possession of the town, which he sacked, putting the greater part of the inhabitants to the sword, and taking the rest prisoners. He was soon afterwards, however, reduced to submission, and obliged to surrender to the crown his castles of Tutbury and Duffield, which were demolished by order of the king. His lordship m. Sibilla, dau. of William de Braose, Lord of Abergavenny and Brecknock, by whom he had issue,

WILLIAM, his successor.

Milicent, m. to Roger, Lord Mortimer, of Wigmore.

Agatha. This lady being a concubine to King JOHN, had by that prince a dau.,

Joane, 3rd consort of Llewelyn the Great, Prince of North Wales ap Iorwerth Drwyndwn, by her, who d. 1237, and was buried at Llanfaca, Anglesey, where, over her tomb Prince Llewelyn erected the Friary of Llanfaca, had issue,

DAVID AP LLEWELYN, Prince of North Wales by usurpation, living 5 May, 4th HENRY III., 1229; d. s. p. 30th HENRY III., 1246, having m. Isabella, dau. and co-heir of William de Braose, of Brecknock.

HELEN, m. circa 6th HENRY III., 1220, John Le Scott, 8th Earl Palatine of Chester and Earl of Huntingdon, brother of WILLIAM THE LION, king of Scotland, who d. s. p. 7 June, 1244. She m. 2ndly, Robert de Guiney, who d. 41st HENRY III., 1277, son of Sahir de Guiney, created Earl of Winchester, circa 1210.

MARGARET, m. circa 2nd HENRY III., 1217, John de Braose, surnamed Tadody, who d. 16th HENRY III., 1231-2. She m. 2ndly, Walter de Clifford, who d. 48th HENRY III., 1263.

Gwladys Ddül, m. circa 1215, Reginald de Braose, who dying 1221, left no issue by her. She m. 2ndly, Ralph de Mortimer, of Wigmore, who living November, 1227, d. 30th HENRY III., 1245-6. His widow d. at Windsor, 1253. From the marriage of Gwladys Ddŷ and Ralph de Mortimer, derived by direct representation, EDWARD IV., KING OF ENGLAND.

 Angharad, m. Llewelyn Vychan ap Maelgwyn, grandson of the Lord Rhys, Prince of South Wales.

This earl, who was also a benefactor to the church, having founded the priory of Woodham, commonly called Woodham-Ferrers, in Essex, was s. at his decease by his son,

WILLIAM DE FERRERS, 5th Earl of Derby. This nobleman was ousted of his dignities of Derby and Nottingham by King RICHARD I., but they were soon afterwards restored to him, and we find him accompanying the lion-hearted monarch to the Holy Land, where he lost his life at the siege of Acon, anno 1191. His lordship, amongst other gifts to the church, gave, in the 1st RICHARD I., for the health of his soul, and the soul of Sibel his wife, to the monks of St. Denis, in France, one wax taper yearly, price thirteen pence; as also a stag and bear in their proper seasons, to be sent annually thither at the feast of St. Denis, by himself and his heirs. He was s. by his son,

WILLIAM DE FERRERS, 6th Earl of Derby. This nobleman, upon the return of King RICHARD from captivity, took arms in his behalf, and joining the Earl of Chester, besieged Nottingham Castle, which, after a brief resistance, surrendered. For this and other acts of fidelity, he was chosen by the king to sit with the rest of the peers in the great council held at the said castle of Nottingham in the ensuing March. Moreover, at RICHARD's second coronation he was one of the four that carried the canopy over the king's head. Upon the accession of King JOHN, his lordship, with the Earls of Clare and Chester, and other great men, swore fealty to the new monarch, but upon the condition that each person should have his right. His lordship was present at the coronation of King JOHN, and 7 June following, being solemnly created EARL OF DERBY by special charter, dated at Northampton, he was girt with a sword by the king's own hands (being the first of whom in any charter that expression was used). He had also a grant of the third penny of all the pleas before the sheriff throughout the whole county, whereof he was earl, to hold to him and his heirs as amply as any of his ancestors had enjoyed the same. Moreover, in consideration of 4,000 marks, he obtained another charter from the king of the manor of Higham-Ferrers, co. Northampton, with the hundred and park; as also of the manors of Blisworth and Newbottle, in the same shire; which were part of the lands of his great grandfather, William Peverel, of Nottingham. King JOHN also conferred upon him a mansion-house, situated in the parish of St. Margaret, within the city of London, which had belonged to Isaac, a Jew, at Norwich, to hold by the service of waiting upon the king (the earl and his heirs), at all festivals yearly, without any cap, but with a garland of the breadth of his little finger upon his head. These liberal marks of royal favour were felt so gratefully by the earl, that in all the subsequent struggles between the king and the refractory barons, his lordship never once swerved from his allegiance, but remained true to the monarch; and after King JOHN's decease, he adhered with the same unshaken loyalty to the interests of his son, King HENRY III. His lordship assisted at the coronation of the new monarch; and immediately after the ensuing Easter he took part with the famous William Marshall (governor of the king and kingdom), the Earls of Chester and Albemarle, and many other great men in the siege of Mountsorrell Castle, in Leicestershire, then held by Henry de Braybrooke, and ten other stout knights. And the same year, was likewise with those noble persons at raising the siege of Lincoln, which place the rebellious barons with LEWIS, King of France, had invested. His lordship m. Agnes, sister, and one of the co-heirs of Ranulph, Earl of Chester, by whom he had two sons, William and Thomas. He d. of the gout in 1246, and his countess d. in the same year, after a union, according to some authorities, of seventy-five, and by others, of fifty-five years. His lordship was s. by his elder son,

WILLIAM DE FERRERS, 7th Earl of Derby, who, upon doing homage in the 32nd HENRY III., had livery of Chartley Castle, and the other lands of his mother's inheritance; and the same year he sat in the parliament held in London; wherein the king made so stout an answer to the demands of his impetuous barons. His lordship m. 1st, Sibel, one of the daus. and co-heirs of William Mareschal, Earl of Pembroke, by whom he had seven daus., viz.,

Agnes, m. to William de Vesel.

Isabel, m. 1st, to Gilbert Basset, of Wycombe, and 2ndly, to Reginald de Mohun.

Maud, m. 1st, to William de Kymes; 2ndly, to William de Vyvon, and 3rdly, to Emerick de Bapel Carnardi.

Sibel, m. 1st, to John de Vipont; 2ndly, to Franco de Mohun. Joane, m. to William Aguilon; and 2ndly, to John de Mohun.

Agatha, m. to Hugh Mortimer, of Checlmarsh.

Eleanor, m. 1st, to William de Valibus; 2ndly, to Roger de Quincy, Earl of Winton; and 3rdly, to Roger de Leybourne, but had no issue.

The earl m. 2ndly, Margaret, one of the daus. and co-heirs of Roger de Quinci, Earl of Winchester, and had issue,

ROBERT, his successor.

William, upon whom his mother conferred the lordship of Groby, co. Leicester. (See FERRERS, BARONS FERRERS, of Groby, ancestor of the families of FERRERS, of Groby, and of FERRERS, of Biddlesey, Clinton.)

Joan, m. to Thomas, Lord Berkeley.

Agnes, m. to Robert de Muscegros, Lord of Deerhurst.

His lordship, who from his youth had been a martyr to the gout, and in consequence, obliged to be drawn from place to place in a chariot, lost his life by being thrown, through the heedlessness of his driver, over the bridge of St. Neots, co. Huntingdon, in 1254. (38th HENRY III.) He was s. by his elder son, ROBERT DE FERRERS, 8th Earl of Derby. This nobleman being a minor at the time of his father's decease, the queen and Peter de Savoy gave 6,000 marks for the custody of his lands, during his minority. His lordship, when arrived at manhood, became one of the most active of the discontented nobles arrayed against HENRY III., and commencing his career by the plunder and destruction of Worcester, the king, to retaliate, sent a force under Prince Edward, into the co. of Stafford and Derby, which wasted the earl's lands with fire and sword, and demolished his castle at Tutworth. His lordship joining, afterwards, with Montford, Earl of Leicester, and Clare, Earl of Gloucester, participated in the victory achieved at Lewes, in Sussex, wherein the king and the prince were made prisoners; but continuing to adhere to Leicester, he was defeated, with that nobleman, by his former companion in arms, the Earl of Gloucester, at Evesham, and obliged to throw himself upon the mercy of the king, which, in consideration of a cup of gold, adorned with precious stones (obtained from Michal de Tony, upon a mortgage on one of his manors in Northamptonshire), and 1,500 marks, was extended to him, and he received a full pardon for all his misdemeanours, the king undertaking to protect him against Prince Edward, and all others, towards whom, at any time during the troubles, he had done wrong: upon condition, that if he should transgress again, he was without hope of favour, to be wholly disinherited. For the strict observance of which provision, the earl not only obliged himself by special charter, then freely sealed to the king, but by his oath of allegiance at the time renewed. The charter and oath, however, were but feeble restraints upon his lordship, for in the very next spring, we find him again at the head of a powerful army in the northern part of Derbyshire, and soon after defeated in a pitched battle, at Chesterfield, by Prince Henry, eldest son of the King of Almaine. Here, his lordship was amongst those who made their escape from the field, but hiding himself under some sacks of wool in a church, he was there discovered, through the treachery of a woman, and thence conveyed a prisoner to London; whereupon he was totally disinherited, by the parliament then sitting at Westminster, as well of the EARLDOM OF DERBY, as of his territorial possessions, the greater part of which were conferred by the king upon his 2nd son, Edmund (surnamed Crouchback), Earl of Leicester and Lancaster; to whom many writers of authority attribute also the dignity of Earl of Derby; but Dugdale expressly says, "although he (the prince) had possession of the greater part of this Robert's land, and exercised (perhaps) the power of earl in that county, I am not satisfied that he really was Earl of Derby; in regard, I cannot find that the same Edmund had any patent of creation to that honour, as he had to those of Leicester and Lancaster." It seems that this unfortunate nobleman continued in confinement about three years, but in the 53rd HENRY III., there was so much interest made for him, that the king accepted of security, whereby he might receive satisfaction for his lordship's misdemeanours, and issued his precept to Prince Edmund, to make restitution of his lands; when an agreement was entered into between the disinherited earl and the prince, by which the latter, for the sum of £50,000, to be paid at once upon a certain day, was to relinquish all interest in the lands; but that payment not being made good, the securities to the covenant passed over the lands to Prince Edmund and his heirs for ever. Subsequently, however, the ousted lord instituted a suit in the Court of King's Bench, against the prince, for the restitution of his property, upon the allegation that the agreement he had sealed was extorted from him when a prisoner, and under apprehension of his life; but after divers pleadings, a decision of the court in the beginning of EDWARD I.'s reign, confirmed the lands to Prince Edmund.

This Robert de Ferrers, last Earl of Derby, of the family, m. 1st, Mary, dau. of Hugh le Brun, Earl of Angoulesme, and niece of King HENRY III., by whom he had no issue; and 2ndly, Eleanore, dau. of Ralph, Lord Bassett, by whom he had an only son,

JOHN, who inherited Chartley Castle. (See FERRERS, BARONS FERRERS, of Chartley.)

The earl d. 7th EDWARD I., the last EARL OF DERBY of the house of FERRERS. The descendant, and existing male representative of this once powerful family is MARMION-EDWARD FERRERS, Esq., of Baddesley Clinton, co. Warwick.

The Honourable

WILLIAM FERRERS, 2nd son of William, 7th Earl of Derby, obtained, by gift of Margaret, his mother, one of the daus. and co-heirs of Roger de Quinci, Earl of Winchester, the manor of Groby, co. Leicester, whereupon he assumed the arms of the family of De Quinci. He m. 1st, Joane, dau. of Hugh le Despencer; and 2ndly, Eleanore, dau. of Matthew Lovaine, and by the former had issue,

WILLIAM, his successor.

Anne, m. to John, Lord Grey, of Wilton.

He d. in 1288, and was s. by his son,

WILLIAM FERRERS, who doing homage, had livery of his lands in England, in the 21st EDWARD I., and in the 24th, of the lands which he inherited in Scotland. In the following year he was summoned to parliament as BARON FERRERS, of Groby. His lordship was engaged in the wars of Scotland in the reigns of EDWARD I. and EDWARD II. He m. Margaret, dau. of John, 2nd Lord Segreve, and dying in 1325, left two sons and a dau., Henry and Thomas, and Anne, m. to Edward le Despencer, who d. in 1342. The former,

HENRY FERRERS, 2nd Baron Ferrers, of Groby, summoned to parliament, from 5 June, 1331, to 20 November, 1342. This nobleman, being actively engaged in the wars of King EDWARD III., both in Scotland and France, acquired very large territorial possessions, by grants from the crown, for his services. His lordship m. Isabel, 4th dau. and co-heir of Theobald, 2nd Lord Verdon, and in the 8th EDWARD III., upon doing homage, had livery of the lands of her inheritance lying in Ireland. Of this marriage there were issue,

WILLIAM, his successor.

Ralph, m. Joan, dau. of Richard, Baron Grey, of Codnor, and widow of Sir William Harcourt, of Bosworth, co. Leicester. Philippa, m. to Guy de Beauchamp, son and heir of Thomas, Earl of Warwick.

Elizabeth, m. David, Earl of Athol.

His lordship d. in 1343, and was s. by his son,

WILLIAM FERRERS, 3rd Baron Ferrers, of Groby, summoned to parliament, from 15 March, 1354, to 6 April, 1369. In the 29th EDWARD III., his lordship was in the expedition then made into France in the retinue of his father-in-law, Robert de Ufford, Earl of Suffolk; and again, in the 33rd and 34th, in the latter of which years, his lands in Ireland being seized for the defence of that realm, the king directed his precept to the justice, chancellor and treasurer there, to discharge them, in consequence of his lordship being then in the wars in France, with divers men-at-arms and archers, at a very considerable expense. His lordship m. 1st, Margaret, dau. and co-heir of Robert de Ufford, Earl of Suffolk, by whom he had issue,

HENRY, his successor.

Elizabeth, a nun, in the convent of Minoreesses-without, Aldgate, in the suburbs of London.

Margaret, m. to Thomas Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick.

He m. 2ndly, Margaret, dau. of Henry, 2nd Lord Percy, and widow of Robert, son and heir of Gilbert de Umfravil, Earl of Angus, and dying in 1372, was s. by his son,

HENRY FERRERS, 4th Baron Ferrers, of Groby, summoned to parliament from 4 August, 1377, to 17 December, 1387. This nobleman was uninterruptedly engaged in the French wars from the 1st to the 7th RICHARD II. inclusive; and the next year, being then a banneret, he was retained to serve the king in the wars of Scotland. Upon the death of William de Ufford, Earl of Suffolk, his mother's brother, without issue, Lord Ferrers was found to be one of the deceased earl's next heirs. His lordship m. Joane, dau. of Lucas Poyning, Lord St. John, and dying in 1388, was s. by his son,

WILLIAM FERRERS, 5th Baron Ferrers, of Groby, summoned to parliament from 30 November, 1396, to 3 December, 1441. This nobleman was also in the French wars. His lordship m. 1st, Philippa, dau. of Roger, Baron Clifford, by Matilda his wife, dau. of Thomas Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick; and 2ndly, Margaret, dau. of John Montacute, 3rd Earl of Salisbury, and by the former had issue,

1. HENRY, who d. v. p. 1394, leaving (by Isabel his wife, eldest dau. of Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk, by Elizabeth his wife, sister and co-heir of Thomas FitzAlan, Earl of Arundel and Surrey, which lady m. 2ndly, James, Baron Berkeley), an only dau. and heiress,

ELIZABETH, heiress to the Barony of Ferrers, of Groby, at the decease of her grandfather, m. 1st, Sir Edward Grey,

Knt. (eldest son of Baron Grey de Ruthin), who was summoned to parliament as Baron Ferrers of Groby. (See GREY, BARON FERRERS.) She m. 2ndly, Sir John Bouchier, 4th son of Henry, Earl of Essex.

II. Thomas (Sir), of Tamworth, jure uxoris, who m. Elizabeth, sister and co-heir of Sir Baldwin Freville, Knt., of Tamworth Castle, co. Warwick, and had issue,

1 THOMAS (Sir), 2nd Lord of Tamworth Castle, ancestor of the family of FERRERS of Tamworth Castle, the eventual heiress of which, ANNE FERRERS, m. the Hon. Robert Shirley, eldest son of Robert, 1st Earl Ferrers, and 13th Lord Ferrers of Chartley, and had an only dau. and heiress, ELIZABETH SHIRLEY, BARONESS FERRERS, who m. James Compton, Earl of Northampton. Their only dau. and heiress, LADY CHARLOTTE COMPTON, BARONESS FERRERS and Compton, m. George, 1st MARQUESS TOWNSHEND, and had a son and successor, GEORGE, EARL OF LEICESTER, who became 16th Baron Ferrers of Chartley. His lordship was created Earl of Leicester in 1784, and inherited the MARQUESSATE OF TOWNSHEND at the decease of his father, as 2nd marquess. He m. Charlotte, dau. of Eaton-Mainwaring Ellerker, Esq. of Risby Park, and had George, 2nd Marquess Townshend, 17th Baron Ferrers of Chartley, who d. s. p. 1856; Lord Charles V. F. Townshend, who also d. s. p., and three daus., co-heirs, viz., Lady Charlotte-Barbara, wife of Lieut.-Col. Bishop, who d. s. p. Lady Harriet-Anne Townshend m. EDWARD FERRERS, Esq., of BADDESLEY CLINTON, and Lady Elizabeth-Margaret, m. J. M. BOULTREE, Esq.

2 HENRY (Sir), ancestor of the family of FERRERS, of Baddesley Clinton, co. Warwick, now represented by MARMION EDWARD FERRERS, Esq., of Baddesley Clinton, who is senior co-heir of the Barony of FERRERS, of Chartley; and HEIR MALE, also, of the House of Ferrers, Earls of Derby.

III. John.

IV. Edmund, of St. Albans.

William, 5th Baron Ferrers, of Groby, d. in 1445, when the BARONY OF FERRERS, of Groby, devolved upon his grand-dau., Elizabeth, in which dignity, her husband, Sir Edward Grey, was summoned to parliament (see GREY, BARON FERRERS, of Groby).

FERRERS—BARONS FERRERS OF CHARTLEY.

By Writ of Summons, dated 6 February, 1299.

Lineage.

JOHN DE FERRERS (only son of Robert de Ferrers, 8th and last Earl of Derby of that family), after the forfeiture of his father was summoned to parliament as BARON FERRERS of Chartley, co. Stafford, 6 February, 1299. (A seat which came into the family of Ferrers, by the marriage of William, 5th Earl of Derby, with Agnes, sister and co-heir of Ranulph, Earl of Chester.) This John, inheriting the turbulent spirit of his father, joined the Earl of Hertford and others, in the 25th EDWARD I., in opposing the collection of the subsidies granted by the parliament then held at St. Edmundsbury, to the crown, but the ferment was allayed by the king's confirming Magna Charta, and the charter of the Forests; and by declaring that in future no tax should be imposed upon the subject without the consent of parliament, at the same time granting a pardon to the discontented lords and their adherents, in which pardon John de Ferrers is especially named. Soon after this he petitioned Pope NICHOLAS III., that his holiness should interfere to procure him the lands of his late father which had been conferred upon Edmund, Earl of Lancaster, but his suit was ineffectual. He was subsequently in the Scottish wars, and was then raised to the peerage as stated above. His lordship m. Hawyse, dau. and heiress of Sir Robert de Muscegros, of Charlton, co. Somerset, by whom he acquired a great increase to his fortune. In the 34th EDWARD I., he was again in the wars of Scotland, and, subsequently, in the 4th EDWARD II., the year following which he was constituted seneschal of Aquitaine. He d. in 1324, and was s. by his son,

ROBERT DE FERRERS, 2nd Baron Ferrers, of Chartley, summoned to parliament 25 February, 1342. This nobleman, who was of a martial character, served frequently in the Scotch and French wars of HENRY III., and finally, the year before his decease, participated in the glorious victory of Cressy, (23rd EDWARD III.) His lordship m. Agnes, dau. of Humphrey de Bohun, Earl of Hereford, by whom he had issue,

JOHN, his successor

Robert, summoned to parliament as Baron Ferrers, of Wemmo (see that dignity).

He d. in 1350, and was s. by his elder son,

JOHN DE FERRERS, 3rd Baron Ferrers, of Chartley, but never summoned to parliament. This nobleman was in the wars of Gascony in the 33rd EDWARD III. His lordship m. Elizabeth, dau. of Ralph, 1st Earl of Stafford, and widow of Fulke, Lord Strange of Blackmere, and dying beyond the seas, 2 April, 1367, was s. by his son,

ROBERT DE FERRERS, 4th Baron Ferrers, of Chartley, but never summoned to parliament. His lordship m. Margaret, dau. of Edward, Lord Le Despencer, and dying 13 March, 1412-13, had (with a dau. Philippa, m. to Sir Thomas Green, of Boughton), three sons, EDMUND, his heir; Thomas and Edward. The eldest son,

EDMUND DE FERRERS, 5th Baron Ferrers, of Chartley, but never summoned to parliament, was b. 1389. This nobleman participated in most of the great victories of King HENRY V. His lordship m. Eleanor, dau. and co-heir of Thomas Lord Roche, by Elizabeth Bermingham his wife, by whom he acquired large landed possessions, amongst which was that of Castle Bromwich, co. Derby, and by her (who m. 2ndly, Philip Chetwynd of Ingestre, and d. 1439-40), he had issue,

WILLIAM, his successor.

Edmund, upon whom the estates were entailed.

John.

He d. 1435-6, and was s. by his eldest son,

WILLIAM DE FERRERS, 6th Baron Ferrers, of Chartley, who m. Elizabeth, dau. of Sir Hamon Belknap, Knt., and by her (who d. 28 May, 1470), left an only dau.,

ANNE, wife of Walter Devereux, Esq., upon whom the Barony of FERRERS, of Chartley, devolved, and among whose descendants, M. E. FERRERS, Esq., of Baddesley Clinton, and HENRY TOWNSHEND BOULTREE, Esq., it is now in abeyance.

His lordship's great landed possessions passed in conformity with the entail upon his only brother, the Hon. Edmund Ferrers. William, the 6th Baron, d. 9 June, 1450.

FITZ-ALAN—EARLS OF ARUNDEL, BARONS MALTRAVERS.

Earldom by feudal possession of Arundel Castle
Barony by Writ of Summons, dated 5 June, 1330.

Lineage.

In the time of WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR,

ALAN, the son of Flathald (or Flaald) obtained, by the gift of that King, the castle of Oswaldestre, with the territory adjoining, which belonged to Meredith, Prince of Powys ap Bleddyn, King of Powys. This Alan, having m. the dau. and heir of Warine, sheriff of Shropshire, had, in her right, the Barony of Warine, and was s. by his son,

WILLIAM FITZ-ALAN, who, in the contest between King STEPHEN and the Empress MAUD, being then governor of Shrewsbury and sheriff of the county of Salop, held the castle of Shrewsbury for the latter, until it was taken by assault. He was also with the empress at the siege of Winchester Castle, in the 6th STEPHEN, when she and her whole army were put to flight; and afterwards, continuing to adhere stoutly to the same cause, he was reconstituted sheriff of Salop, so soon as King HENRY attained the crown. This William m. Isabel, dau. and heir of Helias de Say, Lady of Clun, niece of

Robert, Earl of Gloucester, and dying some time before 1160, was s. by his son,

WILLIAM FITZ-ALAN, who, in the 12th HENRY II., upon the assessment, in aid of marrying the king's daughter, certified his knights' fees to be in number thirty-five and a half. He d. about 1172, and was s. by his son,

WILLIAM FITZ-ALAN. This feudal lord served the office of sheriff for Shropshire, from 2nd RICHARD I., until the 3rd of JOHN, inclusive. He m. Mary, dau. of Thomas de Erington, and d. 1214, having had a son, William, who d. s. p.

He was s. by his brother,

JOHN FITZ-ALAN, who took up arms with the other barons, temp. JOHN; but, upon the accession of King HENRY, having had letters of safe conduct to come in and make his peace, he had livery of the lands of his inheritance, upon paying, however, a fine of 10,000 marks. This feudal lord m. 1st, Isabel, 2nd dau. of William de Albin, Earl of Arundel, and sister and co-heir of Hugh, last earl of that family, by whom he had a son,

JOHN, his successor.

He m. 2ndly, Haws de Blancminster, and dying in 1239, was s. by his son,

JOHN FITZ-ALAN, who, in the 28th HENRY III., upon the division made of the property of Hugh Albin, Earl of Arundel, then made, had the castle of Arundel assigned to him for his principal seat, thus becoming 5th Earl of Arundel; and soon after that, in consideration of £1,000 fine, had livery of his own castles of Clun, Blancminster and Schrawurthen. In the 42nd HENRY III., his lordship was made captain-general of all the forces designed for guarding the Welsh marches, and in the baronial war, he appears first to have sided with the barons, and afterwards with the king. He d. 1267, having m. Maud, dau. of Roesia de Verdun (which lady m. 2ndly, Richard de Amundevill), by whom he had a son and successor,

JOHN FITZ-ALAN, 6th Earl of Arundel, who m. Isabel, dau. of Sir Roger Mortimer (which lady m. 2ndly, Ralph de Arderne, and 3rdly, Robert de Hastings), and dying 1269, was s. by his son,

RICHARD FITZ-ALAN, 7th Earl of Arundel, who m. Alice, dau. of the Marquess of Saluce in Italy, and had issue,

EDMUND, his successor.

John (Sir), in holy orders, mentioned in his nephew, Earl Richard's will.

Maud, m. to Phillip, Lord Burnel.

Margaret, m. to William, Baron Boteiler, of Wemme.

His lordship d. in 1302, and was s. by his son,

EDMUND FITZ-ALAN, 8th Earl of Arundel. We find this nobleman, from the 34th EDWARD I., when he was made a knight of the Bath with Prince Edward, to the 4th of the ensuing reign, constantly engaged in the wars of Scotland; but he was afterwards involved in the treason of Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, yet not greatly to his prejudice, for, in the 10th EDWARD II., his lordship was constituted lieutenant and captain-general to the king, from the Trent northwards, as far as Roxborough in Scotland, and for several years subsequently, he continued one of the commanders of the English army in Scotland, in which service he so distinguished himself, that he obtained a grant from the crown of the confiscated property of Lord Baddlesmere, in the city of London and county of Salop, as well as the escheated lands of John, Lord Moubray, in the Isle of Axholme, and several manors and castles, part of the possessions (also forfeited) of Roger, Lord Mortimer, of Wigmore. But those royal grants led, eventually to the earl's ruin; for, after the fall of the unhappy EDWARD into the hands of his enemies, Lord Arundel, who was implacably hated by the queen and Mortimer, suffered death by decapitation at Hereford, in 1326. His lordship m. 1305, the Lady Alice Plantagenet, sister and sole heir of John, last Earl of Warren and Surrey of that family, by whom he had issue,

RICHARD, his successor.

Edmund (Sir), m. Sibil, dau. of William Montacute, Earl of Salisbury, and had one dau., Alice, m. to Leonard, Lord Carew.

Alice, m. to John de Bohun, Earl of Hereford.

Jane, m. to Warine Gerrard, Lord L'Isle.

Alaive, m. to Sir Roger le Strange.

His lordship was s. by his eldest son,

RICHARD FITZ-ALAN, b. 1306, who being restored by parliament, 4th EDWARD III., had the castle of Arundel (which had been given to Edmund, Earl of Kent, the king's uncle), rendered to him, and thus became 9th earl. In the 7th EDWARD III., this nobleman was constituted governor of Chirke Castle, co.

Denbigh, and the ensuing year had a grant of the inheritance of that castle, with all the territories thereunto belonging, being part of the possessions of Roger Mortimer, the attainted Earl of March; he was soon afterwards made governor of Porchester Castle, and the same year had a command in the wars of Scotland, where he continued engaged for some years. After this he was constituted admiral of the western seas, and governor of Caernarvon Castle. In the 14th EDWARD III., his lordship embarked in the French wars, and participated in the glories of the subsequent campaigns. He was at the siege of Vannes, the relief of Thouars, and the immortal battle of Cressy. Besides his great military services, the earl was frequently employed in diplomatic missions of the first importance, and was esteemed one of the most eminent generals and statesmen of the era in which he lived. His lordship, who with his other honours, had the Garter, contracted in minority and under constraint, marriage with Isabel, dau. of Hugh le Despencer, and had issue by her, an only dau.,

Philippa, m. to Sir Richard Sergeaux, Knt., of Cornwall.

In 1345, he was divorced from this lady, and m. Lady Eleanor Plantagenet, dau. of Henry, Earl of Lancaster, and widow of John, Baron Beaumont, by whom he had issue,

1. RICHARD, his successor.

II. John, marshal of England in 1377, summoned to parliament 1st to 3rd RICHARD II. He d. 1379, having m. Eleanor, grand-dau. and co-heir of John, Lord Maltravers, in whose right he bore that title, and by her (who m. 2ndly, Reginald, Lord Cobham,) had issue,

1 JOHN, b. 1365: who m. Elizabeth, dau. of Hugh le Despencer, and d. 1391, having had issue,

JOHN, Lord Maltravers, who s. as 12th Earl of Arundel.

Edmund.

Thomas (Sir), of Beechwood, whose dau. and heir, Eleanor, m. Sir Thomas Browne, Knt., treasurer of the household to HENRY VI.

Margaret, m. to William, Lord Ros.

2 William, K.G.

3 Thomas (also called Edward).

4 Henry.

1 Joan.

III. Thomas, called Arundel, successively bishop of Ely, archbishop of York, and archbishop of Canterbury, Lord Chancellor of England. This prelate was impeached and banished the kingdom in the reign of RICHARD II., but returned with HENRY IV., and was restored to the see of Canterbury. He was a person of great eminence in his time, but is accused of being a religious persecutor, particularly of the Wickliffites, and of Sir John Oldcastle, Lord Cobham. He d. 19 February, 1413, and was buried in the cathedral church of Canterbury.

I. Joane, m. to Humphrey de Bohun, Earl of Hereford.

II. Alice, m. to Thomas Holland, Earl of Kent.

III. Mary, m. to John, Lord Strange, of Blackmere.

IV. Eleanor, m. to Robert, son of William de Ufford, Earl of Suffolk.

His lordship d. 1376, and was s. by his eldest son,

RICHARD FITZ-ALAN, 10th Earl of Arundel, K.G. In the 1st RICHARD II., this nobleman being constituted admiral of the king's fleet in the westwards, and soon after that to the southwards, was retained by indenture to serve the king at sea for one quarter of a year, in the company of John, Duke of Lancaster, King of Castile. He was afterwards engaged for some years in Scotland; and was in the commission (9th EDWARD II.), for the trial of Michael de la Pole, and some other of the king's favourites, whom the Commons had then impeached. His lordship was appointed the next year admiral of the whole fleet, and putting to sea, encountered and vanquished the united fleets of France and Spain, taking no less than 100 ships, great and small, all laden with wines, comprising 19,000 tons. This gallant exploit he followed up by entering the port of Brest, and reducing one of its castles and burning the other. He now returned to England in great triumph, but had to encounter the jealousy and hatred of the king's favourites, particularly of the Duke of Ireland, whose influence over the king he strenuously resisted. His lordship afterwards entered into the confederation of the Earls of Derby and Warwick, which assembled in arms at Haringhay Park (now Hornsey), in Middlesex, and compelled the king to acquiesce in their views. He was then, by the general consent of parliament (11th RICHARD II.), made governor of the castle and town of Brest, and shortly after captain-general of the king's fleet at sea, with commission to treat of peace with John de Montfort, then Duke of Brittany; whereupon hoisting his flag, soon after met with the enemy, of whose ships he sunk and took fourscore; entered the Isle of Rhé, which he burnt and spoiled, and several other ports which he likewise plundered, putting to flight all the French and Britons that made any resistance. From this memorable period in the life of Lord Arundel, little is known of him, until the 15th RICHARD, when the king regaining his power, summoned a parliament at Westminster, and dismissed several of the great officers of state, amongst whom his lordship was removed from his command as admiral; and in two years afterwards, the parliament then sitting, he was accused of treason by the Duke of Lancaster, but escaped for the moment, and sought to retire from public life. The king entertaining, however, the strongest feeling of personal enmity to all those who had previously opposed his minions, contrived to get the Earl of Arundel into his hands by stratagem, and having sent him prisoner to the Isle of Wight, brought him to immediate trial, when he was condemned to be hanged, drawn, and quartered as a traitor. The sentence was however somewhat mitigated, and the gallant nobleman was simply beheaded at Cheapside, in the city of London, 21st RICHARD II., the king himself being a spectator, and Thomas de Mowbray, Earl Marshal (who had m. his dau.), the executioner, who bound up his eyes, and according to some, the person who actually struck off his head. It is stated that when the earl saw his son-in-law, Mowbray, and the Earl of Kent, his nephew, guarding him to the place of execution, he told them, it had been much more fit that they should have absented themselves: "For the time will come," said he, "when as many shall wonder at your misfortune as they now do at mine." His lordship m. 1st, 1359, Lady Elizabeth de Bohun, dau. of William, Earl of Northampton, and had surviving issue,

THOMAS, his successor.

Elizabeth, m. 1st, to William de Montacute, eldest son of William, Earl of Salisbury, which William was unhappily slain by his father in a tilting at Windsor, 6th RICHARD II. Her ladyship m. 2ndly, Thomas, Lord Mowbray, Earl Marshal, and through the dau. of this marriage, the LADY MARGARET MOWBRAY, eventual heiress of the Mowbrays, who m. Sir Robert Howard, Knt., the Dukedom of Norfolk, the Earl Marshalship, and other honours, came into the family of Howard, which they have since enjoyed.

Lady Elizabeth m. 3rdly, Sir Gerard Ufflete, Knt., and 4th'y, Sir Robert Goushill, Knt.

Joan, m. William Beauchamp, Lord Abergavenny, K.G.

Margaret, m. to Sir Rowland Lenthall, of Hampton Court, co. Hereford.

Alice, m. to John Cherleton, Lord Powis.

The earl was s. by his son,

THOMAS FITZ-ALAN, who being restored in blood in the parliament 1st HENRY IV., when the judgment against his father was reversed, became 11th Earl of Arundel. This nobleman was made a knight of the Bath at the coronation of King HENRY IV. He was afterwards made a knight of the Garter, and upon the accession of King HENRY V. he was constituted constable of Dover Castle, and lord warden of the Cinque Ports, as also Lord Treasurer of England. His lordship m. Beatrix, an illegitimate dau. of JOHN, King of Portugal, and the nuptials were celebrated with great pomp in London, the king and queen assisting. He d. however without issue, in 1415, leaving his four sisters his heirs, as to certain parts of his great possessions; but the castle of Arundel, and with it the earldom, devolved upon his cousin,

JOHN FITZ-ALAN, Lord Maltravers, as 12th Earl of Arundel* (refer to issue of Richard, 9th earl). This nobleman was in the king's fleet at sea under his kinsman, Richard, Earl of Arundel, and he was subsequently in the wars of Scotland and France. His lordship m. Eleanor, dau. of Sir John Berkeley, Knt., of Beverston, co. Gloucester, by whom (who m. 2ndly, Sir Richard Poyning, and 3rdly, Sir Walter Hungerford) he had issue,

* Nicolas has the following note in his Synopsis:—"Until the 11th HENRY VI., when it was decided that the tenure of the castle of Arundel alone, without any creation, patent, or investiture, constituted its possessor Earl of Arundel, neither this John, nor John his son and heir, were regularly considered to have possessed that dignity, although they were both seized of the said castle; in proof of which John Fitz-Alan, 12th earl, was never summoned to parliament, and John, his son and heir, was summoned in the 7th HENRY VI., as a baron only; nor was it until 3 December, 1441, that the inheritor of the castle of Arundel sat in parliament by that title, which probably arose from this circumstance, that at the time of the decision alluded to, in the 11th HENRY VI., 1432, John, Earl of Arundel, was engaged in the wars of France, and continued to be so until his death, which happened within two years afterwards; and Humphrey, his son and heir, d. in 1437, then only ten years of age, and was s. by William, his uncle and heir, who was accordingly summoned to parliament as Earl of Arundel. Notwithstanding what has been observed, that John Fitz-Alan, who s. in 1415, was not admitted to this earldom, it is manifest he was generally styled Earl of Arundel, for Alice, his widow, in her will, describes herself as Countess of Arundel, and speaks of her late husband as John, Earl of Arundel."

John, his successor.

William, who s. as 15th earl.

Lord Arundel d. in 1421, and was s. by his elder son,

JOHN FITZ-ALAN, 13th Earl of Arundel, who, in the 7th HENRY VI., was summoned to parliament as Lord Maltravers, and the next year, according to Dugdale, as Earl of Arundel. In the 11th HENRY VI., this nobleman petitioned parliament for the confirmation of his title, as annexed to the castle, honour, and seignior of Arundel, which was adjudged to him by virtue of the tenure only, after much opposition from John Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk, who was heir to Elizabeth, one of the sisters and co-heirs of Thomas, 11th earl. His lordship was in the wars of France, under the celebrated general, John Talbot, 1st Earl of Shrewsbury, and for his achievements was created by HENRY VI., Duke of Touraine, in France, and invested with the Garter. But eventually having his leg shattered by a cannon ball, in an engagement with the enemy, he was taken prisoner, and conveyed to Beauvois, where he departed this life in 1435. The earl m. 1st, Constance, dau. of John Cornwall, Lord Fanhope, but by her had no issue; and 2ndly, Maud, dau. of Sir Robert Lovel, by Elizabeth, dau. of Sir Guy Bryen, the younger, Knt., and by her (who m. 2ndly, Sir Richard Stafford) had issue,

HUMPHREY, his successor.

Amicia, m. to James Butler, Earl of Ormonde and Wiltshire, and d. s. p., temp. EDWARD IV.

His lordship was s. by his son,

HUMPHREY FITZ-ALAN, as Duke of Touraine, and 14th Earl of Arundel, then but six years old. This nobleman d. 1438, when the dukedom of Touraine EXPIRED, but the castle of Arundel reverted to his uncle,

WILLIAM FITZ-ALAN, who thus became 15th Earl of Arundel. Between this nobleman and Thomas Courtenay, Earl of Devon, there arose, in the 23rd HENRY VI., a great dispute in parliament regarding precedency, which being renewed in the parliament held four years afterwards, was then referred to the judges, who refused, however, to give any opinion upon the subject, declaring, "that it was a matter of parliament belonging to the king's highness, and to his lords spiritual and temporal in parliament, by them to be decided." The question at issue was whether this earl should have precedency of the Earl of Devon or not? The Act of 11th HENRY VI., expressing only that John, then Earl of Arundel, should have the place, precedency, &c., as Earl of Arundel, without mentioning his heirs. Upon which the lords ultimately resolved, "that he should have his place in parliament, and the king's council, as earl, by reason of the castle, lordship, and honour of Arundel, for himself and his heirs for evermore, above the said Earl of Devon, and his heirs, as worshipfully as any of his ancestors Earls of Arundel before that time ever had." The Earl of Arundel, in the 10th EDWARD IV., was made constable of Dover Castle, and warden of the Cinque Ports, being then also justice of all the king's forests south of Trent, a post renewed to him upon the accession of HENRY V. He was also a knight of the Garter. His lordship m. the Lady Joane Nevill, dau. of Richard, Earl of Salisbury, by whom he had issue, THOMAS, Lord Maltravers, his successor, William, George, and John, with a dau., Mary. He d. in 1488, and was s. by his eldest son,

THOMAS FITZ-ALAN, 16th Earl of Arundel, who had been summoned to parliament, in 22nd EDWARD IV., and 1st HENRY, as "Thomas Arundel, of Maltravers, Knt." his father being then alive. His lordship, who was a knight of the Garter, was one of the English nobles sent over to Flanders, 5th HENRY VII., to assist the Emperor MAXIMILIAN against the French. He m. Margaret, dau. of Richard Widvile, Earl Rivers, and had issue,

WILLIAM, Lord Maltravers, his successor.

Edward.

Margaret, m. to John de la Pole, Earl of Lincoln.

Joane, m. to George Nevill, Lord Bergavenny.

The earl d. in 1524, and was s. by his elder son,

WILLIAM FITZ-ALAN, 17th Earl of Arundel, K. G. This nobleman's signature appears to the letter of remonstrance transmitted to Pope CLEMENT II., in the 22nd HENRY VIII., regarding the king's divorce from Queen Katherine. His lordship m. 1st, Anne, sister of Henry, Earl of Northumberland, upon which occasion he had grants from the crown of three manors, co. Somerset, and that of Hunton, in South-amptonshire, to hold by the service of a red rose yearly. By this lady he had issue, HENRY, Lord Maltravers, his successor, and two daus., who both d. unm. He m. 2ndly, Elizabeth, dau. of Robert Willoughby, Lord Broke, by whom he had two daus., Margaret and Elizabeth, who likewise d. unm. In conformity with the policy recommended by CROMWELL to the king upon the confiscation of the church lands, the Earl of Arundel was obliged to exchange several of his manors for those which had belonged to the religious houses. His lordship d. in 1544, and was s. by his son,

HENRY FITZ-ALAN, 18th Earl of Arundel, K. G. This nobleman, in the 36th HENRY VIII., was field-marshal of the king's army at the siege of Boulogne, and in two years afterwards was constituted one of the assistants to that monarch's executors. After the fall of the Protector Somerset, temp. EDWARD VI., the Earl of Arundel having declined to enter into the views of Dudley, Earl of Warwick, was removed from the council by the intrigues of that nobleman, and fined £12,000 upon the frivolous charge of having removed bolts and locks from Westminster, and given away the king's stuff, in his capacity of lord chamberlain: and the ensuing year he was committed prisoner to the tower. Upon the death of King EDWARD, his lordship zealously espoused the cause of Queen MARY, and was mainly instrumental in her ascending the throne without any effusion of blood; for which and other eminent services, he was made constable of the day at her majesty's coronation, as he was also the day immediately preceding the coronation of Queen ELIZABETH, at which he officiated as lord high steward. His lordship at this period aspired to the hand of the virgin queen, but being disappointed in his hopes he obtained permission to travel, and while abroad served in the wars against the Turks. After his return to England he was upon the commission instituted to inquire into the murder of Henry, Lord Darnley, husband of MARY, Queen of Scots, and subsequently favouring the pretensions of the Duke of Norfolk, to the hand of that beautiful but unfortunate princess, he suffered imprisonment (14th ELIZABETH). His lordship m. 1st, Lady Catherine Grey, dau. of Thomas, Marquess of Dorset, by whom he had,

HENRY, Lord Maltravers, who d. in the lifetime of his father, s. p.

Joanna, m. to John, Lord Lumley, by whom she had no surviving issue.

Mary, m. to Thomas Howard, Duke of Norfolk, and had issue,

Philip Howard, who having inherited Arundel Castle, was summoned to parliament, 16 January, 1590, as EARL OF ARUNDEL, and the castle and dignity have since remained in the family of Howard.

The earl m. 2ndly, Mary, dau. of Sir John Arundel, of Lanherne, co. Cornwall, and widow of Robert Batcliffe, Earl of Sussex, but had no issue. His lordship, who with the other high offices already enumerated, was president of the council of Queens MARY and ELIZABETH, d. in 1580, when the EARLDOM OF ARUNDEL and the castle passed with his dau., and eventually sole heiress, Lady Mary Fitz-Alan, to her husband, Thomas Howard, Duke of Norfolk, with the BARONY OF MALTRAVERS, which descended to her son, Philip Howard, who was attainted in the 32nd ELIZABETH, when the barony became FORFEITED; it was, however, restored to his son, Thomas Howard, 20th Earl of Arundel, and by act of parliament, 3rd CHARLES I., the Barony of Maltravers, with the Baronies of Fitz-Alan, Clun, and Oswaldestre, were annexed to the title, dignity, and honour of Earl of Arundel, and settled upon Thomas Howard, then Earl of Arundel and Surrey, and his heirs male, &c. Until the passing of this act, FITZ-ALAN was not a parliamentary barony, it was merely feudal. Thus terminated the noble and ancient family of Fitz-Alan, EARLS OF ARUNDEL.

II. Joan, m. Diarmid O'Sullivan Bere, who d. s. p. 25 November, 1619.

III. Catherine, m. 1st, Maurice, Lord Roch, who d. s. p.; and 2ndly, Sir Donal O'Brien, of Carrigichouly, brother of Donogh, Earl of Thomond, and ancestor to the Viscount Clare. He was living 1615.

IV. Ellen, m. 1st, Sir Donogh O'Connor, Sligo; and 2ndly, Sir Robert Cressy; and 3rdly, Edmond, Lord Dunboyne. She d. 1660, and was buried in Cong Abbey.

V. Ellis, m. Valentine Browne, of Ross, in Kerry.

The eldest son,

JAMES FITZ-GERALD, 16th Earl of Desmond, called "The Queen's Earl," was restored 1 October, 1600, and d. nam a prisoner in the Tower of London, 1601. He was s. by his 1st cousin,

JAMES FITZ-THOMAS, 17th Earl of Desmond, called "The Sagan Earl," or "Earl of Straw," who was attainted 10 March, 1600-1, and taken prisoner by the White Knight and Diarmid O'Connor, 29 May, 1601. He d. s. p., in the Tower of London, 1608, having had two or three wives: 1st, a dau. of Theobald, Lord Caher; 2ndly, a dau. of John Lord Poer; and 3rdly, Ellen, dau. of Maurice Fitz-Gibbon, the White Knight. With him disappeared from Ireland the great house of Desmond. Their vast estates had been parcelled out among "undertakers" from England, and those estates now form the possessions of a great portion of the existing landed proprietors of the counties of Cork and Kerry. The Geraldine Earls of Desmond suffered perhaps more than any other great race in Ireland the severest reverses of fortune. (See BURKE's Vicissitudes of Families.)

FITZ-HERBERT—BARON ST. HELENS.

(See ADDENDA.)

FITZ-HERBERT—BARON FITZ-HERBERT,

By Writ of Summons, dated 8 June, 1294.

Lineage.

In the 5th year of King STEPHEN,

HERBERT FITZ-HERBERT, then lord chamberlain to that monarch, gave £333 in silver, for livery of his father's lands. This Herbert m. 1st, — the dau. and co-heiress of Robert Corbet, Lord of Alcester, co. Warwick, who had been some time concubine to King HENRY I. He m. 2ndly, Lucy, 3rd dau. and co-heir of Milo, Earl of Hereford, and by her had three sons, Reginald, who d. s. p.; PETER, his successor; and Matthew, sheriff of Sussex, 12th JOHN. The 2nd son,

PETER FITZ-HERBERT, who, being very obsequious to King JOHN, was reputed one of that prince's evil counsellors. In 1214, he was constituted governor of Pykering Castle, co. York, and sheriff of the shire: but afterwards falling off in his allegiance, his lands at Alcester were seized by the crown, and given to William de Camvill. Returning, however, to his duty upon the accession of HENRY III., those lands were restored to him. He m. 1st, Alice, dau. of Robert Fitz-Roger, a great baron in Northumberland, but by her had no issue; and 2ndly, the 3rd dau. and co-heir of William de Braose, Baron of Brecknock, and d. 1235, leaving a son,

HERBERT FITZ-PETER, who, in the 26th HENRY III., had a military summons to attend the king into France. He d. soon after, however (anno 1247), and, leaving no issue, was s. by his brother,

REGINALD FITZ-HERBERT. This feudal lord had summons to march against the Welsh in the 42nd HENRY III., and in two years afterwards received orders, as one of the barons marchers, to reside in those parts. In the 45th of the same reign, he was made sheriff of Hampshire, and governor of the Castle of Winchester; and in the 48th, he was one of those barons who undertook for the king's performance of what the king of France should determine regarding the ordinances of Oxford. He m. Joane, dau. of William de Fortibus, Lord of Chewton, co. Somerset, and dying in 1285, was s. by his son,

JOHN FITZ-REGINALD, who had summons to parliament, as a baron, 8 June, 1294, and from that period to 26 January, 1297. He was afterwards summoned from 29 December, 1299, to 26 August, 1307; but his descendants, who all bore the surname of FITZ-HERBERT, were never esteemed barons, nor had any of them summons to parliament as such. From PETER, a brother of this John, Lord Fitz-Reginald, the Fitz-Herberts, EARLS OF PEMBROKE, are said to descend.

FITZ-HUGH—BARONS FITZ-HUGH.

By Writ of Summons, 2nd EDWARD I.

Lineage.

Although the surname of FITZ-HUGH was not appropriated to this family before the time of EDWARD III., it had enjoyed consideration from the period of the Conquest, when its ancestor,

BARDOLPH, was Lord of Ravenswath, with divers other manors, in Richmondshire. This Bardolph assumed in his old age the habit of a monk, in the Abbey of St. Mary, at York, to which he gave the churches of Patrick Brompton and Ravenswath, in pure alms. He was s. by his son and heir,

AKARIS FITZ-BARDOLPH, who in the 5th of STEPHEN, founded the Abbey of Foss, co. York, then called the Abbey of Charity; and dying in 1161, was s. by his elder son,

HERVEY FITZ-AKARIS, who being a noble and good knight, and much esteemed in his country, gave consent that Conan, then Earl of Richmond and Brittany, should translate the Abbey of Charity into the fields at East Wilton, and there place it on the verge of the river Jore, from which it was thenceforward called JOREVAULX. This Hervey d. circa 1182, and was s. by his son,

HENRY FITZ-HERVEY, who m. Alice, dau. of Randolph Fitz-Walter (ancestor of the Barons of Greytokes), by whom he acquired considerable estates in the north. He d. in 1201, and was s. by his son,

RANDOLPH FITZ-HENRY. This feudal lord m. Alice, dau. and heiress of Adam de Staveley, Lord of Staveley, by Alice, dau. of William de Percy, of Riddel, and dying in 1262, was s. by his elder son,

HENRY FITZ-RANDOLPH, who d. 1262, and was s. by his son,

RANDOLPH FITZ-HENRY. This feudal baron dying s. p., was s. by his brother,

HUGH FITZ-HENRY, summoned to parliament 2nd EDWARD I.; also 29th EDWARD I., who d. in 1304, and was s. by his son,

HENRY FITZ-HUGH, from whom his descendants ever afterwards adopted the surname of Fitz-Hugh. This Henry was engaged in the Scottish wars from the 3rd to the 8th of EDWARD II., the next year he was constituted, owing to the minority of the Earl of Warwick (whose inheritance it was), governor of Barnard Castle, in the bishopric of Durham; and being again employed in Scotland, he was summoned to parliament as a baron from 15 May, 1321, to 15 November, 1351. In 1327, his lordship acquitted Sir Henry Vavasor, Knt., of a debt of 500 marks, by special instrument under his seal, upon condition that Henry Vavasor, Sir Henry's son, should take to wife Annabill Fitz-Hugh, his dau. In the 7th, 8th, and 9th EDWARD III., Lord Fitz-Hugh was again in arms upon the Scottish soil. His lordship m. Eve, dau. of Sir John Bulmer, Knt., and had, besides the dau. already mentioned, a son,

HENRY, who d. v. p., leaving issue by his wife, Joane, dau. of Sir Richard Fournays, and sister and heiress of William Fournays, Hugh, m. Isabel, dau. of Ralph, Lord Nevill, and d. s. p.

HENRY, who s. his grandfather.

Lord Fitz-Hugh d. in 1366, and was s. by his grandson,

HENRY FITZ-HUGH, 3rd baron, summoned to parliament from 4 August, 1377, to 8 August, 1385. His lordship was engaged in the French wars of King EDWARD III., almost uninterruptedly from the 33rd to the 43rd of that gallant monarch's reign. He m. Joane, dau. of Henry, Lord Scrope, of Masham, and had issue,

John, slain in the battle of Otterbourne.

HENRY, successor to his father.

His lordship d. in 1396, and was s. by his only surviving son,

HENRY FITZ-HUGH, 4th baron, summoned to parliament from 17 December, 1397, to 1 September, 1423. This nobleman attained great eminence in the reigns of HENRY IV. and HENRY V. In the beginning of the former we find his lordship included in a commission to negotiate a truce with Scotland, and afterwards to accomplish a league of amity between the two crowns (of England and Scotland). In the 8th HENRY IV., he was accredited upon an important mission to Denmark, and in five years afterwards he was again a commissioner upon the affairs of Scotland. On the coronation of King HENRY V. Lord Fitz-Hugh was appointed constable of England for that solemnity, and the next year he obtained a grant from the crown of £100 per annum. He was afterwards lord chamberlain of the king's household, and assisted at the council of Constance. For which, and his other eminent services, he had a grant of all the lands which had belonged to the attainted Henry, Lord Scrope, of Masham, lying in Richmondshire, to hold during the term that those lands should continue in the king's hands; and upon the surrender of that grant in the same year, he had another grant for life of the manors of Masham, Clifton, Burton-Constable, and ten others, likewise part of the possessions of the aforesaid Lord Scrope. From the 5th to the 9th HENRY V. his lordship was uninterruptedly engaged in the French wars, during which period he was at the siege of Roan with the Duke of Exeter.

It is further reported of Lord Fitz-Hugh, that he travelled more than once to Jerusalem, and beyond that celebrated city, to Grand Cairo, where the sultan had his residence, and that on his return he fought with the Saracens and Turks. It is also stated that by the help of the knights of Rhodes, he built a castle there, called St. Peter's Castle. His lordship m. Elizabeth, dau. and heir of Sir Robert Grey, Knt., son of John, Lord Grey, of Rotherfield, by Avica, sister and co-heir of Robert, Lord Marmion, by whom he had, with other issue,

- i. Henry, drowned.
- ii. John, d. young
- iii. WILLIAM, his successor.
- iv. Geoffrey.
- v. Robert, in holy orders, bishop of London.
- vi. Ralph, d. in France.
- vii. Herbert.
- viii. Richard, d. young.
- i. Joane, m. to Sir Robert Willoughby, Lord Willoughby de Eresby.
- ii. Eleanor, m. 1st, to Philip D'Arcy, and 2ndly, to Thomas Tunstal.
- iii. Maud, m. to Sir William Eure, ancestor of the Lords Eure.
- iv. Laura, m. to Sir Maurice Berkeley, Knt., of Beverstone.
- v. Lucy.
- vi. Elizabeth, m. to Sir Ralph Grey, Knt., of Northumberland.

Henry, Lord Fitz-Hugh, K.G., d. 11 January, 1424, and was s. by his eldest surviving son,

SIR WILLIAM FITZ-HUGH, 4th baron, b. 1398, summoned to parliament from 12 July, 1429, to 5 September, 1450. This nobleman attained distinction in the life-time of his father in the French wars, and after his accession to the title, he was in commission (11th HENRY VI.), to treat with the commissioners of King JAMES I., of Scotland, regarding compensation for injuries inflicted by the Scots upon the English. In two years afterwards his lordship was joined with the Earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland, and the great northern Lords Dacre, Clifford, Greystoke, and Latimer, to repel an irruption of the Scots. Lord Fitz-Hugh m. Margery, dau. of William, Lord Willoughby de Eresby, and had issue,

HENRY, his successor.

Margery, m. to Sir John Melton, Knt., of Aston.

Joane, m. to John, Lord Scrope, of Bolton.

Eleanor, m. to Thomas, Lord Dacre.

Maud, m. to William Bowes.

Lora, m. 1st, to John Musgrave, and 2ndly, to John Constable, of Halsham.

Lucy, a nun at Deptford.

Elizabeth, m. Ralph, Lord Greystock.

His lordship d. in 1452, and was s. by his son,

HENRY FITZ-HUGH, 5th baron, b. 1430, summoned to parliament from 26 May, 1455, to 15 October, 1470. His lordship obtained, in 38th HENRY VI., a grant of the stewardship of the honour of Richmond, and also of the office of chief forester of the new forest of Arkilgarth-Dale, and Le Hoppe, then escheated to the king by the forfeiture of Richard, Earl of Salisbury, to hold for life. During the reign of King HENRY VI. Lord Fitz-Hugh remained firmly attached to the Lancastrian interest, but he seems nevertheless to have successfully cultivated the good opinion of King EDWARD IV., the champion of York, for we find his lordship, soon after the accession of that monarch, employed in his military capacity, and as a diplomatist. In 1468 he made a pilgrimage to the Holy Sepulchre, and upon his return founded a chantry for two priests in his castle at Ravenswath, there to celebrate divine service for himself and Alice during their lives, and for the health of their souls after their decease. His lordship m. Lady Alice Neville, dau. of Richard, Earl of Salisbury, and had issue,

- i. RICHARD, his successor.
 - ii. Thomas,
 - iii. John,
 - iv. George,

RICHARD FITZ HUGH, 6th baron, summoned to parliament from 15 November, 1482, to 1 September, 1487. This nobleman was constituted, in the 1st HENRY VII., governor of the castles of Richmond and Middleham, and of Barnard Castle. His lordship m. Elizabeth, dau. of Sir Thomas Borough, Knt., and was s. at his decease, about the year 1508, by his only child,

GEORGE FITZ-HUGH, 7th baron, summoned to parliament from 17 October, 1509, to 28 November, 1511, but dying s. p., in 1512, his aunt Alice, Lady Fienes, and his cousin, Sir Thomas Parr, Knt. (refer to issue of Henry, 5th baron,) were found to be his next heirs, and between those the BARONY OF FITZ-HUGH fell into ABEYANCE, as it still continues amongst their representatives. Which representatives are at present, we believe,

Thomas-Crosbie-William-Brand Trevor, Lord Dacre, descended from Alice, Lady Fienes, whose husband was son of Richard, Lord Dacre, and father, by her ladyship, of Thomas, Lord Dacre. His lordship, if we are correct, is co-heir therefore to a moiety of the barony of Fitz-Hugh.

George-William-Richard Fermor, Earl of Pomfret the representative of Lady Charlotte Herbert (see issue of Henry, 5th Lord Fitz-Hugh), by her 1st husband, John, Lord Jeffries

John-Patrick-Crichton Stuart, Marquess of Bute, the representative of Lady Charlotte Herbert, by her 2nd husband, Thomas, Viscount Windsor.

Co-heirs to the other moiety of the barony of Fitz-Hugh.

FITZJAMES—DUKE OF BERWICK.

By Letters Patent, dated 19 March, 1687.

Lineage.

JAMES FITZ-JAMES, illegitimate son of King JAMES II., by Arabella Churchill, sister of the celebrated John Churchill, Duke of Marlborough, was b. in 1671, and elevated to the peerage, 19 March, 1687, in the dignities of Baron Borsworth, in the county of Leicester, Earl of Tinnmouth, in the county of Northumberland, and DUKE OF BERWICK UPON TREED. His grace withdrew into France with his father, and entering into the French service, became one of the most distinguished commanders of the reign of Louis XIV. In 1690, he was at the siege of Londonderry, and the battle of the Boyne, and returning soon after the last engagement to France, he acquired high reputation at the sieges of Mons, Charleroi, and Ath, and at the battles of Lenze, Steinkirk, and Nerwinde. In the last-named he was taken prisoner, and detained until exchanged for the Duke of Ormonde. In 1693, the French king made him lieutenant-general of his armies, and in ten years afterwards he commanded the expedition sent to aid the King of Spain. By the latter monarch he was created in 1704, a Spanish grandee of the 1st class. After a very successful campaign, the duke returning into France, was nominated (anno 1715,) to the command of the troops destined to act against the fanatics in Languedoc, and upon the favourable issue of that campaign, he was presented with a marshal's baton. Subsequently sent a second time into Spain, he achieved over the combined forces of England and Portugal, the great victory of Almanza, for which eminent service PHILIP V., granted to him, with the dignity of duke, the towns of Liria, and Xerica, in Valentia. Upon his return, the duke was placed at the head of the army on the Rhine, destined to oppose Prince

Eugene, of Savoy, in which service, after a long series of brilliant achievements, he fell at the siege of Philipshurg, anno 1734. His grace m. 1st in 1695, Honora de Burgh, widow of Patrick Sarsfield, Earl of Lucan, and dau. of the Earl of Clanricarde, by whom (who d. in 1698), he had issue,

JAMES-FRANCIS, Duke of Liria and Xerica, Grandee of Spain, an officer of eminence, m. Katherine, dau. of Pierre, Duke of Veragues; and had several children. His posterity, still existing in Spain, perpetuates the senior line of the descendants of the Marshal DUKE OF BERWICK, LIRIA, and XERICA.

The Duke of Berwick m. 2ndly, in 1700, Anne, dau. of Henry Bulkeley, Esq., by Sophia Stuart, maid of honour to the queen, and had issue,

JAMES, Duc de Fitz-James, b. in 1702, m. [Victoire Felicité, dau. of John de Durfort, Duke of Duras, but d. s. p. in the lifetime of his father, anno 1721.

Francis, bishop of Solassons, who having entered into holy orders, never assumed the French title. He d. 1764.

Henry, the "Abbé de Berwick," d. 1731.

CHARLES, b. in 1714, heir eventually to the French Dukedom of Fitz-James, and the estates in that kingdom, and eventually a marshal of France. He m. in 1741, Sophie-Goyon de Matignon, dau. of the Marquess de Matignon, and had with other issue a son and heir,

JOHN-CHARLES, 3rd Duke Fitz-James, b. in 1743, m. Marie, dau. of Charles, Count de Thiard, and was father of EDWARD, Duc de Fitz-James, Chevalier of St. Louis, and officer of the Legion of Honour, peer of France, b. 10 January, 1776; m. 1st, Mademoiselle de La Touche, and 2ndly, Mademoiselle de Torcy, and left by the former two sons, of whom the younger, Charles, Comte de Fitz-James, was b. in 1801, and the elder, JAMES, Duc de Fitz-James, in 1799; he m. 1825, Marguerite de Marmier, and d. 1846, leaving with other issue, a son, EDWARD-ANTHONY-SIDONIE, Duc de FITZJAMES, who m. 1851, Marguerite-Augusta, dau. of Gustavus-Charles-Frederick, Comte de Lævenhielm, Swedish Minister at Paris, and has issue.

Edward, lieutenant-general, d. 1748.

Henrietta, m. to the Marquess Clermont d'Amboise.

Laura, m. to the Marquess de Montalgu.

Emilia, m. to the Marquess d'Escars.

Sophia, a nun.

Marshal Berwick was attainted in 1695, when the Dukedom of Berwick, and the minor English honours became FORFEITED. His grace was besides Duke of Liria and Xerica, in Valentia, a dignity which he transferred in his life-time to his eldest son, JAMES, who then became Duke of Liria, and having m. as already stated, Katherine, dau. of Pierre, Duke of Veragues, was s. in 1738, by his eldest son, JAMES, b. in 1718, surnamed STUART, who was himself s. by his brother, PETER, b. in 1720, created MARQUESS OF ST. LEONARD, in 1764. The Duke of Berwick was created Duc DE FITZ-JAMES in France, with remainder to the issue of his 2nd marriage, and that dignity is enjoyed by his descendant, the present Duc DE FITZ-JAMES.

FITZ-JOHN—BARONS FITZ-JOHN.

By Writ of Summons, dated 14 December, 1264.

By Writ of Summons, dated 23 June, 1296.

Lineage.

JOHN FITZ-GEOFFREY, son of Geoffrey Fitz-Piers, Earl of Essex, by Aveline his 2nd wife, being next male heir of that family on the death of William Fitz-Piers, Earl of Essex, in 1227, paid a fine to the king of 300 marks for those lands which were his father's and did by hereditary right belong to him, whereof this last Earl William died seised. In the 18th of HENRY III., this John was constituted sheriff of Yorkshire; and in the 21st of the same reign, upon the treaty then made between the king and the barons, whereby, in consideration of the great charter and charters of the forest being confirmed, a thirtieth part of all men's moveables was given to the king, this feudal lord was admitted one of the privy council; and the same year, there being a grand council held at London, he was one of those at the time sent to the Pope's legate, to prohibit his attempting anything therein prejudicial to the interests of the king and kingdom. In eight years afterwards, John Fitz-Geoffrey was one of the commissioners sent from King HENRY (with Roger Bigod, Earl of Norfolk, and others) to the council at Lyons, in order to complain of the great exactions made upon the realm by the holy see; and the next year he was constituted justice of Ireland, where, for his services, he received a grant from the crown of the Isles of Thomond. He m. Isabel, dau. of Sir Ralph Bigod, 3rd son of Hugh, Earl of Norfolk, sister of John Bigod, and widow of Gilbert de Laci, and dying in 1256, was s. by his son,

JOHN FITZ-JOHN, who had a military summons to march against the Welsh in the 42nd HENRY III. To this feudal lord, who d. 1258, s. his son,

JOHN FITZ-JOHN, who m. Margery, dau. of Philip Basset, justice of England. Joining Montford, Earl of Leicester, and the other turbulent barons, this John Fitz-John had a chief command at the battle of Lewes; after which, marching towards Wales, he reduced Richard's Castle (the chief seat of Hugh de Mortimer), and the Castle of Ludlow. He was subsequently constituted, by a grant from the barons, sheriff of Westmoreland, and keeper of the castles in those parts; as likewise governor of Windsor Castle; but sharing the fate of his party at the battle of Evesham, he became a prisoner in the hands of the royalists, when the inheritance of his lands appears to have been given, by the king, to Clare, Earl of Gloucester: but he had permission afterwards to compound for them under the "dictum of Kenilworth." He was summoned to parliament as a baron, 14 December, 1264, but d. s. p. 1276, when that dignity expired. His lordship was s. in his estates by his brother,

RICHARD FITZ-JOHN, who, upon doing homage, and paying his relief, had livery of all his lands in the counties of Norfolk, Bucks, Devon, Surrey, Wilts, Southampton, Essex, and Northampton. In the 10th EDWARD I., this feudal lord was in the Welsh wars, and he was summoned to parliament as a baron, 24 June, 1295, but d. s. p. 1297, in the wars of France, when the Barony of Fitz-John became EXTINCT, while his lands devolved upon his heirs, viz.,

MAUD, Countess of Warwick, his eldest sister, who d. 1300.

RICHARD DE BURGH, Earl of Ulster, son of Aveline, his 3rd sister.
JOANE, wife of Theobald le Boteler, his 4th sister.

FITZ-PATRICK—BARONS AND EARLS OF UPPER OSSORY, IN IRELAND, AND BARONS UPPER OSSORY, OF AMPT- HILL, CO. BEDFORD.

Irish Baronies, by Patent, dated 11 June, 1541, and 27 April, 1715.

Irish Earldom, by patent, dated 5 October, 1751.

British Barony, by Patent, dated 12 August, 1794.

Lineage.

The noble house of Fitz-Patrick claimed descent from HEREMON, son of Milesius, King of Spain, the first Irish monarch of the Milesian race. The first peer of the family was

BARNARD, BRYAN, or BARNABY MACOILL PATRICK, who, 8 October, 1537, made his submission to the king's commissioners for the settlement of the kingdom, after the rebellion of the Fitzgeralds was suppressed, and was, as "Bernard McGyllepatrick, Esq.," created BARON OF UPPER OSSORY, by patent, dated 11 June, 1541, entailing the honour on his issue male. He was knighted 1 July, 1543, but afterwards taken prisoner and confined in the city of Waterford, until he made restitution of some preys he had seized in Leix. He m. 1st, Margaret, eldest dau. of Pierce, Earl of Ormonde, and widow of Thomas Fitzgerald, 2nd son of the Earl of Desmond, by whom he had four sons and one dau., viz.:

BARNABY, his heir.

FYNIN, or FLORENCE, who s. his brother.

Teige, or Thady, who in 1516, was sent prisoner to Dublin by his father, and there executed for his crimes.

Geoffry, and

Grany or Grizell, m. to Edmund, 2nd Viscount Mountgarret.

He m. 2ndly, Elizabeth, 3rd dau. of Bryan O'Connor, of Offaley, by his wife, Mary, dau. of Gerald, Earl of Kildare, but by her (who survived him) he is said to have left no issue. His eldest son,

SIR BARNABY FITZ-PATRICK, 2nd baron, enjoyed a large share of the esteem of King EDWARD VI., and was the constant companion of that prince. At an early age, he served as a volunteer in France, under King HENRY II., against the Emperor, and after his return from that kingdom, behaved with great bravery against Sir Thomas Wyatt, who had raised disturbances in England. In 1558, he was knighted by the Duke of Norfolk, at the siege of Leith, in Scotland; and was present in Queen ELIZABETH's parliament, held at Dublin, 13 January, 1559. He m. in 1560, Joan, dau. of Sir Rowland Eustace, Viscount Balinglass, by his wife Joan, dau. of James, Lord Dunboyne, by whom he had an only dau., Margaret, m. to James, Lord Dunboyne (grandson of the aforesaid James), who d. 18 February, 1624. Sir Barnaby had the honour of receiving several autograph letters from King EDWARD VI., which are now in the possession of the Right Hon. J. W. FitzPatrick, who has had them printed for private circulation. His lordship, whose will bears date 9 September, 1581, was s. by his brother,

FYNIN or FLORENCE FITZ-PATRICK, 3rd baron, who sat in Sir John Perrott's parliament, in 1585. His lordship having repaired to the court of Queen ELIZABETH, her Majesty was pleased, at his solicitation, to direct, by letter, dated at Greenwich, 21 July, 1600, that the territory and country of Upper Ossory should be "made and reduced into shire ground, annexed and made parcel of our countie called the Queen's county." She likewise granted by letters patent, dated 10 April, 1601, to the said Florence Fitz-Patrick, Lord Baron of Upper Ossory, the late monastery of Aghmacart, the friary of Aghavoe, and sundry other rectories in the same district. He had likewise a grant, by letters patent, 16 August, 42nd of ELIZABETH, of numerous castles and manors in the country of Upper Ossory, with tithes oblations, &c., to hold to him, Florence, lord Baron of Upper Ossory, and John, his son, remainder to his sons, Geoffry, Barnaby, and Edmond, remainder to his heirs male, and to the heirs of his father, Barnaby, late Baron, and of his grandfather, Barnaby.—Chancery Rolls of Ireland. This baron m. Catherine, dau. of Patrick (or Rory) O'More, of Leix, in the Queen's co., and d. in the reign of JAMES I., having had five sons and two daus.,

1. THADY, his successor.

II. JOHN, of Castletown, ancestor of the BARONS OF GOWRAN and EARLS OF UPPER OSSORY, of whom hereafter.

III. Geoffry, of Ballyraghlin, or Ballyharagh. He m. Mary, dau. of Fergus Ferrall, of Tenelick, co. Longford, and widow of Sir John O'Reilly, and d. 13 August, 1638, having had issue two daus., 1 Ellice, m. 1st, Thomas Butler, Esq., of Pollardstown, co. Limerick, 5th son of James, 2nd Lord Dunboyne, and had issue, James, Margaret, Mary, Ellen, and Ellice; and 2ndly, William Burke, also of Pollardstown, younger son of Theobald, 1st Lord Brittas, and had by her, Theobald, 3rd Lord Brittas, Richard and Honora; 2 Catherine, who d. unm.

IV. Barnaby, of Water Castle.

V. Edmond, of Castle Fleming, living 1641, father of Andrew, who was engaged in the rebellion.

1. Catherine, m. in May, 1592, James Eustace, Esq., of Newland, co. Kildare.

II. Joan, m. to John Butler, son and heir of James, 2nd Lord Dunboyne.

The eldest son,

THADY FITZ-PATRICK, 4th baron, m. Joan, dau. of Sir Edmund Butler, of Tullow, co. Carlow, 2nd son of James, Earl of Ormonde, and by her (who d. 1631, and was interred in the cathedral of St. Canice, Kilkenny) had issue,

1. BRYAN, his successor.

II. Dermoid, or Darby, m. 1st, Elan, dau. of Nicholas Shortall, Esq., of Clara, co. Kilkenny, and 2ndly, Ellinor, dau. of Richard Comerford, Esq., of Ballybirr, and widow of John Kennedy, Esq., of Ballynegarry, co. Tipperary.

III. Tirlagh, executor to his mother's will, dated 16 September, 1631, m. Onora, dau. of Oliver Grace, Esq., of Courtstown.

The 4th baron d. in December, 1627, and was s. by his eldest son,

BRYAN FITZ-PATRICK, 5th baron, took his seat in parliament, 14 July, 1634, m. Margaret, eldest dau. of Walter, Earl of Ormonde, and dying 1641, left issue,

1. BRYAN, his heir.

II. Edmond.

III. Derby.

The eldest son,

BRYAN FITZ-PATRICK, 6th baron, took his seat in the House of Peers, 16 March, 1639. He m. Catherine, dau. of Sir Edward Everard, Knt., of Fethard, co. Tipperary, and had three sons and two daus.,

1. BRYAN, his successor.

II. John, who m. Elizabeth, dau. of Bryan Kavanagh, of Borris, co. Carlow, and had issue,

BRYAN, or BARNABY, who assumed the title on the death of his uncle.

Catherine.

Mary.

III. James, who d. in England.

I. Ellen, d. young.

II. Mary, d. young.

The eldest son,

BRYAN or BARNABY FITZ-PATRICK, 7th baron, captain in the army of JAMES II., was outlawed 11 May, 1691, but in the Act to hinder the reversal of several outlawries and attainders, passed 6th King WILLIAM, it was provided the outlawries of Barnaby, late Baron of Upper Ossory, should not be confirmed, but that the same might be capable of being reversed in such manner as if that Act had never been made. He m. 1st, Margaret, dau. of Pierce, 1st Viscount Ikerrin, by whom he had Bryan, who d. unm., 1687; Keran; John, who d. an infant; and Catherine, d. an infant; and 2ndly, Margaret, dau. and heir of James, Lord Dunboyne; and 3rdly, Dorothy Wagstaffe, and dying before the year 1696, was s. by his nephew (son of his brother John).

BARNABY FITZ-PATRICK, Esq., who assumed the title, which was disallowed 2 December, 1697, by the House of Lords, who found from the report of the committee appointed to inspect the journals, that the said Barnaby, or Bryan was outlawed 11 May preceding. The barony was again claimed by Lieut. James Fitz-Patrick, who had a son Henry, who m. in January, 1749-50, Jane, dau. of Mr. Richard Farren, but the Earl of Cavan reported from the committee appointed to consider the return of the Lords, that the title of Baron of Upper Ossory was extinct, and Ulster King of Arms was ordered to leave it out of the list of peers.

We now return to JOHN FITZPATRICK, of Castletown (2nd son of Florence or Fynin, 3rd baron). He m. temp. JAMES I., Mabel St. John, of the Queen's co., and had three sons,

I. FLORENCE, his heir.

II. John, of Bardwell.

III. James, of Grantstown, Queen's co., from whom the Rev. JOSEPH FITZ-PATRICK, of Drumondragh, derived his descent.

The eldest son,

FLORENCE FITZ-PATRICK, Esq., who, with his two brothers, were engaged in the rebellion of 1641, m. Bridget, dau. of — D'Arcy, Esq., of Platen, co. Meath, and had a son,

JOHN FITZ-PATRICK, Esq., of Castletown, doctor of laws, who m. Elizabeth, 4th dau. of Thomas, Viscount Thurles, sister of James, 1st Duke of Ormonde, and widow of James Purcell, Baron of Loughmoe, by whom (who d. 6 December, 1675) he had issue,

EDWARD, his successor.

RICHARD, successor to his brother.

Annabella, m. to Sir Thomas Wiseman, Bart., of East Grinstead.

Mr. Fitz-Patrick, who suffered during the usurpation of Cromwell for his fidelity to the house of Stuart, was involved in King JAMES's general act of attainder in 1689, and d. in 1693. His elder son,

EDWARD FITZ-PATRICK, Esq., had the command of a regiment given him at the Revolution, 31 December, 1688; was made colonel of the royal fusiliers, 1 August, 1692, and promoted to the rank of brigadier general in 1694. General Fitz-Patrick was drowned in his passage from England to Ireland, 10 November, 1696, and d. unm. His brother,

RICHARD FITZ-PATRICK, Esq., being bred to the sea-service, had the command of a ship of war, in which station he signalized himself by his valour and conduct; and to him and his brother, in consideration of their faithful services, King WILLIAM III., granted, in 1696, the estate of Edmond Morris (one of the adherents of King JAMES, killed at the battle of Aughrim), situated in the Queen's co. Mr. Fitz-Patrick was elevated to the peerage of Ireland, 27 April, 1715, as BARON GOWRAN, of Gowran, co. Kilkenny, and took his seat in parliament 12 November following. His lordship m. in July, 1718, Anne, younger dau. and co-heir of Sir John Robinson, Bart., of Farming-Woods, co. Northampton, and had two sons,

FITZ-PAYNE—BARONS FITZ-PAYNE.

By Writ of Summons, dated 6 February, 1290.

Lineage.

The first that assumed this surname was ROBERT, son of Pain Fitz-John, whose nephew, taking the name of VESCI, was founder of that eminent family. This

ROBERT FITZ-PAIN served the office of sheriff for the counties of Dorset and Somerset, from the 31st to the 34th HENRY II. inclusive; and in the 13th of JOHN, upon the collection of the scutage of Wales, he paid 30 marks for 15 knights' fees. He was s. by

ROGER FITZ-PAIN, who m. Margery, eldest of the three sisters and co-heirs of Alured de Lincoln, and thereby acquired considerable property in the counties of Somerset, Dorset, Wilts, and Devon, whereof Ockford Fitz-pain, in Dorsetshire, constituted a part. He d. about the year 1237, and was s. by his son,

ROBERT FITZ-PAIN, who, during his homage in the 30th HENRY III., had livery of his lands in the counties of Wilts, Somerset and Dorset, and Netherwent, in Wales. In the 41st of the same reign, he had two military summonses to march against the Welsh; but after this he appears to have joined the barons, and to have taken a prominent part in the battle of Lewes, where the baronial banner waved in triumph. He d. in 1280, and was s. by his son,

ROBERT FITZ-PAYNE. This feudal lord was in the expedition made against the Welsh, in the 10th EDWARD I., and the same year, during his homage, had livery of the lands of his inheritance. He was summoned to parliament as a baron on 6 February, 1299, and from that time to 23 October, 1314. In 1303 he was in the Scottish wars, and again in 1306, in the immediate train of Prince Edward, having been created a knight of the Bath in the same year. In the 1st EDWARD II., his lordship was constituted governor of the castle of Winchester, and the next year, being then steward of the king's household, he was deputed, with Otto de Grandison, upon an important mission to the sovereign pontiff. In the 8th of the same reign he had a military summons to march against the Scots, but d. the ensuing year, 1315, seized of manors in the counties of Devon, Wilts, Dorset, Gloucester, and Somerset; and, jointly with his wife Isabel, of the manor of Stourton, in Wiltshire. His lordship was s. by his son,

ROBERT FITZ-PAYNE, 2nd baron, summoned to parliament, from 7 August, 1327, to 15 November, 1351. This nobleman was in the wars of Scotland in the 10th and 12th EDWARD II., and in the 16th EDWARD III. (residing then at his seat of Mershwode, co. Dorset) he had command to provide ten men at arms, and ten archers, for the king's service in France, and in three years afterwards, being then a banneret, he had a military summons to attend the king into that realm. His lordship m. Ela, dau. and co-heir of Guy de Bryan, and dying in 1354, left an only dau. and heir,

ISABEL FITZ-PAYNE, then thirty years of age, and the wife of John Chideock, by whom (who d. 1387) she had a son and heir,

SIR JOHN CHIDEOCKE, Knt., whose son and heir was

SIR JOHN CHIDEOCKE, Knt., aged fifteen, in 1416, who left two daus., his co-heirs, viz.,

1 KATHERINE CHIDEOCKE, m. 1st, to Sir William Stafford, of Frome, and had an only child, HUMPHREY STAFFORD, EARL OF DEVON, who d.s.p.

She m. 2ndly, Sir John Arundell, Knt., and from this union descend the LORDS ARUNDELL, OF WARDOUR.

2 Margaret Chideocke, m. to William, 2nd Lord Stourton, and from this marriage the Lord Stourton descends.

The Barony of Fitz-Payne, upon the decease of ROBERT, the 2nd baron, appears to have been suspended, and it is now in ABEYANCE between the representatives of Sir John Chideocke's co-heirs, namely, the above-mentioned Katherine and Margaret Chideocke; which representatives are,

JOHN-FRANCIS, LORD ARUNDELL, OF WARDOUR, grandson of Mary Christiana, elder dau. and co-heir of Henry, 8th Lord Arundell, of Wardour.

CHARLES-HUGH, LORD CLIFFORD, OF CHUD-LEIGH, grandson of ELEANOR-MARY, younger dau. of Henry, 8th Lord Arundell, of Wardour.

Co-heirs to a moiety of the Barony of Fitz-Payne.

CHARLES, LORD STOURTON, heir to a moiety of the BARONY OF FITZ-PAYNE.

Arms—Gu., three lions passant, guardant, in pale, over all a bend, az.

Certain manors in the county of Dorset, part of the property of Robert, last Lord Fitz-Payne, and Ela, his wife, being so entailed, devolved, at the decease of the said Ela (then his lordship's widow) upon her presumed brother-in-law,

The Hon. ROBERT GREY, of Charlton Grey, co. Somerset, younger son of Richard, Lord Grey, of Codnor, who thereupon assumed the surname of FITZ-PAYNE, and Dugdale says, was summoned to parliament as BARON FITZ-PAYNE; but the name of such a baron does not appear upon the roll. He m. Elizabeth, dau. and co-heir of Guy de Bryan (sister of Ela, Lady Fitz-Payne), and left an only dau. and heiress,

ISABEL FITZ-PAYNE, who m. Richard, Lord Poyning, and was mother of

ROBERT, LORD POYNING, whose grand-dau. and heiress,

ALIANORE POYNING, m. Sir Henry Percy, son and heir of the Earl of Northumberland, and conveyed her great inheritance to the noble HOUSE OF PERCY. Through this alliance, the Percys claimed the ancient BARONY OF FITZ-PAYNE, but they had no pretensions whatever to it.

FITZ-ROY—DUKE OF RICHMOND AND SOMERSET.

By Letters Patent, dated 18 June, 1525.

Lineage.

HENRY FITZ-ROY, natural son of King HENRY VIII., by Elizabeth, widow of Gilbert, Lord Talboys of Kyme, and dau. (by Catherine, heiress of Wyrley, co. Stafford, who d. 32nd HENRY VIII., dau. and co-heir of Sir Hugh Pershall, Knt., of Knightley, co. Stafford, lord of the manor of Wyrley, who d. 4th HENRY VII., 1486), of Sir John Blount, Knt., of Kinlet, co. Salop; was first made a knight of the Garter, and then created by letters patent, dated 18 June, 1525, Earl of Nottingham, and Duke of Richmond and Somerset; the ceremony being performed at the royal palace, called Bridewell, in the city of London, at which time he was little more than six years of age. Upon the same day he was appointed lieutenant-general of all the king's forces north of Trent, and warden of the marches of Scotland. In five years afterwards, his grace was constituted lieutenant of Ireland, and Sir William Skeffington appointed his deputy there. The duke was educated with Henry, Earl of Surrey, at Windsor Castle, and went with that nobleman to Paris in 1532, when he formed an attachment to the earl's sister, Lady Mary Howard, and married her, but the marriage was never consummated. His grace was a youth of great promise, and much beloved by his royal father. He d. aged about seventeen, in 1536, when all his honours became extinct.

FITZWALTER—BARONS FITZWALTER.

By Writ of Summons, dated 23 June, 1295.

Lineage.

ROBERT, 5th son of Richard FitzGilbert, Earl of Clare (ancestor of the Earls of Hertford), being steward to King HENRY I., obtained from that monarch the Barony of Dunmow in Essex, as also the honour of Baynard's Castle, in the city of London, both of which came into the possession of the crown by the forfeiture of William Baynard. This Robert m. in 1112, Maud de St. Liz, Lady of Bradham, dau. of Simon de St. Liz, 1st Earl of Huntingdon, and by her (who d. 1140, m. 2ndly, Saer de Quincy, see that name.) had two sons,

WALTER, his successor.

Simon, to whom he gave Davenport, in Northamptonshire.

He d. in 1134, and was s. by his elder son,

WALTER FITZ-ROBERT, who in the 12th of HENRY II., upon the assessment in aid of marrying the king's dau., certified his knights' fees to be in number sixty-three and a half, de Veteri feoffamento; and three and a fourth part, de Novo, for all of which he paid £44 10s. In the great controversy between John, Earl of Moreton, (brother of King RICHARD,) and William de Longcamp, bishop of Ely, whom the king left governor of the realm during his absence in the Holy Land, this Walter adhered to the bishop, and had at that time the custody of the castle of Eye, in Suffolk. He m. 1st, Margaret de Bohun, who d. in 1146; and 2ndly in 1148, Maud de Lucy, with whom he had the lordship of Dia, in Norfolk, and by whom he left at his decease, 1188, a son, ROBERT FITZ-WALTER. This feudal lord, upon the assessment of the scutage of Scotland, in the 13th of JOHN, had the king's especial writ of acquittal for sixty-three knights' fees and a half, which were of his own proper inheritance; and for thirty knights' fees, and a third part which he had acquired by marriage. But the next year he was forced to fly with his family into France in order to avoid being arrested, upon the first disposition of the barons to revolt; and was soon afterwards charged with treason and rebellion, when his house, called Baynard's Castle, in the city of London, was demolished by order of the king.

"The primary occasion of these discontents," says Dugdale, "is by some thus reported: viz.—that this Robert Fitz-Walter having a very beautiful dau. called Maude, residing at Dunmow, the king frequently solicited her chastity, but never prevailing, grew so enraged, that he caused her to be privately poisoned, and that she was buried at the south side of the quire at Dunmow, between two pillars there."

FitzWalter, however, is said, subsequently, to have made his peace with King JOHN, by the great prowess and valour he displayed at a tournament, held in Normandy before the kings of France and England; where, running a tilt with his great lance, he overthrew his rival at the first course, which act of gallantry caused the English monarch to exclaim, "By God's Tooth, he deserves to be a king who hath such a soldier of his train;" and afterwards, ascertaining the name of the victorious knight, he immediately sent for him, and having restored his barony, gave him liberty to repair his castle of Baynard. In the 17th of King JOHN, FitzWalter had so far regained the confidence of the crown, that he was appointed governor of the castle at Hertford; but soon after, arraying himself under the baronial banner, his lands were all seized, and those in Cornwall committed to Prince Henry, the king's son; a course of proceeding that had the immediate effect of riveting the haughty baron to the cause which he had espoused, while his high rank, tried courage, and acknowledged abilities, soon gave him a lead amongst his compeers. We find him, therefore, amongst the first commissioners nominated to treat with the king, when it was agreed, that the city of London should be delivered up to the barons, and twenty-five of those powerful feudal chiefs chosen to govern the realm. The insurrectionary lords subsequently assembled at St. Edmundsbury, and there pledged themselves, by solemn oath at the high altar, that if the king refused to confirm the laws and liberties granted by EDWARD THE CONFESSOR, they would withdraw their allegiance from him and seize upon his fortresses. After which, forming themselves into a regular army, they appointed this Robert FitzWalter their general, with the title of Marshal of the army of God and the Church, and under his command, they eventually extorted the Great Charters of Freedom from JOHN on the plains of Runnymede, when Fitz-Walter was elected one of the celebrated twenty-five, appointed to see the faithful observance of those laws. He continued, during the remainder of JOHN's reign, equally firm to his purpose; and after the accession of HENRY III., until the battle of Lincoln, where the baronial army sustained a signal defeat under his command, and he became a prisoner himself, after displaying a more than ordinary degree of valour. He does not appear, however, to have remained long under restraint, for we find him, the very next year, in the Holy Land, and assisting at the great siege of Damietta. This eminent feudal baron m. 1st, Gunnora, dau. and heiress of Robert de Valonia, and had issue,

WALTER, his successor.

Matilda.

Christian, m. 1st, to William Mandevill, Earl of Essex, and 2ndly, to Raymond de Burgh.

He m. 2ndly, Rose —, and dying at the siege of Damietta in 1234, was s. by his son,

WALTER FITZ-WALTER, who, in the 24th HENRY III., paid into the exchequer a fine of 300 marks for livery of his lands, and in the 42nd of the same king had a military summons to march against the Welsh, and d. 1259, leaving by Maud his 1st wife, a son and heir,

SIR ROBERT FITZ-WALTER, who had a license, in 1275, to pass away the inheritance of Baynard's Castle to Robert Kilwardby, then archbishop of Canterbury, which prelate translated thereto the Dominican or Black Friars, from Holborn, near Lincoln's-inn. In alienating this part of his property, Sir Robert took especial care, however, to preserve the immunities of his barony, which, as appertaining to Baynard's Castle, are thus specified: "That the said Robert, as constable of the Castle of London, (so Baynard's Castle was designated), and his heirs ought to be banner bearers of that city, by inheritance as belonging to that castle; and in time of war, to serve the city in the manner following, viz., to ride upon a light horse, with twenty men-at-arms on horseback, their horses covered with cloth or harness, unto the great door of St. Paul's church, with the banner of his arms carried before him."

This Robert Fitz-Walter was in the wars of Gascony, in the 22nd EDWARD I., in the retinue of Edmund, Earl of Lancaster, and continued there the next year; at which period he was summoned to parliament, as a baron, and from that time to the 19th EDWARD II. His lordship was afterwards continually engaged in the Scottish wars. He m. 1st, Devorgil, one of the daus. and co-heirs of John de Burgh, and grand-dau. of Hubert de Burgh, Earl of Kent, and by her (who d. 1284), had an only dau.,

1. Robert, b. 1291, m. 1305, — Boutetourt.

2. Christian, m. to John le Marshal, and left a son,

William Marshal, who left two children, viz.,

John Marshal, who d. s. p.

Hawyse, who m. to Robert Morley.

His lordship m. 2ndly, Allanore, dau., of William Ferrers, Earl of Derby, and had an only son,

ROBERT, his successor.

Ida, m. to John de la Ward.

The baron d. in 1325, and was s. by his son,

ROBERT FITZ-WALTER, 2nd baron, but never summoned to parliament, b. 1300. This nobleman m. Joane, dau. and co-heir of John de Multon, of Egremont, and dying in 1328, was s. by his son,

JOHN FITZ-WALTER, 3rd baron, b. 1316, summoned to parliament from 3 March, 1341, to 20 November, 1360. In the latter year, being then in the wars of France with the king, his lordship was one of those appointed to assist Sir Walter Manny in an attack upon the barriers of Paris, the Duke of Normandy being at the time within the city; and he was knighted for his good services therein. Lord Fitz-Walter m. Eleanor, dau. of Henry, Lord Percy, and was s. at his decease in 1361, by his son,

WALTER FITZ-WALTER, 4th baron, summoned to parliament from 6 April, 1369, to 3 September, 1385. This nobleman, in the 44th EDWARD III., was in the expedition made into Gascony, being esteemed at that time one of the most expert soldiers in the realm; but being taken prisoner, he was constrained to mortgage his castle and lordship of Egremond for the sum of £1,000 to accomplish his release by ransom. In three years afterwards, he was again in France under John, Duke of Lancaster; and in the 1st of RICHARD II., he served with Thomas of Woodstock against the Spaniards. In the 5th of the same reign, he did great service in Essex against Jack Straw, and the next year he was constituted one of the wardens of the west marches towards Scotland. In the 9th, being with John, Duke of Lancaster, in his expedition into Spain, when he went to receive possession of the kingdom of Castile, his lordship displayed great valour in storming the forts raised against the castle of Brest, in Brittany, and relieving that fortress, then closely besieged. He m. 1st, Eleanor —, but had no issue; and 2ndly, Philippa, dau. and co-heir of John de Mohun, Lord of Dunster, and afterwards wife of Edward, Duke of York, and dying in 1386, was s. by his son,

WALTER FITZ-WALTER, 5th baron, summoned to parliament from 12 September, 1390, to 25 August, 1404. This nobleman m. Joane, dau. of Sir John Devereux, and sister and heiress of John, 2nd Baron Devereux, (by which alliance the baronies of Fitz-Walter and Devereux became united,) and had issue,

HUMPHREY, } successive barons.
WALTER, }
Eleanor.

His lordship d. in 1407, and was s. by his elder son,

HUMPHREY FITZ-WALTER, 6th baron, b. 1398, who d. a minor, s. p., about 1419, and was s. by his brother,

WALTER FITZ-WALTER, 7th baron, b. 1400, summoned to parliament from 12 July, 1429, to 27 November, 1430. This nobleman became so distinguished in the French wars of King HENRY V., that he obtained from that monarch, in consideration of his services, a grant to himself and his heirs male of all the lands and lordships which Sir John Cheney held within the duchy of Normandy, and which had reverted to the crown upon the decease s. p. of the said Sir John. At this time Lord Fitz-Walter had not attained his full age; he was, however, equally eminent in after years. His lordship had an only dau. and heiress, ELIZABETH, who m. Sir John Ratcliffe, K.G., and conveyed the baronies of Fitz-Walter and Devereux into that family.

He d. in 1432, when the male line of the FITZ-WALTERS became extinct; but the honours of the family passed, as stated above, to the Ratcliffes. (See RATCLIFFE, Barons Fitz-Walter.)

FITZ-WARINE—BARONS FITZ-WARINE.

By Writ of Summons, dated 23 June, 1295.

Lineage.

Amongst the first persons of note, to whom WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR committed the defence of the Marches towards Wales, was

GUARINE DE MEER (a member of the house of Lorraine), to whose custody he confided Adderbury, co. Salop, and Alestoun, co. Gloucester, of which former county Guarine was sheriff, in the year 1083; and he was at the same time one of the chief councillors to Roger de Montgomerie, Earl of Shrewsbury. Of this Guarine, it is stated, that having heard that William, a valiant knight, sister's son to Pain Peverell, Lord of Whittington, in Shropshire, had two daus., one of whom, Mallet, had resolved to marry none but a knight of great prowess; and that her father had appointed a meeting of noble young men, at Peverel's Place, on the Peke, from which she was to select the most gallant, he came thither; when entering the lists with a son of the King of Scotland, and with a Baron of Burgundy, he vanquished them both, and won the fair prize, with the lordship and castle of Whittington. At this place he subsequently took up his abode, and founded the Abbey of Adderbury. He was s. at his decease, by his son,

SIR FULKE FITZ-WARINE, who being under the tutelage of Sir Josce de Dinant, fell in love with his dau., Hawise, and marrying her, proceeded with her father to Ireland, and assisted him in his wars against Walter de Lacie. This Fulke was constituted by King HENRY I., about the year 1122, lieutenant of the Marches of Wales, and afterwards steward of the household, and lord and governor of those Marches. Of Sir Fulke it is stated, that at one time falling out with Prince John, King HENRY's son, at a game of chess, and having had his head broken by a blow of the chess-board from the prince, he returned the assault so violently, as nearly to deprive his opponent of life. He d. some time before the year 1195, leaving a dau. Eve, and was s. by his eldest son,

FULKE FITZ-WARINE, who had a castle at Adderbury, the ruins of which were remaining at the time Dugdale wrote. This Fulke was left by King RICHARD I., to defend the Marches of Wales, when that monarch set out himself for the Holy Land; and in the 7th of the same reign, he paid 40 marks to the crown for livery of Whittington Castle, in conformity with the judgment then given in his favour, by the Court of King's Bench. After the accession of JOHN, however, this castle was forcibly seized by the crown, and conferred upon another person, which act of injustice drove Fitzwarine and his brothers into rebellion, and they were in consequence outlawed; but through the mediation of the Earl of Salisbury (the king's brother), and the bishop of Norwich, the outlawry was reversed, and Fitz-Warine, upon paying 200 marks, and two courses, had livery of the castle as his hereditary right; command being given to the sheriff of Shropshire to yield him possession thereof accordingly. About this time he paid to the crown, 1,200 marks and two palfreys, for permission to marry Maud, dau. of Robert Vavasour, and widow of Theobald Walter. In the 12th JOHN, he attended that prince into Ireland, and in the 17th he had livery of his wife's inheritance, lying in Amunderness, in Lancashire. After this we find him active in the baronial cause, and amongst those excommunicated by the Pope; nor did he make his peace until the 4th of HENRY III., when he compromised by paying £262, and two great courses, for the re-possession of Whittington Castle, which, in the baronial conflict, had again been alienated. Whereupon undertaking that it should not be prejudicial to the king, he had licence the next year, to fortify the same; and he thenceforward evinced his loyalty, by the good services he rendered against the Welsh, under William Marshal, Earl of Pembroke, and by his personal attendance upon the king himself, in his army at Montgomery. He had subsequently military summonses upon several occasions, and fought at the battle of Lewes, anno 1263, under the royal banner; in which action he lost his life, by being drowned in the adjacent river. This celebrated feudal lord, m. 1st, as already stated, Maud, dau. of Robert Vavasour; and 2ndly, Clarice —. He left at his decease a dau. Eve, who became 2nd consort of Llewelyn the great Prince of North Wales ap Iorwerth Drwyndun, and a son, his successor,

FULKE FITZ-WARINE, who having distinguished himself in the Welsh wars, was summoned to parliament as a baron, by King EDWARD I., 23 June, 1295, and he had summons from that period, to 24 October, 1314. His lordship was afterwards equally eminent in the wars of Scotland and Flanders, and was made a knight of the Bath, prior to attending Prince Edward into the former kingdom, in the expedition made against Robert Bruce. Lord Fitz-Warine m. the Princess Margaret, dau. (by Hawys, dau. of John Le Strange, feudal Lord of Knockyn and Cheswardine, co. Salop) of Griffith ap Wenwynwyn, Prince of Powys-Wenwynwyn, 1274. By the Princess Margaret, Lord Fitz-Warine acquired the territory of Balleisley, and dying circa 1314, was s. by his son,

FULKE FITZ-WARINE, 2nd baron, summoned to parliament from 6 October, 1315, to 22 January, 1336. This nobleman being at the time of his father's death, in the wars of France, Alianore, his wife by the king's especial favour, had livery of the manor of Whittington until his return. During the remainder of King EDWARD II.'s reign, he was engaged either in Scotland or Gascony, and he was constable of the royal army which advanced against the barons in insurrection under the Earl of Lancaster. In the 7th of EDWARD III., he was again in Scotland; and in the 20th, he was in the expedition then made into France. His lordship, who m. 2ndly, Joan, dau. of Henry, Lord Beaumont, styled Earl of Buchan, in right of his wife Alice Cumyn, d. in 1349, and was s. by his son,

FULKE FITZ-WARINE, 3rd baron, b. 1342. This nobleman and his successors do not appear from the existing enrolments to have been summoned to parliament. In the 41st EDWARD III., he attended Edward, the Black Prince, into Gascony, and was subsequently engaged in the wars in Flanders. His lordship m. Margaret, dau. of James, Lord Audley, and 3rd sister and co-heir of Nicholas, Lord Audley, of Heleigh, co. Stafford, and dying circa 1374, was s. by his son,

FULKE FITZ-WARINE, 4th baron, d. in 1377, and was s. by his son,

FULKE FITZ-WARINE, 5th baron, b. 1363. His lordship making proof of his age, in 7th RICHARD II., had livery of his lands. He m. Elizabeth, sister and heir of Sir William Cogan, Knt. of Baunton, by Elizabeth, afterwards m. to Sir Hugh Courtenay, Knt., of Haccomb, and was s. at his decease, in 1391, by his son,

FULKE FITZ-WARINE, 6th baron. His lordship m. Alice, dau. of William, Lord Botreaux, afterwards m. to William, Lord Clinton, and dying in minority, anno 1407, was s. by his son,

FULKE FITZ-WARINE, 7th baron. This nobleman d. also in minority, anno 1429, and left his only sister,

ELIZABETH FITZ-WARINE, his heir, b. 1403. This lady m. afterwards, Richard Hankford, Esq., and left an only dau. and heiress,

THOMASINE HANKFORD, who m. SIR WILLIAM BOURCHIER, Knt., who was summoned to parliament, in her right, as

LORD FITZ-WARINE. (See BOURCHIER, Barons Fitz-Warines.)

Arms—Quarterly: arg. and gu., per fesse, indented.

FITZ-WARINE—BARONS FITZ-WARINE.

By Writ of Summons, dated 25 February, 1342.

Lineage.

Besides the barony of Fitz-Warine, conferred by the writ of EDWARD I., upon Fulke Fitz-Warine, in 1295, and which barony was eventually conveyed by an heiress to a branch of the great house of Bouchier, another member of the same family,

WILLIAM FITZ-WARINE, called Le Frere, was elevated to the peerage, as a baron, by writ of summons, dated 25 February, 1342. This William had been constituted governor of the castle of Montgomery, in the beginning of King EDWARD III.'s reign, and was afterwards engaged in the French and Scottish wars. The year he attained the peerage he was in France, being then of the rank of banneret, with one knight, eight esquires, and ten archers, on horseback, in his immediate train—and again in four years afterwards. His lordship m. Amicia, dau. and heir of Henry Haddon, of Candel Haddon, co. Dorset, and dying in 1361, possessed of estates in the counties of Berks, Somerset, and Dorset, was s. by his son,

Ivo or JOHN FITZ-WARINE, 2nd baron, but never summoned to parliament. This nobleman was at the siege of Nantes in the beginning of the reign of RICHARD II., under Thomas of Woodstock. He d. in 1414, leaving an only dau. and heiress,

ELEANOR FITZ-WARINE, who m. Sir John Chedlock, and left a son,

SIR JOHN CHEDLOCK, Knt., who m. Katherine, dau. of Ralph Lumley, and left, at his decease, two daus. his co-heirs, viz.,

Margaret, m. to William, 2nd Lord Stourton, ancestor of the present lord.

Katherine, m. 1st, to Sir William Stafford, and 2ndly, to Sir John Arundel, from whom the Lords Arundel, of Wardour, descend.

FITZWILLIAM — VISCOUNT FITZWILLIAM, AND EARL OF TYRCONNEL.

Viscounty, by Patent, dated 5 August, 1629.

Earldom, by Patent, dated 20 April, 1663.

Lineage.

This family, presumed to have been a branch of the ancient house of Fitzwilliam in England, has been settled in Ireland since the reign of JOHN.

RICHARD FITZWILLIAM, of Ballymon, living in the reign of EDWARD II., left issue by Ellena his wife, two sons, WILLIAM and Robert, living 1342. The elder son,

WILLIAM FITZWILLIAM, built the castle of Wicklow, of which he was made constable, and in 1375 he was appointed chief commander and governor of all that part of the country. He left (with a dau. Elizabeth, m. to Sir Thomas de Musgrave) a son,

WILLIAM FITZWILLIAM, who was sheriff of the co. Meath, 1391, and in 1382, constable of the castle of Wicklow. He d. in 1397, leaving a son,

JOHN FITZWILLIAM, who had a pardon from the king for all his transgressions. He left, by Christiana his wife, a son,

HENRY FITZWILLIAM, who was s. by

THOMAS FITZWILLIAM, constable of the town of Swords, who had,

1. RICHARD, of whom presently.

1. Felicia, m. to Walter, 3rd son of Sir Robert Cruise, of Graltagh and Tirrelstown.

RICHARD FITZWILLIAM, of Donnybrook, near Dublin, presumed to be the father of PHILIP FITZWILLIAM, Esq., to whom King HENRY VI. granted a certain sum of money out of the crown rents, which he had to pay for his manor of Thorn Castle, in order to enable him to build a fort there. To this Philip s.

STEPHEN FITZWILLIAM, who, in 1463, held the manor of Thorn Castle. He was s. by

II. Mary, m. 1st, to Matthew Plunket, 5th Lord Louth, and 2ndly, to Gerald Aylmer, Esq.

The eldest son,

SIR THOMAS FITZWILLIAM, Knt. of Merrion, co. Dublin, sheriff of that county, 1609, was created, 5 August, 1629, Baron Fitzwilliam, of Thorncastle, and Viscount Fitzwilliam, of Merrion, co. Dublin, in the peerage of Ireland. This nobleman repaired, the day after the breaking out of the rebellion, in 1641, to Dublin, and waiting upon the lords justices, made a tender of his best services to the crown; but, being a Roman catholic, he was rejected, and compelled to go into England, where, with his two sons, he faithfully and zealously served King CHARLES I., who, in recompense, granted his lordship a privy-seal for a British earldom, dated at Oxford, 1 May, 1645, but the great seal not being then in the power of that unhappy monarch, the patent could not be legally perfected, and it eventually never was. His lordship m. 23 Aug. 1605, Margaret, eldest dau. of Oliver, 4th Lord Louth, by his 1st wife Frances, dau. of Sir Nicholas Bagenall, Knt., Marshal of Ireland, and had issue,

1. Richard, m. Ellinor Staniburet, widow of Sir Henry Pierce, of Shercock, co. Cavan, and d. v. p. s. p.

II. OLIVER, 2nd viscount.

III. Christopher, m. Jane, dau. of Brereton, Esq., of Malpas, in Cheshire, and left a dau. Alicia.

IV. WILLIAM, 3rd viscount.

The 2nd son,

OLIVER FITZWILLIAM, 2nd Viscount Fitzwilliam, was a military officer, and being a lieutenant-general under the Marquess of Ormonde, achieved a victory at Roscommon, by which he gained the whole province of Connaught to the king's service. His lordship was created Earl of Tyrconnel by CHARLES II., by patent dated 20 April, 1663. He m. 1st, Dorothy, sister of his brother Christopher's wife; and 2ndly, Lady Eleanor Holles, eldest dau. of John, 1st Earl of Clare, but d. s. p. 11 April, 1667, when that dignity expired, while the other honours devolved upon his brother,

WILLIAM FITZWILLIAM, 3rd Viscount Fitzwilliam, governor of Whitchurch, in Cheshire, during the civil wars, and lieutenant-general of that co. He m. a dau. of Thomas Luttrell, Esq., of Luttrellstown, and sister of Thomas Luttrell, Esq., of Banaghan, in Westmeath, and dying before 1681, had issue,

1. THOMAS, his successor.

1. Mary, m. in May, 1685, to John Browne, Esq., of Clongosewood, co. Kildare, son and heir of Thomas Browne, Esq., counsellor-at-law, and by him, who d. in 1693, had issue,

1 Stephen-Fitzwilliam; 2 Christopher, of Castle Browne; 3 Bruno, counsellor-at-law; 1 Alice, m. to Mr. John Taylor; and 2 Anne, who d. unm. in 1737.

II. ROSE, m. to Christopher Malpas, Esq., of Winston, and d. 1 March, 1744, leaving a son, John Malpas, Esq., of Rochestown, co. Dublin.

III. Margaret, m. to James Crawley, Esq.

IV. Catharine, m. to Nicholas, son of Robert Netterville, Esq., of Cruerath, co. Meath.

V. Dorothy, m. to Thomas Magher, Esq., of the Queen's co.

The son and heir,

THOMAS FITZWILLIAM, 4th Viscount Fitzwilliam, for his attachment to King JAMES II. was outlawed, but the outlawry was subsequently reversed. His lordship m. 1st, Mary, dau. of Sir Philip Stapleton, of Wighill, co. York, Bart., by whom he had RICHARD, his heir, and a dau. m. to her 1st cousin, Stephen-Fitzwilliam Browne, of Castle Browne, co. Kildare; and 2ndly, the sister of George Pitt, Esq., of Strathfieldsea, co. Southampton, and by her had a dau. Mary, m. 11 March, 1718, to George, Earl of Shrewsbury. His lordship d. 20 Feb. 1704, and was s. by his only son,

RICHARD FITZWILLIAM, 5th Viscount Fitzwilliam, who conformed to the established church, and took his seat in the Irish house of peers, 25 May, 1710. His lordship m. Frances, only

dau. of Sir John Shelley, Bart., of Michael Grove, in Sussex, and by her (who d. 11 Dec. 1771) had three sons and two daus. viz.,

1. RICHARD, his successor.

FITZ-WILLIAM—BARON FITZ-WILLIAM.

By Writ of Summons, dated 5 April, 1327.

Lineage.

In the reign of HENRY II., William, the son of William Fitz-Godrick, was the first, according to Dugdale, who assumed this surname, and called himself

WILLIAM FITZ-WILLIAM, in which opinion Seager, Garter-king-of-arms, temp. CHARLES I., coincides. William Fitz-Godrick is stated to have been cousin in blood to King EDWARD THE CONFESSOR, and to have been deputed upon an embassy by that monarch to William Duke of Normandy, at whose court he remained until he returned with the expedition in 1066, as marshal of the invading army, and it is added that the CONQUEROR bestowed upon him a scarf from his own arm, for the gallantry he had displayed at Hastings. Sir William Fitz-William (Fitz-Godrick's son), m. Eleanor, dau. and heir of Sir John de Elmley, Lord of Elmley and Sprotborough, in Yorkshire, and was s. by his son,

SIR WILLIAM FITZ-WILLIAM, who was living in 1117, Lord of Elmley and Sprotborough. This feudal lord m. Ella, dau. and co-heir of William, Earl of Warren and Surrey, and had Roger, to whom the Earl of Warren gave the lordship of Gretewell; and an elder son, his successor,

SIR WILLIAM FITZ-WILLIAM, lord of Elmley and Sprotborough, who m. Albreda, dau. and heir of Robert de Lizures, widow of Richard Fitz-Eustace, constable of Chester, and sister of the half blood to Robert de Laci, Baron of Pontefract, and had issue, a dau. Donatia, to whom her mother gave lands in Crowle—with a son, his successor,

SIR WILLIAM FITZ-WILLIAM. This feudal lord took up arms in the baronial cause, temp. King JOHN, but returned to his allegiance in the 5th HENRY III. He m. Ella, dau. of Hamlyn, Earl Warren and Surrey, and was s. by his son,

SIR THOMAS FITZ-WILLIAM, who m. Agnes, one of the daus. and co-heirs of Roger Bertram, feudal lord of Milford, by whom he had three sons,

WILLIAM, his successor.

Roger (Sir), who had the lands of Woodhall from his father.

Peter, who was settled at Denby.

He had besides five daus., Margaret, Agnes, Bertha, Rometa, and Alberda, m. Sir Richard Walleis, Knt., of Burgh Walleis. Sir Thomas Fitz-William was s. by his eldest son,

SIR WILLIAM FITZ-WILLIAM, of Sprotborough, who, in the 29th EDWARD I., was in the Scottish wars; but the next reign, joining in the great insurrection of Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, he was made prisoner with that nobleman at Boroughbridge, and hanged immediately after at York. He m. Agnes, dau. of Richard, Lord Grey, of Codnor, and left an only son,

SIR WILLIAM FITZ-WILLIAM, who was summoned* to parliament in the 1st EDWARD III., as a baron, but never afterwards. This nobleman m. Maud, dau. of Edmund, Lord Deincourt, and had several children, but as none were subsequently esteemed barons, we presume, with Nicolas, that the summons was not a parliamentary, but a military one. From this Sir William the present noble house of Fitz-William, Earls Fitz-William, lineally derive.

FITZ-WILLIAM—EARL OF SOUTHAMPTON.

By Letters Patent, dated 18 October, 1637.

Lineage.

From Sir William Fitz-William, son of William Fitz-Godrick, marshal of the victorious army at Hastings, descended,

SIR WILLIAM FITZ-WILLIAM, who m. Agnes, dau. of Richard Lord Grey, of Codnor, and had issue a son,

SIR WILLIAM FITZ-WILLIAM, summoned to parliament as a baron, 5 April, 1327. (See FITZ-WILLIAM, BARON FITZ-WILLIAM.) He m. Maud, dau. of Edmund, Lord Deincourt, and had, with other issue, a son,

SIR JOHN FITZ-WILLIAM, who m. Joan, dau. of Sir Adam Reresby, Knt., and had a son,

SIR JOHN FITZ-WILLIAM, who m. Elizabeth, dau. and heiress of William Clinton, Earl of Huntingdon, and had several children, of whom,

EDMOND FITZWILLIAM, was grandfather of

SIR THOMAS FITZ-WILLIAM, Knt., of Aldwarke, co. York, who m. Lucy, dau. and co-heir of John Nevill, Marquess of Montacute, and had issue, THOMAS, slain at Flodden Field, in the 4th HENRY VIII., and another son,

WILLIAM FITZ-WILLIAM, who was made by King HENRY VIII. one of the esquires of his body, and knighted soon after for his good services at the siege of Tournay. Upon the attainder of Edward Stafford, Duke of Buckingham, Sir William Fitz-William, being then vice-admiral of England, obtained a grant of the manor of Navesby, in the county of Northampton, part of that nobleman's possessions. In the 15th HENRY VIII. Sir William, as admiral of the English fleet, went to sea for the purpose of intercepting the Duke of Albany, who was about returning to Scotland with a large body of French. The next year he was captain of Guisnes, in Picardy, and he was soon after, being at the time treasurer of the household, deputed with John Taylor, doctor of law, to take the oath of the Lady Regent, then at Lyons, (King FRANCIS I. being a prisoner in Spain,) for ratifying the articles of a treaty just concluded between the crowns of England and France. In the 24th of the same reign he was joined in another embassy to France with the Duke of Norfolk and Dr. Cox, regarding the marriage of the French King's third son, with the English monarch's daughter, the Lady Elizabeth; after which (28th HENRY VIII.), being a knight of the Garter, treasurer of the household, and chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, he was constituted Admiral of England, Wales, Ireland, Normandy, Gascony, and Aquitaine, and elevated to the peerage, by letters patent, dated 18 October, 1537, as EARL OF SOUTHAMPTON. He was subsequently appointed lord privy seal. His lordship d. at Newcastle in 1543, upon his march into Scotland, leading the van of the English army, but so highly was he esteemed, that to do honour to his memory, his standard was borne in the forward, throughout the whole of the ensuing campaign. The earl m. Mabel, dau. of Henry, Lord Clifford, and sister of Henry, 1st

Earl of Cumberland, but had no issue, in consequence of which the Earldom of Southampton at his decease, became EXTINCT, while his estates devolved upon (his brother's dau.) his nieces,

Margaret Fitz-William, wife of Godfrey Fuljambe, Esq.
Alice Fitz-William, wife of Sir James Fuljambe, Knt.

FLEMING—VISCOUNT LONGFORD AND BARON SLANE.

Lineage.

ARCHEMBALD, a nobleman of Flanders, accompanied WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR to England, and acquired the manor and lordship of Bratton, in Devonshire, with other manors in that county and Cornwall, which he held in 1087. His son,

STEPHEN FITZ-ARCHEMBALD, Lord of Bratton, paid a fine of ten silver marks to the king for trespass, in 1139; and in 1143 he witnessed the charter of Henry de Tracy to the abbey of Barnstaple by the name of Stephen of Flanders. His son,

ARCHEMBALD, of Flanders, was, in 1165, returned as possessor of the family estates which he held "de veteri feoffamento." He attended HENRY II. in his invasion of Ireland, and obtained the lordships of Astmayn and Eskertenen, in Tipperary, and Newcastle and Slane, on the river Boyne, from the latter of which he and his male descendants took their title of honour. He was a great baron of Ireland, and that dignity, subsequently known as that of a lord of parliament, continued to be enjoyed by his descendants until they were excluded from their seat in parliament by the penal laws. He was s. by his son,

STEPHEN, of Flanders, who, in 1185, by the express command of the king, with a retinue of nine knights and fifty horsemen, attended Prince John, then appointed lord of Ireland, to take possession of his government. He d. in the 14th year of the reign of JOHN. His son,

BALDWIN LE FLEMING, 3rd Baron of Slane, was, in 1242, with twenty-one Irish kings and princes, and nine other great barons, summoned to accompany HENRY III. in his Scotch wars, and when the king made peace, specially thanked by him. In 1260 he was, as a magnate of England, ordered to attend the king in London, to perform the services due to him, and to hear his commands. He was s. by his son,

RICHARD LE FLEMING, 4th Baron of Slane, who as a tenant in capite of the crown, for his manors in Devon and Cornwall, accompanied the king, in 1293, in his wars in Wales, and in 1295 and 1300, in those of Scotland, in which he lost his life. He m. Maria, dau. of Nicholas Lord Martyn, by whom he had issue,

BALDWIN LE FLEMING, 5th Baron of Slane, who received various writs of military and parliamentary summons during the reign of EDWARD II. In 1318 he was specially thanked by the king for his services against Edward Bruce, who had been crowned King of Ireland. He d. 1332, having m. Matilda, dau. and co-heir of Sir Symon de Geynville, 2nd son of Geoffry, next brother of Jean, Sire de Joinville, the celebrated historian and friend of St. Louis, by whom he had issue,

SYMON FLEMING, 6th Baron of Slane, who was, by letters patent, 20th EDWARD III., appointed conservator of the peace for the county of Meath. He d. in 1371, leaving issue by Cecilia his wife, dau. of Sir Thomas Champenon, of Modberrie, in Devonshire, a son and successor,

THOMAS FLEMING, 7th Baron of Slane, who was, with the Lords Gormanston and Delvin, guardian of the marches of Meath during the reigns of HENRY IV. and HENRY V. He m. 1st, Elizabeth, dau. of Robert Preston, Lord Gormanston, by whom he had issue,

CHRISTOPHER, his successor.

He m. 2ndly, Catherine, dau. of James, Earl of Ormonde, by whom he had issue,

Alice, m. Sir Gregory Byrne, Bart., and their grand-dau. and eventual heiress, Catherine Xaveria Byrne, m. George Bryan, Esq., and was mother of GEORGE BRYAN, Esq., of Jenkinstown, co. Kilkenny.

Randall, Lord Slane, d. in 1676, and was s. by his son,

CHRISTOPHER FLEMING, 22nd Baron of Slane, who was seven years old on the death of his father. In 1691 he was attainted for his adherence to JAMES II., whom he followed to France. In 1708 he was restored in blood and to his peerage, by an English act of parliament; and, in 1713, created by Queen ANNE, VISCOUNT LONGFORD. He d. in 1726, without male issue, and although on his death the dignity was assumed by his cousin William, and on the death of William by his son Christopher, the attainder of 1641 was alleged as a bar to the descent of the dignity, notwithstanding that it had been admitted from the time of the Restoration until the succession of Viscount Longford, who was actually outlawed as Christopher Lord Slane, in 1691. Both William and his son Christopher adhered to the Roman Catholic religion, and therefore could not sit in parliament. The dignity was recently claimed by the late George Bryan, of Jenkinson, co. Kilkenny, Esq., as sole heir of the Hon. Alice Fleming, youngest dau. of Randall, Lord Slane; but this claim was opposed by James Fleming, Esq., now one of Her Majesty's Counsel, who claimed to be the heir male of the family, and alleged that the barony was descendable solely in the male line. On 1 September, 1835, the House of Lords, after an investigation which lasted more than five years, resolved that Mr. Bryan had not made out his claim to the Barony of Slane.

FLEMING—EARL OF WIGTON.

By Patent, 19 March, 1606.

Lineage.

This family has common origin with the Flemings of Slane, and, after the Union of the crowns of England and Scotland, the Lords Slane, in all the settlements of their estates, made remainders, on failure of the prior branches, in favour of the Earls of Wigton.

SIR MALCOLM FLEMING was sheriff of Dumbarton in the reign of King ALEXANDER III. He was great grandson of a distinguished Flemish leader, Baldwin Flandrensis, who had a grant of the lands of Biggar from King DAVID I., and was sheriff of Lanark in the reigns of MALCOLM IV. and WILLIAM THE LION. Baldwin was a younger son of Stephen Flandrensis, or Stephen of Flanders, of Bratton, which Stephen first assumed the surname from Flanders.

ROBERT FLEMING of Biggar, the son of Sir Malcolm, was a faithful adherent of King ROBERT BRUCE, and obtained from that monarch the lands of Cumbernauld on the forfeiture of the great house of Comyn. He d. before 1314. He left two sons; 1. SIR MALCOLM, whose son, SIR MALCOLM, was created EARL OF WIGTON, in 1341, but his line failed in the person of his grandson, the 2nd earl, soon after 1332; 2. SIR PATRICK FLEMING, of Biggar.

There was a long succession of Lords of Biggar and Cumbernauld in this family, and in the reign of JAMES II., SIR ROBERT FLEMING was created a peer of parliament as BARON FLEMING. In 1606, the ancient title of EARL OF WIGTON was revived in the person of John, 6th Lord Fleming. In 1747, the earldom of Wigton became extinct, and the estates of Biggar and Cumbernauld devolved on Lady Clementina Fleming, only surviving child of John, 6th earl.

The matrimonial alliances of the successive generations of the Flemings were illustrious, Robert, Duke of Albany, Regent of Scotland; Douglas, Earl of Douglas; Livingston, Lord Livingston; Drummond, Lord Drummond; JAMES IV., King of Scotland, natural dau.; Ross, Lord Ross; Graham, Earl of Montrose; Livingston, Earl of Linlithgow; Drummond, Earl of Perth; Seton, Earl of Dunfermline; and last and not least, Keith, Earl Marischal.

JOHN, 6th Lord Fleming (only son of John, 5th lord, by Elizabeth, his wife, only child of Robert, Master of Ross, and grandson of Malcolm, 3rd Lord Fleming, by Johanna Stewart, his wife), was created EARL OF WIGTON, LORD FLEMING AND CUMBERNAULD, by patent, dated at Whitehall, 19 March, 1606. His lordship m. 1st, Lady Lillias Graham, only dau. of John, 3rd Earl of Montrose, and had issue,

- i. JOHN, 2nd Earl of Wigton
- ii. James, of Boghall, who m. in 1612, Janet Brishane, dau. of the Laird of Bishoptoun, and d. in 1622. His son, John, came of age, 1643.
- iii. Malcolm.
- iv. Alexander.
- i. Jean, m. in 1603, to George, Master of Loudoun, and was mother of Margaret, Countess of Loudoun.
- ii. Anne, m. to Sir William Livingston, of Darnchester, eldest son of Sir William Livingston, of Killyth.
- iii. Margaret, m. in 1613, to Sir John Charteris, of Amisfield, and had issue.
- iv. Lillias, m. in 1627, to Sir David Murray, of Stanhope, and had issue.
- v. Mary, m. 1634, to Archibald Stewart, the younger, of Castle-milk, and had issue.
- vi. Rachel, m. in 1624, to George Lindsay, of Covington.

The earl m. 2ndly, Sarah Maxwell, eldest dau. of John, Lord Herries, relict of Sir James Johnston, of Johnston, and by her (who m. 3rdly, Hugh Montgomery, Viscount of Airds, in Ireland, and was buried at Edinburgh, 29 March, 1636) had two daus., Sarah and Jean. The earl d. 1619: his eldest son,

JOHN FLEMING, 2nd Earl of Wigton, m. Lady Margaret Livington, 2nd dau. of Alexander, 1st Earl of Linlithgow, and had issue,

- i. JOHN, 3rd Earl of Wigton.
- ii. William, chamberlain of the household of CHARLES d. s. p.
- i. Eleanor, m. at Cumbernauld, 23 April, 1650, to David, 2nd Earl of Wemyss, and d. s. p. 20 April, 1652.
- ii. Anne, m. 1st, to Robert, 7th Lord Boyd; 2ndly, to George, 2nd Earl of Dalhousie, and d. 20 April, 1661, having had issue.
- iii. Jean, m. in 1641, to Sir John Grierson, of Lag, co. Dumfries, and had issue.

The earl d. 7 May, 1650, and was s. by his son,

JOHN FLEMING, 3rd Earl of Wigton, who joined Montrose, was at the battle of Philiphaugh, 1645, and escaped with the marquess to the highlands, where he lay concealed for some time. His lordship was served heir to his father, 20 August, 1652. He m. Lady Jane Drummond, eldest dau. of John, 2nd Earl of Perth, and had issue,

- i. JOHN, 4th Earl of Wigton.
- ii. Robert (Sir), d. unm.
- iii. James, d. unm.
- iv. Harry, d. unm.
- v. WILLIAM, 5th Earl of Wigton.
- vi. Charles, d. unm.
- i. Margaret, d. unm.
- ii. Lillias, m. to Richard Storry, Esq.
- iii. Jean.

The eldest son,

JOHN FLEMING, 4th Earl of Wigton, who had a charter to John, Lord Fleming, and Anne Ker, his wife, of the Earldom of Wigton, 10 May, 1662, and s. his father, 1665. He m. Anne, 2nd dau. of Harry, Lord Ker, son and heir apparent of Robert, 1st Earl of Roxburghe, and by her had one dau.,

Jean, m. to George, 3rd Earl of Panmure; and d. in April, 1683. William, 5th Earl of Wigton, was served tutor-at-law as nearest heir of her, 21 September, 1669.

The earl d. in April, 1668, and was s. by his brother,

WILLIAM FLEMING, 5th Earl of Wigton, who m. at Dalgety in September 1670, Lady Henrietta Seton, dau. of Charles, 2nd Earl of Dunfermline, and by her (who m. 2ndly, William, 18th Earl of Crawford) had issue,

JOHN, 6th Earl of Wigton.

CHARLES, 7th Earl of Wigton

Mary, m. 30 March, 1695, to the Hon. Harry Maule, of Kelly, and was mother of William, Earl of Panmure.

The eldest son,

JOHN FLEMING, 6th Earl of Wigton, s. his father in 1681; attended JAMES II. to St. Germain; opposed the treaty of Union in the parliament, 1706, voting against every article; and was committed prisoner to the castle of Edinburgh, at the breaking out of the rebellion, by warrant of Major-General Williams, 20 August, 1715. His lordship required the governor of the castle, under form of instrument, 19 June, 1716, to set him at liberty. The governor answered, that his lordship being committed in time of war, could not be released without a special warrant from the king, or those having power from him. The court of Justiciary, however, ordained the governor to set the prisoner at liberty, 24 June, 1716. He had the appointment of king's chamberlain of Fife, 1736; and dying at Edinburgh, 10 February, 1744, in the seventy-first year of his age, was buried at Biggar. (WOODS' DOUGLAS.) He m. 1st, 14 March, 1698, Lady Margaret Lindsay, 2nd dau. of Colin, 3rd Earl of Balcarrea, by whom he had a dau.,

Margaret, m. to Sir Archibald Primrose, Bart., of Dumipace, co. Stirling; but d. s. p.

The earl m. 2ndly (contract dated 8 February, 1711), Lady Mary Keith, eldest dau. of William, 9th Earl Marischal, and by her (who d. 1721) had one dau.,

CLEMENTINA, m. in 1735, to CHARLES, 10th LORD ELPHINSTONE; and d. 1 January, 1799, aged eighty. Her grandson,

THE HON. CHARLES ELPHINSTONE FLEMING, admiral in the royal navy, M.P. for the county of Stirling, succeeded in her right to the estates of Cumbernauld and Biggar, the ancient inheritance of the Earls of Wigton. He m. in 1816, Donna Catalina-Paulina-Alessandro, a Spanish lady, and by her (who m. 2ndly, Captain Katon, R.N.) had,

- 1 JOHN-ELPHINSTONE-FLEMING, 14th Lord Elphinstone, d. unm., 13 January, 1861.
- 1 Clementina, m. 24 March, 1845, Cornwallis, Viscount Hawarden, and d. in January, 1865, leaving issue.
- 2 Mary-Keith, m. 1st, 20 April, 1843, to Alexander Macalister, Esq., of Torriedale (which marriage was dissolved in 1847); and 2ndly, to Morgan Lloyd, Esq.; and d. 11 March, 1859.
- 3 Anne-Elizabeth, m. 12 June, 1851, to William Cunningham Bontine, Esq., of Ardoch, eldest son of R.-C. Cunningham-Graham, Esq., of Gartmore and Finlayston.

His lordship m. 3rdly, Eupheme, dau. of George Lockhart, of Carnwath, co. Lanark, author of the Memoirs of Scotland, but had no issue by her, who m. 2ndly, Peter Mac Elligot, major-general in the service of MARIA-THERESA. The earl was s. by his brother,

CHARLES FLEMING, 7th Earl of Wigton; who d. unm. at Elphinstone, 26 May, 1747, when the family estates devolved on his niece, Lady Clementina Elphinstone, whose senior co-representative is the Hon. CORNWALLIS MAUDE.

The title of Earl of Wigton was assumed at his lordship's decease by CHARLES-ROSS FLEMING, M.D., of Dublin, son of James Flemyng, rector of Castlane, Kilderry, &c., chaplain to the lord-lieutenant of Ireland, and grandson of James Flemyng, rector of Ramochy, co. Donegal, whose father was stated to have been Alexander, son of John, 6th Lord Fleming, and 1st Earl of Wigton. Dr. Flemyng bore the title for a time, but was debarred by the Lords' Committee for Privileges from such assumption until he should establish his claim. He m. 26 December, 1743, Anne, sister of William Hamilton, Esq., of Queen Anne's Street, London, and had a son and heir, Hamilton Flemyng, Esq., an officer in the army, who m. 14 December, 1769, Mary-Charlotte, dau. and heir of William Child, Esq., and d. 13 June, 1809, leaving an only dau. and heiress, Harriot-Jane-Laura, m. 13 October, 1794, to WILLIAM GYLL, Esq., of Wyntarisbury, Bucks, capt. 2nd life guards. FORTESCUE, EARL OF CLERMONT.

By Letters Patent, dated 10 February, 1777.

Lineage.

This family of Fortescue derives its origin from Sir Richard le Fort, a person of extraordinary strength and courage, and a distinguished soldier, who accompanied William, Duke of Normandy, in his expedition to England, and bearing a strong shield before the Duke, at the decisive battle of Hastings, in Sussex, against King HAROLD, wherein he was exposed to imminent danger, having three horses killed under him, contributed greatly to his preservation; and from that signal event were assumed the name and motto of the family, the word scutum in Latin, or écu in French (a shield) being added to Fort composes the name, and the motto is "Forte Scutum, Salus Ducum."

SIR JOHN FORTESCUE, of Winston, co. Devon (son of Adam Fortescue, Esq.), principal commander in the army raised under William, Lord Brewer, in aid of King JOHN against the rebellious barons, was father of RICHARD FORTESCUE, the father of WILLIAM FORTESCUE, who had a son, FORTIBUS—EARLS OF ALBEMARLE.

Creation of the CONQUEROR.

Lineage.

Odo, Earl of Champagne, having married Adeliza, sister of the Conqueror, obtained from that monarch the Isle (as he calls it) of Holderness, and he had from the archbishop of Roan, the city of Albemarle, upon the condition, that in all expeditions where that prelate went in person, he should be his standard-bearer with twelve knights. Holderness, at this period being a barren country, producing nought but oats, so soon as his wife brought him a son, Odo entreated the king to give him some land which would bear wheat, "whereby he might better nourish his nephew," the king granted him therefore the lordship of Bytham, in Lincolnshire. Others mentioning this gift to Odo, call it Comitatum Holderness, the county or earldom of Holderness, which included a large portion of Yorkshire, upon the north-eastern side. Of this Earl Odo nothing further is known, than his joining Robert de Mowbray, Earl of Northumberland, and others, anno 1096, in a conspiracy to depose WILLIAM RUFUS, and to place STEPHEN (afterwards king) upon the throne; for which conduct he suffered imprisonment. He d. in 1096, leaving a dau. Judith, m. to Waltheof, Earl of Northumberland and Huntingdon, and a son, his successor,

STEPHEN, Earl of Albemarle, who, in the contest between WILLIAM RUFUS, and his brother, Robert Curthose, remained faithful to the former; but that difference being adjusted, he embarked with Curthose for the Holy Land, and in the great victory achieved over the infidel near Antioch, had a principal command in the Christian army. He subsequently joined Hugh de Gornay in an unsuccessful attempt to depose HENRY I. in favour of Robert Curthose, and he made a similar effort afterwards for Curthose's son, Prince William. In the last attempt some lost their lives, others were disinherited or imprisoned, but of the fate of the Earl of Albemarle nothing certain is known. He m. Hawise, dau. of Ralph de Mortimer, and had, with other issue, a son and successor,

WILLIAM, Le Grosse, 3rd Earl of Albemarle. In 1138 he was chief of those great nobles that gave battle to, and defeated, the Scots at North Allerton, when DAVID, King of Scotland, had invaded the north with a mighty army, claiming Northumberland for his son Henry, in right of Maud, dau. and heir of Earl Waltheof. Upon this memorable occasion Thurston, archbishop of York, caused a famous standard to be erected in the English camp, displaying the banners of St. Peter, St. John of Beverley, and St. Wilfrid, of Rippon, with the sacred host. From which circumstance the ground whereon the battle was fought has ever since been termed Standard Hill. The Earl of Albemarle was rewarded for his gallantry with the Earldom of Yorkshire, and Robert de Ferrers with that of the county of Derby. His lordship, under the title of Earl of York, was subsequently with King STEPHEN at the battle of Lincoln, where that monarch sustained so signal a defeat. He m. Cicily, dau. of William Fitz-Duncan, (nephew of MALCOLM, King of Scotland,) by Alice, dau. of Robert de Romeley, Lord of the Honour of Skipton, in Craven, &c., by which marriage he enjoyed, as her inheritance, all that part of Yorkshire called Craven. By this lady he had two daus., Hawyse, who m. 1st, William de Mandeville, Earl of Essex, and 2ndly, William de Fortibus.

Amicia, m. to — Eaton, by whom she had a son,

Ranulph, whose son,

John, was father of

John de Eaton, or Aston, who, as right heir after Aveline de Fortibus, claimed, in the 6th of EDWARD I., the Earldom of Albemarle, and had certain lands in Thornton to the value of £100 per annum, assigned to him to release his right therein.

William, Le Grosse, d. in 1179, and was s. in the Earldom of Albemarle by his son-in-law,

WILLIAM DE MANDEVILLE Earl of Essex, who d. s. p. in 1190; and Hawyse, his widow, marrying

WILLIAM DE FORTIBUS, he became, in her right, EARL OF ALBEMARLE, and Lord of Holderness. This William was constituted, by RICHARD I., one of the admirals of the fleet, in which that monarch soon afterwards sailed towards Jerusalem. His lordship d. in 1194, leaving a son and heir, WILLIAM DE FORTIBUS, but in regard that Hawyse, the deceased lord's widow, was heir to the earldom, and that she married

BALDWIN DE BERTUNE, Earl of the Isle of Wight, that William was postponed to Baldwin in the enjoyment of the Earldom of Albemarle, but Baldwin dying s. p. in 1212, the dignity then devolved upon the said

WILLIAM DE FORTIBUS, to whom King JOHN, in the sixteenth year of his reign, confirmed all the lands which accrued to him by inheritance from his mother. The next year the Earl, arraying himself on the side of the barons, was one of the celebrated twenty-five chosen to enforce the observance of Magna Charta; but he subsequently deserted his party, and was with King JOHN in his expedition into the north, so marked by spoil and rapine. He was then constituted governor of the castles of Rockingham, in Northamptonshire, Saubey, in Leicestershire, and Bitham, co. Lincoln, with strict command to destroy all the houses, parks, and possessions of those barons who were in arms against the king. In the reign of HENRY III. his lordship fought at the battle of Lincoln under the royal banner, and shared largely in the spoils of victory. He was subsequently for and against the king by turns, and eventually d. at sea, in his progress to the Holy Land. He m. Aveline, dau. and co-heir of Richard de Munnichet, a great baron in Essex, and was s. by his son,

* His only dau., Lady Louisa Fortescue, m. 21 September 1778, the Rev. Mr. Harrington.

WILLIAM DE FORTIBUS, Earl of Albemarle. This nobleman enjoyed the sheriffalty of Cumberland from the 41st HENRY III. until the time of his decease. His lordship m. 1st, Christian, dau. and co-heir of Alan, of Galoway, but that lady d. s. p. He m. 2ndly, Isabel, dau. of Baldwin, Earl of Devon, by whom he had three sons, John, Thomas and William, and one surviving daughter, Aveline. The earl, journeying into France, d. at Amiens in 1259, when the tuition of his two surviving sons, Thomas and William, was committed to their mother, Isabel, but these children appear to have lived only a short time, when the whole inheritance passed to the earl's dau.,

AVELINE DE FORTIBUS, whose wardship was granted by the king to Richard de Clare, Earl of Gloucester, for the whole term of fifteen years of her minority. This grant was, however, shortly after surrendered, and the king conferred the guardianship of the heiress to his eldest son, Prince Edward, who assigned the castle and barony of Skipton, in Craven, to ALEXANDER, King of Scotland, during her minority, in consideration of the sum of £1600. This lady, independently of the great inheritance of the Fortibus family, became also heiress to her mother, Isabel, (who, upon the death of her brother Baldwin, 5th Earl of Devon, styled herself Countess of Albemarle and Devon) and thus with both inheritances, she was heir to the Earldoms of Albemarle and Devon, to the Barony of Skipton and the Sovereignty of the Isle of Wight. Her ladyship m. EDMUND PLANTAGENET, surnamed Crouch-back, afterwards Duke of Lancaster; the king and queen and almost all the nobility of England attending at the wedding. She d. however, within a short time s. p. and her honours passed into other families.

FOX—BARONS HOLLAND.

By Letters Patent, dated 6 May, 1762.

By Letters Patent, dated 16 April, 1763.

Lineage.

This family and that of Fox, Earls of Ilchester, had a common progenitor in

SIR STEPHEN FOX, a distinguished senator during the reigns of CHARLES II., JAMES II., WILLIAM III., and Queen ANNE. By his marriage, in 1703, with Christian, dau. of the Rev. Charles Hope, of Naseby, co. Lincoln, he had two sons, Stephen, created EARL OF ILCHESTER, and

HENRY FOX, b. 1705, who filled several high official situations in the reign of GEORGE II. (amongst others those of secretary at war, and secretary of state), from 1735, when he was first returned to parliament for Hendon, until the accession of his Majesty GEORGE III., at which period he was a member of the privy council, and enjoyed the office of paymaster-general to the forces, which he soon afterwards resigned. The right hon. gentleman m. in 1744, Georgiana-Carolina, eldest dau. of Charles, 2nd Duke of Richmond, and had issue,

I. STEPHEN, his successor.

II. CHARLES-JAMES (b. 13 Jan. O. S. 1748-9), one of the most eminent statesmen of modern times. Mr. Fox first came into parliament for Midhurst, in 1763, before he was of age. In 1770, he was appointed a lord of the Admiralty, which post he retained till May, 1772. In 1773, he was made lord of the Treasury, an office he resigned the following year, to oppose Lord North and the American war. Upon the fall of the North administration, March, 1782, Mr. Fox was constituted secretary of state, but held the seals only till the death of Lord Bockingham, in the following July. When the brief-lived Shelburne cabinet ceased, Mr. Fox formed the celebrated coalition with Lord North, and became again secretary of state, 2 April, 1783. His power was as fleeting, however, as before, and he retired on 19 December following, to make room for Mr. Pitt, who at once became premier. After the death of Mr. Pitt, Mr. Fox came again into office, and he d. 15 September, 1806, when nominally secretary of state for foreign affairs, but virtually prime minister of England. He had m. Elizabeth-Bridget Armistead, but had no issue. His widow survived until 8 July, 1842.

III. Henry-Edward, a general officer in the army, and col. of the 16th foot; m. Marianna, dau. of William Clayton, Esq.; and d. in 1811, leaving

1 Henry-Stephen, b. 22 September, 1791; d. in October, 1846.

1 Louisa-Amelia, m. to Sir H.-E. Bunbury, Bart.; and d. in 1828.

2 Caroline, m. to the late Lieut.-Gen. Sir William-F.-P. Napier, K.C.B.; and d. 26 March, 1860.

Lady Georgiana Fox was elevated to the peerage, as Baroness Holland, of Holland, co. Lincoln, 6 May, 1762; and Mr. Fox himself was created BARON HOLLAND, of Foxley, co. Wills, 16 April, 1763. His lordship d. 1 July, 1774, and was s. by his eldest son,

STEPHEN, 2nd baron; who inherited likewise the Barony of Holland of Holland, at the demise of his mother, the 24th of the same month, in the same year. His lordship m. 20 April, 1766, Mary, eldest dau. of John Fitzpatrick, 1st Earl of Upper Ossory, by whom (who d. in 1778) he had issue,

HENRY-RICHARD, his heir.

Caroline, d. 12 March, 1845.

He d. 16 December, 1774, and was s. by his only son,

HENRY-RICHARD, F.R.S., F.S.A., 3rd baron, recorder of Nottingham; b. 21 November, 1773; who m. 9 July, 1797, Elizabeth, dau. and heir of Richard Vassall, Esq., (who had been previously m. to Sir Godfrey Webster, Bart.), by whom (who d. in Nov. 1845) he had issue, HENRY-EDWARD, his heir.

Mary-Elizabeth (heiress of her brother), m. 22 May, 1830, Thomas, 3rd Lord Lilford, and had a son, Thomas Littleton, 4th Lord Lilford, and other issue,

His lordship, in consequence of his marriage, assumed the surname of VASSALL. Lord Holland, who was a cabinet minister, and chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, d. deeply lamented, 22 October, 1840, and was s. by his son, HENRY-EDWARD, 4th lord, b. 7 March, 1802. He was M.P. for Horsham 1820-7, and from 1839 to 1842 minister-plenipotentiary at the court of Tuscany. He m. 9 May, 1833, Augusta-Mary, dau. of George-William, Earl of Coventry, but had no surviving issue. His lordship d. at Naples, 18 December, 1869, when the title became extinct.

FRASER—BARON FRASER.

By Letters Patent, dated 29 June, 1633.

Lineage.

ANDREW FRASER, son and heir of Andrew Fraser, of Kinmundie, by Lady Elizabeth Douglas, his wife, 2nd dau. of Robert, Earl of Buchan, was created a peer of Scotland, 29 June, 1633, as BARON FRASER, with limitation of the title to his heirs male for ever. He m. Anne, eldest dau. of James, 1st Lord Balmerinoch, and d. 10 December, 1636, and was s. by his son,

ANDREW FRASER, 2nd Lord Fraser; who m. Anne, dau. of Haldane, of Glencagles; and dying 24 May, 1674, left a son and successor,

ANDREW FRASER, 3rd Lord Fraser; who m. Catherine, 3rd dau. of Hugh, 8th Lord Lovat, relict of Sir John Sinclair, of Dunbeath, and of Robert, 1st Viscount Arbutnot, by whom he had a son,

CHARLES FRASER, 4th Lord Fraser; who m. Lady Margaret Erskine, eldest dau. of James, Earl of Buchan, and relict of Fraser, of Innerlachie, but had no issue. His lordship engaged in the rising of 1715; and after its suppression, remained concealed until his death, which occurred 12 October, 1720; since which period the title has remained DORMANT.

Arms—Az., three fraises, arg.

FRENCH—BARON DE FREYNE.

Created 16 May, 1839.

Extinct 29 September, 1856.

(See BURKE's Extant Peerage.)

FRESCHVILLE—BARON FRESCHVILLE, OF STAVELEY, CO. DERBY.

By Letters Patent, dated 16 March, 1664.

Lineage.

In the 9th HENRY III., upon the death of Hubert Fitz-Ralph, Lord of Cryche, in Derbyshire,

RALPH DE FRESCHVILLE, being his heir, and paying 100 marks for his relief, had livery of his lands. This Ralph, in the 26th of the same reign, paid a fine of 30 marks to be excused from attending the king into Gascony. He d. in 19 years afterwards, and was s. by his son,

ANKERE DE FRESCHVILLE, who, having joined the baronial standard, was made prisoner at the battle of Northampton, when his lands were seized by the crown, and conferred upon Brian de Brompton, according to the tenor of the Dictum de Kenilworth, until the heir of the said Ankere should accomplish his full age. Ankere d. in the 54th HENRY III., when it was found that he held the manor of Boney, co. Nottingham, by barony, of the king in capite, so likewise the manor of Cryche, in Derbyshire. He m. Amice, eldest dau. and co-heir of Sir Nicholas Musard, Lord of Staveley, co. Derby, and sister and co-heir of Nicholas Musard, and was s. by his son,

RALPH DE FRESCHVILLE, who, in the 15th EDWARD I., doing his homage, had livery of all his father's lands, save the manor of Boney, which Richard de Grey still retained until the fine imposed by the Dictum of Kenilworth should be liquidated. In ten years afterwards this Ralph distinguished himself in the wars of Scotland, and was summoned to parliament as a baron, in the 25th EDWARD I., but never afterwards. His lordship was s. by his son,

RALPH DE FRESCHVILLE, who was never summoned to parliament, nor esteemed a baron; nor were any of his descendants. Of whom his direct male heir,

SIR PETER DE FRESCHVILLE, had the honour of knighthood conferred upon him by King EDWARD VI., for his valour at the battle of Musselborough, in Scotland. Sir Peter was great grandfather of

JOHN FRESCHVILLE, Esq., of Staveley, co. Derby, who, having adhered firmly to the royal cause during the civil wars, was elevated to the peerage by King CHARLES II., 16 March, 1664, as BARON FRESCHVILLE, of Staveley. In 1677, his lordship claimed to be allowed to sit in the House of Peers under the writ of summons to his ancestor, Ralph, in the reign of EDWARD I., but it being contended, that to give the party summoned to parliament an estate of inheritance, a sitting under the writ was necessary, as the onus of proving such sitting rested with the party claiming the dignity, and no such proof being extant in the case of Ralph Freschville, the claim was not admitted. Lord Freschville m. 1st, Sarah, dau. of Sir John Harington, Knt., and had three daus., viz.,

Christian, m. to Charles Paulet, then Lord St. John, afterwards Duke of Bolton.

Elizabeth, m. 1st, to Philip, son and heir of Sir Philip Warwick, Knt., and 2ndly (his lordship's 4th wife), to Conyers Darcy, 2nd Earl of Holderness.

Frances, m. to Col. Thomas Colepeper. This lady became eventually sole heiress of her father.

His lordship m. 2ndly, Anna-Charlotta, dau. and heir of Sir Henry Vick, Knt., but had no issue. He d. s. p. m. in 1682, when the Barony of Freschville, of Staveley became EXTINCT.

FREVILLE—BARON FREVILLE.

By Writ of Summons, dated 5 April, 1327.

Lineage.

This family was anciently seated in the county of Cambridge, and of considerable note. In the 15th HENRY III.,

BALDWIN DE FREVILLE, having obtained the wardship of Lucia, dau. and heir of Richard de Scalera, for which he gave 200 marks, made her very soon after his wife; and in the 36th of the same reign, paid towards the marriage-portion of the king's dau., £15 for fifteen knights' fees which he had of her inheritance. To this Baldwin s. his son and heir,

RICHARD DE FREVILLE, who was engaged in the Welsh wars. He was s., at his decease, by his son,

BALDWIN DE FREVILLE, who d. s. p., and was s. by his brother,

ALEXANDER DE FREVILLE, who m. Joane, dau. of Maser 2nd dau. and co-heir of Sir Philip Marmion, and wife of Balg de Cromwell. This Alexander was in the Scottish wars EDWARD I., and had a military summons for that service in the 8th EDWARD II.; in the 3rd of which latter monarch's reign upon partition of the lands of Isabel, wife of William Warund, he had, in right of his wife, heir to the said Isabel, the manors of Winterborne and Aaserton, co. Wilts. He was afterwards summoned to parliament as a baron, in the 1st EDWARD III., but never again, nor any of his descendants. On referring to Dugdale's List of Summonses, it appears that this Alexander is not included in either summons to parliament issued in that year, but only in a summons dated Ramsey, 5 April, 1st EDWARD III., 1327, to be at Newark upon-Tyne, with horse and arms, to serve against Robert Bruce.—NICOLAS. Alexander de Freville d. in 1328, leaving a son,

BALDWIN DE FREVILLE, who d. in the 17th EDWARD II. and was s. by his son,

BALDWIN DE FREVILLE, then twenty-six years of age, when doing homage, the next ensuing year had livery of the 1/3 of his inheritance lying in the cos. of Warwick, Hereford, Salop, Stafford, Wilts, Norfolk and Suffolk. In the 25th EDWARD III., this Baldwin was made seneschal of Flanders for life, by EDWARD the renowned Black Prince, and he was afterwards in the wars of Gascony, with that illustrious prince. He m. 1st, Elizabeth, sister and co-heir of Sir John Montfort, of Beldestert, co. Warwick; 2ndly, Ida, dau. of Clinton, a lady of honour to Queen Philippa, and 3rdly, Joan, dau. of Lord Strange, and dying in the 49th EDWARD III., was s. by his son,

SIR BALDWIN DE FREVILLE, who, in the 1st RICHARD I. claimed, as feudal lord of Tamworth Castle, co. Warwick, to be the king's champion on the day of his coronation; but the same was determined against him, in favour of Sir John Dymoke, Knt. (see Marmion), in right of the tenure of the manor of Scrivelaby, co. Lincoln, and the Dymokes have ever since enjoyed that honour. Sir Baldwin Freville m. two wives, both heirs of Sir John de Botetourt, 2nd Baron Botetourt, summoned to parliament from 25 February, 1342, to 3 February, 1343. Elizabeth, his 1st wife, d. very young. By his 2nd wife Joyce (widow of Sir Adam de Pershall, Knt., of Weston-under-Lizard, who d. 7th HENRY V., 1419, leaving issue by her), Baldwin Freville had issue,

SIR BALDWIN DE FREVILLE, who m. Joane, dau. of Sir John Green, Knt., and had issue,

BALDWIN, his successor.

Elizabeth, m. to Sir Thomas Ferrers, 2nd son of William 1st Ferrers, of Groby, from whom lineally descended

Anne Ferrers, granddau. and heiress of Sir John Ferrers Tamworth Castle, who d. in 1680. This great heiress the Hon. Robert Shirley, 1st Earl of Ferrers of that name and had issue,

Robert, who d. s. p. in 1714.

Elizabeth, heir to her brother, m. to James 5th Earl Northampton, and carried the baronies of Ferrers, Chartley, &c., &c., into that family.

Margaret, m. to Sir Hugh Willoughby, Knt., and afterwards to Sir Richard Bingham, Knt., one of the Justices of King's Bench.

Joice, m. to Roger Aston, Esq., ancestor of the Lord Aston of Forfar, in Scotland.

Sir Baldwin d. in the 2nd HENRY IV., and was s. by his son,

BALDWIN DE FREVILLE, at whose decease in minority, issueless, 6th HENRY V., his sisters became his heirs. The great possessions of the Frevilles were thus divided:

Sir Thomas Ferrers had the castle and manor of Tamworth with other estates in the co. Warwick, and lands in Hereford and Stafford shires.

Roger Aston had the manor of Newdigate, in Surrey, and other lands in Wiltshire and Warwickshire.

Sir Richard Bingham obtained the manors of Middletons Whitnash, in Warwickshire, and other lordships in the cos. of Nottingham and Hereford.

FURNIVAL—BARONS FURNIVAL.

By Writ of Summons, dated 23 June, 1295.

Lineage.

In the time of RICHARD I.

GIRARD DE FURNIVAL came into England from Normandy, and, accompanying the King to the Holy Land, assisted at the celebrated siege of Acon. To this gallant soldier succeeded his son, another

GIRARD DE FURNIVAL, who m. Maud, dau. and heiress of William de Luvetot, a powerful Nottinghamshire baron, and had livery of her lands in the 5th year of King JOHN. This feudal lord, being one of the barons who adhered to JOHN, was included in the commission to treat, on part of the monarch, with Robert de Ros and the other insurrectionary lords, and was appointed by the king to reside at Bolsover Castle, co. Derby, for the better preservation of the peace in those parts. He d. at Jerusalem, in the 3rd HENRY III., leaving three sons, viz.,

I. THOMAS, of whom presently.

II. GERARD, who m. Christian Ledet, dau. and heiress of Guichard Ledet, and widow of Henry de Braybroc, in whose right he held the barony of Wardon. He left at his decease, a son, Sir GERARD DE FURNIVAL, who m. Joan, dau. and co-heir of Hugh de Morvill, and left at his decease, two daus. and co-heiresses, LORETTA, m. to John Ufflet, and Christian, who m. Sir John Eynsford, and was mother of Elizabeth, wife of Sir John Milborne.

III. William, m. Ada —, but had no issue.

The eldest son,

THOMAS DE FURNIVAL, s. to the feudal barony, and HENRY III. committed to his wardship William de Moubray, son of Roger de Moubray, a great Yorkshire baron. Of this Thomas nothing more is known, than his being slain by the Saracens in the Holy Land, whither he had journeyed upon a pilgrimage, and that his body was brought from thence by his brother Girard, and buried at Worksop. By Bertha, his wife, he had a son and successor,

THOMAS DE FURNIVAL, who had licence, in the 54th HENRY III., to make a castle of his manor-house of Sheffield, co. York. To this Thomas s. his son and heir,

GERARD DE FURNIVAL, who m. Maud, eldest of the four sisters and co-heirs of Richard Fitz-John, and by her (who m. 2ndly, William 11th Earl of Warwick), had a son,

THOMAS DE FURNIVAL, who, in the 22nd EDWARD I., had summons, amongst other great men, to attend the king, in order to advise of the affairs of the realm; and having so done, received command to repair to Portsmouth, upon the first day of the ensuing September, well fitted with horse and arms, for the expedition then intended against France. In the next year, 23 June, 1295, he was first summoned to parliament as a baron, and from that period his lordship appears, for several years, to have taken a distinguished part in the Scottish wars. In the 27th EDWARD I., he was constituted captain-general and lieutenant to the king for the co. of Nottingham and Derby, and had summons to parliament, uninterruptedly, until 27 January, 1332 (6th EDWARD III.), but he did not hold his lands by barony. Lord Furnival m. Elizabeth, dau. of Peter de Montfort, of Beldebert Castle, co. Warwick, and was s. at his decease, in 1332, by his eldest son,

THOMAS DE FURNIVAL, who was himself a baron, having been summoned to parliament as "Thomas de Furnival, Junior," from 25 August, 1318, to 27 January, 1332, and without "junior," until 15 November, 1338 (12th EDWARD III.). This nobleman, who, like his father, was engaged in the Scottish wars, m. Joan, eldest dau. and co-heiress of Theobald de Verdon, but without the king's licence, for which he had to pay a fine of £200. By this lady he acquired extensive estates in co. Stafford, and had two sons, THOMAS and WILLIAM. His lordship d. in 1339, and was s. by the elder,

THOMAS DE FURNIVAL, 3rd baron, b. 1322. In the 19th EDWARD III. this nobleman embarked in the expedition made into France, and the next year participated in the glories of Crécy. His lordship continued in the French wars some years subsequently, and he was afterwards in Scotland under Henry, Lord Percy. He d. about the year 1366, having been summoned to parliament, from 20 November, 1348, to 4 October, 1364, and leaving no issue, was s. by his brother,

WILLIAM DE FURNIVAL, 4th baron, summoned to parliament, from 20 January, 1366, to 7 January, 1393. This nobleman permitted the pale of his park at Worksop to be so defective, that divers of the king's deer, out of the forest of Sherwood, came freely into it, and were destroyed. In consequence of which, William de Latimer, warden of the forests beyond Trent, seized the said park for the king; but it was soon afterwards released, and Lord Furnival pardoned, upon the payment of a fine of £20. His lordship m. Thomasin, dau. and heiress of — Dagworth (in whose right he acquired the manor of Dagworth, Suffolk), by whom he had an only dau., Joane, who m. Thomas Nevill, brother of Ralph, 1st Earl of Westmoreland.

With this nobleman, in the year 1383, expired the male line of the Furnivals, and the barony was conveyed by his heiress, Joane Nevill, to her husband,

THOMAS NEVILL, who was summoned to parliament 20 August, 1383 (7th RICHARD II.) as "Thomas Nevill de Halumshire," and thenceforward styled "Lord Furnival." In which year, making proof of his wife's age, he had livery of her great inheritance. By this lady he had,

Maud, m. 1408, Sir John Talbot, 1st Earl of Shrewsbury.
Joane, who d. unm.

His lordship m. 2ndly, Ankaret Strange, of Blackmere, widow of Richard, Lord Talbot, and by her had a dau. Joan, who m. 1st, Sir Hugh Cokesey; and 2ndly, Hans de Belknap. This nobleman, who was a personage of distinction, in the reigns of RICHARD II. and HENRY IV., d. in 1406, leaving his two daus. his co-heiresses. The elder of whom, Maud, as stated above, m. the celebrated

GENERAL SIR JOHN TALBOT, 2nd son of Richard, Lord Talbot, of Blackmere, who was summoned to parliament as "Lord Furnival," from 26 October, 1409, to 26 February, 1421; and subsequently, 20 May, 1442, for his many heroic achievements, was created EARL OF SHREWSBURY, in the peerage of England, and EARL OF WATERFORD AND WEXFORD, in that of Ireland. In these higher honours the Barony of Furnival merged for two centuries, until the demise of Gilbert, 7th Earl of Shrewsbury, in 1616, without male issue, when the earldom passed to that nobleman's brother; but the baronies of Talbot, Furnival, Strange, of Blackmere, &c., fell into ABEYANCE between his three daus., viz.,

Mary, m. to William, Earl of Pembroke.

Elizabeth, m. to Henry, Earl of Kent.

Alethea, m. to Thomas Howard Earl of Arundel; by which marriage the manor of Worksop came into the Howard family; and by virtue of possessing which, the Dukes of Norfolk claim to support the king's left arm on the day of coronation, so long as his majesty holds the royal sceptre; George, 4th Earl of Shrewsbury, having exchanged with the crown, his manor of Farnham Royal (holden by that tenure), for the inheritance of the site of the priory of Worksop, with divers other lands.

The baronies finally, however, devolved upon Alethea, Countess of Arundel, and thenceforward became merged in the Earldom of Arundel and the Dukedom of Norfolk, until the decease of Edward Howard, 9th duke, 20 September, 1777, without issue, when the higher honours passed to the male heir; and the baronies in fee, amongst which was that of Furnival, fell into ABEYANCE between the dau. of his grace's deceased brother, Philip Howard, of Buckingham, co. Norfolk: the said

PHILIP HOWARD, m. 1st, Winifrede, dau. of Thomas Stonor, Esq., of Watlington Park, co. Oxford, and had issue,

Thomas, who d. in 1763, s. p.

Winifred, m. WILLIAM, 15th Lord Stourton, and had issue,

CHARLES-PHILIP, 16th Lord Stourton, grandfather of the present Lord Stourton.

Mr. Howard m. 2ndly, Harriet, dau. and co-heir of Edward Blount, Esq., by whom he had,

Edward, who d. unm. in 1767.

Anne, m. Robert-Edward, 9th Lord Petre, by whom she had,

ROBERT-EDWARD, 10th Lord Petre, grandfather of the present Lord Petre.

The baronies still continue in ABEYANCE between the Lords Stourton and Petre.

GANT—EARLS OF LINCOLN.

Inherited by marriage from the family of ROMARE, (see Romare, Earl of Lincoln.)

Lineage.

GILBERT DE GANT, son of Baldwin, Earl of Flanders, by Maud, sister of WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, accompanied his uncle into England, and participating in the triumph of Hastings, obtained a grant of the lands of a Danish proprietor, named Tour, with numerous other lordships. This Gilbert happened to be at York, anno 1069, and had a narrow escape, when the Danes, in great force on behalf of Edgar Etheling, entered the mouth of the Humber, and marching upon that city, committed lamentable destruction by fire and sword, there being more than 2,000 Normans slain. Like most of the great lords of his time, Gilbert de Gant disgorged a part of the spoil which he had seized to the church, and amongst other acts of piety restored Bardney Abbey, co. Lincoln, which had been utterly destroyed many years before by the Pagan Danes, Inquar and Hubba. He m. Alice, dau. of Hugh de Montfort, and had issue,

- I. HUGH, assumed the name of Montfort.
- II. WALTER, his successor.
- III. Robert, lord chancellor of England, anno 1153.
- I. Emma, m. to Alan, Lord Percy.

This great feudal chief d. in the reign of WILLIAM RUFUS, and was s. by his son,

WALTER DE GANT, a person of great valour and piety; who, at an advanced age, commanded a brave regiment of Flemings and Norinans, in the celebrated conflict with the Scots, at Northallerton, in Yorkshire, known in history as the Battle of the Standard, "where," says Dugdale, "by his eloquent speech and prudent conduct, the whole army received such encouragement, as that the Scots were utterly vanquished." He m. Maud, dau. of Stephen, Earl of Brittany, and had issue,

- I. GILBERT, his heir.
- II. ROBERT, of whom presently.
- III. Geoffrey.

He d. in 1138, and was s. by his eldest son,

GILBERT DE GANT, who, in his youth, being taken prisoner with King STEPHEN, at the battle of Lincoln (1142), was compelled by Ranulph, Earl of Chester, to marry his niece the Lady Hawyse Boinare, dau. and heir of William de Romare, Earl of Lincoln, whereby he became eventually in her right Earl of Lincoln. He d. in 1160, leaving two daus., his co-heirs, viz.,

- Alice, m. to Simon de St. Liz (the last of that name,) Earl of Huntingdon and Northampton.
- Gunnora, d. s. p.

At the decease of these ladies s. p., the great inheritance reverted to their uncle,

ROBERT DE GANT, who does not, however, appear to have s. to the Earldom of Lincoln. This Robert m. 1st, Alice, dau. and heir of William Paganet, and of Avise de Romelli (dau. and co-heir of William Meschines, Lord of Copeland,) by whom he had an only dau.,

ALICE, m. to Robert Fitzhardinge, of the family of Fitzhardinge, from which the Earls of Berkeley derive.

Robert de Gant m. 2ndly, Gunnora, niece of Hugh de Gournay, and had two sons, GILBERT and Stephen. He d. about the 4th RICHARD I., and was s. by his elder son,

GILBERT DE GANT, then under age, and in ward to William de Stutevill. In the last year of King JOHN's reign, this Gilbert adhering to the barons, was constituted EARL OF LINCOLN, by LEWIS, of France, at that time in London, and at the head of the baronial party, and was despatched into Nottinghamshire, to oppose the royalists. Shortly after which, assisted by Robert de Ropesle, he reduced the city of Lincoln, but at the subsequent battle, the baronial force being totally broken, he was taken prisoner, and never after assumed the title of Earl of Lincoln, which dignity was then conferred upon Randall de Meschines, surnamed Blundaville, Earl of Chester. This ex-earl d. in 1241, leaving issue,

GILBERT, who inherited a considerable property, for in the 29th HENRY III., he paid £68 for as many knights' fees, upon collection of the aid for marrying the king's dau. GAVESTON—EARL OF CORNWALL.

Lineage.

WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR gave the EARLDOM OF CORNWALL to his relation, ROBERT, EARL OF MORTYNE, commonly called MORETON, who m. Maud, dau. of Roger de Montgomery, and had a son, WILLIAM, who forfeited the title, temp. HENRY I. The natural son of that monarch, Reginald Fitz-Henry, who was invested with the title by King STEPHEN, left no legitimate male issue. HENRY II. gave the earldom to his son, John. After this, Henry, Fitz-Count, natural son of Reginald above-mentioned, enjoyed it for a few years by sufferance. In 1219, he resigned it into the hands of King HENRY III., and in 1224, the king's son, Richard, afterwards King of the Romans, was created EARL OF CORNWALL. This Richard, Earl of Cornwall, left an only son, Edmund, who dying without legitimate male issue, in 1300, the title again lapsed to the crown. EDWARD II. gave it to his favourite, PIERS DE GAVESTON, who was elevated to the peerage by that monarch, as Baron Wallingford and EARL OF CORNWALL.

Gaveston, the son of a private gentleman in Gascony, who had been distinguished in the wars, was brought to court by King EDWARD I., as a companion for his son, Prince Edward, but that monarch before his death was so sensible of the danger incurred by the prince in having so evil an adviser, compelled Gaveston to abjure the realm, and forbid his son recalling him, under the penalty of his curse. Upon the accession of the young monarch, however, he not only invited Gaveston back, but elevated him to the peerage, and loaded him so profusely with favours, that the rest of the nobility found it imperatively necessary to interfere, and to beseech the king to remove him. EDWARD for the moment acquiesced—but only for the moment—Gaveston was recalled, and new honours awaited him. This at length so exasperated the haughty nobles, that they flew to arms, under Thomas Plantagenet, Earl of Lancaster, and determined to compel the king to comply with their wishes. EDWARD being apprised of these proceedings, conducted the favourite to Scarborough Castle and there left him with sufficient forces for its defence, whilst he himself marched into Warwickshire. The lords thereupon invested Scarborough, and the unhappy Gaveston soon after surrendered upon conditions of personal safety. He was, however, conveyed by the Earl of Warwick to Warwick Castle, and beheaded by his orders at Blacklow Hill, about a mile from the town of Warwick, without any form of trial whatsoever.

Gaveston m. Margaret, dau. of Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Gloucester, by Joan of Acres, the king's sister, and co-heir of her brother, Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Gloucester, by whom (who m. after his decease, Hugh de Audley) he had an only dau., Joane, who d. young. The execution of his lordship took place in 1314, when the Earldom of Cornwall became EXTINCT. After this the title was not revived till 1328, when EDWARD III. bestowed it on his 2nd brother, John, of Eltham. The following year the king created his eldest son (afterwards known as the Black Prince) Duke of Cornwall, and some years afterwards procured an Act of Parliament for settling the title on the 1st begotten son of the King of England.

GENEVILL—BARON GENEVILL.

By Writ of Summons, dated 6 February, 1299.

Lineage.

In the 28th HENRY III.,

PETER DE GENEVILL, a Provencal, stated by Matthew of Paris, to have been a man of humble birth, and by others to have been Lord of Vancoleur, and brother of John de Geneville, or Joinville, the historian of the crusade of St. Louis, was governor of Windsor Castle, and dying in 1249, was s. his son and heir,

Sir GEOFFREY DE GENEVILL, who, in the 38th HENRY III., had livery of the castle of Trim, in Ireland. In four years afterwards he received a military summons to march against the Welsh, and in the 44th of the same king, being then one of the barons marchers, he had command to repair to the castle of Wales, and to reside there. In the 10th EDWARD I. he was in the expedition made against the Welsh, and in fifteen years subsequently he was in the wars of Gascony. For all which services he was summoned to parliament as a baron, 6 February, 1299, and from that period to 3 November, 1306. He m. Maud, dau. and heir of Gilbert de Lacey, son of Walter de Lacey, Lord of Meath, and had issue,

GEORBODUS—EARL OF CHESTER.

Creation of the CONQUEROR.

Lineage.

The Earldom of Chester, after the Norman conquest, was first conferred upon

GEORBODUS, a Fleming, who, having encountered many difficulties, as well from the English as his troublesome neighbours the Welsh, and being at length sent for into Flanders by some of his friends, to whom he had entrusted his affairs there, obtained licence from King WILLIAM to attend the summons, but he had no sooner reached his native soil, than, falling into the power of his enemies, he was cast into prison, where he remained a considerable time. He does not appear to have ever returned to England, and the Earldom of Chester was subsequently bestowed upon HUGH DE ABRINCES (See Abrinces, Earl of Chester).

GERARD—BARONS GERARD, OF GERARD'S BROMLEY, CO. STAFFORD.

By Letters Patent, dated 21 July, 1603.

Lineage.

In the 1st year of Queen MARY,

GILBERT GERARD, a branch of the ancient Gerards, of Bryn, in Lancashire, derived from the great Geraldine stock, in Ireland, having attained eminence in the profession of the law, was chosen autumn reader by the benchers of Grey's Inn, and the next year appointed, with Nicholas Bacon (afterwards lord-keeper), joint treasurer of the society. In some time after, when the Princess Elizabeth was brought before the council, Mr. Gerard advocated her cause so ably, that he was committed to the Tower, where he remained during the rest of Queen MARY's reign. Upon the accession of ELIZABETH, he was released, and constituted attorney-general. He afterwards received the honour of knighthood, and was appointed master of the Rolls, when he had held the attorney-generalship no less than 23 years. This Sir Gilbert erected a stately mansion in the county of Stafford, where he resided, called Gerard's Bromley. He m. Anne, dau. of Thomas Ratcliffe, Esq., of Wimersley, co. Sir Charles was s. by his eldest son,

CHARLES GERARD, who, being brought up from his youth to the profession of arms, upon the usual theatre of European warfare, the Netherlands, joined his majesty, King CHARLES I., at Shrewsbury, soon after he had reared the royal standard, and became eminently distinguished amongst the cavaliers. First, at Kington, where he received some dangerous wounds. And soon afterwards at the taking of Lichfield, the first battle of Newberry, and the relief of Newark. General Gerard then accompanied Prince Rupert into South Wales, and acquired high reputation by his victories at Cardiffe, Kidwelly, and Caermarthen—and his success in taking the castle of Cardigan, and other fortresses, and reducing the strong garrison of Haverford-West, with the castles of Picton and Carew. In consideration of which gallant services he was made, by the king, lieutenant-general of his horse, and elevated to the peerage, as BARON GERARD,* of Brandon, 8 October, 1645. His lordship, after the Restoration, was created, 21 July, 1679, Viscount Brandon, and EARL OF MACCLESFIELD—but in the time of JAMES II., he was committed, with the Earl of Stamford and the Lord Delamere, to the Tower, and condemned to death, but pardoned. He lived to see the Revolution, and, "in fact, to witness," says Banks, "three singular occurrences in the annals of British history;" (he might have characterized them as the three most singular,) "first, the deposition and decapitation of King CHARLES I.; 2ndly, the restoration of his son; and 3rdly, the Revolution and total expulsion of the royal family so recently restored." GHISNES—BARON GHISNES.

By Writ of Summons, dated 23 June, 1295.

Lineage.

The Barons Ghisnes derived descent from the Counts de Ghisnes in Flanders, who were also great feudal Lords in England so far back as the reigns of JOHN and HENRY III.

INGELRAM DE GHISNES (brother of Baldwin de Ghisnes, and grandson of ARNOLD, Comte de Ghisnes, who sold the county of Ghisnes to the King of France), m. Christian, dau. and heir of William de Lindsay, by Ada, his wife, sister and co-heir of JOHN BALIOL, King of Scotland, descended from Alice, one of the sisters and co-heirs of William de Lancaster, and doing his fealty in the 11th EDWARD I., had livery of the lands of her inheritance, amongst which was the manor of Wyresdale, in Lancashire. This feudal lord having distinguished himself in the wars of Scotland, was summoned to parliament, as a baron, from 23 June, 1295, to 14 March, 1322. His lordship d. in the 17th EDWARD II., seized of the manor of Middleton, near Richmond, and was s. by his son,

* Besides his lordship, there were of his family the following persons actively engaged upon the royal side, in those unhappy conflicts—

His brothers,	{ Edward Gerard, a colonel of foot, wounded in the first battle of Newberry.	} All in the battle of Kington.
	{ Sir Gilbert Gerard, slain near Ludlow.
His uncles,	{ Sir Gilbert Gerard, governor of Worcester.

GIFFARD—EARLS OF BUCKINGHAM.

Creation of WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR, circa 1070.

Lineage.

OSBORNE DE BOLEREC, a noble Norman, living temp. RICHARD sans peur Duke of Normandy, m. Avelina, sister of Gunnora, Duchess of Normandy, and had two sons, WALTER, of whom we treat; and OSBORNE, ancestor of the GIFFARDS, Lords Giffard, of Brimsfield, and of the Giffards of Chillington, co. Stafford. The elder son,

WALTER GIFFARD, Earl of Longueville, in Normandy, was granted for his gallant services at the battle of Hastings, the title of EARL OF BUCKINGHAM. At the time of the General Survey, this nobleman was sent with Remigius, bishop of Lincoln, and others, into Worcestershire, and some other counties, to value the lands belonging to the crown, as well as to private individuals in those parts. He himself possessed at that time two lordships in Berkshire; one in Wilts; one in Somersetshire; one in Huntingdon; five in Cambridgeshire; nine in Oxfordshire; nine in the co. of Bedford; three in Suffolk; twenty-eight in Norfolk; and forty-eight in Buckinghamshire; in all one hundred and seven. In 1089, his lordship adhering to WILLIAM RUFUS, fortified his mansions in Normandy, for that king, and became chief general of his army there; yet in some years afterwards (1102), he sided with ROBERT COURTHOSE, against King HENRY I. The earl m. Agnes, dau. of Gerard Flaitell, and sister of William, bishop of Eures, and had, with other issue,

WALTER, his successor.

Rohais, m. to Richard Fitz-Gilbert, feudal lord of Clare, co. Suffolk (see Clare), and had, besides other children,

GILBERT, who m. Adeliza, dau. of the Earl of Claremont, and was father of Richard de Clare, Earl of Hertford.

GILBERT DE CLARE, created Earl of Pembroke, whose son,

RICHARD, surnamed Strongbow, became so distinguished in the conquest of Ireland.

Isabel, m. to Richard Granville, or Grenville, progenitor of the noble house of Grenville, now Dukes of Buckingham.

His lordship d. in 1102, and was s. by his son,

WALTER GIFFARD, 2nd Earl of Buckingham. This nobleman adhered faithfully to King HENRY I., and distinguished himself in that monarch's cause at the battle of Breneville in 1119, against the French, commanded by their king in person, where HENRY obtained a victory. His lordship, during this reign, founded the Abbey of Nutley, co. Bucks. He d. in 1164, without issue, when the lands of his barony came, according to Dugdale, to be shared amongst his relatives; "for it seems," (says that writer), "in the 1st RICHARD I., that Richard de Clare, Earl of Hertford (in respect of his descent from Rohais, sister of the earl, and wife of Richard Fitz-Gilbert, his lineal ancestor), and William Mareschall, Earl of Pembroke (in right of Isabel de Clare, his wife), obtained a confirmation from that king, of all the lands of this Walter, Earl of Buckingham, both in England and Normandy; of which lands, Richard, Earl of Hertford, was to have the chief seat in England, and William, Earl of Pembroke, the chief seat in Normandy; the residue in both countries to be equally divided between them." Thus terminated the house of Giffard, Earls of Buckingham. The title is said by Camden to have been subsequently borne by Richard de Clare, surnamed Strongbow, Earl of Pembroke.

GIFFARD—BARONS GIFFARD, OF BRIMS-FIELD, CO. GLOUCESTER.

By Writ of Summons, dated 24 June, 1295.

Lineage.

This family was descended from Count Giffard, a great Norman nobleman and a general in the CONQUEROR's army. In the CONQUEROR's time,

OSBORNE GIFFARD, held one lordship in Berkshire; one in Oxfordshire; three in Cornwall; one in Dorsetshire; and four in Gloucestershire, whereof Brimsfield was one, and his chief seat. To this feudal lord, who d. before the year 1086, s. his son,

HELIAS GIFFARD, who, in conjunction with Ala his wife, granted in about 1100, part of his woods, with three borderers, to the Abbey of St. Peter, at Gloucester. He left two sons, HELIAS, his heir, and GILBERT, ancestor of GIFFARD of CHIL-LINGTON. The elder son,

HELIAS GIFFARD, was, like his father, a liberal benefactor to the church, having made grants to divers religious houses, amongst which was the above mentioned Abbey of St. Peter, upon which he conferred his lordship of Cronham. His grandson was,

HELIAS GIFFARD. This feudal lord, upon the assessment for the marriage portion of King HENRY II.'s dau., Maud, certified that he possessed nine knights' fees, and the same year (12th HENRY II.), gave 100 marks fine, for livery of his inheritance. He d. in 1190, and was s. by

THOMAS GIFFARD, who in the 6th RICHARD I., paid £9 upon levying the scutage for the king's redemption. He was s. by his son,

HELIAS GIFFARD, who took up arms with the other barons against King JOHN, and in the 18th of that monarch's reign, all his lands in the cos. of Wilts, Northampton, Gloucester, Somerset, Dorset, Oxford, and Berks, were given by order of the king, to Bartholomew Peche, but restored by HENRY III., at the general pacification. By the inquisition taken after the death of this feudal baron, 33rd HENRY III., he appears to have been possessed of the manor of Winterborne, co. Wilts, and that that lordship was then the head of his barony. He d. 33rd HENRY III., and was s. by his son,

JOHN GIFFARD, then in his seventeenth year, during whose minority the queen had a grant of his lands, towards the maintenance of Prince Edward. In the 41st HENRY III., this John Giffard was commanded to be at Bristol with horse and arms, thence to march into South Wales, against Lewelyn ap Griffin. In six years subsequently, he was constituted governor of St. Briavel's Castle, and warden of the Forest of Dean, in Gloucestershire; but soon after, taking part with the rebellious barons, was amongst those whom the archbishop of Canterbury ordered to be excommunicated. He was at the battle of Lewes, under the baronial banner, but adopting a different course at the battle of Evesham, he obtained pardon for his former treasons, in consideration of the services which he then rendered to the royal cause.

In the 55th HENRY III., Maud de Longespée, widow of William Longespée, son of William, Earl of Salisbury, and dau. and heiress of Walter de Clifford, having by letter complained to the king, that this John Giffard, had taken her by force from her manor house, and carried her to his Castle of Brimsfield, where he kept her in restraint; he was summoned before the king, when denying the charge, but confessing his marriage with the lady without the royal licence, he made his peace by paying a fine of 300 marks.

In the 10th EDWARD I. John Giffard was in the expedition made by Gilbert, Earl of Gloucester, against Lewelyn ap Griffin, Prince of North Wales; and observing that Lewelyn, had separated, with a small party, from the body of his army, he joined with Edward Mortimer, and slaying the prince, despatched his head to the king, who caused it to be set upon the Tower of London, crowned with ivy. In the 18th of the same reign he was constituted governor of Dynevor Castle, in Wales, and having had summons to parliament as a baron, from 24 June, 1295, to 10 April, 1299, d. in the latter year, and was buried at Malmesbury. His lordship m. 1st (as already stated), Maud, widow of William Longespée, by whom he had issue, Katherine, m. to Nicholas Aldithley, 1st Baron Aldithley, or Audley, of Helegh.

Alianore, m. to Fulk le Strange, Baron Strange, of Blackmere.

He m. 2ndly, Alicia Maltravers, by whom he had no child; and 3rdly, Margaret de Neville, by whom he had an only son, JOHN. He d. 27th EDWARD I. (1299), and was s. by his son,

SIR JOHN GIFFARD, K.B., 2nd baron, summoned to parliament, from 8 October, 1311, to 15 May, 1321, as "Johanni Giffard de Brymesfield." This nobleman was constituted, in the 9th EDWARD II., constable of the castles of Glamorgan and Morgannoc. Adhering subsequently, however, to Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, in his opposition to the Spencers, he sat in the parliament by which those favourites were condemned to banishment, and afterwards, when the king marched into Wales, plundered the royal carriages, which so incensed EDWARD, that, in passing from Cirencester towards Worcester, he sent a party of soldiers to demolish Lord Giffard's castle at Brimsfield. His lordship eventually, sharing the fortune of his leader, the Earl of Lancaster, was taken prisoner with that nobleman, after the defeat at Boroughbridge, and being condemned for high treason, was hanged at Gloucester in 1322, when the barony of Giffard fell under the attainder; but the proceedings against Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, and his adherents, being reversed in the 1st EDWARD III., anno 1327, the dignity was revived, and may now probably be considered to be vested in the descendants and representatives of his half-sisters, the above-mentioned

Katherine, Lady Aldithley, and Alianore, Lady Strange, of Blackmere.

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 8 September, 1684.

Earldom, by Letters Patent, dated 29 December, 1706.

Barony, by Letters Patent, dated 23 January, 1735.

Lineage.

This family derived its surname from Godolphin* (anciently written Godolghan), co. Cornwall,

JOHN DE GODOLPHIN was living about the time of the Norman Conquest, and amongst his other feudal possessions was lord of the manor of Godolphin, and resided there. He m. Margaret, dau. of Roger de Trewargen, of Trewargen, and was s. by his son,

RICHARD DE GODOLPHIN, father of

JAMES DE GODOLPHIN, whose son and heir,

JOHN DE GODOLPHIN, was father of

THOMAS DE GODOLPHIN, his son and successor,

EDWARD DE GODOLPHIN, m. Maud, dau. of William Boteler, Esq., of Camerton, and was father of

WILLIAM DE GODOLPHIN, whose son,

THOMAS DE GODOLPHIN, was s. by his son,

EDWARD DE GODOLPHIN, Esq., of Godolphin, who m. Christian, dau. of Thomas Pridcaux, Esq., and was father of ALEXANDER GODOLPHIN, who m. Mary, dau. of Sir John de Tregour, and had a son,

WILLIAM GODOLPHIN, who was father of

DAVID GODOLPHIN, Esq., who m. Meliora, dau. of John Cowling, Esq., of Trewerveneth, and left an only dau. and heiress,

ELEANOR GODOLPHIN, who m. John Rinsey, Esq., and being a great heiress, covenanted, that her issue should bear her own family name. The heir of this marriage was,

THOMAS GODOLPHIN, Esq., of Godolphin, who m. Isabel, dau. of—Benne, Esq., of Boekenne, co. Cornwall, and was father of

JOHN GODOLPHIN, Esq., who m. Elizabeth, dau. of John Beauchamp, Esq., of Bennerton, and had a son,

JOHN GODOLPHIN, Esq., who by Elizabeth, his wife, dau. of John Killigrew, Esq., was father of

JOHN GODOLPHIN, Esq., of Godolphin, who was sheriff of Cornwall in the 19th and 23rd HENRY VII.; he was also joint steward with Sir Robert Willoughby, Lord Brooke, of the mines in Cornwall and Devonshire. He m. Margaret, dau. of John Trenouth, Esq., and had issue,

1. WILLIAM (Sir), his successor.

2. John, whose descendants were seated at Morewall and Trewerveneth, co. Cornwall.

3. Elizabeth, m. to William Canell, Esq.

He was s. by his son,

WILLIAM GODOLPHIN, Esq., who m. Margaret, dau. and co-heir of John Glinne, Esq., of Moreval and Lowewater, by whom he had two sons, viz.,

1. WILLIAM (Sir), his successor.

2. Thomas, who m. the dau. of Edmund Bonithon, Esq., and left issue,

FRANCIS, who s. his uncle, Sir William Godolphin, and carried on the line of the family.

William, M.P. for Helston, in the 28th ELIZABETH, m. a dau. and co-heir of—Gaurigan.

Mr. Godolphin was s. by his elder son,

SIR WILLIAM GODOLPHIN, a very distinguished person in the reign of HENRY VIII., who, for his services, had the honour of knighthood, and was constituted warden and chief steward of the Stanneries. Sir William lived to an advanced age, and was chosen several times one of the knights of the shire for Cornwall, in the parliament of King HENRY VIII. and King EDWARD VI. He was thrice sheriff of Cornwall, in the reign of HENRY VIII., and once in the reign of EDWARD VI., and again in that of ELIZABETH. He likewise, attained a high military reputation, particularly for his gallant conduct at the siege of Boulogne. Mr. Carew, in his Survey of Cornwall, ranks Sir William Godolphin amongst the principal worthies of that shire: thus speaking of him: "He demeaned himself very valiantly beyond the seas, as appeared by the scars he brought home, no less to the beautifying of his fame, than the disfiguring of his face." Sir William m. Blanch, dau. of Robert Langden, Esq., and had issue,

Margaret, m. to Sir Robert Verney.

Grace, m. to Sir John Sydenham, of Bampton, co. Somerset.

Anne, m. to Sir John Arundel, of Talvern, co. Cornwall.

Having thus no male issue, the estates passed at Sir William's decease to his nephew,

SIR FRANCIS GODOLPHIN, M.P. for the co. Cornwall, in the 31st ELIZABETH, and colonel of a regiment of twelve companies armed with 470 pikes, 490 muskets, and 240 calivers. He was also governor of Scilly, "which," Carew says, "by her majesty's order, was reduced to a more defensible plight by him, who with his invention and purse, bettered his plot and allowance, and therein so tempered strength and delight, and both with use, as it serveth for a sure hold, and a commodious dwelling." Of Sir Francis, this same author gives the following character:—"Sir Francis Godolphin, Knt., whose zeal in religion, uprightness in justice, providence in government, and plentiful housekeeping, have won him a very great and reverent reputation in his country; and these virtues, together with his services to her majesty, are so sufficiently known to those of highest place, as my testimony can add but little light thereunto. But by his labours and inventions in tin matters, not only the whole county hath felt a general benefit, so as the several owners have thereby gotten very great profit out of such refuse works, as they before had given over for unprofitable; but her majesty hath also received increase of her customs by the same, at least to the value of £10,000. Moreover, in those works, which are of his own particular inheritance, he continually keepeth at work three hundred persons or thereabouts; and the yearly benefit, that out of those his works accrue to her majesty, amounteth communibus annis to £1,000 at the least, and sometimes so much more. A matter very remarkable, and, per chance, not to be matched again, by any of his sort and condition in the whole realm." Sir Francis undertook the coinage of silver out of the mines in Wales and Cornwall; and King CHARLES I. granted him the power of coining at Aberrusky, in Cornwall. The pence, groats, shillings, half-crowns, &c., there afterwards coined, were distinguished by a plume of ostrich feathers, the badge of the English Princes of Wales. Sir Francis Godolphin m. Margaret, dau. of John Killigrew, Esq., of Arnwick, in Cornwall, and had three sons and six daus., of whom,

WILLIAM, was his successor.

Blanch, m. George Kekewich, Esq., of Catch-French.

Ursula, m. — Croyde, Esq.

Thomasin, m. Sir George Carew, afterwards Earl of Totness.

Sir Francis was s. by his eldest son,

SIR WILLIAM GODOLPHIN, who accompanied Robert, Earl of Essex, in his expedition to Ireland against the rebels in 1599, and received the honour of knighthood for his gallantry at Arklow. In the following year he was so highly esteemed by the lord deputy, Mountjoy, that he entrusted him with the command of his own brigade of horse, in the decisive battle between the queen's forces, and the Spaniards and Irish, fought 24 December, in the immediate vicinity of Kinsale: which victory was chiefly owing to his courageous conduct, having broken through the Spanish line, and made prisoner of their commander, when the whole was put to the rout. In this action Sir William was slightly wounded in the thigh with a halbert; but in six days afterwards was so far recovered, that when Don John D'Aquila, commander of the Spaniards in the town of

* Godolphin, in Cornish, signifies a White Eagle, which was always borne in arms of this family.

Kinsale, offered a parley, desiring the lord deputy that some gentlemen of special trust and sufficiency might be sent into the town to confer with him, he was employed in the negotiation. Sir William Godolphin represented the co. Cornwall in the first parliament of King JAMES, and dying in 1613, left issue by Thomasin, dau. and heir of Thomas Sidney, Esq., of Wrighton, co. Norfolk,

FRANCIS, his successor.

Sidney, a very accomplished personage, and a poet of some celebrity, of whom Lord Clarendon thus speaks:—"A young gentleman of incomparable parts, who being of a constitution and education more delicate and unacquainted with contentions, upon his observation of the wickedness of those men in the House of Commons, of which he was a member, out of pure indignation of his soul against them, and conscience to his country, had, with the first, engaged himself with that party in the west; and though he thought not fit to take command in a profession he had not willingly chosen, yet as his advice was of great authority with all the commanders, being always one in the council of war, and whose notable abilities they had still use of in their civil transactions, so he exposed his person to all action, travel, and hazard; and by too forward engaging himself, (in this action at Chagford,) received a mortal shot by a musket, a little above the knee, of which he died in the instant." He was buried at Okehampton, 10 February, 1642, leaving an only dau. Mary, m. to her cousin, Dr. Henry Godolphin.

William, was colonel of a regiment, and performed many signal services for King CHARLES I., in several remarkable actions in the west.

Penelope, m. to Sir Charles Berkeley, Viscount Fitzhardinge.

Sir William was s. by his eldest son,

FRANCIS GODOLPHIN, Esq., M.P. for St. Ives, prior to the breaking out of the rebellion. After which unhappy proceeding he retired to his seat in Cornwall, secured the Island of Scilly for the king, and raised a regiment of foot, the command of which was given to his brother, Colonel William Godolphin. He subsequently waited upon his majesty at Oxford, and was amongst those members who met there by royal appointment in January, 1643. The Island of Scilly was under Mr. Godolphin's command, until the incarceration of the king, when finding it hopeless any longer to resist, he capitulated upon honorable terms: the Commons having voted, 4 January, 1646-7, "that Mr. Godolphin, governor of Scilly, upon his surrender of that island, with all forts, &c., should enjoy his estate, and be free from arrest from any acts of war." For these services, and his known loyalty, he was created a knight of the Bath at the coronation of King CHARLES II. He m. Dorothy, 2nd dau. of Sir Henry Berkeley, Knt., of Yarlington, co. Somerset, and had no less than sixteen children, of whom,

I. WILLIAM, (the eldest son,) was created a baronet 29 April, 1661, Sir William lived in retirement, and dying m. 17 August, 1710, bequeathed his estates to his nephew, the Earl of Godolphin.

II. FRANCIS, d. unm. 1675.

III. SIDNEY, of whom presently.

IV. Henry, D.D., provost of Eton College, and dean of St. Paul's. Dr. Godolphin, who was greatly esteemed for his learning, piety, and benevolence, d. at the advanced age of eighty-four, 29 January, 1732-3, leaving, by Mary, his wife, dau. of Sidney Godolphin, governor of Scilly, a son and dau., viz.,

FRANCIS, who s. to the Barony of Godolphin, of Helston, upon the decease of Francis, 2nd Earl of Godolphin.

Mary, m. to William Owen, Esq., of Porkington, and their descendant and representative is JOHN RALPH ORMSBY-GORE, Esq.

The 3rd son,

SIDNEY GODOLPHIN, was, from his youth, in the service of King CHARLES II., who, when Prince of Wales, coming into Cornwall, there took particular notice of him, and after the Restoration made him one of the grooms of the bed-chamber. In 1678 he was accredited to the States General upon a special mission, and the next year, upon the dismissal of the Earl of Danby from the office of lord high treasurer of England, he was constituted one of the commissioners of the Treasury, and sworn of the privy council. Soon after which he acquired, by his prudent management, a great ascendancy in the council, and Sir William Temple informs us, "that the Earl of Sunderland, Mr. Hyde, and Mr. Godolphin were esteemed to be alone in the secret and management of the king's affairs, and looked upon as the ministry." On the resignation in 1684 of Sir Leoline Jenkins, one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state, Mr. Godolphin was sworn into that office, but he returned to the Treasury in a few months after as first commissioner, and was elevated to the peerage 8 September in that year, as BARON GODOLPHIN, of Rialton, co. Cornwall. Upon the accession of King JAMES II. his lordship was appointed lord chamberlain to the Queen, and upon the removal of the Earl of Rochester from the lord treasurership in January, 1686-7, he was again constituted one of the commissioners of the Treasury. After the landing of the Prince of Orange, his lordship was one of those deputed by the reigning sovereign to wait upon the prince, and to demand the object he had in view; and when King JAMES retired, in the debates regarding the vacancy of the throne that followed, his lordship voted for a regency: nevertheless, when their majesties, King WILLIAM and Queen MARY were proclaimed king and queen of England, knowing his great abilities and integrity, they constituted him one of the lords commissioners of the Treasury, and he was sworn of the privy council. In the year 1695 his lordship was declared one of the seven lords justices, for the administration of the government during the king's absence beyond the seas, as he was again in the following year, as also in the year 1701.

Upon the accession of Queen ANNE, Lord Godolphin was constituted lord high treasurer of England. Under his lordship's administration in this high office, public credit, which had previously been declining, revived. The war was carried on with success, and the nation was entirely satisfied with his prudent management. He neglected nothing that could engage the subject to bear the burthen of war with cheerfulness; and it was owing to his lordship's advice that her majesty contributed £100,000 out of the civil list towards that object. In 1704, he was installed a knight of the Garter; the next year he was constituted lord-lieutenant of the county of Cornwall; and his lordship so managed affairs before the end of that year, that her majesty was empowered by the parliaments, both of Scotland and England, to appoint commissioners to treat about a union. This important affair was set on foot by King JAMES I.; but no prince before Queen ANNE, nor any council but hers could effect it: for by the assiduity and dexterity of Lord Godolphin, all obstacles were removed, and the long-desired union of the two kingdoms accomplished. For those eminent services her majesty created his lordship, 29 December, 1706, Viscount Rialton and EARL OF GODOLPHIN, and constituted him lord high treasurer of Great Britain: from which office he was removed by the spirit of political animosity in 1710, the celebrated trial of Dr. Sacheverel having previously taken place. His lordship, who had laboured for some years under an indisposition of the stone and gravel, d. 15 September, 1712, and was buried the 8th of the next month, in the south aisle of Westminster Abbey, where a monument was erected to his memory by his daughter-in-law, the Duchess of Marlborough.

His lordship m. Margaret, 4th dau. and one of the co-heirs of Thomas Blague, Esq., groom of the bed-chamber to Kings CHARLES I. and II., by whom he left, at his decease, 15 September, 1712, an only child,

FRANCIS GODOLPHIN, 2nd earl, b. 3 September, 1678. This nobleman represented the county of Oxford, in the life-time of his father, in parliament; and in the reign of Queen ANNE, was lord warden of the Stannaries, and cofferer to her majesty. In 1723, his lordship was appointed groom of the stole, and first gentleman of the bed-chamber, and the same year was constituted one of the lords justices during the temporary absence of the king. In 1733, the earl was appointed governor of the Islands of Scilly, and he was created, 23 January, 1735, BARON GODOLPHIN, of Helston, with special remainder, (in default of his own male issue,) to the heirs male of his deceased uncle, the Very Reverend Henry Godolphin, D.D., dean of St. Paul's (revert to issue of Henry Godolphin, Esq., father of the 1st earl). He was subsequently sworn lord privy-seal. His lordship m. Lady Henrietta Churchill, eldest dau. and co-heir of John Churchill, the great Duke of Marlborough, which lady upon her illustrious father's decease, became Duchess of Marlborough, by virtue of the act of parliament which entailed his grace's honours upon his dau. By this lady the earl had issue,

WILLIAM, Marquis of Blandford, M.P. for Woodstock. His lordship m. in 1729, Maria-Catherine, dau. of Peter D'Jong, of the province of Utrecht, but d. s. p. 24 August, 1731.

Henry, d. young.

Henrietta, m. to Thomas Pelham Holles, Duke of Newcastle, and d. s. p.

Margaret, d. young.

Mary (eventually sole heiress), m. 1740, Thomas Osborne, 4th Duke of Leeds, K.G. (See BURKE'S Extant Peerage.)

Her grace d. 24 October, 1733, and his lordship, 17 January, 1766, when the Earldom of Godolphin, Viscounty of Rialton, and Barony of Godolphin, of Rialton, became EXTINCT; but the Barony of Godolphin, of Helston, devolved, according to the limitation, upon his 1st cousin,

FRANCIS GODOLPHIN, Esq., of Baylis, co. Bucks, as 2nd baron, who had previously represented Helston in parliament. His lordship m. 1st, in 1734, Lady Barbara Bentinck, dau. of William, Earl of Portland. He m. 2ndly, Lady Anne Fitz-William, dau. of John, Earl Fitz-William: but dying s. p. in 1785, the Barony of Godolphin, of Helston, also EXPIRED.

GORDON—VISCOUNT OF ABOYNE.

By Letters Patent, dated 20 April, 1632.

Lineage.

GEORGE, LORD GORDON, eldest son of George, 1st Marquess of Huntly, was, by patent, dated at Whitehall, 20 April, 1632, created VISCOUNT ABOYNE in the Peerage of Scotland during the life of his father, with remainder, after his death or succession to the marquessate, to his son, James, and his heirs male bearing the name and arms of Gordon. He became 2nd Marquess of Huntly on the death of his father, 1636, whereupon the title of Viscount of Aboyne went, in terms of the patent, to his 3rd son,

LORD JAMES GORDON, 2nd Viscount of Aboyne; who taking the field for King CHARLES I. against the Covenanters, was defeated by the Earl Montrose, at the bridge of Dee, 19 June, 1639, but effected his escape by sea to England. Being summoned before the council, 1643, to answer for his negotiations with the Earl of Antrim, and not appearing, he was forfeited, and declared a traitor. When Montrose sided with the king, the Viscount of Aboyne attended him to Scotland, took Dumfries; but being obliged to retreat to Carlisle, obtained the command of the garrison of that place. He was excommunicated by the general assembly at Edinburgh, 24 April, 1644, joined Montrose in Menteith, in April, 1645, and continued with him until September following, when he proceeded to the north with his troop of horse just before the battle of Philiphaugh. He was excepted from pardon, 1648, made his escape to France, and was at Paris when the intelligence of the execution of CHARLES I. arrived there, which had such an effect on his mind that he d. a few days after (in 1649).

GORDON—VISCOUNT MELGUM.

By Letters Patent, dated in 1627.

Lineage.

LORD JOHN GORDON, 2nd son of George, 1st Marquess of Huntly, was created a peer of Scotland, as VISCOUNT MELGUM, and BARON ABOYNE, in 1627; but did not long enjoy the honours, as he was burnt to death in the house of Frendraught, in October, 1630. He m. Lady Sophia Hay, 5th dau. of Francis, 9th Earl of Errol, and had an only dau.

GORDON—VISCOUNT KENMURE.

By Letters Patent, dated 8 May, 1633.

Lineage.

SIR ADAM DE GORDON, a knight of great renown, was the representative of the family in one of the most momentous periods of Scottish history. Although his possessions were almost on the borders of England, he long held out against the power of EDWARD I., and for a long time resisted the bond of fealty and submission prescribed by EDWARD in 1292; but that bond having become generally subscribed by the successively conquered Scotch nobility, and Sir Adam's own son, William de Gordoun, having been obliged to do so, the valiant knight was compelled to succumb, 25 July, 1296. Baliol's subsequent resignation of the crown to EDWARD gave Sir Adam a pretence to fly to arms, and thereafter, like Wallace and others, he leagued his fortunes with those of ROBERT BRUCE, from whom he obtained for his services a grant of the lands of Strathbogie in the north, forfeited by the desertion of the Earl of Atholl. These Sir Adam never however possessed, for the donation became ineffective by the return of the earl to his allegiance. Sir Adam had another son, who shone conspicuously at Hallidon Hill, in 1333, but it has not yet been ascertained whether William or Alexander was the elder son. But it appears from the records, that Sir Adam, in 1306, took a charter of his barony of Stitchill in life-rent to himself, and in fee to his son,

SIR WILLIAM DE GORDOUN, who subscribed the bond of fealty, 12 July, 1296, and was designed in a writ, in 1331, as Signor de Stitchill. He was s. by his son,

ROGER DE GORDOUN, who was s. by his son,

SIR ALEXANDER DE GORDOUN, who d. in 1432, leaving a son and successor,

WILLIAM DE GORDOUN, who fixed his residence in Galloway, and was the first who designated himself of Lochinvar. He d. in 1450, and was s. by his son,

SIR JOHN GORDON, of Lochinvar, who had three sons,

Alexander, a valiant knight, who d. v. p., falling with his sovereign, JAMES IV., at Flodden, in 1513.

ROBERT (Sir), successor to his father.

William, of Craichlaw and Culvennan. (See BURKE's Landed Gentry.)

Sir John d. in 1517, and was s. by his son,

SIR ROBERT GORDON, who m. Marion, dau. and sole heir of John Accarson, of Glenshireburne; and dying in 1520, was s. by his eldest son,

SIR JAMES GORDON, of Lochinvar, who m. Margaret, dau. and sole heir of Robert Crichton, of Kilpatrick, and had, with other issue,

JOHN, his successor.

William, of Pennygame, who m. Helen, dau. of Alexander Stewart, of Garlick, and was s. by his son,

JOHN, of Pennygame, who was s. by his son,

ALEXANDER, of Pennygame, who d. about the year 1645, and was s. by his son,

WILLIAM, of Pennygame, who left two sons,

John, d. s. p. in 1662.

ALEXANDER, of whom hereafter, as 5th Viscount KENMURE.

Sir James fell at the battle of Pinkie, 10 September, 1547, and was s. by his elder son,

SIR JOHN GORDON, of Lochinvar. This gentleman m. 1st, in 1563, Juliana, dau. of Home, of Wedderburne, and had an only dau., Margaret, m. to Hugh, 1st Lord Loudoun. Sir John espoused 2ndly, Elizabeth, dau. of John, Lord Herries; and dying in 1604, was s. by his eldest son,

SIR ROBERT GORDON, of Lochinvar, remarkable for his great bodily strength and activity, who, at a tournament proclaimed by JAMES VI., obtained, as one of the three successful champions, a prize from the hands of the Princess Elizabeth. He m. Lady Isabel Ruthven, dau. of William, 1st Earl of Gowrie, and dying in 1628, was s. by his eldest son,

SIR JOHN GORDON, of Lochinvar. This gentleman disposed of Stitchill, the ancient inheritance of the family, and is said to have given the produce in a purse to the Duke of Buckingham, to insure his grace's interest in forwarding his claim to the Earldom of Gowrie. But the duke falling the very next day by the hand of the assassin Felton, the expectation proved abortive. Sir John was, however, elevated to the peerage, as Lord Lochinvar and Viscount KENMURE, in the Peerage of Scotland, by patent, dated 8 May, 1633, with remainder to his heirs male whatsoever bearing the surname and arms of Gordon. His lordship m. Jane, dau. of Archibald, 7th Earl of Argyll, and dying in 1634, was s. by his only son,

JOHN, 2nd viscount; who d. s. p., in 1509, when the peerage reverted to (the eldest son of) James Gordon, of Barncrosh, by Margaret, dau. of Sir John Vans, and relict of John Glendonwyn, of Drumrash) his lordship's cousin and next male heir,

JOHN, 3rd viscount. This nobleman d. unm. in October, 1613, when the honours devolved upon his brother,

ROBERT, 4th viscount, b. in November, 1622, was a devoted adherent to the house of Stuart, and suffered in consequence. He d. s. p. in 1663, when the peerage descended to his cousin,

ALEXANDER GORDON, Esq., of Pennygame, as 5th viscount.

His lordship m. thrice, and was s. in 1698 by his eldest son (by his 2nd wife, Marian, dau. of Maculloch, of Ardwell),

WILLIAM, 6th viscount. This unfortunate nobleman inheriting the attachment of his family to the Stuarts, took up arms, in 1715, against GEORGE I. He was made prisoner at Prestonpans the following year, and thence conveyed to London, where he was tried, condemned, and executed on Tower Hill, 24 February ensuing, when the honours of his house fell under an attainder. He m. Mary Dalzell, only sister of Robert, 6th Earl of Carnwath, by whom he left three sons (the eldest and youngest d. unm.) and a dau., Harriet, m. to John Dalzell, Esq. When his lordship's estate was brought to the hammer, his dowager purchased it; and when her son Robert, came of age, delivered it up to him free of debt; which son,

ROBERT GORDON, was styled 7th viscount. He d. unm. 1 August, 1741, when the estates devolved on his brother,

JOHN GORDON, by courtesy 8th viscount; who m. Frances, only dau. of William, 5th Earl of Seaforth, and had issue,

WILLIAM, his successor.

JOHN, 10th viscount.

Adam, who d. in 1806, leaving issue by Miss Davies,

ADAM, of the R.N., 11th viscount.

LOUISA (Hon.), m. 19 August, 1815, Charles Bellamy, Esq., and, in her widowhood, resumed her maiden name of GORDON.

John, 8th viscount, d. in June, 1769, and was s. by his eldest son,

WILLIAM GORDON, by courtesy 9th viscount; a capt. in the army; who d. 7 February, 1772, unm., and was s. by his brother,

JOHN GORDON, 10th viscount and Lord Lochinvar, who was restored by act of parliament, 17 June, 1824, to the honours forfeited by the 6th viscount; he was b. in 1750; m. in 1791, Miss Morgan, by whom (who d. in 1815) he had no issue. The viscount who was vice-lieutenant of the stewartry of Kirkcudbright, d. 21 September, 1840, and was s. by his nephew, ADAM, 11th viscount; b. 9 January, 1792, who m. November, 1843, Mary-Anne, dau. of the late James Wildey, Esq., and d. s. p. 1 September, 1847. Since that time the Viscounty of Kenmure has remained DORMANT.

GORGES—BARON GORGES.

By Writ of Summons, dated 4 March, 1309.

Lineage.

In the 41st HENRY III.,

RALPH DE GORGES, (son of Ivo de Gorges of Tamworth,) had a military summons to march against the Welsh, and in a few years afterwards, in 1273, was made governor of Sherburne and Exeter Castles. He was likewise sheriff of the co. Devon. He m. Elena, dau. and heir of John de Moreville, who was descended from Endo de Moreville, by his wife, the dau. and heiress of Richard de Wrokesdale. In the 54th of the same reign, he attended Prince Edward to the Holy Land, and dying within the two next years, was s. by his son,

RALPH DE GORGES, who, in the 21st EDWARD I., was marshal of the king's army in Gascony, and the next year, continuing in those parts, was made prisoner and carried to Paris. He was not detained long, however, in captivity, for we find him soon after again in active service upon the same field, and subsequently engaged in the wars of Scotland; in consideration of which services he was summoned to parliament, as a baron, by King EDWARD II., 4 March, 1309, and from that period to 18 September, 1322; but his descendants enjoyed no similar honours.
